Rev. St. 1889, § 3486, provided that any person who should, "under promise of marriage, seduce and debauch any unmarried female of good repute should be punished." This section was amended by Acts 1897, p. 106, entitled "An act to amend section 3486, chapter 47, article 2, of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889, relating to the seduction of unmarried females under 18 years of age," and changed the section, so as to provide that any person who should, under promise of marriage, seduce or debauch any unmarried female, etc., should be punished. Held, that the words "seduce" and "debauch," though ordinarily not synonymous, were used in such section synonymously, and that the word "or" must be construed to mean "and," in order to bring the offense defined within the title, so that an instruction that the jury could convict, if they believed prosecutrix was either seduced "or" debauched by defendant under promise of marriage, was erroneous. State v. Long, 141 S. W. 1099, 1101, 238 Mo. 383.

Same—In pleading

In Rev. Codes 1905, § 6938, subd. 4, authorizing an attachment where defendant has sold, assigned, transferred, secreted, or otherwise disposed of, "or" is about to sell, assign, etc., with intent to cheat or defraud his creditors or hinder or delay them, the disjunctive conjunction "or" does not connect two grounds for an attachment, but the whole subdivision states only one ground consisting of different phases of facts or conditions intimately related, pertaining to that one ground, and an affidavit for an attachment stating such ground disjunctively in the language of the statute is sufficient. McCarthy Bros. Co. v. McLean County Farmers' Elevator Co., 118 N. W. 1049, 1050, 18 N. D. 176, 138 Am. St. Rep. 757, 20 Ann. Cas. 574 (citing Shinn, Attach. & Garn., §§ 145, 146; Waples, Attach. & Garn., § 136; Wood v. Wells, 2 Bush [65 Ky.] 197; Klenk v. Schwalm, 19 Wis. 111).

An indictment for forgery of a writing "or" paper did not describe the instrument in the alternative, since the words "writing" and "paper" when connected disjunctively clearly amount to the same thing, a written instrument. Blais v. State, 126 S. W. 1064, 1065, 94 Ark. 327.

An indictment is subject to demurrer if the descriptive terms relating to any material allegation are set forth in an alternate form. The word "or" is generally used as a disjunctive, and to express the notion that the two clauses which it connects are alternative; but this is not always so. It may properly be used to introduce a statement which is an amplification or explanation of a preceding statement. The use of the word in the present indictment was of the latter nature. Whitaker v. State, 75 S. E. 258, 11 Ga. App. 208.

A pleader should use the word "and" in an indictment when the word "or" is used in the statute, whenever the word "or" would leave the averment uncertain as to which of two or more things is meant, but not so where the complaint charges inaction as the violation of a statute commanding action, and the use of the conjunctive "and," instead of the disjunctive "or," would not make the allegation more certain. In a prosecution under Pub. Laws 1908, p. 287, c. 1592, § 12, requiring every chauffeur, after knowingly causing an accident, by collision or otherwise, or knowingly injuring any person, horse, or vehicle, to forthwith bring his motor vehicle to a full stop, return to the scene of the accident, and give to any proper person, demanding the same, the number of his driver's license, the registration number of the motor vehicle, and the names and residences of each male occupant. It was held that, under the rule that the word "or" is a proper connective in pleading negative averments, a complaint charging that accused, while driving a motor vehicle, did not, after knowingly causing an accident by a collision with a horse, etc., bring such vehicle to a full stop "or" return to the scene of the accident, but drove the vehicle away therefrom with great speed, against the statute, etc., was not objectionable for duplicity. State v. Smith, 72 Atl. 710, 711, 715, 29 R. I. 513.

Same—In wills

To effectuate the intention of the testator, the word "or" may be read as "and," or vice versa, when necessary to avoid defeating his intention. Shropshire v. Gault (Ky.) 83 S. W. 580 (citing Hunt v. Johnson, 10 B. Mon. [49 Ky.] 342; Robb v. Belt, 12 B. Mon. [51 Ky.] 647; Aulick v. Wallace, 12 Bush [75 Ky.] 531); In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 587, 891, 53 Misc. Rep. 222; Shaver's Adm'r v. Ewald's Ex'r, 134 S. W. 906, 907, 142 Ky. 472.

Where, from the language of the will it is apparent that the testator used the word "or" as the equivalent of "and," it will be so construed. Olcott v. Tope, 115 Ill. App. 121; Id., 72 N. E. 751, 753, 213 Ill. 124. Thus where testatrix made specific bequests to some of the children and all of the grandchildren of her brother who had four living children, two of whom had children, and four deceased children, two of whom left issue surviving, and further provided that the house in which she lived was to be disposed of and the proceeds equally divided between the "children and heirs" of her brother, the clause disposing of the remainder of her estate to the "living children or heirs of her brother, including the widow of a deceased child and the son of another deceased child," should be construed as if "or" was "and." McClench v. Waldron, 91 N. E. 128, 204 Mass. 554.

In a will by which testatrix gave her entire estate to her daughter, providing that if she should not be living "at the time of my decease or die without lawful issue" the estate should be divided between her two sons, the word "or" will be construed to mean "and," and the daughter, surviving the mother, will take the whole estate absolutely. In re Edwards' Estate, 76 Atl. 28, 29, 227 Pa. 299, 19 Ann. Cas. 921.

Under the provision for the establishment of an asylum with the money bequeathed to the adopted daughters, or either of them, upon the death of either before they should become of age or be married, the amount bequeathed to E. was not available for such charitable use where she became of age before her death unmarried, it being so available only in case she died before either event happened; it being permissible to construe the word "or" to mean "and," when it seems necessary to give effect to the meaning of testator. Clarke v. Inhabitants of Andover, 92 N. E. 1013, 1015, 207 Mass. 91.

A testator devised his whole estate to his wife to manage and control in every particular, "that is to say, to sell a part or any part, or the whole, should it be necessary or advisable in her best judgment." Held, that she took the property absolutely, and that her title was not cut down by the subsequent provision "or I further wish and desire my said wife to make a last will and testament wherein such division of our estate shall be made among our children as in her best judgment will be just, reasonable and proper"; "or" apparently meaning in the event of her not selling the property, and, even if read as "and," merely expressing a wish as to the disposition she should make of the property. Snyder v. Snyder, 83 Atl. 246, 247, 115 Md. 699.

A will, after giving a life use of testator's residuary estate, consisting of land, to his wife, provided that after her death, subject to her life use thereof, testator gave to his daughter A. for her life the use of the T. block, and then proceeded: "On the death of both my said wife and daughter, I give . . . said T. block to my son H. absolutely, or in case he should die before that time, to his legal heirs-at-law, to be distributed among them as if it were his intestate property." Held, that reading the devise to the son, as it must be read in view of the rule that the law favors vested estates, as though phrased "subject to the life estates above created in favor of my wife and daughter, I give," etc., and treating the word "or," in said devise, as used as the equivalent of "and," which use is plainly shown from the employment of the latter word for a like purpose in a subsequent devise of a remainder to the daughter, the son was given a vested remainder in fee. Cody v. Staples, 67 Atl. 1, 80 Conn. 82.

Testatrix gave all her realty to her husband for life, after his death such realty to revert to testatrix's two daughters, and provided that, if either daughter should die without leaving legal issue, the property should go to the other daughter, if living, and, if both should die without leaving legal issue, the property should go to testatrix's husband "or his heirs." Held, that the intent was that, if both daughters died without leaving legal issue during their father's lifetime, the daughters' interests should go to him in fee, the daughters taking remainders which vested in them immediately upon testatrix's death; the word "or" in the phrase "or his heirs" being construed as "and," the general rule that, where the context of the will is silent, words referring to the death of the prior legatee in connection with some collateral event apply where the contingency happens after as well as before death of testator, not applying where the context shows the intent to be otherwise. Smith v. Dellitt, 94 N. E. 113, 115, 249 Ill. 113 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5008).

Not construed as and

The conjunction "or" may be used as a disjunctive or as an equivalent. As stated in Webster's International Dictionary, "or" may be used to join as alternatives terms expressing unlike things or ideas, or different terms expressing the same thing or idea. Amet v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 41 South. 721, 722, 117 La. 454.

The use of the disjunctive "or" in "where goods, wares or merchandise are manufactured or offered for sale," means either where they are manufactured, or where they are offered for sale. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh, 71 N. E. 239, 242, 35 Ind. App. 32.

The meaning of the term "proper party," as used in the phrase "Is not a proper or necessary party," is not so clear as the meaning of the term "not a necessary party." The word "or" may be used in two forms. In one it corresponds to "either," and in that sense the term "proper or necessary" would mean either proper or necessary; that is, one or the other. In the other form it means to express the same thing alternatively in different words. In that sense, the term "not proper or necessary," would imply that it was not proper; that is, not necessary. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434.

Provisions in the charter of a college that the trustees should hold inviolate all furniture, stock, assets, lands, buildings, moneys, or endowment funds, professorships, scholarships, or other funds, did not forbid the trustees from using for current expenses money donated without any direction as to the purpose for which it was to be used; the word "or" not being used as equivalent to "either," and as presenting the choice of either. The word "or" has two significations. It may be used to convey the idea of an alternative, or may be used to join different terms expressing the same thing or idea, and in this sense it was here used. Board of Trustees of Park College v. Attorney General, 129 S. W. 27, 31, 228 Mo. 514.

In an action under Civil Damage Act (Code 1906, c. 32) § 26, by a wife injured in her means of support, against a saloon keeper alleged to have unlawfully sold her husband intoxicants, it was error to instruct that a sale of intoxicants to a person "at a time when he was intoxicated or when the defendant, or his bartender, or clerk, or any of them, knew or had reason to believe" he was intoxicated, was an unlawful sale, since an actual sale to an intoxicated person, and knowledge, actual or constructive, by the seller of such intoxication, are two essential elements of one offense, and the word "or" instead of "and" conveys the idea that either element of the offense, without the other, is sufficient to constitute an unlawful sale. Duckworth v. Stalnaker, 69 S. E. 850, 854, 68 W. Va. 197.

A city ordinance providing that the city treasurer shall receive a monthly salary and a specified "per cent. of all moneys received and paid out by him as treasurer," which shall be payable monthly, is unambiguous, and comprehends both a receipt and disbursement of funds before any commission is payable; and under Code Civ. Proc. § 1858, requiring the court, in the construction of a statute, to declare its terms, and not insert what has been omitted, the court may not construe the ordinance so as to allow the percentage on all moneys received, and on all moneys paid out, by construing the word "and" in the quoted phrase to mean "or." City of Corona v. Merriam, 128 Pac. 769, 770, 20 Cal. App. 231.

It is error to define a principal as one who "aids or abets" in the commission of a crime instead of "aids and abets" in accordance with the definition of Pen. Code, § 41. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 178, 34 Mont. 403 (citing People v. Dole [Cal.] 51 Pac. 945; Id., 55 Pac. 581, 122 Cal. 486, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50).

An instruction that accused, on trial for homicide, cannot be guilty as an aider or abettor in the killing of decedent if he gave no "assistance or uttered no word to the person doing the killing," etc., is misleading for using the word "or," instead of "and," between the words "assistance" and "uttered." Morris v. State, 41 South. 274, 284, 146 Ala. 66.

Where, in a prosecution for keeping a bawdyhouse, the court charged that a bawdyhouse was a house of ill fame kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes, an instruction that if the jury believed that accused kept a common bawdyhouse and "did willfully and knowingly keep or suffer to remain in and about her house lewd women, or men, for the purpose of prostitution, or permit them to come together and meet or remain there for the purpose of having illicit sexual intercourse," etc., she was guilty, was not prejudicially erroneous in that the use of the disjunctive, "or," authorized a conviction in case accused suffered either lewd women or men to remain in her house without requiring that the house was permitted to be used for immoral purposes. State v. Price, 92 S. W. 174, 175, 115 Mo. App. 656.

In a docket entry of a justice of the peace, relating to the preliminary examination of a person charged with crime, which recites that the offense of "pocket picking 'or' larceny from the person" had been committed, the word "or" is not used disjunctively, but indicates the synonym of the terms preceding and following it. State v. Dunn, 71 Pac. 811, 812, 66 Kan. 483.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, the grounds of negligence were the failure of the engineer to warn the employé of the backing of the train and the failure to keep a brakeman stationed near the rear end of the train to warn the employé, and there was nothing in the evidence to suggest any other grounds of recovery, an instruction that if the person in charge of the engine at the time of the injury was guilty of negligence in operating the engine, followed by a distinct disjunctive statement of the two grounds of negligence alleged, is not misleading, though connected by the word "or," which must have been used in the sense of "that is." Choctaw, O. & T. Ry. Co. v. McLaughlin, 96 S. W. 1091, 1003, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

Const. § 201, prohibiting consolidation of "parallel or competing" railroads, should not be read "parallel and competing." Commonwealth ex rel. Breathitt v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 138 S. W. 291, 293, 144 Ky. 324, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 633.

The word "or" may be used to join, as alternatives, terms expressing different things, as well as to join different terms expressing the same thing, and, in a statute giving an action for damages caused by reason of the insufficiency of any bridge or culvert, it is used in the former sense, so that it does not co-ordinate "bridge" and "culvert," and make each in turn the equivalent of the other, but specializes one to one meaning and the other to another meaning, thus making the statute mean as though it read, "either a bridge or a culvert." Cleveland v. Town of Washington, 65 Atl. 584, 585, 79 Vt. 498.

"The conjunction 'or' may be used as a disjunctive or as an equivalent." As used in a statute providing that all claims for lands or damages to the owner caused by its taking "or" expropriation for public works shall be barred by two years' prescription, the word "or" makes the terms taking and expropriation equivalent. Amet v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 41 South. 721, 722, 117 La. 454 (citing and adopting Webst. Int. Dict.).

The word "or," in Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, providing that a conditional seller, on regaining possession on the buyer's default, shall advertise the property for sale "by printed hand bills or written or printed notices," etc., is used in its ordinary meaning to indicate an alternative. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson, 122 S. W. 974, 975, 122 Tenn. 156.

As used in Code, § 3105, providing that every laborer or miner who shall perform labor in opening, developing, or operating any coal mine shall have a lien on all property of the person, firm or corporation owning or operating such mine," etc., the word "or," between the words "owning" and "operating," cannot be construed to mean "and," and hence the statute does not give a lien on mining property of an owner in favor of the employes of an operating lessee. Caster v. McClellan, 109 N. W. 1020, 1021, 132 Iowa, 62 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5009).

The statute making adultery ground for divorce, but imposing on the complaining party the burden of proving that the adultery was without his or her "consent, connivance, rivalry, or procurement," by the use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" makes the inhibition apply to each of the quoted words separately, and the existence of either condition is therefore sufficient to bar a favorable decree. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 916.

Webster says the conjunction "or" is often placed between different terms expressing the same thing or idea; as this is a sphere or globe. The word "assessments" and the word "dues," in Rev. St. 1899, § 1408 Ann. St. 1906, p. 1111, declaring that a fraternal beneficiary association might make provision for the payment of benefits from a fund to be derived from "assessments or dues" collected from its members, are used here without definition, and seemingly as meaning the same thing. State ex rel. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Vandiver, 111 S. W. 911, 916, 213 Mo. 187, 15 Ann. Cas. 283.

In Act May 11, 1874, imposing a double liability on "all stockholders in banks, banking companies, saving fund institutions, trust companies and all other incorporated companies doing the business of banks or loaning and discounting moneys as such in this commonwealth," the word "or" is used to mark an equivalent and has the same effect as if it were "that is." De Haven v. Pratt, 72 Atl. 1068, 1073, 223 Pa. 633.

In Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7793), provides that any person aggrieved by decision of the county commissioners in proceeding relating to highways may appeal, and that such appeal shall be tried de novo, and may be had as to any issue tried, "or that might have been tried, before the county board," the last clause only authorizes the trial of such issues as might have been tried under issues before the board, and does not authorize the trial of issues not presented. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 89 N. E. 871, 872, 173 Ind. 149.

Under Mills' Ann. St. Colo. § 1508, giving a right of action for death negligently caused by a carrier to be sued for and recovered, first, by the husband or wife, if there is no husband or wife, by the children, and, if the deceased be a minor or unmarried, by the father and mother, the words "minor or unmarried" cannot be construed to mean "minor and unmarried," thus giving no right of action for the death of an adult leaving no husband, wife, or children, but should be construed as giving the father and mother a right of action whenever the deceased leaves no husband, wife, or children. Hopper v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 155 Fed. 273, 275, 84 C. C. A. 21.

Under Levee Act, § 58, providing that the owner of land outside a drainage district who shall make a connection with a drainage ditch or whose land will be benefited by such ditch shall be deemed to have made voluntary application to be included in the district, it is not necessary that there should be both connection and benefit, but either in itself is sufficient, since this is the plain and unambiguous meaning of the language of the act, and there is no room for construction where there is no ambiguity, and, while "or" may sometimes be construed in statutes, contracts, or wills as "and" to effectuate the intention of the parties, this will be done only where the intention is clearly manifest, and a construction of the word according to its real meaning would involve an absurdity, or produce an unreasonable result. Gar Creek Drainage Dist. v. Wagner, 100 N. E. 190, 193, 256 Ill. 338.

Same—In penal statutes

Penal statutes are to be construed in favor of the accused, and the word "or" will not in general be construed "and" or vice versa, where the effect would be to aggravate the offense or would be to the disadvantage of the accused. Williams v. United States, 87 Pac. 647, 648, 17 Okl. 28 (citing United States v. Ten Cases of Shawls, 28 Fed. Cas. 35; Rice v. United States, 53 Fed. 910, 4 C. C. A. 104; United States v. Fisk, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 445, 18 L. Ed. 243).

Rev. St. 1870, § 910, making it an offense to retail intoxicating liquors "without previously obtaining a license therefor from the police jury of said parish or from the authorities of any town or city," is to be construed literally, and the word "and" cannot be substituted for the word "or." State v. Lewis, 41 South. 63, 116 La. 762.

In a statute which punishes "every person who holds, arrests, returns or causes to be held, arrested or returned," three distinct acts are mentioned, that of holding, arresting, and returning, and the disjunctive "or" indicates the separation between them and shows that either one may be the subject of indictment and punishment. Clyatt v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 431, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 726.

As used in Rev. St. § 792, making it criminal to assault another by willfully shooting at him, "or" with intent to commit murder, rape "or" robbery, the word "or" is to be taken as written; and "shooting at" is a complete crime in itself. State v. Fairbanks, 39 South. 443, 444, 115 La. 457 (citing State v. Brady, 2 South, 556, 39 La. Ann. 687).

The word "or," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7164, providing for the punishment of persons who shall "willfully or maliciously" commit certain acts, cannot be construed as "and." State v. Tiffany, 87 Pac. 932, 933, 44 Wash. 602 (citing Rountree v. State, 10 Tex. App. 110; Werner v. State, 67 N. W. 417, 93 Wis. 266).

Same—In pleading

The disjunctive "or," in an allegation that the death of a servant was caused by the negligence of the officials or some one of the employés of defendant, and especially by the negligence of the employés of defendant or its officers, indicates that the words "officers," "officials," and "employés" meant the same thing—coemployés or fellow servants of deceased. State, to Use of Zier v. Chesapeake Beach Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 385, 386, 98 Md. 35.

Same—In wills

The word "and" will not be substituted for "or" in the clause in a will providing for the disposition of the testator's estate in case any of his sons should die "without leaving a wife or child," unless the whole context of the will plainly and beyond question requires such substitution in order to give effect to the intention of the testator. Travers v. Reinhardt, 27 Sup. Ct. 563, 565, 205 U. S. 423, 51 L. Ed. 865.

In construing the expression in a will, "without leaving a wife, or a child, or children," the word "and" will not be substituted for the disjunctive "or," where the dominant intention of the testator in the disposal of his estate as appears from his will, does not require such substitution, and especially where the repetition of the same expression in another part of the will shows deliberation and care by the testator in the selection of words. Under such circumstances, the words used, being plain and unambiguous, must be given their ordinary and usual meaning, and cannot be controlled by conjecture. Traverse v. Reinhardt, 25 App. D. C. 567, 576.

The word "or," as used in devises to one's children "or" other lineal descendants, etc., indicates alternate devises to children, if any, and, if none, then to other lineal descendants. Reilly v. Bristow, 66 Atl. 262, 264, 105 Md. 326.

Where testatrix bequeathed to her infant daughter all her residuary estate, with a provision that if she should die before arriving at the age of 21 years or without disposing of the same, or without having made a last will, then over, in construing the proviso, "and" could not be substituted for "or," as it would express a sense contrary to the plain intent of the testatrix. In re Polley's Estate, 62 Atl. 553, 554, 70 N. J. Eq. 659.

A will in which testator stated his intention to travel and that knowing the uncertainty of a journey he bequeathed his real estate and personal property to his wife and also all judgments owned by him and notes due, and should anything befall him while away, "or" that he should die, all his estate and property was set over to his wife for her sole benefit, was not merely contingent on testator's death during the journey, but continued operative after his safe return and his death thereafter. In re Forquers' Estate, 66 Atl. 92, 95, 216 Pa. 331, 8 Ann. Cas. 1146.

Testator's will gave his wife a life estate, and provided that on her death the property should be divided between his "children or their heirs as the law directs." Held that, inasmuch as under Code, § 2913, making technical words unnecessary to create a fee, a construction of "or" as "and" would render the clause meaningless, and as there appeared no reason to believe "or" was intended for "and," the will meant that the heirs of a child dying before the life tenant took under the will, and not by descent, and hence the remainder was contingent. Courts of justice will transpose the clauses of a will and construe "or" to be "and" and "and" to be "or" only in such cases when it is absolutely necessary so to do to support the evident meaning of the testator. But they cannot arbitrarily expunge or alter words without such apparent necessity. Taylor v. Taylor, 92 N. W. 71, 72, 118 Iowa, 407 (citing Griffith's Lessee v. Woodward [Pa.] 1 Yeates, 318).

Testator, having when he wrote his will but one sister and one half-sister and one half-brother living, and having had brothers and sisters who died previously, leaving issue, the heirs of such deceased brothers and sisters are included in the provision of the will for division of property between his "sisters and brothers or their heirs." The word "or," as thus used, probably has no significance, if used alone, but, when used in connection with a gift to "his brothers or their heirs," would seem to indicate an intention that, where the brothers were not living so they could not take, their heirs should take for them. In re Edwards, 117 N. Y. Supp. 3, 5, 132 App. Div. 544.

As alias

"Or" is usually disjunctive, occasionally is construed as a conjunction to avoid absurdity, and is sometimes used in the sense of "alias," as, "violin or fiddle." "Or," within the provision of St. 1898, § 1777, for "toll or boom charges" by a boom company, is used in the sense of "alias." Menominee River Boom Co. v. Augustus Spies Lumber & Cedar Co., 132 N. W. 1118, 1122, 147 Wis. 559.

As conferring discretionary power

As used in a municipal ordinance which provided that whoever should be found guilty of being a vagrant should be fined not less than $5 nor more than $25, and on default should be imprisoned not less than 10 nor more than 30 days, or both, at the discretion of the court, the words "or both, at the discretion of the court," relate to the two penalties, fine and imprisonment, and the court in its discretion may impose both penalties, or only one. State ex rel. Fritz v. Gossens, 54 South. 795, 128 La. 270.

As nor

An indictment for inclosing public lands, alleging that accused so constructed, maintained, and controlled the inclosure then and there having no claim or color of title made or acquired in good faith or otherwise or at all to any of the land, "or an asserted right" thereto by or under claim made in good faith, with a view to entry thereof, etc., was not fatally defective for failure to sufficiently negative the asserted right by a direct and positive averment, since the word "or," both in the statute and in the indictment, should be construed to mean "nor." Lillis v. United States, 190 Fed. 530, 535, 111 C. C. A. 362.

As of

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, 30 Stat. 181, the proviso relative to "embroidered wearing apparel or other article or textile fabric," is not to be construed as though the second "or" were "of"; nor should the doctrine of notitur a sociis be applied so as to restrict the proviso to such articles of wearing apparel as are textiles or made of textiles, and thus exclude embroidered furs. Hugo Jaeckel & Son v. United States, 178 Fed. 260, 261, 101 C. C. A. 620.

As to wit

The word "or" in statutes is often used in the sense of "to wit"—that is, in explanation of what precedes—and gives to that which precedes the same signification as that which follows. Bryan v. Menefee (Okla.) 95 Pac. 471, 475, 21 Okl. 1 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5014, 5015).

The word "or" may be used in the sense of to wit. An information based on the provisions of a violation of Cr. Code, § 121, which charges in the language of the statute that the property in question came into the possession of defendant by virtue or under color of his relation as an officer, is not void for duplicity, for the words, "by virtue" and "under color," as applied to the expression of his relation as an officer, mean one and the same thing. Hendee v. State, 113 N. W. 1050, 1052, 80 Neb. 80, 84.

As word of substitution

Where, after attempting to create an intermediate estate in a trustee for a period of 25 years, the testatrix devised the property to certain named persons, "or" their heirs, absolutely, the word "or" interposed between the names of the devisees and their heirs indicates substitution. Johnson v. Preston, 80 N. E. 1001, 1006, 228 Ill. 447, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564 (citing Ebey v. Adams, 25 N. E. 1013, 135 Ill. 80, 10 L. R. A. 162; 1 Redf. Wills, 486).

A will, after giving a life use of testator's residuary estate, consisting of land, to his wife, provided that after her death, subject to her life use thereof, testator gave to his daughter A. for her life the use of the T. block, and then proceeded: "On the death of both my wife and daughter I give * * * said T. block to my son H. absolutely, or in case he should die before that time, to his legal heirs, to be distributed among them as if it were his intestate property." Held, that reading the devise to the son as it must be read in view of the rule that the law favors vested estates, as though phrased "subject to the life estates above created in favor of my wife and daughter, I give," etc., and treating the word "or" in said devise as used as the equivalent of "and," which use is plainly shown by the employment of the latter word for a like purpose in a subsequent devise of a remainder to the daughter, the attempted limitation over in case of his not surviving both his mother and sister was therefore not an alternative, but a substitutionary gift, and so void under the statute of perpetuities. Cody v. Staples, 67 Atl. 1, 80 Conn. 82.

The word "or" in wills may be changed to "and," but a devise to testator's named son "or his children" is a substitutional gift, and the word "or" will not be deemed to mean "and" in the absence of anything in the general scheme in the will or any single provision thereof requiring such construction. Bender v. Bender, 75 Atl. 859, 860, 861, 226 Pa. 607, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1088.

OR ELSEWHERE

A consent decree in Georgia in partition of described Georgia lands gave some of the heirs certain lands in settlement of claims against the estate "in Thomasville, Thomas county or elsewhere." Held, that the general term "or elsewhere" did not include Florida lands. Atkinson v. Schillman, 53 South. 844, 846, 60 Fla. 301.

A rule of a railroad providing for the precautions to be taken when an engine is placed upon a siding "or elsewhere" to stand has no application to a locomotive which the engineer has brought to a temporary stop on the main track. As the words "or elsewhere" must be construed to refer to things of the same kind as the word "siding," the words "or elsewhere" following the word "siding" are within the ejusdem generis doctrine. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bergschicker, 69 N. E. 1000, 1002, 162 Ind. 108.

The words "or elsewhere," in an ordinance which provides, among other things, that "any person or persons who shall in any street, railroad depot, public place or elsewhere within the town of Boonton use obscene language," etc., construed to refer to places of the same character (that is, to places frequented by the public); and therefore a private yard abutting on a highway would not be included within its terms. Peer v. Dixon, 83 Atl. 180, 181, 82 N. J. Law, 366.

ORAL DEFAMATION

See Slander.

ORAL DEMURRER

A motion to strike a paragraph of the answer is an oral demurrer thereto. Kelly v. Malone, 68 S. E. 639, 5 Ga. App. 618.

ORAL LEASE

A direction by one who had been occupying an apartment to the janitress, who was without authority to lease the same, not to let any one have the apartment during his absence, and a statement by him that when he came back he would sign the lease with the agent and that he wanted it for a year, did not constitute an "oral lease," and was no more than an agreement for a lease. Columbia Bank v. Clarke, 108 N. Y. Supp. 587.

ORCHARD

Fruit trees planted in the line of a prospective highway, with the evident purpose of raising difficulties to the laying out of the highway, are not an "orchard" within the meaning of the highway law, which prohibits the laying out of a highway through an orchard of the growth of four years or more. In re Fenn, 136 N. Y. Supp. 262, 263, 151 App. Div. 797.

In an action under Code 1907, § 6037, for statutory penalty for destruction of fruit trees inclosed on premises, a general charge for defendant because there was no proof that the trees were removed from an inclosure was properly refused; it appearing that the trees were taken from a yard and orchard, which showed prima facie an inclosure; "orchard" being defined by Webster as meaning, among other things, "an inclosure containing fruit trees," etc. Wright v. Sample, 50 South. 268, 162 Ala. 222.

ORCHARD RUN

As used in a contract to sell prunes on trees, the contract reciting: "For prunes running orchard run (60 to the pound) when dried, $95 per ton (with variations of $1.00 per point up or down). All prunes to be good merchantable quality. Test accepted at 53," the words in parentheses having been erased when the contract was executed, the words "orchard run" meant all the prunes in the orchard, without reference to size in grading. Ross v. Frank, 108 Pac. 1025, 13 Cal. App. 88.

ORDAIN—ORDINATION

As used in Gen. Laws 1907, p. 406, c. 226, § 12, providing that a petition for a proposed ordinance, charter, or amendment to the charter of any city shall be filed with the city clerk, who shall transmit it to the next session of the council, which shall either ordain or reject the same, as proposed, within 30 days thereafter; but if rejected, or no action is taken thereon within that time, it shall be submitted to the voters, the word "ordain" is employed in the sense of "adopt" or "approve"; that is, the council may either approve or reject the proposed charter or ordinance, after which proceedings may be taken as therein directed, and hence the adoption of a proposed charter by resolution, instead of by ordinance, was sufficient. Haines v. City of Forest Grove, 103 Pac. 775, 776, 54 Or. 443 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5016).

ORDER

See Apparent Good Order; Fraternal Order; Good Order; Good Order and Condition; Proper Order; Proved Order; Running Order; Special Order; Stay Order; Stop Order; Taking Orders; Under the Order or Direction of; Under the Orders and Employment of. Any special order, see Any.

Where a bill of lading contains a provision and condition to the effect that, "if the word 'order' is written immediately before or after the name of the party to whose order the property is consigned, the surrender of the bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be required before delivery of the property at destination," and the words "order notify" appear before the name of the consignee thereon, such bill of lading requires notice to the consignee and production of the bill of lading before delivery. F. L. Layton & Sons v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 72 S. E. 988, 989, 90 S. C. 323.

The word "order," as used in a bill of lading before the name of the consignee, required a proper indorsement by the consignee before delivery of the property could be legally made by the carrier at destination. Ullmann v. Southern R. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 480, 481, 47 Misc. Rep. 107.

In a clause in the charter of a vessel then at Venice requiring the vessel to "sail 48 hours after orders are given," the word "orders" described the action of the charterer in directing the master's course after the vessel was loaded with the charterer's property, and did not refer to the time when she was required to sail from Venice after naming of the port of loading. Rosasco v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 138 Fed. 25, 27, 70 C. C. A. 455.

Of civil authority

Where a policy of insurance on a hotel excepted risks "for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion * * * or riot or military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority," and three persons for whose arrest warrants had been issued by a federal court took refuge in the hotel and resisted arrest, and exchanged shots with the marshal's posse, whereupon, the marshal burned it and arrested one of the three, it was held that, while the riot by the persons resisting arrest was the occasion of the hotel's loss by fire, the direct cause of the loss was the marshal's unauthorized act, and hence the insurer was not released from liability by the excepted risks of "riot" and "order of any civil authority." American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Stearns Lumber Co., 140 S. W. 148, 145 Ky. 255, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 628.

As justice and public welfare may require

Const. art. 1, § 16, declares that property shall not be taken or damaged without compensation, and Laws 1903, p. 140, c. 92, § 4, authorizes the assessment of damages and benefits for land taken for public use, and authorizes the court to "make such order in the premises as justice and the public welfare may require." Held, that the authority to make such order in the premises as justice and the public welfare may require referred to the necessary assessment of damages and benefits, and did not confer authority on the city council to first modify a proposed replat, and then adopt it as modified. Brazell v. City of Seattle, 104 Pac. 155, 158, 55 Wash. 180.

Of municipal authorities

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3028, requiring the legislative body of a city to "order," on application therefor, a local option election, an order for an election, duly passed by the council of the city at a proper meeting, is sufficient, and an ordinance or a formal resolution for an election is not necessary. An order for a local option election, under this statute, which authorizes an election at which only qualified voters shall vote, need not limit the right to vote to legal voters. The council of a city ordering a local option election need not formally set out on its record the fact that the notice of the election was given as ordered. State v. Armstrong, 127 S. W. 93, 94, 140 Mo. App. 719.

Election of a city solicitor by the Cambridge board of aldermen, as required by Rev. Laws, c. 26, § 7, is not an "ordinance" or "order," within general rules and orders of the city council, providing that every ordinance and order requiring concurrent action shall remain with the clerk for 36 hours after passing one board. Pevey v. Aylward, 91 N. E. 315, 316, 205 Mass. 102.

Under a covenant in a lease requiring the lessee to make repairs on "order" of the municipal authorities, a notice from a health department, proved to be official and in customary form, though on a printed form, with a printed signature, is an "order." Townsend v. Rosenblum, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1029, 1031.

"An order," as used in a lease requiring the tenant to comply with all regulations and orders of all municipal departments of the city, was satisfied by the service of a notice by the city building department, which, after reciting the dangerous condition of the premises, declared, "You are therefore required to make the same safe," as authorized by Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 179, c. 466, § 407 et seq.). Markham v. David Stevenson Brewing Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 684, 688, 104 App. Div. 420.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1554, authorizes an order to be given by members of the city council forbidding the sale of liquor to spendthrifts. Section 1558 provides for revocation of a liquor license for failure to observe "any order" of the aldermen made pursuant to law. Section 1549 requires a bond by a liquor dealer conditioned that he will "obey all orders of such * * * aldermen or any of them made pursuant to law." Held, that an ordinance prescribing hours of closing and opening for saloons is an order within the meaning of section 1558, and that that section does not refer solely to the order specified in section 1554. State ex rel. McKay v. Curtis, 110 N. W. 189, 191, 130 Wis. 357.

Where a foreman ordered a railway employé to go upon a bridge pier and remove woodwork therefrom, directing the specific manner in which the removal should be made, and the foreman, in an attempt to further the work, without warning the employé, pried down a timber, breaking off the footing upon which the employé stood, causing his injury, there was an "order," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, subd. 2, making corporations liable for injuries to employés from the negligence of persons in its service to whose order the employés are bound to and do conform. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Pavay, 79 N. E. 529, 530, 39 Ind. App. 284.

As used in Employers' Liability Act (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083, subd. 2), making an employer liable for injuries to its employé caused by the negligence of a person in its service to whose order or direction the injured employé was bound to and did conform, the words "order or direction" apply to special orders as distinguished from general orders, and the protection of the statute does not extend to an employé injured from the negligence of the foreman while working under general directions. Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Kane, 80 N. E. 841, 843, 169 Ind. 25.

Of railroad commission

The expression "order of the commission," as used in Act Aug. 23, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 78) § 9, relating to the jurisdiction of the railroad commission, and providing that if any corporation within its jurisdiction shall do any act declared unlawful, or omit to do any act required to be done either by any law of Georgia, or by an order of the commission, it shall be liable to persons injured thereby, has reference to special orders of the commission, and not to its general rules. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Beach, 70 S. E. 137, 139, 8 Ga. App. 720.

Ordinance distinguished

See Ordinance.

Warrant

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 5273, which provides that each city council shall cause to be provided for its clerk's office a seal, which seal shall be affixed to all transcripts, orders, or certificates which it may be necessary or proper to authenticate under the provisions of this act, a city warrant is not an "order." Condon v. City of Eureka Springs, 135 Fed. 566, 571.

ORDER (In Commercial Law)

See Attested Order; Mail Order; Money Order; Money Order Funds.

Warrant synonymous, see Warrant.

"An 'order' is in its principal elements the same whether it is for the payment of money or for the delivery of goods." United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 649 (citing Bish. St. Crimes, p. 298, § 327).

The indorsement of a check payable to a real or fictitious person, other than accused, is equivalent to an "order for the payment of money," within Penal Code, § 470, enumerating the subjects of forgery. People v. Jones, 106 Pac. 724, 725, 12 Cal. App. 129.

As rendering instrument negotiable

The words "or order" are not essential to make a bill of lading quasi negotiable. Forbes v. Boston & L. R. Co., 133 Mass. 154, 157.

Particular instruments

A written instrument in the following language: "Mr. Alex. Sapp Please let Jim have $1.00 in trade and oblige, C. H. Rogers. $1.00 P. S. Will pay Thursday"—is "an order for money or other property," within the meaning of the forgery statute. Johnson v. State, 36 South. 166, 47 Fla. 35.

Sale distinguished

A sale of personal property is a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recompense in value, and so one having an agency to sell wine, which he was expected to deliver, is not entitled to a commission on the mere procuring of orders, the title of the wine not passing until an actual delivery; an "order" being only an executory agreement which cannot even be deemed a "sale" for the purpose of determining the number of sales made by the agent in a given time. Hall v. French-American Wine Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 158, 161, 149 App. Div. 609.

ORDER (In Practice)

See Final Order; Interlocutory Order; Lawful Order.

See, also, Final Decree or Judgment.

As expressly defined by Gen. Code Ohio, § 11582, an "order" is a direction of the court or judge made or rendered in writing, and not included in a judgment. Mannington v. Hocking Val. Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 141.

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 4880, an "order" is defined to be every direction of a court or judge made and entered in writing and not included in a judgment. Dahlstrom v. Portland Min. Co., 85 Pac. 916, 917, 12 Idaho, 87.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4402, providing that, on the dismissal of an appeal from justice court for irregularity, the district court clerk shall certify the "order" of dismissal to the justice, under section 4247 defining a final order to be an order affecting a substantial right when it determines the action and prevents a judgment, and section 4249 providing that a final order of the district court may be reversed, etc., an order dismissing an appeal from a justice court must be made by the district court, and must appear upon its record, and no individual act of appellant, such as an entry on the docket, can operate as a dismissal of the appeal. Mayott v. Knott, 92 Pac. 240, 16 Wyo. 108.

The provision in Chicago Municipal Court Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 37) § 264, authorizing the chief justice to prescribe abbreviated forms of entries of "orders" by the court, extends to all orders, whether interlocutory or final. City of Chicago v. Coleman, 98 N. E. 521, 522, 254 Ill. 388.

The term "rule" or "order," which are synonymous, includes commands to lower courts or court officials to do ministerial acts. Carter v. Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co., 102 S. W. 2, 9, 124 Mo. App. 530.

The error of a trial court in directing or refusing to direct a verdict is one of law reviewable by the Supreme Court on appeal as coming within "orders, rulings, or decisions," made in the action within Comp. Laws 1907, § 3304, authorizing the court on appeal from a judgment to review orders, rulings, and decisions in the action. Law v. Smith, 98 Pac. 800, 804, 84 Utah, 894.

An indorsement by a justice of the city court upon an "order" for the examination of a judgment debtor, reciting, "Proceedings dismissed upon objection made by judgment debtor," is itself an order within Code Civ. Proc. § 767, defining a written direction of a court or judge, not contained in a judgment, to be an order. McAlpin v. Stoddard, 105 N. Y. Supp. 9, 12, 54 Misc. Rep. 647.

Code 1896, § 1372, allows 30 cents for entering any "order" of court, and an item of a cost bill stated upon an execution was "orders of court, 30¢." Held, that it was obvious that the word "order" was intended, and the execution was not invalid on the ground that the bill of costs was not itemized as required by section 1883. Simmons v. Sharpe, 42 South. 441, 442, 148 Ala. 217.

The words "judgment" and "order," in Code, § 542, subhead 3, which provides that the Supreme Court may reverse, vacate, and modify a judgment of a district court for errors appearing on the record, and in reversing such judgment or "order" may reverse, vacate, or modify any immediate "order" involving the merits of the action or any part thereof, are used somewhat indiscriminately, so much so as to suggest that any specific independent part of a judgment is appealable. Kremer v. Kremer, 90 Pac. 998, 999, 76 Kan. 134.

Where a justice of the peace was clerk as well, an execution issued by him was "ordered by the court," within Gen. St. c. 38, art. 1, § 4, providing that, unless so ordered, no execution shall issue till 10 days after judgment rendered. Guelot v. Pearce (Ky.) 38 S. W. 892, 893.

A record stating "that the said indictment and proceedings are handed down to the quarter sessions, there to be proceeded with according to law," etc., is sufficient to give the quarter sessions jurisdiction; the words "handed down" and "ordered to be delivered" being convertible terms. Engeman v. State, 23 Atl. 676, 678, 54 N. J. Law, 247.

An order of approval of an account and discharge of a guardian is "an order or judgment," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2799, providing that any person interested in a guardianship may by a bill of review have any order or judgment corrected on showing error therein. Nicholson v. Nicholson (Tex.) 125 S. W. 965, 967.

Order after judgment

An order of the trial court quashing an execution is an "order on a summary application in an action after judgment," and is appealable. Barnett v. Bohannon, 112 Pac. 987, 988, 27 Okl. 388.

An order setting aside a default before entry of judgment thereon is not appealable; it not being an "order after judgment" or an "interlocutory order," within Code Civ. Proc. § 963, making appealable interlocutory orders entered in actions to redeem mortgaged property or in partition suits, etc. Savage v. Smith, 97 Pac. 821, 822, 154 Cal. 325.

Order against sale or conveyance

An order of the superior court, annulling and setting aside a former order confirming the sale of realty belonging to a decedent's estate, is an order "against directing a sale or conveyance" within Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, so as to be appealable to the Supreme Court. In re West's Estate, 122 Pac. 953, 954, 162 Cal. 352.

An order of the probate court discharging an order upon the executrix to show cause why the homestead devised by the will of the testate should not be sold to pay debts of the estate is an "order refusing to direct the sale of real estate," within the meaning of subdivision 3, § 4665, Gen. St. 1894, and such order can be reviewed by appeal only, and not upon certiorari. In re Wilson's Estate, 97 N. W. 647, 648, 91 Minn. 115.

As proceeding

See Proceeding.

Ruling on demurrer

A decision overruling a demurrer to an amended complaint, with leave to defendants to answer, was not a judgment of itself, but an "order" which was subject to vacation for cause under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may relieve a party from a mistake in an order made during the progress of the proceedings during the term in the furtherance of justice. Dent v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 95 Pac. 672, 673, 7 Cal. App. 683.

Under Pen. Code, § 1008, providing that, if a demurrer is allowed, the judgment is final on the indictment or information, and is a bar to another prosecution for the same offense, unless the court, being of the opinion that the objection may be avoided in a new indictment or information, directs the case to be resubmitted or directs a new information to be filed, provided that, after such order, the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or committed by him as in other cases, and section 1009 providing that if the court does not permit the information to be amended, nor direct that a new information be filed, the defendant must be discharged, the court's minutes reciting that, the demurrer to the information having been argued and submitted, the court expressed the opinion that the demurrer should be sustained, but that the defect in the information might be corrected by a new information, did not constitute an order within section 1008, authorizing proceedings de novo and a new information against the accused. Ex parte Hayter, 116 Pac. 370, 372, 16 Cal. App. 211.

ORDER AFFECTING SUBSTANTIAL RIGHT

ORDER GRANTING OR CONTINUING INJUNCTION

An order overruling a motion to dissolve or modify an injunction previously granted is not one continuing the injunction within the meaning of the statute, and is not appealable. Lewis v. Hitchman Coal & Coke Co., 176 Fed. 549, 550, 100 C. C. A. 137.

A preliminary restraining order requiring the defendants to show cause why it should not be made permanent, is an "order granting an injunction" within the statute. Taylor v. Breese, 163 Fed. 678, 683, 90 C. C. A. 558. And so is an interlocutory decree in a suit for infringement of a patent which adjudges the patent valid and infringed, awards an injunction, and directs an accounting. Highland Glass Co. v. Schmertz Wire Glass Co., 178 Fed. 944, 970, 102 C. C. A. 316.

ORDER GRANTING OR REFUSING ALIMONY

An order adjudging or refusing to adjudge a share of the husband's property to the wife, where a divorce is granted to the husband by reason of the aggression of the wife, under Rev. St. § 5700, is an "order granting or refusing alimony," within Rev. St. 1908, § 5706, and either party may appeal. Flesler v. Flesler, 93 N. E. 899, 900, 83 Ohio St. 200.

ORDER OF COURT

See By Order of Court.

As law, see Law.

See, also, Judgment; Order (In Practice).

The expression "orders of court" has been treated as covering not only orders of the courts in session, but orders of the absent judges. United States v. McCabe, 129 Fed. 708, 711, 64 C. C. A. 236.

ORDER OF DEPORTATION

The requirement of Chinese Exclusion Act May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25, as amended by Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, 28 Stat. 7, that an order of deportation be executed by the marshal, and that the person to be deported shall not be admitted to bail, refers to the final order of deportation, and does not prohibit bail pending an appeal. United States v. Yee Yet, 192 Fed. 577, 579.

ORDER OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Commerce Court has jurisdiction of a suit to annul an "order" of the Interstate Commerce Commission which either awards or denies reparation to a complainant under Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 16, 24 Stat. 384, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 5, 34 Stat. 590. A petition by a carrier to the Interstate Commerce Commission for leave to refund to a shipper a portion of a freight charge paid which it admits to have been excessive is not the equivalent of a complaint for reparation by the shipper under Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 13, 24 Stat. 383, and a denial of the petition by the Commission for want of jurisdiction, because under its construction of the statute the claim of the shipper was barred by limitation, does not constitute an order adverse to the shipper which can be made the basis of a suit by him for relief in the Commerce Court. Arkansas Fertilizer Co. v. United States, 193 Fed. 667, 669 (per Archbald, Judge, solus).

Act Cong. June 18, 1910, c. 309, 36 Stat. 539, confers on the Commerce Court jurisdiction previously possessed by the Circuit Courts of the United States of cases brought to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any "order" of the Interstate Commerce Commission, also authorizing the Commerce Court to exercise any and all powers of the Circuit Court of the United States so far as may be appropriate to the effective exercise of the jurisdiction conferred, and that nothing contained in the act shall be construed as enlarging the jurisdiction previously possessed by the courts thereby transferred to and vested in the Commerce Court; the jurisdiction so far as conferred, however, being exclusive, and so far as not conferred being reserved. Held, that since capacity to sue in the Commerce Court depends on the general equity practice in force in the Circuit Courts, and prior to the creation of the Commerce Court a shipper claiming to be injured by a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission refusing to annul a private car demurrage rule could have sued in the Circuit Court to set aside the commission's ruling, such ruling, though granting no affirmative relief, should be construed as an "order" of the commission which the Commerce Court had jurisdiction to review on petition of the person conceiving himself injured thereby. Procter & Gamble Co. v. United States, 188 Fed. 221, 224.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION

As process, see Process.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

An "order to show cause" is but a means prescribed by law in the nature of a process to bring a defendant into court to answer plaintiff's demands. Morehouse v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., 177 Fed. 337, 339, 100 C. C. A. 647.

An "order to show cause" is an order requiring a party to appear and show cause why a certain thing should not be done or permitted. Spaeth v. Sells, 176 Fed. 797, 798.

ORDERLY HOUSE

See, also, Disorderly House.

An "orderly house," or place for the sale of liquors, within the condition of a bond providing that a liquor dealer shall maintain such a place, is one in which no music, loud or boisterous talking, yelling, or indecent, vulgar language is allowed, used, or practiced, or any other noise calculated to disturb or annoy any person residing or doing business in that vicinity. Adams v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1086, 1088.

ORDINANCE

See Criminal Ordinance; Fixed by Ordinance; Necessary Police Ordinances; Permanent Ordinance; Prescribed by Law or Ordinance; Prior Ordinance.
Any proposed ordinance, see Any.
Vacation ordinance, see Vacation.

The term "ordinance," as used in speaking of the legislation of the constitutional convention, means a law which is essential to carry into effect the objects for which the convention was created, and, when once adopted by the convention, such ordinance has the force and effect of law. Smith v. State ex rel. Hepburn, 113 Pac. 932, 935, 28 Okl. 235 (quoting and adopting the definition in Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 18 Okl. 561); Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 213, 18 Okl. 561.

"An 'ordinance' of a municipal corporation is a local law, and binds persons within the jurisdiction of the corporation." Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lighthouse, 71 N. E. 218, 221, 163 Ind. 247 (citing Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Peterson, 59 N. E. 1044, 156 Ind. 364; Pennsylvania Co. v. Stegmeier, 20 N. E. 848, 118 Ind. 305, 10 Am. St. Rep. 136).

"Ordinance" as a term of municipal law, is the equivalent of legislative action, and in a statute carries with it by implication the usual incidents of such action. Stemmler v. Borough of Madison, 83 Atl. 85, 82 N. J. Law, 596, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 767.

An "ordinance" is a local law prescribing a general and permanent rule. "A city council is a miniature general assembly, and their authorized ordinances have the force of laws passed by the Legislature." Kersey v. City of Terre Haute, 68 N. E. 1027, 1029, 161 Ind. 471 (citing Citizens' Gas & Min. Co. v. Town of Elwood, 114 Ind. 332, 16 N. E. 624, and quoting Taylor v. City of Carondelet, 22 Mo. 105).

A municipal ordinance is a local law, affecting the property, rights, and liberty of citizens, who are entitled to know at what time and under what circumstances it acquires that status. Mayor and Board of Trustees of Town of New Iberia v. Moss Hotel Co., 36 South. 552, 553, 112 La. 525.

A "municipal ordinance" is a law of local application, and a violation of the ordinance is an offense against the city enacting the ordinance. The ordinance is penal in its nature; otherwise the offender could not be arrested and taken in custody for its violation. An infraction of the ordinance is termed a petty offense and constitutes a crime, in the broad meaning of that word. Pearson v. Wimble, 52 S. E. 751, 755, 124 Ga. 701, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (citing McRae v. Mayor, etc., of City of Americus, 59 Ga. 170, 27 Am. Rep. 390).

"An 'ordinance regulating a street' is a legislative act, entirely beyond the judicial power of the state." Indiana R. Co. v. Calvert, 80 N. E. 961, 964, 168 Ind. 321, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 780, 11 Ann. Cas. 635 (quoting and adopting the definition in Wood v. Mears, 12 Ind. 515, 74 Am. Dec. 222; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. State ex rel. City of Lawrenceburg, 37 Ind. 489).

"'Police ordinances' are at once family rules on a large scale and state laws on a small scale. * * * In a city, we think, a man may fight in a way to violate an ordinance without being guilty of an assault and battery." Porter v. State, 52 S. E. 283, 288, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730 (quoting and adopting definition in McRae v. Mayor, etc., of City of Americus, 59 Ga. 168, 27 Am. Rep. 390).

Writing essential

Since an ordinance must be reduced to writing before it can be acted on by the city council, it means something more than a verbal motion subsequently reduced to writing by the clerk or secretary of the council, and hence a recital in the minutes of a city council that a certain councilman presented a petition from P. asking permission to erect a fence around a portion of the property on which a new building was to be erected, including a portion of a street and alley with a recommendation of the board of fire commissioners that the request be granted, and that on motion the request was granted, did not constitute an ordinance and was insufficient to grant the authority prayed; especially under Austin City Charter (Sp. Laws 1909, c. 2, art. 11) § 15, providing that an ordinance shall be complete in the form in which it is finally passed, and be filed with the clerk of the city council before action shall be taken thereon. American Const. Co. v. Seelig, 133 S. W. 429, 431, 104 Tex. 16.

"Ordinance," as used in Indiana Act 1899, p. 343, c. 154, § 25, providing that no board of county commissioners, officers, agent, or employé of any county shall have power to bind the county by any contract or agreement or in any other way to any extent beyond the amount of money at the time already appropriated by ordinance for the purpose of the occupation, etc., means an instrument in writing, something more and additional to a verbal motion subsequently reduced to writing by a clerk or subordinate of the local board, so that such acts required to be done by ordinance cannot be validly done by order, resolution, or notice. State ex rel. Davis v. Board of Commissioners of Newton County, 74 N. E. 1091, 1093, 165 Ind. 262, 6 Ann. Cas. 468.

As contract

See Contract.

As permanent rule

An ordinance amending an ordinance passed by an incorporated town of the Indian Territory granting to a corporation a franchise to furnish said town with light and heat by means of natural gas, and extending the time set in the ordinance amended for furnishing the same, is an "ordinance of general and permanent nature" within Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 924 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 694), providing that, when an ordinance of such a nature is advanced from the first to the third reading on the same day, two-thirds of the members of the council must vote in favor thereof. Town of Sapulpa v. Sapulpa Oil & Gas Co., 97 Pac. 1007, 1010, 22 Okl. 847.

By-laws, rules, and regulations synonymous

The words "ordinances," "rules," "regulations," and "by-laws" are synonymous terms. State ex rel. Krebs v. Hector, 120 N. W. 199, 200, 83 Neb. 690 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5025).

Within a city charter authorizing the board of commissioners by "ordinance" to levy an additional tax, a mere order or resolution of ratification and affirmance, modifying in part a prior ordinance levying an additional tax and in all other respects confirming it, was a valid exercise of the powers of the commissioners. Johnston v. City of Huntington, 78 S. E. 142, 144, 71 W. Va. 106.

Law distinguished

Law as including ordinance, see Law.

As law of the state, see Law of the State.

A "municipal ordinance" is not regarded in the light of a public law of which the courts should take judicial notice. Stott v. City of Chicago, 68 N. E. 736, 739, 205 Ill. 281.

"A city ordinance" is not a law of the same character as a statute. It is merely a regulation; a rule of conduct passed by the common council for the direction and supervision of its citizens. People v. Gardner, 106 N. W. 541, 545, 148 Mich. 104.

As liability

See Liability.

Order distinguished

Though the words "regulation or order" and "ordinance and resolution," as found in the California statutes, may often be used to express the same meaning, it does not necessarily follow that in all cases the word "order" is synonymous with "ordinance," and, under the Consolidation Act April 25, 1863 (St. Cal. 1863, p. 540, c. 352), which authorizes the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to proceed under the police power by "regulation or order," a contract for the disposition of garbage may be made by "order," and the mayor's signature is not essential to its validity. California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 126 Fed. 29, 40, 61 C. C. A. 91.

As private act

See Private Act.

Resolution included

The term "ordinance" or "resolutions," as used in Nev. Codes 1905, § 2668, giving the mayor of the city power to sign or veto any ordinance or resolution, was intended to include, not only ordinances as such, but also resolutions of a legislative character, which therefore are similar to ordinances in this respect. State v. Dula, 116 N. W. 751, 753, 17 N. D. 319.

An "ordinance" is also a resolution, and the two are equivalent. Hence an ordinance authorizing a street improvement passed only 19 days after the resolution of intention had been passed is premature and void under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153), though not signed by the mayor until two days after its enactment. Mulberry v. O'Dea, 88 Pac. 367, 368, 4 Cal. App. 385 (citing City of Los Angeles v. Waldron, 3 Pac. 890, 65 Cal. 283; Hallman v. Shoultera, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057, 114 Cal. 157).

Under Barre City Charter (Acts 1894, No. 165) §§ 5, 53, 55, vesting the administration of municipal affairs in the mayor and board of aldermen, and empowering the council to make "ordinances," regulations, and by-laws to provide a supply of water, etc., a grant of a privilege to an individual to install a system of pipes through the streets of the city, to convey water to the inhabitants thereof, may be by resolution of the board of aldermen, approved by the mayor, and need not be by ordinance which, strictly speaking, is an expression of the municipal will affecting the conduct of the inhabitants generally or of a number of them under some general designation. City of Barre v. Perry & Scribner, 73 Atl. 574, 82 Vt. 301.

There is a plain distinction between the functions of an "ordinance" and a simple "resolution" not adopted as an ordinance. An "ordinance" is a mode of expressing the legislative acts of a municipal corporation, and a resolution is an order of temporary character and of a ministerial nature. Pensacola v. Southern Bell Telephone Co., 37

South. 820, 824, 49 Fla. 161 (citing City of Jacksonville v. Ledwith, 7 South. 885, 26 Fla. 163, 9 L. R. A. 69, 23 Am. St. Rep. 558).

As statute

See Statute.

Election of city officer

Election of a city solicitor by the Cambridge board of aldermen, as required by Rev. Laws, c. 26, § 7, is not an "ordinance" or "order," within general rules and orders of the city council, providing that every ordinance and order requiring concurrent action shall remain with the clerk for 36 hours after passing one board. Pevey v. Aylward, 91 N. E. 315, 816, 205 Mass. 102.

Grant of land

The word "ordinance," in its usual primary sense, means a local law, a rule of conduct prospective in its operation, and applying generally to the persons and things subject to the local jurisdiction. It does not, in its ordinary use or signification, include a grant of lands. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., 144 Fed. 160, 181.

Warrant

Under Sand. & H. Dig. Ark. § 5273, which provides that "each city council shall cause to be provided for its clerk's office a seal, which seal shall be affixed to all transcripts, orders, or certificates which it may be necessary or proper to authenticate under the provisions of this act or of any by-law or ordinance of the city," a city warrant is not an "ordinance." Condon v. City of Eureka Springs, 135 Fed. 568, 571.

ORDINARY (ADJ.)

"Ordinary" means methodical, regular, according to established order, common, usual, often recurring. City of Long Beach v. Boynton, 119 Pac. 677, 679, 17 Cal. App. 290. See, also, Fritz v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 Pac. 209, 213, 25 Utah, 263.

In prosecutions for homicide, in charging as to the presumption that persons intend the ordinary results of their acts, the words "necessary," "probable," "usual," and "ordinary" are substantially synonymous. Beauregard v. State, 131 N. W. 347, 351, 146 Wis. 280.

Where a reservation in a timber deed provided that the vendors should have the right to use such timber from the land as might be necessary for ordinary plantation purposes connected with the land, not including the right to clear any of the land, the grantors or those claiming under them were entitled to use the timber for every other ordinary plantation purpose, than clearing any part of the land, etc., construing the word "ordinary" in its usual acceptation as "common," "usual," "common occurrence," "usual practice," and the word "plantation" as a cultivated estate, a large farm for raising the different products of agriculture. Midland Timber Co. v. Pagues, 76 S. E. 32, 34, 93 S. O. 82.

ORDINARY ACTION

Rev. St. 1874, c. 68, § 11, providing that notice of proceedings by an abandoned spouse to sell the property of the delinquent spouse for family support shall be given "as in ordinary actions," and that anything done under "the order or decree of the court" shall be valid, as if done by the party owning the property, authorizes service by publication as in chancery, notwithstanding the use of the word "action"; that word in a comprehensive sense being synonymous with "suit," and being used interchangeably therewith to mean any legal proceeding in a court for the enforcement of a right, so that the words "ordinary actions" did not contemplate personal service as in a strictly legal action. Brand v. Brand, 96 N. E. 918, 920, 252 Ill. 124.

ORDINARY APPLIANCES

An instruction that, if the jury believe from the evidence that defendant's locomotive was running at such rapid rate of speed that it would have been impossible, by the use of ordinary means and appliances, to stop the locomotive and prevent the injury to the stock within the distance in which stock upon the tracks could be seen by the aid of the headlight, then the defendant was guilty of negligence is not erroneous for the reason that, if the locomotive in question was equipped with some extraordinary appliance by which it could be stopped within the distance to which the headlight throws the light, it would not be within the rule, since the expression "ordinary means and appliances" refers to the ordinary or customary means and appliances at the command of that particular train or locomotive. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co., 48 South. 723, 728, 150 Ala. 390.

ORDINARY BAGGAGE

See, also, Ordinary Luggage.

The word "baggage" has been well defined to mean such articles of necessity, or personal convenience, as are usually carried by passengers for their personal use, and not merchandise or other valuables, though carried in the trunks of passengers, not destined for such use, but for other purposes, as for sale, and the like. The addition of the word ordinary," in the statute regulating the carrier's charges for transporting passengers with "ordinary baggage," does not limit the word "baggage" to wearing apparel and other articles ordinarily carried by a common traveler, but is used merely to recognize the well-established meaning of the word "baggage" as distinguished from "merchandise." Doerner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 130 S. W. 62, 63, 149 Mo. App. 170.

"Ordinary baggage" is, in general, such articles of necessity and convenience as are usually carried by passengers for personal use and comfort, or protection. The property must have the characteristics of personal effects, and be carried for the passenger's use. Manifestly this excludes merchandise, and, by weight of authority, it excludes all property carried for trade purposes, or designed and intended to be used in connection with such purposes. Thus, samples carried by a passenger in his trunk to be used in making sales of goods are not baggage, and it is immaterial that they are necessary to the object of the passenger's journey. And there is no principle on which to distinguish between a case involving samples of the goods to be sold and one involving models or photographs intended to represent the goods to be sold. So under Code, § 2077, requiring a carrier to accept and carry the ordinary baggage of a passenger, a carrier is not liable for delay in the delivery of a sample case checked by a passenger as baggage and containing photographs of articles of furniture which the passenger was engaged in selling as a commercial traveler. McElroy v. Iowa Cent. Ry. Co., 110 N. W. 915, 916, 133 Iowa, 544.

ORDINARY BUSINESS

By the "ordinary business of a municipal corporation," which under Code, § 4359, cannot be stopped by temporary injunction, is meant simply those matters which come within the exercise of those powers and functions conferred upon it by law which are beneficially incident to its existence and operation as a corporation. It does not extend to those matters where the city acts merely by appointment from the state, and in respect of which the beneficial interest is in the public at large. Wingert v. Snouffer & Ford, 108 N. W. 1035, 1037, 134 Iowa, 97.

ORDINARY CALLING

Things repeated daily or weekly in the course of trade or business are parts of the "ordinary calling" of a man exercising such trade or business. Ellis v. State, 63 S. E. 588, 589, 5 Ga. App. 615.

ORDINARY CARE

See Reasonable and Ordinary Care; Usual and Ordinary Care; Want of Ordinary Care.

See, also, Ordinary Diligence; Ordinary Negligence.

"Ordinary care" is that kind of care, in the particulars specified, as other persons similarly situated exercise under like circumstances, and nothing more. City of Mankato v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 142 Fed. 329, 346, 73 C. C. A. 439.

"Ordinary care" is that measure of prudence universally exacted in all the lawful relations of life, except where, from other considerations, a higher degree of caution, is enjoined. Sullivan-Sanford Lumber Co. v. Watson (Tex.) 135 S. W. 635, 639.

The mere exercise of one's best judgment is not necessarily ordinary care. Men of average prudence sometimes arrive at erroneous conclusions from a heedless or careless consideration of the subject before them or from want of ordinary care in other respects. Carney v. Concord St. Ry., 57 Atl. 218, 222, 72 N. H. 364.

Instructions defining "ordinary care" as such care as a prudent man of the requisite skill will take under the circumstances of the particular case, or such as ordinarily prudent men exercise in matters affecting their own interests, erroneously fix the standard of such care. Reffke v. Patten Paper Co., 117 N. W. 1004, 1005, 136 Wis. 535.

An instruction which, in attempting to define "ordinary care," makes the jurors the standard of what is a prudent person is erroneous. Mayor, etc., of City of Americus v. Johnson, 53 S. E. 518-520, 2 Ga. App. 378.

As care exercised by one accustomed or skilled "Ordinary care," as applied to railway employes and agents, is that degree of care which railway employé and agents of ordinary skill and prudence observe under similar circumstances. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keassee (Ky.) 103 S. W. 261, 264.

"Ordinary care" and skill on the part of a physician and surgeon is that degree of care and skill usually exercised and possessed by physicians and surgeons of ordinary care and skill in similar communities. Dorris v. Warford, 100 S. W. 312, 313, 124 Ky. 768, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 14 Ann. Cas. 602.

As used in an instruction defining "ordinary care" as that degree of care which ordinarily prudent and skillful men usually exercise under the circumstances in occupations similar to those proven in the particular case, the word "skillful" does not add a new, distinct, or different standard, but only requires what should be required of ordinary men in the business in which they are engaged. It is better to give the ordinary definition. The instruction is only technically erroneous, if at all. Southern R. Co. in Kentucky v. Otis' Adm'r (Ky.) 78 S. W. 480, 481.

As care exercised in person's own affairs

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would take of the property under the same circumstances if it were his own. Bigger v. Acree, 112 S. W. 879, 87 Ark. 318, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187.

"Ordinary care" is that care which men of common prudence generally exercise about their own affairs in the age and country in which they live. Lyman v. Southern R. Co. 44 S. E. 550, 551, 132 N. C. 721 (quoting and adopting definition in Neal v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 53 N. C. 482).

"Ordinary care" is such care as it is to be assumed that an ordinarily prudent man would exercise in the circumstances were the risk his own. Lake Erie & W. Ry. Co. v. Ford, 78 N. E. 969, 972, 167 Ind. 205.

The words "ordinary care," as used in an instruction in an action for the wrongful death of an employé, mean such care as an ordinarily prudent man would use in matters involving his own interest under circumstances similar to those under investigation. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cane's Adm'r (Ky.) 90 S. W. 1061, 1064.

"Ordinary care" is such care as ordinarily prudent men, as a class, would exercise in caring for their own property under the like circumstances. Fraam v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 126 N. W. 851, 853, 161 Mich. 556, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 21 Ann. Cas. 96.

"Ordinary care" is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use for his own safety under like conditions and similar circumstances. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ueltschl's Ex'rs (Ky.) 97 S. W. 14, 16.

The term "ordinary care" contemplates that degree of care that an ordinarily prudent person would use in the transaction of his own business under like or similar circumstances. Guitar v. Randel (Tex.) 147 S. W. 642, 647.

"Ordinary care" is such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons are accustomed to use in their own affairs. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Russell, 110 S. W. 317, 319, 129 Ky. 14.

Rev. Codes 1905, § 6694, defines "ordinary care" as such care as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own affairs of ordinary importance. Reinke v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 135 N. W. 779, 782, 23 N. D. 182; McBride v. Wallace, 117 N. W. 857, 858, 17 N. D. 495 (citing Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 5472, 6694; 3 Current Law, 162, note 68).

As care of generality or majority of people

"Ordinary care" is such care as the great mass of mankind would ordinarily use in the same or similar circumstances. Palmer v. Schulz, 120 N. W. 349, 352, 138 Wis. 455 (citing Nass v. Schulz, 81 N. W. 133, 105 Wis. 146, 150; Duthie v. Town of Washburn, 58 N. W. 380, 87 Wis. 231, 233; Hennessy v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 74 N. W. 554, 99 Wis. 110; Ward v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 29 Wis. 144; Stafford v. Chippewa Valley Electric R. Co., 85 N. W. 1036, 110 Wis. 331, 354; Dehsoy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 85 N. W. 973, 110 Wis. 412; Schrunk v. St. Joseph, 97 N. W. 946, 120 Wis. 223).

"Ordinary care," in the abstract, is such care as the great mass of mankind ordinarily exercise, and, as applied to any particular case, it is such care as the great mass of mankind ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Sufferling v. Heyl & Patterson, 121 N. W. 252, 264, 139 Wis. 510.

"'Ordinary care' * * * is such degree of care and prudence as ordinarily careful and prudent persons, or as the great mass of mankind (that is, the majority of persons), would exercise under the same circumstances." Banderob v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 113 N. W. 738, 743, 133 Wis. 249.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care "which the great mass of mankind, or the type of that mass, the ordinarily prudent man, exercises under like circumstances." Pumorio v. City of Merrill, 103 N. W. 464, 466, 125 Wis. 102 (quoting and adopting definition in Dehsoy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 85 N. W. 973, 110 Wis. 412).

In an action for injuries to an employé, an instruction that "ordinary care" in such a case is such care as the great mass of mankind would have exercised under the same circumstances was held sufficient, without the addition of the words "engaged in a similar employment." Johnson v. St. Paul & W. Coal Co., 105 N. W. 1048, 1052, 126 Wis. 492.

An instruction that "ordinary care" was such care as the great majority of mankind would and do exercise in the transactions of human life under like conditions and circumstances was not erroneous because of the use of the expression "under like circumstances"; this being the equivalent of "under the same or similar circumstances," which is the proper standard. Warden v. Miller, 87 N. W. 828, 830, 112 Wis. 67.

"Ordinary care" is the care ordinarily exercised by the great mass of mankind or the ordinarily prudent person under the same or similar circumstances, and an instruction defining this term, which omits the qualification "under the same or similar circumstances" or "under like circumstances," is erroneous. Yerkes v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 88 N. W. 34, 36, 112 Wis. 184, 88 Am. St. Rep. 961; Boelter v. Ross Lumber Co., 79 N. W. 243, 245, 103 Wis. 324 (citing Duthie v. Town of Washburn, 58 N. W. 380, 87 Wis. 233; Hennessy v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 74 N. W. 554, 99 Wis. 110, 118).

An instruction that the jury might find "proximate causation" between the negligence of a street car conductor and plaintiff's injury if the injury might reasonably have been expected by the conductor in the exercise of "ordinary care" as a man of intelligence having the knowledge that might be reasonably expected and ought to have been had in doing such work, if not actually erroneous, would have been more nearly accurate if it had been limited to what might have been expected by a man of "ordinary intelligence"; the standard of comparison being the conduct or foresight of ordinarily, prudent, careful, and intelligent persons, and the omission of the qualifying expression conveying the idea of something higher than the ordinary. Dehsoy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 85 N. W. 973, 974, 110 Wis. 412.

"Actionable negligence" is the absence of ordinary care, and "ordinary care" is that care which is exercised by the great mass of mankind. If the defendant's conduct does not measure up to this standard, it is negligent, whether it falls much or little below the standard. Sonsmith v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 138 N. W. 347, 361, 178 Mich. 57.

As care observed by person of common or average prudence

"Ordinary care," required of a boarding house keeper in caring for the property of guests, is the average common prudence, or such care as a prudent person would ordinarily exercise in caring for his own property. Herter v. Dwyer, 129 N. Y. Supp. 505, 507.

The "ordinary care" required of travelers upon highways is such care as persons of common prudence generally exercise. Farrar v. Inhabitants of Greene, 32 Me. 574.

As care of ordinarily prudent person

"Ordinary care" is such care as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Everett v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 112 S. W. 486, 497, 214 Mo. 54; Skonieczny v. Churchman (Del.) 78 Atl. 634, 635, 7 Pennewill, 226; Felver v. Central Electric R. Co., 115 S. W. 980, 983, 216 Mo. 195; Benson v. City of Spokane, 80 Pac. 1106, 1107, 39 Wash. 101; Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds (Tex.) 112 S. W. 787, 792; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hays, 89 S. W. 29, 32, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 162; Nephler v. Woodward, 98 S. W. 488, 490, 200 Mo. 179; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Tasby, 100 S. W. 1030, 1031, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 416; Jackson v. Sumpter Valley Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 356, 360, 50 Or. 455; Chrismer v. Bell Tel. Co., 92 S. W. 378, 383, 194 Mo. 189, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492; Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stillwell, 134 S. W. 202, 204, 142 Ky. 330; Reynolds v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) 99 S. W. 569, 570; Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Miller (Tex.) 85 S. W. 439; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Wilson's Adm'r (Ky.) 102 S. W. 810, 812; Wellmeyer v. St. Louis Transit Co., 95 S. W. 925, 928, 198 Mo. 527; Heberling v. City of Warrensburg, 103 S. W. 36, 39, 204 Mo. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Cohn v. City of Kansas, 18 S. W. 973, 108 Mo. 392); Adkisson's Adm'r v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. (Ky.) 110 S. "Ordinary care" is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same or like circumstances. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Hubbard, 76 S. W. 764, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 343; Atherton v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 71 Pac. 39, 41, 30 Wash. 395.

"Ordinary care" is defined as such care as a reasonably prudent person would have exercised under the same circumstances, or such care as is usually exercised by men of ordinary prudence under the same or similar circumstances. Copeland v. Wabash R. Co. 75 S. W. 106, 108, 109, 175 Mo. 650.

"Ordinary care" is such care as an ordinarily prudent man, mindful of himself and of the rights of others, would exercise under the same circumstances. American Ice Co. v. South Gardiner Lumber Co., 79 Atl. 67, 107 Me. 494, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003.

"Ordinary care" is such care as a person of ordinary prudence and caution would have exercised in the circumstances surrounding the plaintiff or in like circumstances. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Hansen, 125 Ill. App. 153, 158.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care usually exercised by persons of ordinary care and prudence "engaged in the same or similar business under the same or similar circumstances," and a charge substituting, in place of the quoted phrase, the phrase, "under the facts and circumstances surrounding them at the time," is erroneous. Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co., 102 N. W. 589-591, 124 Wis. 328.

"Ordinary care" may be defined as that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence, in the same occupation, would use under the same or similar circumstances. Theobald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 90 S. W. 354, 366, 191 Mo. 395.

"Ordinary care" by a person in the performance of daily tasks is that degree of care which men of ordinary prudence exercise under the ordinary and usual circumstances of their occupations." Chicago, B. &

Q. R. Co. v. Lilley, 98 N. W. 1012, 1016, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 286.

An instruction that "ordinary care" as used in instructions given meant such care as ordinarily prudent persons would exercise under circumstances similar to those proven in the case, and that negligence was the failure to exercise ordinary care, was correct. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lucas' Adm'r (Ky.) 98 S. W. 308, 312.

A charge defining "ordinary care" as "that degree of care which men of ordinary caution and prudence would use under the same or similar circumstances, a failure to use ordinary care is negligence," while not in the usual form, is substantially correct, and not subject to the criticism that it imposes on the person charged a higher degree of care than that required by law. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. of Texas v. Connally (Tex.) 93 S. W. 206, 207.

"Ordinary care" implies the exercise of reasonable diligence, and it is the care which persons of ordinary prudence, not careless persons, would take under all the circumstances. Wilson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 69 Atl. 364, 372, 29 R. I. 146 (quoting Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 2 Sup. Ct. 932, 107 U. S. 454, 24 L. Ed. 605; Mayhew v. Sullivan Min. Co., 76 Me. 100, 112).

"Ordinary care" is such as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent person would exercise under the same surroundings. Lawson v. Seattle & R. Ry. Co., 76 Pac. 71, 72, 34 Wash. 500.

"Ordinary and reasonable care" is such care as an ordinarily careful person would use in given circumstances. Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 127 N. W. 198, 200, 149 Iowa, 176, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 915.

The legal duty which one owes to another in respect to care for the safety of the person or property of that other is "ordinary care" under the circumstances, which is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances, and such duty may be assumed by contract or may arise from the circumstances or the relation of the parties. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 952, 83 Conn. 503.

"Ordinary care" means such care as persons of ordinary prudence and caution would exercise in the same situation and under like circumstances. Linder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 997, 999, 103 Mo. App. 574.

An instruction that "by the term 'ordinary care' is meant such care as a person of ordinary care and prudence ordinarily 'would' have exercised under circumstances the same as or similar to those disclosed by the testimony" was not objectionable because of the use of the word "would." Roedler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 88, 91, 129 Wis. 270.

In an action for personal injuries, "ordinary care" was defined as care which a person of ordinary caution, prudence, and judgment would be expected to exercise in any given case, and counsel took an exception thereto, claiming that "ordinary care is such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons usually exercise or are accustomed to exercise under similar circumstances." Held that, while possibly the latter definition was couched in better chosen language, the distinction between "person" and "persons" and between the "given case" and "similar circumstances" was not so marked or so vital as to raise a presumption that the jury were misled to defendant's prejudice. Crandall v. City of Dubuque, 112 N. W. 555, 556, 136 Iowa, 663.

There is a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff only when, under all of the circumstances and surroundings of the case, he has done, or omitted to do, something which "an ordinarily careful and prudent person," in a like situation as the plaintiff, would not have done, or omitted to do, and which was the efficient and proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168.

"What a person of ordinary care and prudence would do in a given case furnishes a fair and reasonable test of 'ordinary care,' and the omission of anything which an ordinarily prudent person would do is a failure to do that which ordinary prudence suggests." Little v. McGuire, 43 Iowa, 447, 449.

Warehousemen must use "ordinary care" to protect property intrusted to them, which is such care as ordinarily prudent persons in that business are accustomed to exercise. Muskogee Crystal Ice Co. v. Riley Bros., 108 Pac. 629, 630, 24 Okl. 114.

The "ordinary care" required of a bailee for hire is that degree of care which ordinarily prudent persons would use in similar circumstances. Michigan Stove Co. v. Pueblo Hardware Co., 116 Pac. 340, 342, 51 Colo. 160.

As care ordinarily or usually used

"Ordinary care" is such care as an ordinarily prudent person usually exercises under the same or similar circumstances. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berry (Ky.) 111 S. W. 370, 372; Louisville R. Co. v. Esselman, 93 S. W. 50, 52; Cross v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 110 S. W. 290, 292; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Terrell, 100 S. W. 292, 293, 124 Ky. 822, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927; D. H. Ewing & Sons v. Callahan (Ky.) 105 S. W. 387, 388.

"Ordinary care" is such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances, in the same or similar business. City of Covington v. Whitney (Ky.) 99 S. W. 337, 338; Toebbe v. City of Covington, 141

S. W. 421, 423, 145 Ky. 763; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Carter (Ky.) 112 S. W. 904, 906.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care and diligence which an ordinarily careful and prudent person would ordinarily use under like or similar circumstances. Logan v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 82 S. W. 126, 128, 183 Mo. 582; Creamer v. Louisville Ry. Co., 134 S. W. 193, 195, 142 Ky. 340.

The controlling standard or test of reasonable or "ordinary care" is what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in the like circumstances, rather than the prevailing practice of others engaged in the same business. The practice of others, even though not a general or prevailing one, is some evidence of what could have been done, and so has a material bearing upon whether the requisite care was exercised in what was actually done; and an instruction which treats what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in the like circumstances as the controlling standard or test of reasonable or "ordinary care," and also evidence only of that standard, and directs that such practice be considered with all the other evidence bearing upon the subject in fixing upon that standard, is not objectionable as permitting the jury to find that the conduct in question was negligent, even though it conformed to the prevailing practice of others, because that practice was not in itself the legal standard, but, as indicated in the instruction, was evidence only thereof. Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough, 161 Fed. 657, 666, 88 C. C. A. 517.

"Ordinary care" is such care as ordinarily careful and prudent persons ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Cornelius v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. (Ky.) 93 S. W. 643, 644.

"Ordinary care" means the degree of care usually exercised by ordinarily careful and prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances. Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co., 107 N. W. 593, 594, 133 Iowa, 326 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gorman's Adm'r v. Louisville R. Co. [Ky.] 72 S. W. 760).

"Ordinary care" means such care as a person of ordinary prudence would usually exercise in the same situation and circumstances. Dean v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 97 S. W. 910, 912, 199 Mo. 386.

"Ordinary care" is such care as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise under similar circumstances. Dorris v. Warford, 100 S. W. 312, 313, 124 Ky. 768, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 14 Ann. Cas. 602.

"Ordinary care" is that care which is usually exercised under like circumstances by persons of ordinary prudence. Weber v. Union Development & Construction Co., 42 South. 652, 653, 118 La. 77, 12 Ann. Cas. 1012.

A request to instruct that, if plaintiff was injured by attempting to jump from the buggy, she cannot recover unless a person acting with due care would have believed it necessary to so jump, and she used ordinary care in doing so, should have been granted; the "ordinary care" referred to being such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise in view of the existing circumstances. Warth v. Jackson County Court, 76 S. E. 420, 423, 71 W. Va. 184.

An instruction that "ordinary care" is such care as is usually exercised by persons of ordinary care and prudence in the age and country, and under the same or similar circumstances, as a party charged with like negligence is sufficient. Arkansas City v. Payne, 102 Pac. 781, 782, 80 Kan. 353, 18 Ann. Cas. 82.

"Ordinary care" is such as a person of ordinary prudence and caution, according to the usual and general experience of mankind, would exercise in the same situation and circumstances as those of the defendant, whose conduct in that regard is in question. Carr v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 92 S. W. 874, 876, 195 Mo. 214; Feddeck v. St. Louis Car Co., 102 S. W. 675, 679, 125 Mo. App. 24.

"Ordinary care" is that care which an intelligent prudent person engaged in that kind of business ordinarily exercises with respect to it. Shandrew v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 142 Fed. 320, 324, 73 C. C. A. 430.

"Ordinary care" is such care as one of ordinary prudence usually exercises under given circumstances. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Evans' Adm'r, 110 S. W. 844, 848, 129 Ky. 152.

An instruction that "ordinary care" is that degree of care and caution that a person of ordinary prudence is accustomed to use under like or similar circumstances is not incorrect, as there can be no practical difference between what a person of ordinary prudence would "ordinarily do or usually do" and what such person is accustomed to do under similar circumstances. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Brown, 69 S. W. 1010, 1012, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 57.

An instruction that "ordinary care" is such care as persons of ordinary prudence and intelligence exercise under the same or similar circumstances was not fatally defective for failure to use the word "ordinarily," "usually," or "customarily," or a word of like import after the word "intelligence." Coppins v. Town of Jefferson, 105 N. W. 1078, 1080, 126 Wis. 578.

An instruction defining "ordinary care" as that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would usually exercise under the same circumstances, and the failure to use such care is negligence, is not erroneous because of a qualification of the word "exercise" by the word "usually." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ford (Tex.) 118 S. W. 1137, 1138.

As care of ordinary man

In an action for damages from a collision with a street car, an instruction that "ordinary care is such care as an ordinary person would usually observe under the same or similar circumstances as those under investigation" is erroneous; ordinary care being such care as an ordinarily prudent person would usually exercise under circumstances similar to those proven in the case. Henderson City R. Co. v. Lockett (Ky.) 98 S. W. 303, 304.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care which an ordinary person would use under like or similar circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. O'Connor (Tex.) 78 S. W. 374, 376.

A livery man is liable for injuries to horses in his care only when caused by his lack of "ordinary care," which is that care an ordinary man would exercise over his own similar property under like conditions. Caldwell v. Nichol, 134 S. W. 622, 623, 97 Ark. 420.

As care of prudent, careful, or cautious man

"Ordinary care" is such care as would be ordinarily used by a prudent person performing a like service under similar circumstances. Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 76 S. W. 973, 978, 177 Mo. 456.

"Ordinary care" is that care which a prudent person ordinarily uses under like circumstances, which is another and different thing from such care as persons ordinarily use under like circumstances." Heberling v. City of Warrensburg, 103 S. W. 36, 39, 204 Mo. 604 (quoting Cohn v. City of Kansas, 18 S. W. 973, 108 Mo. 392).

A charge defining "ordinary care" as "such care as a prudent man would exercise under the same or similar circumstances" is erroneous, since it makes the test the care that a prudent man would exercise, while the true test is the care that an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised. City of Paris v. Tucker (Tex.) 93 S. W. 233, 235.

An instruction defining "ordinary care" in an action for injuries on a toll bridge as such care as a prudent operator of a toll bridge would exercise under the same or similar circumstances is not misleading or confusing in using the words "such care as a prudent operator of a toll bridge would exercise" instead of "such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise," as both expressions mean practically the same thing. Gibler v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 101 S. W. 37, 40, 203 Mo. 208, 11 Ann. Cas. 1194.

"Ordinary care and caution" is such care and caution as a prudent man would exercise under similar circumstances." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting and adopting definition in Houston & T. Ry. Co. v. Oram, 49 Tex. 346; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Black [Tex.] 44 S. W. 673).

A charge that "ordinary care" is "that care that a prudent man would exercise under like or similar circumstances" is not misleading because the word "a," instead of the word "every" is used. Goodwyn v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 58 S. E. 688, 2 Ga. App. 470.

"Ordinary care" means that care that a prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. This definition is in substantial accord with that given of ordinary diligence in Civ. Code 1895, § 2898. City of Atlanta v. Harper, 59 S. E. 230, 129 Ga. 415.

As care of reasonable and intelligent man

"Ordinary care" means simply that degree of vigilance which a reasonable and prudent person would exercise under like circumstances." Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. McIntosh, 38 N. E. 476, 479, 140 Ind. 261.

"Ordinary care" is such care as a person of reasonable and ordinary prudence and skill would reasonably exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 108 N. W. 720, 722, 145 Mich. 314.

It is inaccurate, but not reversible error, to instruct that "ordinary care" is such care as a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence would use under the same or similar circumstances. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Gray, 85 S. W. 838, 839, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 249 (citing Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 85 S. W. 44, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 595; Same v. Kothmann, 84 S. W. 1089, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 548).

"Ordinary care" is defined as the care that would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances." Cornovski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 51, 56, 207 Mo. 263; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 141 Fed. 247, 259, 72 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 5 Ann. Cas. 448.

"Ordinary care" is such care as a reasonable and prudent man would use under the same or similar circumstances. Antonlan v. South. Pac. Co., 100 Pac. 877, 880, 9 Cal. App. 718.

"Ordinary care" is such care as a reasonable, prudent, and careful person would exercise under similar circumstances. Campbell v. Walker (Del.) 78 Atl. 601, 603, 2 Boyce, 41.

"Ordinary care" is such as a man of reasonable prudence and caution would exercise under the circumstances. Hot Springs St.

R. Co. v. Hildreth, 82 S. W. 245, 247, 72 Ark. 572.

Instructing that ordinary care of the driver would be "such a degree of care and caution, all things considered, that a reasonably prudent man would have exercised," without adding at the end the words "under the same or similar circumstances," if error, was technical, and not injurious. Swalm v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 62, 63, 143 Wis. 442.

"'Ordinary care' is that care which the ideal prudent man would have exercised under the existing conditions." Hence, in an action for injuries to a conductor by falling down the steps of a depot platform at night, in the absence of a light, an instruction that, though plaintiff's lantern was blown out, he was entitled to proceed to his train, "if he thought he could safely make the journey by exercising ordinary care," was erroneous; the standard of plaintiff's duty being, not what he thought he could safely do, but what a reasonably prudent man under the circumstances would do. Beard v. Southern Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 505, 508, 143 N. C. 138.

As care reasonably to be expected

By "ordinary care" is meant such care and caution as a person of ordinary prudence might reasonably be expected to exercise under like circumstances. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Joshlin (Ky.) 110 S. W. 382, 385.

"Ordinary care" is such care as ought reasonably to be expected of an ordinarily prudent person in the same situation as the person whose conduct is in question. Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 1017, 144 Mo. App. 273.

"'Ordinary care' is that degree of care, precaution, or diligence, which may properly be expected or required, having regard to the nature of the action and the circumstances surrounding the transaction." Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Moss (Tex.) 135 S. W. 626, 627.

"Ordinary care, foresight, and diligence" mean such foresight and diligence as a person of ordinary sense or prudence, engaged in the same or similar business, might, be reasonably expected to use under the same or similar circumstances. Laurence L. Prince & Co. v. St. Louis Cotton Compress Co., 86 S. W. 873, 877, 112 Mo. App. 49.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care which may have been reasonably expected from a sensible person in the situation of the plaintiff and defendant at the time. Whitfield v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 60 S. E. 1126, 1128, 147 N. C. 236.

An instruction defining "ordinary care" to be that degree of care, precaution, or diligence which may properly be expected or required, having regard to the nature of the act or duty and to the attending circumstan-es, is not erroneous. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Roberts, 109 S. W. 982, 983, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 69.

As due care

The expression "due care" is not the equivalent of "ordinary care." City of San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex.) 78 S. W. 28, 32.

"Due care," "due diligence," and "ordinary care" are convertible terms, and mean the same thing. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 133 S. W. 1062, 1064; Cornovski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 51, 56, 207 Mo. 263 (citing 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2222; 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5035). But see City of San Antonio v. Talerico (Tex.) 78 S. W. 28, 32.

The rule of law now generally recognized is that the legal measure of duty except that made absolute by law, is better expressed by the phrases "due care," "reasonable care," or "ordinary care," used interchangeably. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 604, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

"'Due care' is 'ordinary care'; and 'ordinary care' is the care that would be exercised by a reasonably prudent person under the same or similar circumstances." Cornovski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 51, 56, 207 Mo. 263.

A traveler crossing a railroad track is bound only to use "due care," which is not the highest degree of care possible, but is only "ordinary care" under the circumstances. Colorado & S. Ry. Co. v. Chiles, 114 Pac. 661, 664, 50 Colo. 191.

The care to be exercised by a gas company to prevent escape of gas from its mains, to the injury of trees along the street, is not "ordinary care," as distinguished from "extraordinary care," but due care or care commensurate with the danger. Gould v. Winona Gas Co., 111 N. W. 254, 258, 100 Minn. 258, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889.

As reasonable care

"Ordinary care" means reasonable care. Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co., 107 N. W. 593, 594, 133 Iowa, 326.

To use "reasonable care" is equivalent to the expression to use or exercise "ordinary care." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536.

The phrase "reasonable care" has been declared by the courts of England to be synonymous with "ordinary care." Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278.

The words "ordinary care" embody the same degree of diligence as the words "ordinary and reasonable care and diligence," and have substantially the same significance. The words "ordinary" and "reasonable," descriptive of diligence, are synonymous, and be used interchangeably in statutes and by the courts. Goodwyn v. Central of Georgia Co., 58 S. E. 688, 2 Ga. App. 470.

The terms "ordinary care" and "reasonable care" are in law, practically synonymous. In their ordinary use in connection with the subject in hand, they are also substantially synonymous, and may be used interchangeably in instructions in an action for injuries. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Winter's Adm'r, 69 S. W. 1108, 1112, 113 Ky. 952. See, also, Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278.

The use of the words "reasonable care," instead of "ordinary care," in an instruction in an action for injuries, is not such a defect as will invalidate a judgment for plaintiff. Paulding v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 107 S. W. 1049, 1051, 129 Mo. App. 607.

"Ordinary care" and "reasonable care," as applied to the duty of a master to provide rules for the regulation of his activities, are, ordinarily, convertible terms. Texas & N. R. Co. v. Walker (Tex.) 125 S. W. 99, 106.

An instruction that a telegraph company must use "reasonable care" in transmitting and delivering messages imposes no higher degree of care on the company than "ordinary care," as the two terms are synonymous. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Guinn (Tex.) 130 S. W. 616, 618.

Where the court in its charge used the terms "ordinary care," "reasonable diligence," and "reasonable care," it should, in an instruction defining ordinary care, have also told the jury that reasonable diligence or reasonable care is ordinary care. Greene v. Louisville R. Co., 84 S. W. 1154, 1155, 119 Ky. 62, 7 Ann. Cas. 1126.

An instruction, in an action for negligent delay in transmission and delivery, on the measure of the telegraph company's duty in delivering, was not erroneous for requiring to transmit in "due time (that is, such time as it would have been delivered by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence in getting it through and delivered)," on the ground that it was only required to use "ordinary care," in absence of a request for a more specific charge; the terms "reasonable care" and "ordinary care" having substantially the same meaning. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance (Tex.) 151 S. W. 904, 907 (citing Words and Phrases, p. 5955).

As relative term

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and depends on the circumstances and conditions of the particular case. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Fritts, 49 S. E. 971, 973, 108 Va. 687, 8 L. R. A. 864, 106 Am. St. Rep. 911; Coulineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 98 N. W. 720, 722, 145 Mich. 314; Anderson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 91, 95, 15 Idaho, 513; Liberty v. Haines, 68 Atl. 738, 741, 103 Me. 182; Feddeck v. St. Louis Car Co., 102 S. W. 675, 679, 125 Mo. App. 24; Lynch v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 106 S. W. 68, 76, 208 Mo. 1; Woods v. Wabash R. Co., 86 S. W. 1082, 1086, 188 Mo. 229 (citing 1 Thomp. Neg. § 25).

The term "ordinary care" is of a flexible nature, and adapts itself to the particular circumstances under which it is to be applied, depending upon the relation between the parties in interest, and the business in which they are engaged, and varying with the peculiar phase of every situation. Palace Hotel Co. v. Medart, 100 N. E. 317, 320, 87 Ohio St. 130, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 860 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5035).

"The terms 'ordinary care,' 'reasonable prudence,' and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be deemed ordinary care in one case may, under different surroundings and circumstances, be gross negligence. The policy of the law has relegated the determination of such questions to the jury under proper instructions." Palmer v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 108 Pac. 211, 214, 56 Or. 262 (quoting Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 682, 683, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. Ed. 485); *Hainlin v. Ct. 1044, 135 U. S. 554, 34 L. Ed. 235); Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway, 99 Pac. 153, 156, 22 Okl. 425 (quoting and adopting a definition in Worth Bros. Co. v. Kahan, 162 Fed. 306, 89

C. C. A. 186); Knoxville Traction Co. v. Brown, 89 S. W. 319, 320, 115 Tenn. 323 (citing Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 417, 36 L. Ed. 485); Worth Bros. Co. v. Kallas, 162 Fed. 306, 308, 89 C. C. A. 186 (quoting with approval from Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 682, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. Ed. 485); Klutt v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 142 Fed. 394, 396, 73 C. C. A. 494; Swift & Co. v. Sandy, 165 Fed. 622, 623, 92 C. C. A. 56; Kube v. St. Louis Transit Co., 78 S. W. 55, 59, 103 Mo. App. 582 (quoting Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 75 Mo. 595).

"'Ordinary care,' or the care the common law requires one to exercise in and about his business, has a relative signification. It means such care as a man of ordinary prudence and foresight would be expected to exercise in like circumstances; the care commensurate with the risk and danger of the business to others." Mertens v. St. Louis Transit Co., 99 S. W. 512, 514, 122 Mo. App. 304.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and diligence amounting to ordinary care varies with the circumstances of each case. Denson v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 68 S. E. 1113, 135 Ga. 132.

The term "ordinary care" does not express distinctly any certain degree of care; what is ordinary care depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, so that ordinary care under one set of circumstances might be positive negligence under other circumstances. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Keegan, 112 Ill. App. 28, 36.

There is no fixed standard in the law by which a court can arbitrarily say in all cases what conduct shall be considered reasonable and prudent, or what shall constitute "ordinary care," and the jury are free to fix the standard for reasonable, prudent, and careful men under the circumstances of the case as they find them according to their judgment and experience of what that class of men do under such circumstances, and to test the conduct involved in the issues by that standard. Southern R. Co. v. Stutts, 144 Fed. 948, 949, 75 C. C. A. 588.

The care imposed by law is ordinary care; that is, such care as persons of ordinary prudence would use under similar circumstances. "Ordinary care" would require the exercise of a very great degree of vigilance under some circumstances, and the amount of vigilance and caution to be used will vary according to the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances. But the standard by which the acts are to be judged does not change; it remains the same. Dallas Consol. Electric St. R. Co. v. Chambers, 118 S. W. 851, 852, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 331.

Care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence," or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law-writers, but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. The only true measure is "reasonable care." And that expression has been declared by the courts in England and elsewhere to be synonymous with "ordinary care." "Reasonable care" is a relative term, and what is reasonable care in a given case depends upon many considerations. What would be reasonable care under some conditions would clearly be negligence in others. Reasonable care and vigilance vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention. They relate to the work to be done, to the instrumentalities to be used, to the dangers that may result from their use, to the varying duties owed by those who supply or use them. And in all cases reasonable care means such care as reasonable and prudent men use under like circumstances. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R., 1 Allen [83 Mass.] 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Penobscot Lumbering Ass'n, 38 Atl. 108, 90 Me. 193; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray [76 Mass.] 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen [86 Mass.] 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 8 Gray [74 Mass.] 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

"Ordinary care" as applied to a master is such care as reasonable and prudent men use under similar circumstances in providing safe and suitable appliances and instrumentalities for the work to be done, and in providing generally for the safety of the servant in the course of his employment, regard being had to the work and difficulties and dangers attending it. The term has a relative significance and its definition must depend on the surrounding circumstances of the particular case, the determination of which, when a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question of negligence, is for the jury. Fisher's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 373, 374, 104 Va. 635, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954 (citing Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 22 S. E. 869, 93 Va. 804, 70 L. R. A. 999; Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 17 S. E. 890, 90 Va. 261).

In an action against a railroad company for damages for suffering endured by plaintiff's intestate, killed while crossing defendant's tracks, an instruction that while the fact that there was a freight train standing on the side track, the engine of which partially obstructed the crossing and was making a loud noise, would impose upon deceased a greater degree of care for his own safety, yet if these conditions existed, and defendant was responsible for them, this would impose upon defendant a correspondingly greater degree of care, was not erroneous in imposing upon defendant a greater degree of care than "ordinary care"; "ordinary care" being but reasonable care which varies according to the circumstances, and requires unusual caution where the circumstances are unusually hazardous. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 150 S. W. 157, 161, 105 Ark. 180.

The terms "ordinary care" and "ordinary diligence" must be understood to import all the care, prudence, and diligence which the peculiar circumstances of the case, the conditions and instruments employed, reasonably require, and such as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under like circumstances. Neal v. Wilmington & N. C. Electric Ry. Co., 53 Atl. 338, 339, 3 Pennell, 467.

Same—As applied to children or infants

The term "ordinary or reasonable care," applied to the conduct of a child, means such care as may reasonably be expected of children of similar age, judgment, and experience under similar circumstances. Robloff v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 5, 7, 76 Conn. 689; Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Olds (Tex.) 112 S. W. 787, 792.

"Ordinary care," as applied to a child, is the kind of care which children of its age and intelligence are accustomed to exercise under the same or similar circumstances; and this though he had arrived at the age when he should be chargeable with the care required of an adult as a matter of law. Erie R. Co. v. Weinstein, 166 Fed. 271, 273, 92 C. C. A. 189.

The rule that ordinary care is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use under similar circumstances does not apply to a child of tender years, and the care required of a child is according to his maturity and capacity only, which must be determined by the circumstances of each case. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Crump (Tex.) 110 S. W. 1013, 1014.

An instruction defining "ordinary care," in an action for injuries received by a boy 16 years of age, while employed in feeding sheets of brass to a rolling machine, as such care as boys of the age, intelligence, and experience of plaintiff usually exercise under similar circumstances, contains the idea that the care used must be the care ordinarily used by the great mass of boys or by the class of ordinary careful boys, and is correct. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 106 N. W. 1077, 1080, 127 Wis. 273.

The "ordinary care" of an infant is that degree of care which children of the same age, of ordinary care and prudence, are accustomed to exercise under like circumstances.

es. Goldstein v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 60 Atl. 975, 976, 5 Pennell, 308.

In determining the question of negligence, the conduct of children is not judged by the same rules which govern that of adults, and "ordinary care" for them is that degree of care which children of the same age, of ordinary care and prudence, are accustomed to exercise under like circumstances. Cecchi v. Lindsay (Del.) 75 Atl. 376, 378, 1 Boyce, 185.

"Ordinary care" depends on the facts of each particular case, and with reference to an injured infant means such care as a child of his age, intelligence, capacity, and experience, as shown by the evidence, would ordinarily exercise in the same situation and circumstances in which the infant was placed at the time he was injured. Morgan v. C. Hager & Sons Hinge Mfg. Co., 97 S. W. 638, 642, 120 Mo. App. 590.

Whether or not an infant exercised "ordinary care" depends upon whether he used that care that a person of his own age, education, and mental and physical capacity would ordinarily use under like circumstances. Marius v. Motor Delivery Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 357, 360, 146 App. Div. 608.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and the same standard is not expected of an infant as of a mature man, and what will be regarded as carelessness in the latter will not necessarily be so in the case of the former. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore v. Carneal, 72 Atl. 771, 774, 110 Md. 211.

The standard of "ordinary care" to be required of a boy of 16 years is "such care as boys of his age, intelligence, and experience usually use and exercise under similar circumstances." Kucera v. Merrill Lumber Co., 65 N. W. 374, 375, 91 Wis. 637.

"Ordinary care," as applied to a boy 14 years of age, is that degree of care which may reasonably be looked for in a boy of his age, experience, and intelligence. Chess & Wymond Co. v. Gohagan's Guardian (Ky.) 105 S. W. 890.

Where employes of a railroad see a child of tender years upon the track, "ordinary care" is the greatest care that can be exercised to avoid injury. Anderson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 91, 96, 15 Idaho, 513.

Same—Character of business affecting

"Ordinary care exercised by those who make a business of using electricity for profit to prevent injury to others therefrom requires much greater precaution in its use than where the element used is of a less dangerous character. As there is greater danger and hazard in the use of electricity, there must be a corresponding exercise of skill and attention in avoiding injury to another and constitute what the law terms 'ordinary care.'" Commonwealth Electric Co. v. Melville, 70 N. E. 1052, 1053, 210 Ill. 70.

A power company, furnishing electricity to patrons, with respect to employés of the latter rightfully on the premises and likely to come in contact with wires carrying the current, is bound to use ordinary care, which demands such diligence as is commensurate with the danger involved in the use of the electricity. Denson v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 68 S. E. 1113, 135 Ga. 132.

By "ordinary and reasonable care" is meant such care as an ordinarily prudent and careful person, having in mind the dangers to be apprehended, would exercise under the same circumstances. The precautions necessary to be taken in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care vary with the circumstances of each particular case and the degree of hazard connected therewith; greater precautions being necessary in the case of great hazard, and less in cases where there is little danger. "Electric companies are bound to use reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of their lines and apparatus. This care varies with the danger which would be incurred by negligence. In cases where the wires carry strong and dangerous currents of electricity, and the result of negligence might be exposure to death or serious accident, the highest degree of care is required." Under such circumstances, reasonable care requires the exercise of a high degree of diligence, and the terms "reasonable care" and "high degree of diligence" may be deemed to be synonymous. Gilbert v. Duluth General Electric Co., 100 N. W. 653, 655, 93 Minn. 99, 106 Am. St. Rep. 430.

"Ordinary care," under the circumstances, is the legal standard in all cases. The significance of the term "ordinary care" varies with the attendant and surrounding circumstances. This care is to be exercised by the carrier of passengers at all times when, and at all places where, the parties are in the relation of passenger and carrier, whether during transit, at the stations, and upon platforms, or in waiting rooms; and it applies to all matters which pertain to the business of the carrier of passengers. Pomroy v. Bangor & A. R. Co., 67 Atl. 561, 562, 102 Me. 497 (citing Dodge v. Boston & B. S. Co., 19 N. E. 373, 148 Mass. 207, 2 L. R. A. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 541; Jordan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 43 N. E. 111, 165 Mass. 346, 32 L. R. A. 101, 52 Am. St. Rep. 522; Shannon v. Boston & A. R. Co., 2 Atl. 678, 78 Me. 52).

Railroads owe the duty to exercise "ordinary care," which in the case of passengers is the highest degree of care that a person of ordinary prudence can exercise consistent with the mode of conveyance and the proper conduct and management of the business to see that their passengers are furnished safe and comfortable transportation. St.

Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Pitcock, 101 S. W. 725, 727, 82 Ark. 441, 118 Am. St. Rep. 84, 12 Ann. Cas. 582.

The term "ordinary care," when applied to an engineer conducting a train in an emergency, means the "ordinary care" of competent men in that position and cannot be regarded as anything less than great care. Rowe v. Southern California Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 220, 222, 4 Cal. App. 1 (citing Henderson v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 89 Pac. 976, 150 Cal. 689; Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 37 Pac. 500, 103 Cal. 544, 545; Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric Ry. Co., 43 Pac. 207, 46 Pac. 889, 115 Cal. 114, 34 L. R. A. 350).

The term "ordinary care," when applied to the management of railroad engines and cars in motion, imports all care which the peculiar circumstances of the place or occasion reasonably require, and this will be increased or diminished according as ordinary liability to danger and accident and to do injury to others is increased or diminished in the movement and management of such engines and cars. MacFeat v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 898, 906, 5 Pennewill, 52.

"Ordinary care and diligence," when applied to the management of railways, must be understood to import all the care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion which the peculiar circumstances of the place or occasion reasonably require of the servants of the company; and this will be increased or diminished according as the ordinary liability to danger and accident, and to do injury to others, is increased or diminished in the movement and operation of the cars. Boudwin v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 60 Atl. 865, 866, 4 Pennewill, 381.

"Ordinary care," which is the care that an ordinarily prudent person would or should exercise under similar circumstances, is a comparative thing, and what would be ordinary care under one condition might be stark negligence under another. The speed at which a street car is running may be negligent speed, although ordinance speed or less, depending on the care required under the circumstances. Beier v. St. Louis Transit Co., 94 S. W. 876, 880, 197 Mo. 215.

The term "ordinary care and diligence," applied to the management of electric cars in motion, means all the care, prudence, and discretion which the circumstances of the place and occasion require. Goldstein v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 60 Atl. 975, 976, 5 Pennewill, 306.

The "ordinary care" required in the operation of electric street cars imports all the care and discretion which the place of the danger and the occasion requires, and such care increases or diminishes as the danger of accident increases or diminishes in the operation of the cars. Lenkewicz v. Wilming- ton City R. Co. (Del.) 74 Atl. 11, 13, 7 Pennewill, 64.

The exercise of "ordinary care" in the operation of a street railway implies such care as the circumstances of the place or occasion reasonably require, to be increased or diminished as the danger of accident or injury increases or diminishes. Eaton v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 369, 371, 1 Boyce, 435.

A street railroad company is bound to operate its property with "ordinary care and caution"; such term being understood to import all the care and caution which the particular circumstances of the case reasonably require, and such as a reasonably careful man would exercise under like circumstances, the amount of care varying with the ordinary liability to danger and accident and to do injury to others in the operation and use of the railroad. Gismond v. People's R. Co. (Del.) 83 Atl. 136, 138, 2 Boyce, 577.

"Ordinary care," as applied to the motor-man of an electric street car, means the degree of care which men of average prudence and skill, engaged in operating street cars by electric power in the city in question and on the street on which the accident occurred usually exercise under similar circumstances. Louisville Ry. Co. v. Boutellier (Ky.) 110 S. W. 357, 360.

"The term 'ordinary care and diligence,' when applied to the management of electric railway cars in motion, must be understood to import all the care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion which the particular circumstances of the place or occasion require of the servants of the * * * company, and this will be increased or diminished as the ordinary liability to danger and accident and to do injury to others is increased or diminished in the movement and operation of such cars." Di Prisco v. Wilmington City R. Co. (Del.) 57 Atl. 908, 909, 4 Pennewill, 527 (citing Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. [Del.] 3 Pennewill, 455, 50 Atl. 95).

"Ordinary care" is not great care, and, where an elevator is used as a means of personal transportation, a higher degree of care than ordinary care is required in its operation. Belvidere Bldg. Co. of Baltimore v. Bryan, 64 Atl. 44, 50, 103 Md. 514.

"Ordinary care" in the selection and retention of servants and agents requires that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably require, and is such care as, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of employes, is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered. Emery v. City of Tacoma, 127 Pac. 851, 853, 71 Wash. 132.

The "ordinary care" exacted in employing servants is that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment and the consequences of employing an incompetent person. Worley v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co., 124 Pac. 697, 701, 163 Cal. 60.

The term "ordinary care," as used in the rule requiring an employer to use ordinary care in the selection of an employe, means that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment and the consequence of the employment of an incompetent person. Still v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., 98 Pac. 672, 675, 154 Cal. 559, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177.

The test of "ordinary care" on the part of an employer toward his servants is not whether he may apprehend that an injury might result to some one of them, but whether an ordinarily prudent person, under the same or similar circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary care, would have apprehended such injury. Guse v. Power & Mining Machinery Co., 139 N. W. 195, 198, 151 Wis. 400.

"Ordinary care" by a master in giving notice to his servants of all perils to which they will be exposed, other than such as they should, in the exercise of "ordinary care," have foreseen, as necessarily incidental to the business, requires that he should actually give the notice and not merely try to give it. "If therefore, he fails to give such notice in terms sufficiently clear to call the attention of his servants to the peril of which he is aware, he is liable to them for any injury which they may suffer thereby in ignorance of that peril and without contributory negligence." Crapo v. City of Syracuse, 76 N. E. 465, 468, 183 N. Y. 395 (citing Mather v. Rilliston, 15 Sup. Ct. 464, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. Ed. 464; Gates v. State, 28 N. E. 373, 128 N. Y. 226; Simone v. Kirk, 65 N. E. 739, 173 N. Y. 13; Pantzar v. Tilly Foster I. M. Co., 2 N. E. 24, 99 N. Y. 368; Benzing v. Stelnway & Sons, 5 N. E. 449, 101 N. Y. 547; Finn v. Cassidy, 59 N. E. 311, 165 N. Y. 584, 53 L. R. A. 877).

The "ordinary care" required of a druggist in compounding medicines and filling prescriptions requires a degree of vigilance and prudence commensurate with the dangers involved, and the highest practicable degree of prudence, thoughtfulness, vigilance, and the most exact and reliable safeguards consistent with reasonable conduct of the business that human life may not be exposed to the danger resulting from substitution of deadly poisons for harmless medicine. Tremblay v. Kimball, 77 Atl. 405, 408, 107 Me. 53, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1215.

Same—In crossing railroads

"Ordinary care" on the part of a motor-man approaching a street crossing where a traveler is attempting to cross in front of the car means that degree of care which men of ordinary prudence and skill, engaged in like work, would exercise under similar circumstances; while ordinary care on the part of the driver means that degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence, driving a wagon, engaged in like work and under the same or similar circumstances, usually exercises for his own safety. Keefe v. Seattle Electric Co., 104 Pac. 774, 776, 55 Wash. 448.

"Ordinary care" is that care which ordinarily prudent persons use in their business, or such care as the great mass of mankind observe in the transactions of human life. One crossing a street car track in advance of an approaching car must, in the exercise of ordinary care, take the speed of the car into consideration, where the car is approaching at an unlawful rate of speed, and it is observable. Grimm v. Milwaukee Electric R. & L. Co., 119 N. W. 833, 835, 138 Wis. 44 (citing Dreher v. Fitchburg, 22 Wis. 675, 99 Am. Dec. 91; Duthie v. Town of Washburn, 58 N. W. 380, 87 Wis. 231, 233; Nass v. Schulz, 81 N. W. 133, 105 Wis. 146; Hayes v. Railway Co., 111 N. W. 471, 131 Wis. 399).

"Ordinary care," as applied to cases where the public has by acquiescence acquired license to use or travel over railroad grounds, is that degree of care which is reasonably adequate to meet and avoid the dangers which ought to be anticipated under all the circumstances, including the fact of the licensed use. Rowley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 115 N. W. 865, 869, 135 Wis. 208.

Within the rule requiring a person approaching a railroad crossing to exercise "ordinary care under the circumstances," the quoted phrase is precisely defined by law, and makes it the duty of such person, in attempting to cross, to listen for signals, notice signs put up as warnings, and look attentively up and down the track. Wilkinson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 99 Pac. 466, 468, 35 Utah, 110 (quoting with approval from Mann v. Belt Ry. & Stockyard Co., 26 N. E. 820, 128 Ind. 142).

In an action for the death of a person at a station, the court instructed that, though he was negligent, defendant was liable if the train employes saw decedent who was unaware of his peril, and failed to give a proper warning by a signal which he would be likely to hear, and, such signal being unheeded, failed to stop. The court further instructed that if he was struck between the street crossing and the depot at which defendant's trains made regular stops, and the track was so a pedestrian could have been seen for a long distance with ordinary care and diligence, and was frequently used at such point by pedestrians, and deceased, while walking thereon, became in imminent peril, and the trainmen became aware thereof in time, by ordinary care, to have stopped the train and averted the injury, and they failed to use such care and stop the train, and he was struck and killed, the jury must find for plaintiff, though they found that decedent was negligent, and that by ordinary care was meant such as an ordinary careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Held, not to conflict with an instruction that it was decedent's duty to look both ways and listen for the approach of trains, and if at any time before he was injured he could, either by looking or listening, have known of the train's approach in time to get off and avoid the accident, plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Potter v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 117 S. W. 383, 601, 136 Mo. App. 125.

In an action for injuries to a traveler on a highway by a collision with a street car, the court defined "ordinary care" to mean such a degree of care under the circumstances in which plaintiff was placed "at the time" as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances. A subsequent instruction declared that, in going across or near defendant's track at the time and place in question, it was plaintiff's duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury from the approaching car, and, if he failed to do so, he could not recover. Held, that the first instruction was not objectionable as limiting the time at which plaintiff was required to exercise care to the moment of the collision. Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 80 N. E. 116, 118, 225 Ill. 237.

One driving onto a railroad at a crossing, where the gates have negligently been left up though a train is approaching, has no right to rely exclusively on the operatives of the gates or of the train in looking out for his safety and giving him notice, but he must use "ordinary care," such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use under the same or similar circumstances, to discover the approach of the train and for his own safety; and, if he does so rely on the others, without using such care, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth, 114 S. W. 264, 268, 130 Ky. 759.

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, depending upon many things, and differing greatly in specific cases. "What would be ordinary care in approaching an unknown place of danger, such as a railroad crossing with nothing to disclose its presence, and the inability to see it from darkness, would be an entirely different thing from approaching a known or visible crossing." Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Fretz, 90 N. E. 76, 79, 173 Ind. 519.

"Ordinary care" is that care which a careful and prudent person ordinarily exercises under like circumstances and conditions. To entitle a pedestrian to proceed on his way and cross the tracks of a street railway company, he is not bound to wait for conditions that exclude all doubts of safety, but it is his privilege to take such a chance as a person of "ordinary care" and prudence would take in the exercise thereof under the circumstances; and therefore, in an action against a street railway company for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a car, an instruction that, if the traveler took a doubtful chance of being able to cross in front of the car, it would be a negligence precluding a recovery was properly refused. Doherty v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 19, 20.

Same—Danger as affecting

"Ordinary care" is a relative term, and means a degree of care commensurate with the danger involved. Tackett v. Henderson Bros. Co., 108 Pac. 151, 155, 12 Cal. App. 658.

What is "ordinary care" must be gauged and determined by the danger which its exercise requires to be overcome, for what would be "ordinary care" under certain conditions might under different conditions be gross negligence. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Thompson (Tex.) 116 S. W. 106, 108.

"Ordinary care" is such care as men ordinarily exercise under the same or similar circumstances. The amount of care which will satisfy this requirement is necessarily adjusted to, and varies with, the danger to be guarded against. As the danger or the probability of injury therefrom increases, so do men ordinarily increase the care which they exercise for their own protection. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews, 130 Fed. 65, 73, 64 C. C. A. 399.

"Ordinary care" is that degree of care which prudent, intelligent, and experienced men usually employ under like circumstances to guard against dangers which are obvious or reasonably to be anticipated. An instruction, in an action against a railroad company to recover for an injury to a brakeman by falling through an open culvert, which stated that the degree of care required from defendant in the construction of the culvert was such as a master would ordinarily use if the danger to be guarded against was a personal danger to the master himself, is erroneous, as stating an incorrect measure of care, as well as misleading, in that there could be no evidence to make it applicable to a railroad company. Southern Pac. Co. v. Gloyd, 138 Fed. 388, 391, 70 C. C. A. 528.

What is "ordinary care" depends on the circumstances of the particular case, and, when the circumstances are such that an ordinarily careful and prudent person would take greater precautions for his own safety than under less threatening circumstances, the greater degree of caution is "ordinary care." One injured by another's negligence may recover if he has observed ordinary care for his safety. Dickson v. Geo. B. Swift & Co., 87 N. E. 59, 61, 238 Ill. 62 (citing West

"Negligence" is defined to be the want of "ordinary care"; that is, such care as an ordinary prudent person would exercise under like circumstances. There is no precise definition of "ordinary care," but it may be said that it is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances, and should be proportioned to the danger and peril reasonably to be apprehended from a lack of proper prudence. Hill v. Glenwood, 100 N. W. 522, 523, 124 Iowa, 479.

"Ordinary care" is defined to be "that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence, under the particular circumstances, is presumed to exercise to avoid injury. Such care is required to be in proportion to the danger to be avoided and the fatal consequences that might result from the neglect." Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Seerley, 72 N. E. 169, 170, 1034, 35 Ind. App. 467 (adopting definition in Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185, 197; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 46 N. E. 344, 147 Ind. 638-640; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cheek, 53 N. E. 641, 152 Ind. 663).

What is proper care in a given situation is gauged by the danger to be reasonably apprehended under the circumstances existing at the time, and not by looking back after the accident; and "ordinary care," where the danger is great, may call for unremitting attention; but the mere probability of injury arising from want of "ordinary care" is an important element in determining the degree of care required. Parry Mfg. Co. v. Eaton, 83 N. E. 510, 513, 41 Ind. App. 81.

The term "ordinary care," as applied to one's duty to provide reasonably safe appliances furnished a third person for the use of his employes, is a relative term; diligence commensurate with the danger being required. Trask v. Hollowell Granite Works, 76 Atl. 919, 921, 106 Me. 458.

"Ordinary care," when applied to the duty of a master, means such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case; and as a danger increases that which would be "ordinary care" and prudence must increase. When applied to an employe with regard to the condition of the machinery furnished by the master, it means such care as a person situated as the employe is situated will ordinarily use. Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 560, 7 Ind. T. 104.

Where a locomotive engineer knew that a fireman was at work under an attached engine, "ordinary care" on the part of the engineer would be the use of every precaution to prevent the engine from moving. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Seeger, 98 S. W. 892, 895, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 534.

"Ordinary care" is the degree of care that a person of ordinary prudence would commonly exercise under like circumstances. "The degree of care does not vary with the increase or diminution of danger. It continues to be ordinary in degree, but the quantum of diligence to be used differs under different conditions." "Ordinary care" will require the exercise of a very great degree of vigilance under some circumstances, and the amount of vigilance and caution to be used will vary according to the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances, but the standard by which the acts are to be judged does not change." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hall (Tex.) 92 S. W. 996, 998 (quoting and adopting definition in Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Gormley, 43 S. W. 878, 91 Tex. 399, 66 Am. St. Rep. 894; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 28 S. W. 522, 87 Tex. 354).

"Ordinary care" is that care which persons of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. "Ordinary care" in some circumstances is nothing short of the highest degree of care, while in some circumstances much less and sometimes very little care would satisfy the requirement of ordinary care. Whittacker v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. B. Co., 97 N. Y. Supp. 414, 415, 110 App. Div. 767.

In case of an impending collision between a street car and a wagon, "ordinary care" on the part of the street car company implies that the machinery and appliances should be in proper condition, and also that the servants of the company shall do all that men of reasonable care, prudence, and alertness in the same situation and with the same appliances could do to stop the car and prevent the collision. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Haynes, 81 S. W. 374, 376, 112 Tenn. 712.

Same—Knowledge as affecting

The term "ordinary or reasonable care to prevent injury" means all ordinary care in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, so that the care required to prevent the infliction of injury is always proportioned to the probability that exists that an injury will be done under circumstances which are known to exist or from past experience may be reasonably expected to exist in a particular case." Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Farrow's Adm'x, 55 S. E. 569, 571, 106 Va. 137, 10 Ann. Cas. 12.

There is no precise definition of "ordinary care," but it may be said that it is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances, and should be proportioned to the danger and peril reasonably to be apprehended from a lack of proper prudence. A blind person, while crossing a public street, is not bound to exercise any higher degree of care to avoid accident from a defective condition of the street than a person having the full sense of sight. Hill v. City of Glenwood, 100 N. W. 522, 523, 124 Iowa, 479.

When a traveler perceives that a way is under repair and much incumbered for that purpose, and that but a narrow and difficult passage is open for him, the exercise of "ordinary care" requires that he exercise that degree of watchfulness and caution which men of ordinary prudence would under such circumstances, and that he do not drive with the same rapidity or exercise only the same attention which would be allowable on a smooth and unincumbered way. Jacobs v. Inhabitants of Bangor, 16 Me. 187, 190, 33 Am. Dec. 652.

Same—Means of preventing as affecting

"Ordinary care," as used in the definition of negligence as failure to exercise the ordinary care of prudent men under all the attending circumstances, does not require that all possible means for avoiding accident should be availed of. Stephenson v. Corder, 80 Pac. 938, 939, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L. R. A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500.

"Ordinary care" calls for the use of the senses to discover approaching danger, and for a reasonable exercise of judgment to avert it. A person of "ordinary care" never will trust himself, or those committed to his care, to mere chance, where means are available upon employment of which he may overcome probable danger. Where a section foreman allowed his men to place hand cars on the track in order to go to camp without warning the men that a train might overtake them, or taking any precautions to ascertain if a train was approaching, or to give warning in case one should approach, when he knew that a passenger train was due, and that the sharp curves in the track and the topographical obstructions made the risk of being run down very great, his acts showed a failure to exercise "ordinary care." State v. Koonse, 101 S. W. 139, 144, 123 Mo. App. 655.

Slight negligence distinguished

Slight negligence is not incompatible with the exercise of "ordinary care." Malott v. Schlosser, 119 Ill. App. 259, 261.

ORDINARY CAUTION

"Ordinary caution" is such caution as a person of ordinary prudence would use for his own protection under the same circumstances, in view of the danger to be avoided. Jansen v. Southern Pac. Co., 89 Pac. 616, 617, 5 Cal. App. 12.

ORDINARY CIRCUMSPECTION

The portion of the charge, "Plaintiff was not bound to inspect the track at the place in question to ascertain if it was reasonably safe to be used by him in the performance of his duties as brakeman," given after a portion, that though the track at the place was not reasonably safe, plaintiff assumed the risk from such unsafe condition, if any, of which he had actual knowledge, or would have learned by the exercise of that ordinary circumspection which a prudent and competent man would have used in the particular employment; and in an action for injury to a brakeman by being struck by an engine, while his foot was caught in an unfilled space between ties in the track, on evidence that the unfilled spaces directly causing the injury were covered and obscured by tall, thickly-growing grass, making it appear on casual inspection that the spaces were filled, and that plaintiff had never had an opportunity to be on the track before, and did not know that there were unfilled spaces there—was not calculated to confuse and mislead the jury; there being a difference between making a previous critical examination, which the word "inspection" means, of the track to ascertain if it was reasonably safe, and using reasonable care and caution, which is the meaning of "ordinary circumspection," to observe what was open and obvious, to discern whether it was unsafe. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Ford, 121 S. W. 709, 713, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 521.

ORDINARY CLERK

There is no such position as that of "ordinary clerk" known to the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. The term is used by the Civil Service Commissioners to designate an arbitrary class established by them, from which various extra clerks allowed to various officers and departments must be appointed. An appointee, having taken the examination for ordinary clerks under a classification established by the Civil Service Commission, as provided for in article 13 of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, who was appointed to a temporary position in the office of the board of elections under article 11 of the charter, giving the board a right to appoint such clerical assistants as might be necessary, and later to other temporary positions in the office of the tax collector and auditor, under article 4 of the charter, providing for the appointment of extra clerks in such offices, was merely an extra clerk, whose employment ended when his services were no longer required, and on the termination of such employment the placing of his name on the register of eligibles, according to the relative excellence of his examination, without regard to the priority thereof, along with persons taking the examination after his appointment to the position in the office of the board of elections, was not a discharge, in violation of the provisions of article 13 of the charter relating to the appointment, term of employment, and discharge of civil service employes. Rodrigue v. Rogers, 87 Pac. 568, 564, 4 Cal. App. 257.

ORDINARY COURSE OF BUSINESS

In an action in France on a foreign bill by the indorsee against the drawee, the original of which the latter had paid under a forged indorsement, the court found that the drawee made such payment in the ordinary course of business over the counter, and without notice that the original bills had been lost, and without opposition or objection to such payments, and that there was no evidence that the payments were made in bad faith. Held, that the use of the phrase "paid in the ordinary course of business" construed with the balance of the finding merely meant that payment was made to the holder of the original drafts against their surrender at the drawee's bank on a business day, in banking hours, in the same way it usually paid drafts, and was insufficient to exclude an inference of negligence in the drawees, arising from their failure to detect a variance in the indorsement which was forged. Kessler v. Armstrong Cork Co., 158 Fed. 744, 750, 85 C. C. A. 642.

Stock Corporation Law, § 16, which is entitled "Voluntary sale of franchise and property," provides that a stock corporation, with the consent of the holders of two-thirds of its stock, may convey its property, rights, privileges, and franchises, or any interest therein, or any part thereof, to a domestic corporation engaged in a business of the same general character, and that, before the conveyance is made, such consent shall be obtained at a meeting of the stockholders. A stock corporation having operated a calendar department and employed salesmen and kept accounts for it separate from its other business, but doing the printing or lithographing for such department, sold to a corporation, organized for the purpose, its business, assets, good will, and contracts with salesmen, in all about one-thirteenth part of its whole business. Held, that the sale was not an "ordinary business transaction," but a sale and transfer of a part of its franchise and property within the meaning of the section. In re Timmis, 93 N. E. 522, 523, 200 N. Y. 177.

ORDINARY COURSE OF LAW

The right to seek relief before the board of railroad commission is not a remedy in the "ordinary course of the law," so as to prevent the issuance of mandamus, under Gen. St. 1901, § 5185, prohibiting such writ, where the relator has a plain and adequate remedy under the "ordinary course of the law." Larabee Flour Mills Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 88 Pac. 72, 78, 74 Kan. 808.

ORDINARY CURRENT EXPENSES

Gen. Laws 1909, c. 135, § 12, requires the town sergeant of each town annually in April to make a list of the keepers of dogs in the town, and return such list to the town clerk on or before May 1st, for which service he shall receive from the town treasury 20 cents for each dog listed, and section 13 provides for the killing of nonlicensed dogs and for the payment of a fee of $2 out of the town treasury for each dog killed and buried. Held, that a city's liability for the salary of chief of police and town sergeant, and for the fees of the sergeant as dog lister, under such provision, constituted an "ordinary current expense" of the town, which, if, with other like expenses, it was within the town's limit of current revenues and such special taxes as it might legally and in good faith levy therefor, was not the "incurring of indebtedness" in excess of the limit fixed by Acts 1895, c. 1428; and hence the fact that the town's debt limit was exceeded was no defense to an action to enforce liability for such services. Trainor v. Lee, 83 Atl. 847, 848, 34 R. I. 345.

ORDINARY DEBT

Where a city purchased fire apparatus without complying with Const. art 11, § 5, requiring provision for assessment and collection of a sinking fund so that the provision was invalid, the city's use of the property so purchased raised an implied promise to pay the reasonable rental value thereof and rendered the city liable for rent, which, being an "ordinary debt," payable out of current revenues, was not within such constitutional provision. Fabric Fire Hose Co. v. City of Teague (Tex.) 152 S. W. 506, 508.

ORDINARY DILIGENCE

"Ordinary diligence," like most other human qualifications or characteristics, is a relative term, to be judged of by the nature of the subject to which it is directed." Holladay v. Kennard, 12 Wall. [79 U. S.] 254, 258, 20 L. Ed. 390.

"Ordinary care" and "ordinary diligence" are commonly treated as synonymous and interchangeable when applied to the same conduct in cases of injury. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Tilson, 62 S. E. 281, 285, 131 Ga. 395.

"Ordinary diligence" is such care and diligence as a man of ordinary prudence bestows on his own affairs. This definition was given with reference to the care required of a warehouseman. Southern Ry. Co. v. Aldredge & Shelton, 38 South. 805, 807, 142 Ala. 368 (citing Moore v. Mayor, etc., of City of Mobile [Ala.] 1 Stew. 284; Jones v. Hatchell, 14 Ala. 743).

The term "ordinary diligence" contemplates that degree of diligence that an ordinarily prudent person would use in the transaction of his own business under like or similar circumstances. Guitar v. Randel (Tex.) 147 S. W. 642, 647.

The terms "ordinary care" and "ordinary diligence" must be understood to import all the care, prudence, and diligence which the peculiar circumstances of the case, the conditions and instruments employed, reasonably require, and such as a reasonably prudent and careful man would exercise under like circumstances. Neal v. Wilmington & N. C. Electric Ry. Co., 53 Atl. 338, 339, 3 Pennewill, 467.

"Ordinary diligence or care" required of a bailee for hire is such as would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence with reference to his own property under the same or like circumstances. Welch v. Dougherty, 90 S. W. 966, 967, 139 Ky. 525, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343.

"Ordinary diligence" is that degree of care which every prudent man takes of his own property of a similar nature. Southern Ry. Co. v. Davis, 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812.

In an action by an employé for personal injuries, an instruction defining "ordinary diligence" as that diligence which every prudent man takes under similar circumstances was correct. Sanders v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 728, 123 Ga. 763.

An instruction that one who uses as much care as to his neighbor's property as he does to his own is exercising "ordinary diligence" is erroneous, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2898, providing that ordinary diligence is that care which "every prudent man" takes of his own property of a similar nature. Brown Store Co. v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co., 57 S. E. 1043, 1 Ga. App. 609.

"Ordinary diligence" is defined by Civ. Code 1895, § 2898, as "that care which every prudent man takes of his own property of a similar nature. The absence of such diligence is termed ordinary neglect." Insurance Co. of North America v. Leader, 48 S. E. 972, 97, 121 Ga. 260; Southern Railway Co. v. Davis 65 S. E. 131, 132, 132 Ga. 812.

ORDINARY DOLICITY

Sheep are domestic animals of "ordinary dolicity," within the rule that railroads must fence against "all domestic animals of ordinary dolicity." Cotton v. Wiscasset, W. & F. R. Co., 57 Atl. 785, 786, 98 Me. 511.

ORDINARY EXPENSES

Of municipality

The words "ordinary county expenses," used in Civ. Code 1902, § 799, providing for an estimate by the board of commissioners of the amount necessary to pay such expenses, are those to be incurred for the current fiscal year. State ex rel. People's Bank of Greenville v. Goodwin, 62 S. E. 1100, 1105, 81 S. C. 419.

The proviso to section 3 of article 8 of the Constitution, "that this section shall not be construed to apply to the ordinary and necessary expenses authorized by the goveral laws of the state," may properly be construed by the Legislature to authorize the lawmaking body to include within the term "ordinary and necessary expenses" any expenditure rendered necessary by casualty or accident, which has impaired or injured municipal property that is necessary for the protection of the city against fires, or for the health and welfare of the city. Hickey v. City of Nampa, 124 Pac. 280, 281, 22 Idaho, 41.

A purchase by a city of a city hall site is not an ordinary municipal expense within the charter authorizing the levying of taxes for "ordinary municipal expenses," and the cost thereof may not be paid out of fund for such expenses. Niles Bryant School of Plano Tuning v. Bailey, 126 N. W. 116, 118, 161 Mich. 193.

ORDINARY FLOODS

An ordinary flood is one, the repetition of which, though at uncertain intervals, might by the exercise of ordinary diligence in investigating the character and habits of the stream have been anticipated. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. McKone, 127 Pac. 488, 490, 36 Okl. 46, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709; Town of Jefferson v. Hicks, 102 Pac. 79, 80, 23 Okl. 684, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214.

ORDINARY LANGUAGE

The notice of injury required by the factory act is to be written in "ordinary language"; that is, the party is to use his own untutored language. Berger v. Metropolitan Press Printing Co., 104 Pac. 617, 619, 55 Wash. 422 (quoting Dresser, Employers' Liability, § 27; citing Driscoll v. City of Fall River, 39 N. E. 1003, 163 Mass. 105).

ORDINARY LOW-WATER MARK

"Ordinary," in the grant, in 1640, of tide flats around an island, to the "ordinary low-water mark," means "mean," in the absence of usage to the contrary at that time or a contrary construction by the parties. East Boston Co. v. Commonwealth, 89 N. E. 236, 237, 203 Mass. 68, 17 Ann. Cas. 146.

ORDINARY LUGGAGE

See, also, Ordinary Baggage.

"Ordinary luggage" being confined to that which is personal to the passenger, and carried for his use or convenience, it follows that what is carried for the purposes of business, such as merchandise, or the like, or for larger or ulterior purposes, such as articles of furniture or household goods, would not come within the description of "ordinary luggage" unless accepted as such by the carrier. Memoranda and papers in the possession of an agent, but relating exclusively to the business of his principal, and carried by him solely for business purposes, are not baggage, when put by the agent into his trunk. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Georgia

Home Ins. Co., 37 South. 500, 85 Miss. 7, 67 L. R. A. 646, 107 Am. St. Rep. 265.

ORDINARY NEGLECT

By Civ. Code 1895, § 2898, "ordinary neglect" is defined as the absence of ordinary diligence. Brown Store Co. v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co., 49 S. E. 839, 840, 121 Ga. 809 (citing Macon & W. R. Co. v. McConnell, 31 Ga. 133, 76 Am. Dec. 685; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 13 Ga. 68; Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hudson, 38 S. E. 964 [2], 113 Ga. 434).

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE

See, also, Ordinary Care.

"Ordinary negligence" is the omission to exercise ordinary care—that degree of care generally exercised by an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances. Cummings v. Wichita R. & Light Co., 74 Pac. 1104, 1105, 68 Kan. 218, 1 Ann. Cas. 708.

"Ordinary negligence" is characterized by inadvertence, ordinarily present with the great mass of mankind, and injuries proximately resulting therefrom to the person or property of another, and not proximately contributed to by that other's want of ordinary care, are actionable. Astin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 128 N. W. 265, 268, 143 Wis. 477, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

"Ordinary negligence," as distinguished from "willful or wanton negligence," is not actionable if the negligence of the injured party directly contributed to the result; willful negligence authorizing an action regardless of such contribution. Alger, Smith & Co. v. Duluth Superior Traction Co., 101 N. W. 298, 299, 93 Minn. 314.

Gross and slight negligence distinguished

A cause of action sounding in ordinary negligence, and a cause of action sounding in gross negligence, are different, as both cannot characterize a single circumstance of a person being injured by another. Astin v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 128 N. W. 265, 268, 143 Wis. 477, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

"Gross negligence" is a relative term. It is doubtless to be understood as meaning a greater want of care than as implied by the term 'ordinary negligence'; but after all it means the absence of the care which was necessary under the circumstances." Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 605, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94 (quoting and adopting definition in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 494, 23 L. Ed. 374).

As negligence

See Negligence.

ORDINARY PROBATE PROCEEDINGS

Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, as amended in 1905, allows executors all necessary expenses of management and settlement of the estate, and authorizes any attorney, who has rendered services to an executor, to apply for an allowance of suitable compensation out of the estate. Section 1619 allows administrators, etc., for fees for their attorneys for ordinary probate proceedings, the same amounts allowed for their own services by section 1618 as amended in 1906, with such further allowance as the court deems reasonable for any extraordinary services, as for litigation necessary for the administrator to prosecute or defend. Petitioners applied for compensation from the estate for their services as attorneys in opposing a contest of two codicils, altering legacies given by the will, and giving some additional ones. Held that, while counsel fees incurred in opposing a contest may be charged against the estate, if it goes to the parties benefited by the litigation, under the circumstances the estate had no interest therein, and the application was properly denied, such expenses being chargeable to those legatees having a direct interest in supporting the codicils, and services in probating the instruments, such as the order admitting them to probate, etc., were not "extraordinary services," but were services rendered in "conducting the 'ordinary probate proceedings,'" within section 1619, for which compensation was allowable only on final accounting. In re Hete's Estate, 101 Pac. 448, 449, 155 Cal. 448.

ORDINARY PRUDENCE

"Ordinary prudence" requires a person to take into consideration the natural and probable consequences of a given act, and not such consequences as are remote, speculative, or merely possible. Dunphy v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 95 S. W. 301, 305, 118 Mo. App. 506.

ORDINARY RAINFALL

"Ordinary rainfalls" are such as are not extraordinary, and floods which habitually occur, though at irregular intervals, are not extraordinary. Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 99 Pac. 502, 508, 155 Cal. 59, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391.

ORDINARY REPAIRS

The replacing of a dozy or rotten round in a 40-foot extension ladder used in the business of an electric light company is not such ordinary repairs as a workman is usually expected to make, in the absence of proof that the defective condition of the round was known to the servant. Twombly v. Consolidated Electric Light Co., 57 Atl. 85, 87, 98 Me. 353, 64 L. R. A. 551.

The work of rebuilding a factory a large part of which has been destroyed, is not "ordinary repairs," but "construction, demolition, or extraordinary repairs," within the exception of an employer's liability policy excepting injuries to persons occurring in the construction, demolition, or in making extraordinary repairs to structures, buildings, or plants. Home Mixture Guano Co. v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, 176 Fed. 600, 603.

ORDINARY RISK

The failure of the master to use proper care to provide a reasonably safe place for the servant to perform his work and to furnish him with reasonably safe appliances is not an "ordinary risk of his employment" with the assumption of which the servant is charged unless he knows of such failure. Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., 91 S. W. 383, 384, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 267 (citing Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hannig, 43 S. W. 506, 91 Tex. 350; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bingle, 42 S. W. 971, 91 Tex. 287; St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Smith [Tex.] 63 S. W. 1064; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 66 S. W. 559, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 603; 1 Shear. & R. Neg. [4th Ed.] § 186).

The "ordinary risk" of employment which is assumed by a servant does not include such risks of dangers as a master could, by the exercise of ordinary care, discover and prevent. Klofski v. Railroad Supply Co., 85 N. E. 274, 278, 235 Ill. 146.

ORDINARY SKILL

The term "ordinary skill" contemplates that degree of skill that an ordinarily prudent person would use in the transaction of his own business under like or similar circumstances. Guitar v. Randel (Tex.) 147 S. W. 642, 647.

As required of physician

Persons practicing as physicians and surgeons are required to possess ordinary skill in their profession, and to practice their profession with ordinary skill, which is that degree of skill which is ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons in practice. Kruger v. McCaughey, 149 Ill. App. 440, 444.

"Ordinary care and skill" on the part of a physician and surgeon is that degree of care and skill usually exercised and possessed by physicians and surgeons of ordinary skill in similar communities. Dorris v. Warford, 100 S. W. 312, 313, 124 Ky. 768, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 14 Ann. Cas. 602.

ORDINARY STATE BUSINESS

The State Warehouse Act (Laws 1912, p. 707), in so far as it provides for an issuance of bonds and an increase of the public debt, without first submitting the question to the qualified voters, violates Const. art. 10, § 11, prohibiting an increase in the state debt without the consent of the voters except for the "ordinary" and current business of the state; the building of warehouses not being "ordinary" state business, and the bonds not being intended to be for a debt of the state. State ex rel. Lym v. McCown, 75 S. E. 302, 396, 92 S. C. 81.

ORDINARY TAX

Laws 1907, c. 65, imposing on every insurance company doing business in the state, except domestic mutual insurance companies, an annual tax of 2½ per cent. of the gross amount of premiums received in the state during the preceding year, etc., when construed in the light of the history of the legislation on the subject, imposes an "occupation tax" and not an "ordinary tax" within the Constitution relating to taxation. Queen City Fire Ins. Co. v. Basford, 130 N. W. 44, 47, 27 S. D. 164.

ORDINARY TENANCY

Leases in which property is let to single tenants are spoken of as "ordinary tenancies." La Plante v. La Zear, 68 N. E. 812, 313, 31 Ind. App. 433.

ORDINARY THREADS

The word "ordinary," in a statute providing for tariff on imported "cotton cloth in which other than the 'ordinary' warp and filling threads have been introduced in the process of weaving to form a figure," means those threads which ordinarily enter into the construction of the ordinary plain fabric and which cannot be removed without destroying its integrity, as distinguished from "extraordinary threads," which are not an integral part of the fabric, but are independent threads introduced to form a figure and for no other purpose. United States v. Rusch & Co., 167 Fed. 523, 525, 93 C. C. A. 159.

ORDINARY TIME

The words "ordinary time," as used in Revisal 1905, § 2632, imposing a penalty on a carrier for neglecting to transport within the ordinary time required for such transportation, mean the regular customary time within which, by the facilities in general use for the performance of the duty of carrying goods, the carriage should be completed. Jenkins v. Southern Ry. Co., 59 S. E. 663, 666, 146 N. C. 178.

Revisal 1905, § 2632, declares that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to neglect to transport within a reasonable time any goods received for shipment and billed to or from any place in the state, unless otherwise agreed between the parties, or unless the same be destroyed, under a penalty. It is further provided that the company shall be deemed to have transported the goods in a reasonable time if it has done so within the ordinary time required for such transportation, and that a delay of two days at the initial point, and 48 hours at one intermediate point for each 100 miles or fraction over which goods are to be transported, shall be held to be prima facie reasonable, and a failure to transport within such time shall be held prima facie unreasonable. The duty imposed by the statute is but declaratory of the common law, and the definition of reasonable time "as the ordinary time required" within which an act is to be done is the regular, customary, and usual time and is synonymous with "reasonable time," which means "as soon as the party conveniently can." The provision as to the allowance of time at the initial point and intermediate points lowers the standard of duty, as it is not clear that so much time would be given under all circumstances. The last sentence in the statute, "And a failure to transport within such time will be held prima facie unreasonable," is not very clear, and the words cannot refer to time which "shall not be charged," because to do so would be contradictory and destructive of the immediately preceding sentence. The last sentence should therefore be referred to the terms "ordinary time," thus making the act to read "a failure to transport within ordinary time shall be held prima facie unreasonable." Stone & Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 56 S. E. 932, 934, 144 N. C. 220 (citing Moore, Carriers, 188; Tiffany, Sales, 195; Crook v. Cowan, 64 N. C. 743; State v. Patterson, 47 S. E. 808, 134 N. C. 612; Ober v. Smith, 78 N. C. 316).

ORDINARY TRAVEL

"Ordinary travel" on a public street includes the use of a street by bicycle, and a bicycle is a vehicle of such a nature that it may be properly used on highways and its use regulated by the Legislature, and, being a vehicle, its proper place is on the highway or street, and not on the sidewalk, unless otherwise provided by statute. Molway v. City of Chicago, 88 N. E. 485, 486, 239 Ill. 486, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 543, 16 Ann. Cas. 424.

ORDINARY USE

Where the court instructed that municipalities are only liable for such defects in sidewalks as are apparent, or suggested by appearances, or disclosed by a test in the nature of the "ordinary use of such walks," it properly explained that by "ordinary use of such walk" was not meant such as a person walking over the walk with no regard for the walk would have, but such as a person going over the walk in the ordinary way that people go over walks, at the time being mindful of its condition and having particularly in mind the duty of ascertaining the condition of the walk with reference to whether it was safe and fit for public travel. Hunter v. Village of Ithaca, 105 N. W. 9, 10, 141 Mich. 539.

The taking of water from a stream for purposes of irrigation is not an "ordinary or natural use" within the rule giving riparian owners the absolute right to such uses. Bigham Bros. v. Port Arthur Canal & Dock Co. (Tex.) 91 S. W. 848, 853.

ORDINARY WEAR AND TEAR

The breaking of a window due to a defect in the construction of the building is a part of the "ordinary wear" within the exception to a covenant in a lease to leave the premises in as good condition as when taken, "ordinary wear" excepted. The term here used is "ordinary wear," while the term is usually "ordinary wear and tear"; but it is doubtful if there is any distinction between the two expressions. An exception in either form will doubtless apply more naturally to the gradual deterioration which results from use, lapse of time, and the operation of the elements. It has been held, however, and seems to be the accepted doctrine, that the words "ordinary wear and tear" will cover a specific and substantial injury suddenly sustained as the result of a structural defect. Drouin v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 825, 827, 80 Vt. 335, 13 Ann. Cas. 93 (citing Brown v. Burrington, 36 Vt. 40).

In general, the ordinary reasonable use and wear of property by a tenant has relation to the depreciation in condition of building or property which it undergoes during the tenant's occupation, when the tenant, in the case of a residence, at least, does nothing in connection with the use more than to come and go and perform the acts usually incident to creating and maintaining conditions for living in the ordinary way. Taylor v. Campbell, 108 N. Y. Supp. 399, 400, 123 App. Div. 698.

Live stock transported

In an action for damages for injuries to stock shipped over defendant's road, the term "ordinary wear and tear excepted," as used in an instruction that "the law requires a common carrier who receives stock for transportation to carry and transport the same from place of shipment to the place of destination in as safe and speedy a way as possible and to deliver the same in like order and condition as received 'ordinary wear and tear excepted,'" should be construed to mean the depreciation in value which results from the mere transportation itself unaccompanied by negligence of the carrier. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Young (Tex.) 72 S. W. 68.

ORDINARILY

"Ordinarily" means "according to established order; methodical; regular; customary, as the ordinary forms of law or justice; common, usual." Renow v. State, 120 S. W. 174, 176, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 343 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

In an action for injuries to a passenger, an instruction that plaintiff assumed the risks "ordinarily" incident to the coupling of the cars, instead of such risks as were "usually" incident thereto, was not objectionable; such words being regarded as synonymous. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Morrow (Tex.) 93 S. W. 162, 163.

ORDINARILY PRUDENT MAN

In a personal injury action by a servant, the court told the jury that it would refer during the charge to "the prudent man, and reasonable care" and they would understand thereby "the care and prudence of an ordinarily careful and prudent man in like circumstances," and would measure plaintiff's conduct by that standard, that care of a prudent man under some circumstances might be negligence under others, and they should apply the test with their general knowledge of the degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would exercise and, in directing attention to the question of plaintiff's care, told them to consider whether he exercised the care and prudence "of an ordinarily prudent man and was without fault on his part." Held, that the standard of care stated as the measure of plaintiff's conduct was too low; the words "ordinarily prudent man" suggesting mediocrity of care, if not carelessness. Drown v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. & Consolidated Lighting Co., 70 Atl. 599, 605, 81 Vt. 358.

The term "ordinarily prudent person" is synonymous with the term "person of ordinary care." A charge submitting the issue of assumed risk, which uses the term "ordinarily prudent person," is sufficient, under the statute providing that the defense shall not be available where a "person of ordinary care" would have continued in the service with a knowledge of the defect. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 106 S. W. 773, 776, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 135.

ORDINARILY PURE

"Ordinarily pure and wholesome water" means water reasonably clean and free from bacteria or other contamination, rendering it unfit for domestic use and dangerous to individuals. Peffer v. Pennsylvania Water Co., 70 Atl. 870, 873, 221 Pa. 578.

ORE

See Extra Good Ore; Iron Ore; Roasting Ore.

As property, see Property.

"Ore" is a metalliferous mineral or rock, especially one which is of sufficient value to be mined. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrel, 53 South. 705, 713, 127 La. 466.

ORE ROASTER

"An 'ore roaster' is designed for expelling the sulphur from iron ore preliminary to smelting." Davis-Colby Ore Roaster Co. v. Lackawanna Iron & Steel Co., 128 Fed. 453.

ORGANIC

ORGANIC ACT

The charter or statute by which a municipal corporation is created is its organic act, and neither the corporation nor its of-icers can do any act, make any contract, or incur any liability not authorized thereby, or by some legislative act applicable thereto. Wakefield v. Brophy, 122 N. Y. Supp. 632, 634, 67 Misc. Rep. 298.

ORGANIC LAW

Under the constitution declaring that a freeholder's charter shall be the "organic law of the city," such charter is properly termed the local constitution of the city and fixes the organization of the municipal government. In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 271, 275, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911.

ORGANIZE

See County Completely Organized; Duly Organized and Existing.

"To organize" means to arrange or constitute in parts; each having a special function or relation. Board of Sup'rs of Norfolk County v. Duke, 73 S. E. 456, 459, 113 Va. 94.

The word "organized," used in relation to a school board, might, interpreted in its limited sense, be held to mean merely the election of officers for the board, but, interpreted in a broader sense, the word means: Erected, established, constituted, composed, and formed as to its constituent parts. Copelin v. Board of School Directors of City of Harrisburg, 64 Atl. 5422, 544, 545, 215 Pa. 359.

An indictment charging embezzlement by an officer of the city was not objectionable in failing to allege that the money in question belonged to an "organized city." The use of the word "organized" in the statute qualifies the word "city" and is mere surplusage, since a city must be organized to be a city, a distinct entity capable of owning property susceptible of embezzlement. Bode v. State, 113 N. W. 996, 997, 80 Neb. 74.

Corporations

A corporation created by special charter is fully "organized," within Pub. St. 1882, c. 105, § 9, now Rev. Laws, c. 109, § 13, so as to transfer the franchise from the incorporators to the corporation, when the first meeting has been called, the act of incorporation accepted, officers elected, by-laws for future meetings adopted, and stock subscriptions accepted; and thereafter the affairs of the corporation are subject to the control of the stockholders, even if only a small part of the stock has been subscribed for and accepted, and although no payments have been made thereon; no call for payments having been made. Roosevelt v. Hamblin, 85 N. E. 98, 100, 199 Mass. 127, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748.

Real estate trusts created by deed for the purchasing, improving, holding, or selling of lands and buildings, and for the benefit of the shareholders, which do not derive any benefit from and are not "organized" under any statute of the state, and which by their terms end with lives in being and 21 years thereafter, are not subject to the excise tax imposed by Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 38, 36 Stat. 112, on the doing of business by corporations, joint-stock companies, or associations "organized" under the laws of the United States, or of any state or territory. Eliot v. Freeman, 31 Sup. Ct. 860, 361, 220 U. S. 178, 55 L. Ed. 424.

ORGANIZATION

See Color of Apparent Organization; Labor Organization.

The term "organization" implies a recognition of order, and an obedience to duly constituted authority. State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 100 N. W. 964, 980, 122 Wis. 534.

As used in Code, tit. 9, c. 9, § 1833, providing that mutual benefit associations shall not employ paid agents in soliciting and procuring members, except in the "organization" of subordinate bodies, the word "organization" refers to subordinate bodies, and not that of the association itself. First Nat. Bank of Marshalltown v. Church Federation of America, 105 N. W. 578, 580, 129 Iowa, 268.

ORGANIZATION OF ELECTORS

In Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, which provides that the Legislature may enact laws as to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties, and shall enact laws providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors without conventions, at elections to be known as "primary elections," the term "political parties" is intended to embrace those which had participated in a struggle at the polls for political ascendancy, and political "organizations of electors" is intended to include new parties which had not participated in prior elections, organized to advance some principle or measure of public policy. Socialist Party v. Uhl, 103 Pac. 181, 185, 155 Cal. 776.

ORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

The word "organization" as used in Act Cong. May 27, 1908, c. 204, that the organization, armament, and discipline of the organized militia in the several states shall be the same as that which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the regular army of the United States, does not relate to or include the enlistment of a soldier, but relates to the distribution of the personnel of the army or militia into units. Acker v. Bell, 57 South. 356, 358, 62 Fla. 108, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1269.

ORGANIZED TERRITORY

"Organized territories" have reference exclusively to that system of organized governments long existing within the United States, by which certain regions of the country have been erected into civil governments. Their powers, executive, legislative, and judicial, are conferred upon them by act of Congress, and their legislative acts are subject to the disapproval of the Congress of the United States; they are not in a sense independent governments, yet they exercise nearly all the powers of governments under what are generally called organic acts, passed by Congress, conferring such powers on them. More briefly, "organized territory" has been defined as an "inchoate state." Porto Rico, though it became by the Treaty of Paris a "territory" of the United States, did not become an "organized territory" in the technical sense of the words so as authorized extradition from a state or territory of the United States to Porto Rico. In re Kopel, 148 Fed. 505, 507 (citing De Lima v. Bidwell, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 182 U. S. 1, 45 L. Ed. 1041; In re Lane, 10 Sup. Ct. 760, 135 U. S. 447, 34 L. Ed. 219; Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 805).

ORGANIZED TOWN

An incorporated village is an "organized town" within the statute requiring a duplicate of the auditor's notice of the meeting of the county board of commissioners to pass on the petition of the judge of the county seat to be posted, 10 days before such meeting, in a public place in each organized town of the county. Tucker v. Board of Com'rs of Lincoln County, 97 N. W. 103, 104, 90 Minn. 406.

ORGANZINE

Silk "organzine," damaged in dyeing, is not by reason of the damage removed from the provision for "organzine," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 385, 30 Stat. 185, and is classifiable as such, rather than as "silk waste" under section 2, Free List, par. 661, 30 Stat. 201. Cohen v. United States, 180 Fed. 634.

ORIFICE

A contract to furnish water for public purposes contained this clause: "Said first party agrees to furnish water at its mains without extra charge, for the following municipal purposes: * * * For eighteen (18) taps or faucets in computing which each 'orifice' beyond the main shall be counted as one 'tap,' except that in the town hall and in schoolhouses one faucet may be connected with all the water-closets and urinals in any one building." In addition to the water charged in the account annexed, plaintiff has for many years furnished without charge water for the city hall with 18 separate taps or faucets, for the city farm with 6 faucets, and for the city farm stable with 1 faucet; each building being connected with the main by one service pipe. The plumbing for each water-closet and for the urinal in the town hall is entirely separate and distinct from that of each other. Held, that each of these faucets was an "orifice" beyond the main and must be counted as one "tap." Public Works Co. v. City of Old Town, 66 Atl. 723, 724, 102 Me. 306.

ORIGIN

ORIGINAL

See Triplicate Original.

Where two copies of a letter are written exactly alike by the same writer, one of which is desired to be mailed and the other retained, the one has not become the "original" and the other a copy by whatever evidence the accuracy of the copy is established, so that a typewritten carbon copy of a letter mailed is not a duplicate original, so as to be admissible in evidence without accounting for the original. McDonald v. Hanks, 113 S. W. 804, 807, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 140.

ORIGINAL AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

Under Const. art. 4, § 4, providing that the Supreme Court shall not have jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of money when the "original amount in controversy" does not exceed $200, the amount in controversy is the amount of the principal sum sued for, with interest to the commencement of the action, and not with interest to the date of the trial, since the obvious meaning and purpose of the word "original" is to limit the amount to the time when the matter first originates as a controversy in court. Ingham v. Wm. P. Harper & Son, 128 Pac. 675, 676, 71 Wash. 286.

Under Const. art. 4, § 4, and Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4650, providing that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall not extend to civil actions at law for the recovery of money where the "original" amount in controversy does not exceed $200, the amount in controversy to which the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court extends is that which was in actual dispute before the action was brought, and does not include attorney's fees which are merely incidental to the suit; the word "original" meaning "pertaining to the origin or beginning; preceding all others; first in order; primitive; pristine." Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Faben, 98 Pac. 764, 765, 51 Wash. 308.

ORIGINAL ANSWER

A pleading which in its substance is a direct and full reply to the cause of action set up in the plaintiff's petition and contains, among other matter, a sworn denial of partnership of the defendants, should, under the rules of pleading, be denominated either an "original" or "amended" answer, and is not a "supplemental answer." Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Halsell, 88 S. W. 15, 98 Tex. 244.

ORIGINAL APPLICATION

The "original application," as used in Rev. St. § 4897, providing that a second application may be made within two years after the allowance of original application, means the first application. Weston Electrical Instrument Co. v. Empire Electrical Instrument Co., 131 Fed. 90, 91.

ORIGINAL APPROPRIATION

Where the owner of certain land had used water from a main irrigation ditch through a lateral since September 3, 1888, when the right so to do was decreed to her by a void probate decree, such use constituted an "original appropriation" as of that date. Bullerdick v. Hersmeyer, 81 Pac. 334, 335, 32 Mont. 541.

ORIGINAL CONSTRUCTION

Until property once bears specifically the cost of building a pavement abutting it done on the order of the council of the city, or by the city's express permission, indicated by act of its legislative body, there has not been an original construction of such improvement within a statute allowing the city to order the original construction of such improvement at the cost of the abutting owners. Gullfoyle's Ex'r v. City of Maysville, 112 S. W. 666, 129 Ky. 632.

Where a portion of an old turnpike road, by the extension of the limits of a city, was included within, and became a public way of, the city, and, as such, had a few repairs made on it, the regrading and paving of the road was an "original construction" of the street, within Ky. St. 1894, § 2833, making lot owners liable for the costs of the "original construction," and the city liable for costs of "reconstruction," of streets. McHenry v. Selva, 35 S. W. 645, 99 Ky. 232.

ORIGINAL CONTRACT

See Contract to Answer for Default of Another.

ORIGINAL CONTRACTOR

An "original contractor" within Mechanics' Lien Law is one, who, for a fixed price, agrees to perform certain work, and does not include persons doing carpentry work, etc., by the day. Van Horn Trading Co. v. Day (Tex.) 148 S. W. 1129, 1130.

Every person who deals directly with the owner, and who, in pursuance of a contract with him, performs labor or furnishes material, is an original contractor within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2221, giving every original contractor a lien. Gray v. New Mexico Punic Stone Co., 110 Pac. 608, 604, 15 N. M. 478.

Under L. O. L. § 7420, making it the duty of every original contractor to file his lien within 60 days from the completion of his contract, and of every mechanic or other person to file within 30 days, one engaged merely to work for an indefinite time, under the direction of the lessee of a house, is a mere "laborer," whose rights to a lien would expire within 30 days from his last day of work; but one engaged under a direct contract with the owner to furnish labor or labor and materials is an "original contractor," though the contract be implied. Bernard v. Hassan, 118 Pac. 201, 60 Or. 62.

Where plaintiff contracted with a lessee to raise a number of old buildings above the street level and remodel them, and "furnish all of the necessary labor and material to be used to fully complete the work," plaintiff to receive the actual cost of the materials and labor, plus 10 per cent. and the reasonable value of the work, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done when it was completed, it was held that the labor to be performed was not merely incidental to the furnishing of the materials, and hence plaintiff was an "original contractor" within the meaning of the statute, and not a materialman, and was not entitled to a mechanic's lien where the contract was not in writing and filed with the county recorder as the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183) requires. Peterson v. Freiermuth, 121 Pac. 299, 301, 17 Cal. App. 609.

Materialman

A party furnishing the material for a building is an original contractor, within Rev. St. 1899, § 4207, requiring an original contractor to file his lien account within six months after the indebtedness shall have accrued. E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. James T. Smith Bldg. Co., 114 S. W. 77, 78, 134 Mo. App. 316.

ORIGINAL COST

In determining what is a fair and reasonable price to be paid by a city for a waterworks system at the termination of a franchise to a private company, is not to be determined by the "original cost" of the plant, but by its present value, and "original cost" and "present value" are not equivalent terms. Galena Water Co. v. City of Galena, 87 Pac. 735, 737, 74 Kan. 644 (citing National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 853, 10 C. C. A. 653, 27 L. R. A. 827; Town of Bristol v. Bristol & Warren Waterworks, 49 Atl. 974, 23 R. I. 274).

ORIGINAL DISTRICT

Code Supp. 1907, § 1989a23, provides that if any person owns lands within a drainage district which has been assessed for benefits, and which is separated from the ditch by the land of others, and shall desire to drain his land across the land of such others into the ditch, and shall be unable to agree on the terms on which he may enter on their lands and construct such ditch, he may file a petition, asking the board of supervisors to establish a subdistrict within the limits of the original district to secure more complete drainage, describing the lands to be affected, and that all other proceedings shall be the same as provided for the establishment of original districts. By Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, § 22, it was provided that additional lands within any district which were benefited by an improvement might be included therein. Held, that the terms "subdistrict" and "original district" in section 1989a23 were used in contradistinction to each other, the term "original district" not having been used in the earlier statute in contradistinction to the annexed territory provided for by section 1989a54, as added by Acts 33d Gen. Assem. c. 118, § 22; and hence the phrase "within the limits of the original district" in section 1989a23 must be deemed as applicable to annexed territory as to the lands originally included in the district, so that it is not necessary to the annexation of territory to a district that it shall have been within the original territory. Bird v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 135 N. W. 581, 584, 154 Iowa, 692.

ORIGINAL ENTRIES

See Book of Original Entries.

ORIGINAL IMPROVEMENT

The construction for the first time of sewer is an "original improvement" within Ky. St. 1903, § 3100, providing that no error in the proceedings of the general council shall exempt from payment after the work is done, as required by the ordinance or contract, but that no ordinance for any original improvements mentioned in the act shall pass both branches of the general council at the same meeting, and at least two weeks shall intervene between its passage in the two branches. Thomas v. Woods, 108 S. W. 878, 879, 128 Ky. 555.

ORIGINAL INSTRUMENT

Where a declaration of trust is made in duplicate by the same impression of the type-writer, and signed at the same time, each party taking one, either is admissible as an original. First Nat. Bank of Bandon v. Jamieson, 128 Pac. 433, 63 Or. 594.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION

The phrase "original jurisdiction" means the power to entertain cases in the first instance as distinguished from appellate jurisdiction, and does not mean exclusive jurisdiction. A court of original jurisdiction is one in which an action has its origin. Burks v. Walker, 109 Pac. 544, 545, 25 Okl. 353.

The "jurisdiction" to consider causes de novo, on appeal, and to decide them on the law and the evidence according to the right of the case, independent of the rulings and judgment of the lower court, is original and not appellate. In re Burnette, 85 Pac. 573, 577, 73 Kan. 609.

ORIGINAL LIABILITY

The words "original liability," within V. S. 1183, providing that, if execution on a judgment obtained against an association is returned unsatisfied, a suit for the amount unpaid may be brought against any or all of the associates on their "original liability," have reference to the liability consequent on membership in the association at the time of the creation of the liability on which the judgment was recovered, and persons whose membership had ceased when the liability merged in the judgment or persons whose membership did not commence until subsequent thereto were not responsible in supplementary proceedings under the section. F. R. Patch Mfg. Co. v. Capeless, 63 Atl. 938, 940, 79 Vt. 1.

ORIGINAL LOCATOR

The "original locator" of mining ground is a discoverer of the mineral therein contained. Zerres v. Vanina, 134 Fed. 610, 614.

ORIGINAL OBLIGATION

Under Rev. Civ. Code, § 1973, making a promise to answer for another's obligation an "original obligation," where the promise is made by one who has received property upon an undertaking to apply it pursuant to such promise, etc., an agreement to pay another's account is an original contract, and not a guaranty, where the debtor has turned his bills receivable, etc., to the promisor, on his agreement to pay the debtor's debts. Grimsrud Shoe Co. v. Jackson, 115 N. W. 656, 659, 22 S. D. 114.

Under the provisions of subdivision 3, § 6010, Rev. St. 1887, a promise to answer for the obligation of another is deemed an "original obligation" of the promisor, and need not be in writing, where the promise is for an antecedent obligation of another, and is made upon the consideration that the party receiving it cancels the antecedent obligation and accepts the new promise as a substitute therefor. McCallum v. McClarren, 98 Pac. 200, 201, 15 Idaho, 374.

ORIGINAL PACKAGE

An "original package" is defined as a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling, and usually consists of a number of things bound together convenient for handling. It is again defined to be the unit which the carrier receives, transmits, and delivers as an article of commerce, and again as that package which is delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial point of shipment in the exact condition in which it was shipped. If sold, it must be in the form shipped or received, for, if the package be broken after such delivery, it by that act alone becomes a part of the common mass of property within the state, and is subject to the laws of that state, enacted in virtue of its police power. State v. Eckenrod, 127 N. W. 3, 58, 148 Iowa, 173.

The term "original packages," as used in aws Kan. 1907, c. 250, providing that it shall be unlawful to sell, offer for sale, or deliver for use at any coal mine or mine in the state, powder in any manner except in original packages, containing 12½ pounds of powder, etc., do not necessarily have the same meaning as used in decisions of the federal Supreme Court, so as to make the statute void as designed to prohibit importations of black powder from other states, the act not dealing with importations, special or general, but only with sales within the state, at a specified place, and delivery at such place of the powder sold in other than the prescribed quantity and in a prescribed package. Williams v. Walsh, 32 Sup. Ct. 137, 139, 222 U. S. 415, 56 L. Ed. 253.

"The doctrine [of 'original package'] has no application where the manufacturer puts up the package with the express intent of evading the laws of another state, and is enabled to carry out his purpose by the active agency of an express company and the connivance of his consignee." Crigler v. Commonwealth, 87 S. W. 276, 279, 120 Ky. 12 (quoting and approving Austin v. Tennessee, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. Ed. 24).

Each separate bottle shipped into the state by a manufacturer to a local dealer under a contract by the terms of which the agreed prices were per cask containing 10 dozen bottles, and per case containing 6 dozen bottles, cannot be considered an original package, so as to save the local sales from the interdiction of Laws Miss. 1908, c. 115, prohibiting sales of malt liquors. Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 33 Sup. Ct. 44, 5, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. Ed. 184.

An original package as governed by the interstate commerce law is one delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial point of shipment, and retains its form and contents until received by the consignee in the same condition as when shipped, and if upon arriving at its destination in a sister state the package is broken, and its contents in smaller units offered for sale, entering into the retail commerce of the state the distinctive quality of interstate commerce is lost, and the goods become at once subject to state laws. Ex parte Agnew, 131 N. W. 817, 19, 89 Neb. 306, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 676; Ex parte King, 131 N. W. 20, 89 Neb. 298.

Where goods are packed in a case by the shipper in another state, and are shipped into the state, the "original package" was the case in which the goods were packed and shipped into the state, and when the case was opened for the sale and delivery of the separate packages, and they were removed therefrom, such packages lost their distinctive character of articles of interstate transportation, and became a part of the taxable property of the state. Parks Bros. & Co. v. Nez Perce County, 89 Pac. 949, 951, 13 Idaho, 298, 121 Am. St. Rep. 261, 12 Ann. Cas. 1113.

Where a liquid in casks is shipped in interstate commerce in car load lots, the cask and not the car is the "original package" within the meaning of Food & Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, § 10, 34 Stat. 771, which authorizes the seizure and forfeiture for adulteration or misbranding of articles so shipped while remaining in "original unbroken packages." United States v. Sixty-Five Casks Liquid Extracts, 170 Fed. 449, 454 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5059).

Where the manufacturer of whisky received a barrel of his product from a government warehouse after paying the tax, having the barrel stamped to show the payment and receiving stamps to be affixed on each five gallons thereof when transferred to kegs of that capacity, he was not required to sell the whole barrel in one package to avoid payment of a license, but could divide it into five-gallon kegs for sale, and when stamped the kegs were "original packages containing not less than five gallons" within the statute authorizing the sale of whisky by the manufacturer thereof in that manner without license. Bunch v. State, 114 S. W. 239, 88 Ark. 230.

Subdivisions of packages

"The term 'original packages' is not defined by any statute, and is simply a convenient form of expression adopted by Chief Justice Marshall in Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. [25 U. S.] 419, 6 L. Ed. 678, to indicate that a license tax could not be exacted of an importer of goods from a foreign country who disposes of such goods in the form in which they were imported. It is not denied that, in the changed and changing conditions of commerce between the states, packages in which shipments may be made from one state to another may be smaller than those 'bales, hogsheads, barrels, or tierces,' to which the term was originally applied by Chief Justice Marshall, but, whatever the form or size employed, there must be a recognition of the fact that the transaction is a bona fide one, and that the usual methods of interstate shipment have not been departed from for the purpose of evading the police laws of the states." The tax imposed on cigarette selling by Code Iowa, § 5007, is not an invalid regulation of commerce as applied to sales at retail of packages of ten cigarettes in small pasteboard boxes, sealed, and stamped with the revenue stamp, which had been shipped loose to the retailer from another state by an express company which merely issued a receipt in duplicate, showing the number of packages and the name of the consignee, the packages not being separately or otherwise addressed, since such a box can in no just sense be considered an "original package." Cook v. Marshall County, Iowa, 25 Sup. Ct. 233, 235, 196 U. S. 261, 49 L. Ed. 471.

ORIGINAL PROMISE

An obligation to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another is original and valid, though in parol, if made at the time or before a debt is created, where credit is given solely to the promisor; or where credit is given on the promises of both, as principals and jointly liable, and not on the promise of one, as surety for the other; or a promise, made after the debt is created, when, by reason of the promise, the original debtor is released; or if it is a promise to pay out of funds placed in the hands of the promisor by the debtor; or if it be a promise based on a new consideration of benefit or harm passing between the promisor and the creditor. Where there is no benefit to one promising to answer for the debt of another, and the promise does not create an original obligation, but is a collateral promise, merely superadded to the promise of another to pay the debt, the original promisor remaining liable, the collateral promisor is not liable, unless there is a writing, whether the promise is made when the debt is created or not. Peele v. Powell, 73 S. E. 234, 236, 156 N. C. 553.

A promise made at the time or before a debt is created, and where credit is given solely to the promisor or to both promisors as principals, or a promise based on a new consideration passing between the promisor and the creditor, or a promise for the benefit of the promisor where he has a personal and pecuniary interest in the transaction in which a third party is the original obligor, is an "original promise," which is not within the statute of frauds, but a promise not creating an original obligation and merely superadded to the promise of another who remains liable, to pay such debt, is a collateral promise required by the statute to be in writing and signed, whether made at the time the debt was created or afterwards. Whitehurst v. Padgett, 73 S. E. 240, 241, 157 N. C. 424.

Where the defendant bought uncompleted houses, the plumbing in which plaintiffs had contracted with her vendors to do, and which they had partly done, her promise that, if they would hurry up the work so that the buildings could be rented, she would pay them, not only for the work of completion, but for what they had done for her vendors, is an "original promise" on a new and sufficient consideration, and so not within the

Where defendant, who was the owner of certain premises, promised that, if plaintiff would refrain from filing a lien thereon for materials delivered to a contractor and would continue to furnish sand for the buildings being erected, defendant would pay the debt owing by the contractor to plaintiff, defendant's agreement was an original promise based on a new consideration, and was not, therefore, within the statute of frauds. Schnauffer v. Ahr, 103 N. Y. Supp. 195, 198, 53 Misc. Rep. 299.

A promise to pay the debt of another in consideration that the creditors release the debtor and accept the promise instead thereof is an original promise which is not required to be in writing under Rev. St. 1887, § 6010, subd. 3, making a promise for an antecedent obligation of another in consideration that the party receiving it cancel the antecedent obligation and accept the new promise as a substitute therefor an original promise. McCallum v. McClarren, 98 Pac. 200, 201, 15 Idaho, 374.

ORIGINAL RECORD

It was complainant's custom in operating a lumber yard, on receiving an order, to write the substance on a small order blank, which was given to a loader, who put the material on a wagon, and returned the slip to the yard clerk, who then made three "original slips" on an automatic register, showing the date, names, quantity, price, etc. In filling out the blanks the machine made three exact copies of the slips by one impression, and automatically numbered them. One of the slips was given to the driver, who delivered the lumber, and the other two and the original written memorandum retained by plaintiff. Held, that the original written memorandum was a mere shop book entry, and not ordinarily admissible, but that one of such "original slips" retained by plaintiff in its office was admissible as the original record. Federal Union Surety Co. v. Indiana Lumber & Mfg. Co., 95 N. E. 1104, 1105, 176 Ind. 328.

ORIGINAL SPECIAL PROCEEDING

While a criminal contempt proceeding for violating an order enjoining accused from maintaining a liquor nuisance in which a warrant of attachment was issued is an "original special proceeding" under Rev. Codes 1905, § 7555, providing that, if an attachment is issued in contempt proceedings, it shall be deemed an original special proceeding by the state against accused, it is not, strictly speaking, an independent proceeding, as it grows out of and is, to a certain extent, connected with the main action and is dependent for its foundation upon the proceedings in the main action and the violation of the injunctive order therein issued. State v. Helsner, 127 N. W. 72, 75, 20 N. D. 557.

ORIGINAL SUIT

A proceeding under Rev. St. 1895, c. 17, tit. 30, art. 1375, authorizing a new trial for good cause shown, upon defendant's application, where judgment was rendered against him on service by publication without appearance, is not an "original suit," but a "continuation of the former suit." Hence, the order vacating the original judgment is an interlocutory order from which no appeal lies. Wolf v. Sahm, 120 S. W. 1114, 1117, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 564.

ORIGINAL SUM

The phrase "original sum," as used in St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 2, § 59, which requires a person redeeming land sold for taxes to pay the original sum, with interest and other charges, means the amount paid at tax sale; hence, where a purchaser of a tract of land at a tax sale has subdivided it by his own deed before the time for redemption had expired, in such a way that his grantee owned the tax title to a part of the land and plaintiff the equity of redemption, the right to redeem depends upon plaintiff's paying the whole sum paid for the tax deed. McNeil v. O'Brien, 91 N. E. 138, 140, 204 Mass. 594.

ORIGINAL UNDERTAKING

If no other person is liable for the same debt for which the undertaking is made, although another person may be liable for a distinct debt which is the measure of the one in question, the undertaking is an original one. Jolley v. Walker's Adm'rs, 26 Ala. 690, 702.

Where a tenant became sick after planting the crop, and defendant bought the crop from him and agreed to pay the lessor the rent due, and the lessor accepted defendant as his tenant, the agreement to pay the rent was an "original undertaking," not required to be in writing under the statute of frauds. Pylant v. Webb, 58 S. E. 329, 2 Ga. App. 171.

Where relators furnished supplies, labor, and materials to a subcontractor for the construction of a highway, and treated the latter as their debtor until after he absconded, the undertaking of the contractors, if any, to liquidate such indebtedness, was not an "original undertaking," but a contract to answer for the default of another, within the statute of frauds. Miller v. State ex rel. Prather, 74 N. E. 260, 261, 35 Ind. App. 379.

ORIGINAL WIDTH

The words "original width," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, creating a highway by 20 years' user, but declaring that all highways previously laid out according to law, or used as such, for 20 years or more, shall continue as located and as of their original width respectively until changed according to law, related to the width of the highway when the proceeding was begun to ascertain and record it, and not to a possibly wider or narrower way at some remote or recent period. Pitser v. McCreery, 89 N. E. 317, 318, 319, 172 Ind. 663.

ORIGINAL WRIT

See Scire Facias.

ORIGINALLY EXERCISED BY CHANCERY COURT

See Jurisdiction Originally Exercised by Chancery Court.

ORIGINATING

The words "originating" and "arising," as used in the section of the Constitution relating to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the circuit court, refer to cases which the circuit and county courts, respectively, exercise original jurisdiction of and determine. Mugge v. Warnell Lumber & Veneer Co., 50 South. 645, 646, 58 Fla. 318.

ORIGINATING CAUSE

The initial and moving or "originating cause" is to be understood as meaning the surrounding conditions in which the negligence of defendant operated as the efficient cause of the injurious consequences. Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

ORIGINATING WITHIN VEHICLE

Where an accident to an automobile resulted in the leakage of gasoline from the tank, and fire was communicated to the gasoline, which had escaped from burning lamps affixed to the outside of the vehicle, the fire loss on the vehicle was not one "originating within the vehicle," within a clause of a fire policy exempting the insurer from liability for fire so originating. Preston v. Aetna Ins. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 638, 639, 118 App. Div. 784; Same v. Union Assur. Soc., 103 N. Y. Supp. 640, 641, 118 App. Div. 788.

ORNAMENT

Personal ornaments as goods and chattels, see Goods.

A watch, chain, purse, or rosary, being each an article of use, and not worn for ornament, is not a "jewel" or "ornament," within the statute relieving an innkeeper from liability for loss of money, jewels, or ornaments, where he provides a safe, posts notice thereof, and the guest neglects to deposit the same in the safe. Jones v. Hotel Latham Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 1084, 1085, 62 Misc. Rep. 620.

Watch

A watch and fob are embraced in the terms "jewels" and "ornaments," as used in Act 1879, p. 185, c. 145, relating to the liability of the proprietor of a hotel for the keeping of any jewels and ornaments belonging to a guest. Mr. Webster defines the word "jewel" as an ornament of dress, usually made of a precious metal, having enamel or precious stones as a part of its design; but we are of the opinion that it was used by the Legislature in the common meaning attributed to it as an ornament or useful article of value, and embraces a watch used for a timekeeper or chronometer, and in which precious stones may or may not form a part. The fob is evidently an article kept and worn both for use and ornament. Rains v. Maxwell House Co., 79 S. W. 114, 117, 112 Tenn. 219, 64 L. R. A. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 488.

ORNAMENTAL FEATHERS

Peacock feathers in a crude condition, used in that state for ornamental purposes, are dutiable under the provision in paragraph 425, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 191, for "ornamental feathers," and not under that in the same paragraph for "feathers crude." George Silva & Co. v. United States, 127 Fed. 781.

Crude ostrich feathers, which in that condition are never used for ornamental purposes, but need to be dressed and otherwise manufactured before becoming suitable for such use, are dutiable as "feathers * * * crude," and not as "ornamental feathers," under the Tariff Act. Brodie v. United States, 135 Fed. 914, 915; Spero v. Same, 135 Fed. 915, 916.

ORNAMENTAL FIXTURES

An electric chandelier, annunciator, and like contrivances or devices attached to the ceiling or walls of a house by a tenant, at his own expense and for his personal comfort and convenience, come within the legal definition of "domestic or ornamental fixtures" when so placed that they can be readily detached without injury to the premises. In the absence of any understanding to the contrary, such fixtures may be removed by the tenant at any time during his term or occupancy, and even thereafter, if he be deprived of the opportunity to remove them by a wrongful retaking of possession of the premises by the landlord. Not being annexed to the rented structure with any view to their becoming permanently attached thereto as a part of the realty, they do not lose their identity as chattels, and a possessory warrant will lie to recover them from a landlord who wrongfully withholds possession thereof from the tenant. Raymond v. Strickland, 52 S. E. 619, 620, 124 Ga. 504, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69.

ORNAMENTAL LEAVES

Bleached or dyed grasses that are intended for ornamental or decorative purposes are classifiable as "ornamental * * * leaves * * * not specially provided for," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 425, 30 Stat. 191. And so are palm leaves that have been subjected to a process of painting, etc., to give them their natural appearance and to prevent decomposition. And also wreaths and crosses mounted on wire frames. United States v. H. Bayersdorfer & Co., 175 Fed. 959, 960, 99 C. C. A. 440. See, also, Bayersdorfer & Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 286.

ORNAMENTAL PROJECTIONS

As used in a city ordinance, authorizing the issuance of permits to construct "ornamental projections" beyond the building line, included all decorative projections on the face of a building beyond the building line in the nature of porches, arches, porticos, pedestals, free standing statuary columns, and pillars erected entirely for the enhancement of the beauty of the building from an artistic standpoint. McMillan v. Klaw & Erlanger Const. Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 365, 367, 107 App. Div. 407.

ORNAMENTAL STONES

In construing the provision in paragraph 435, Schedule N, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 192, for imitation precious stones not "ornamented or decorated," held as to stones which have been incrustated, but in which the incrustations are a part of the imitation, that they are not ornamented or decorated within the meaning of said provision. United States v. R. F. Downing & Co., 144 Fed. 1022, 73 C. C. A. 42; Id., 139 Fed. 155.

ORNAMENTS AND OTHER ARTICLE

ORPHAN

"Orphans," as used in a certificate of a mutual benefit association, providing for payment to the family, "orphans," or dependents of the member, as he might direct, represented the children of the family after the death of father and mother. Klee v. Klee, 93 N. Y. Supp. 588, 590, 47 Misc. Rep. 101.

"Orphans," as used in the rules of an association providing that upon the death of a member the society would pay to the widow or orphans of the deceased member a certain sum, is intended in the sense of "children" and not in the strict legal sense of orphans. Fischer v. Malchow, 101 N. W. 602, 603, 93 Minn. 396.

Where a benevolent association's charter provided for the payment of benefits to "orphans," such term would not be limited to persons who were orphans in a strict sense, embracing those only related by consanguinity, but would be construed in the sense of children. Berdan v. Milwaukee Mut. Life Ins. Co., 99 N. W. 411, 413, 136 Mich. 396, 4 Ann. Cas. 332.

A bequest for the education of "orphans or poor children" means orphans without estate to pay for such education and children whose parents are living but are too poor to pay for it. Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 379, 196 Mo. 234.

Lexicographers are not unanimous, but lean toward a meaning for "orphanage" or "orphan asylum" suggesting destitution of those relieved, rather than a profit-seeking enterprise. Standard Dict. "Orphanage." "An institution or home for orphans; orphan asylum; an asylum or home for destitute orphan children." Webst. Dict. "Orphanage." "An institution or asylum for the care of orphans." Id. "Asylum." "An institution for the protection or relief of some class of destitute, unfortunate, or afflicted persons." Baker v. State, 97 N. W. 566, 569, 120 Wis. 135.

OSTENSIBLEOSTENSIBLE AGENCY

An agency is "ostensible" when the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 6, 36 Mont. 592.

OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY

"Ostensible authority" of an agent is such as a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Weidenaar v. New York Life Ins. Co., 94 Pac. 1, 7, 36 Mont. 592 (citing Civ. Code, § 2093). But a collector of a local lodge of a mutual benefit society, consisting of a grand lodge and subordinate local lodges, empowered to act as superintendent of the society in the state in the institution of new lodges, has no authority to waive delinquency of a member in a local lodge or receive current dues from one who has ceased to be a member of the society. Kennedy v. The Grand Fraternity, 92 Pac. 971, 977, 36 Mont. 325, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78. Civ. Code Cal. § 2317, gives the same definition. And so, where certificates of stock owned by plaintiff were indorsed in blank without knowledge by his brother in plaintiff's name, and hypothecated to secure a debt of the brother, and plaintiff, being informed by the secretary of the corporation, said it was all right, the plaintiff could not as against an innocent purchaser from the pledgee dispute the brother's authority to transfer the stock. Dover v. Pittsburg Oil Co., 77 Pac. 405, 406, 143 Cal. 501.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER

Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 3157, declares that "an 'ostensible partner' is one whose name appears to the world as such, and he is bound, though he have no interest in the firm." He is liable as a partner only to those persons who have acted on the faith of the truth of the appearance. American Cotton College v. Atlanta Newspaper Union, 74 S. E. 1084, 1085, 138 Ga. 147.

"Osteopathy" is a method of treating diseases of the human body without the use of drugs, by means of manipulation applied to various nerve centers, chiefly those along the spine, with a view to inducing free circulation of the blood and lymph, and an equal distribution of the nerve forces. Special attention is given to the readjustment of any bones, muscles, or ligaments not in the normal position. State v. Johnson, 114 Pac. 390, 392, 84 Kan. 411, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5070). It is that method of the healing art accomplished by a system of rubbing or kneading the body. State v. Marble, 73 N. E. 1063, 1064, 72 Ohio St. 21, 70 L. R. A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 2 Ann. Cas. 898. See, also, Ex parte Collins, 121 S. W. 501, 503, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 2; *Ligon v. Pen. Code 1901, § 172, declares that "murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Such malice is express or implied. Section 173 declares that all murder perpetrated by poison or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration of certain crimes, is murder in the first degree, and all other kinds of murder are in the second degree. Held, that the word "other" in section 173 was used to supply the sense of addition to the enumeration; and hence an instruction that it was not essential to a verdict of murder in the first degree by poison that there should be proof that defendant administered the poison to decedent with a specific intent to kill him was proper; malice being implied. Eytinge v. Territory, 100 Pac. 443, 445, 12 Ariz. 131.

As different

The natural, usual, and normal use of the word "other" is to indicate a differing from or an addition to the thing or things immediately in contemplation. De Loach & Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 62 S. E. 473, 474, 4 Ga. App. 746.

As ejusdem generis

"Where a statute or other document enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following, and classed with such enumeration, the clause embraces 'other' persons or things, the word 'other' will generally be read as 'other such like,' so that persons or things therein comprised may be read as ejusdem generis with, and not of a quality superior to or different from, those specifically enumerated." Standard Oil Co. v. Swanson, 49 S. E. 262, 263, 121 Ga. 412 (citing Sanders v. State, 12 S. E. 1053, 86 Ga. 717; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Penman, 151 Fed. 961, 969, 81 C. C. A. 151).

The rule that where a statute enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following and classed with such enumeration the clause embraces "other" persons or things, the word "other" will be read as "other such like," so that the persons or things comprised may be read as ejusdem generis with, and not of a quality superior to, or different from, those specifically enumerated, does not apply, where the intention of the Legislature is clear and there is no room for construction. Vassey v. Spake, 65 S. E. 825, 826, 83 S. C. 566.

"When general words follow an enumeration of particular cases, they apply only to cases of the same kind as those expressly mentioned, or, stated in different language, 'the word "other," following an enumeration of particulars, embraces enumerated particulars of like nature only, unless a broader sense is obviously intended.'" Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 65 N. E. 451, 460, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L. R. A. 631 (quoting and adopting Union County v. Ussery, 35 N. E. 618, 147 Ill. 204; and citing and adopting Misch v. Russell, 26 N. E. 528, 136 Ill. 22, 12 L. R. A. 125; First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 28 N. E. 955, 138 Ill. 483; Ritchie v. People, 40 N. E. 454, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315).

Other accidental or natural cause

Testator recited that having in mind the many catastrophes resulting from the action of the elements, and the great suffering etc., caused by the destruction of life and property by storms, floods, fires, and other accidental and natural causes, etc., he devised the remainder of his estate to trustees to invest and pay the income for the charitable purpose of relieving the wants, distress, and suffering arising from such causes, and for the purpose of aiding such persons as the trustees deemed advisable who were victims of such accidents and catastrophes, and enjoining the trustees to select subjects worthy of assistance, and to use the fund for the greatest possible benefit to suffering humanity. In determining whether there was a sufficiently definite designation of beneficiaries, the court said: "Can it be doubted that the testator intended by the word 'such' to limit the relief to suffering from some causes, accidents, or catastrophes, as distinguished from others not within his mental category? We think not. Certainly he intended that some causes, some accidents and catastrophes, should be excluded from those whose victims were to be the subjects of the annual expenditures of the income of this fund. If so, then is it not possible for the court to find some line of differentiation, which was in the mind of the testator, with sufficient certainty and definiteness to enable it to decide, in any concrete instance of expenditure or proposed expenditure, whether it is authorized? We are convinced that it is possible. Obviously the purchase of food for the homeless victims of the New Richmond cyclone would be justified. We think it equally obvious that expenditure to aid the cure of consumptives or inebriates would be forbidden to the trustees. Whether famine sufferers of a drouth-stricken region might be relieved, would perhaps be a question of more doubt than either of the other two, for they would not be victims of storm, fire, or flood. The inquiry, therefore, would be whether drouth would be a 'natural cause' so similar in character or results to those specified that we must conclude that the testator had it in mind in enlarging the field otherwise limited by the three expressed causes. We must presume that he had in mind a class of causes illustrated by the three named, though not strictly confined to them, but similar enough to be within the same general conception of possible suffering which he desired to relieve. Such is the unavoidable force and significance of the words used." Kronshage v. Varrell, 97 N. W. 923, 120 Wis. 161.

Other action

"'Other action' pending is a good plea in bar to a popular action, or a qui tam action for a penalty, because, by bringing the first suit, the plaintiff in it is entitled exclusive y to the penalty, and consequently no other person can ever have any right." "It is well known that a man cannot bring a second action for the same cause for which he has a prior action pending. The same rule applies to qui tam actions where the plaintiffs are different, if the cause of action is the same." B. F. Johnson Pub. Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 97 S. W. 749, 750 (quoting Anderson v. Barry, 2 J. J. Marsh. [25 Ky.] 265; Commonwealth v. Churchill, 5 Mass. 174).

Other actionable injury

Code Civ. Proc. § 549, authorizes the arrest of defendant in an action for damages for "personal injury." By section 3343, subd. 1, "personal injury" is defined as including assault, battery, false imprisonment, or "other actionable injury to the person." Held, that the words "other actionable injury to the person" mean other actions like to assault, or, in other words, an action in which defendant was himself at fault, and hence the statute does not authorize the arrest of defendant in an action for negligence or assault where the act causing the injury was that of his servant, but which is imputed to be his act, though not authorized by him. Dauids v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 220, 222, 45 Misc. Rep. 208.

Other acts

The "other act" referred to in B. & O. Comp. § 549, subd. 4, providing that, where a party in good faith gives due notice of an appeal, and thereafter omits, through mistake, to do any other act necessary to perfect the appeal, the court may permit an amendment or performance of such act, is the filing of an undertaking on appeal, an omission to do which through mistake may be supplied on application therefor. Hanley v. Stewart, 102 Pac. 2, 54 Or. 38.

Other agent

Rev. St. 1898, § 2948, as amended by Laws 1899, c. 51, p. 74, and Laws 1905, c. 105, p. 126 providing that service of summons on a foreign corporation must be by delivering a copy to an officer "or other agent having the management, direction or control of any property of such corporation," does not authorize service on a person unconnected with the business for which the corporation was organized, and not having under his control any property, related to such business, but who, while temporarily in the state on his own business, is intrusted by the vice president of a foreign corporation with a bill for collection. The phrase "other agent" must be given a restricted meaning, and must be held to mean a person who is in some way connected with the business of the corporation for which it was created, or has under his control any property in some way related with such business. In other words, the "other agent" must possess some of the powers possessed by the persons named immediately preceding the phrase "or other agent." Honerine Min. & Mill Co. v. Tollerday Steel Pipe & Tank Co., 88 Pac. 9, 11, 31 Utah, 326.

Other amusements

As used in Pen. Code 1895, art. 199, prohibiting merchants, grocers, or traders in any business whatsoever, or the proprietor of any public place of amusement, to barter or permit his place of business or of public amusement to be opened on Sunday, and further providing that the term public amusement shall be construed to mean circuses, theaters, and such "other amusements" for which admission fee is charged, the phrase "other amusements" refers to amusements of like or similar character of those expressly named in the statute, and does not include the game of baseball. Ex parte Roquemore, 131 S. W. 1101, 1103, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 282, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186. And, while a moving picture show is not a theater, it falls within the prohibition of the statute as one of "such other amusements" prohibited. Ex parte Lingenfelter, 142 S. W. 555, 557, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 30.

In Code Ann. St. 1903, § 8653, conferring power to license, tax, suppress, regulate and prohibit, theatrical and other exhibitions and shows, and "other amusements," the words "other amusements" must be construed in the light of the purpose of the section and must be limited to amusements of the kind and character named in the section. They could not be extended to include private amusements which are in themselves harmless, and therefore an ordinance prohibiting the keeping of card tables for sale in a place of business or making it unlawful to permit card playing in and under all circumstances in places of business, or adjacent thereto, is unauthorized. Ex parte Sapp, 113 N. W. 261, 79 Neb. 781, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 441.

Other animal

The words "or other animal," in New York Sanitary Code, § 195, providing that no person owning a stable or other premises shall keep therein any dog or other animal which shall by noise disturb any person in the vicinity, applies to animals ejusdem generis, and does not apply to horses kept in stables. People v. Edelstein, 86 N. Y. Supp. 861, 91 App. Div. 447.

The words "other animals," as used in a contract for the shipment of live stock that the value for which the carrier should be liable in case of loss should not exceed for a horse or mule $100, cattle $30 each, other animals at $5 each, include hogs. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stone & Haslett, 79 S. W. 1031, 1038, 112 Tenn. 348, 105 Am. St. Rep. 955.

Under Laws 1905, p. 113, § 15, subd. 15, authorizing cities and villages to pass ordinances regulating the running at large of cattle, hogs, mules, sheep, goats, dogs, and other animals, they may pass ordinances to prevent the running at large of horses within the corporate limits; the phrase "other animals" being broad enough to include horses and all other animals. Best v. Broadhead, 108 Pac. 333, 335, 18 Idaho, 11.

Other articles

Gelatin spangles strung on cord, and used in making trimmings or ornaments for wearing apparel, are ejusdem generis with the articles enumerated in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, providing for "ornaments, trimmings and other articles" composed of gelatin spangles, and are dutiable under that provision, rather than under paragraph 450 (30 Stat. 193) relating to "manufactures of * * * gelatin." G. Hirsch's Sons v. United States, 141 Fed. 380, 381; Hirsch v. United States, 145 Fed. 1022, 74 C. C. A. 681.

In Rev. Laws Mass. c. 198, § 14, which gives a lien on a vessel for money due for "provisions, stores, or other articles furnished for or on account of such vessel" by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the owner, the words "other articles" include only such articles in the nature of provisions and stores as might be necessities for the vessel in the sense of the maritime law. The Satellite, 188 Fed. 717, 719.

Bead fringes, which consist of beads strung on a cord or webbing and are used to decorate lamps as trimmings and shades, are not removed by the doctrine of ejusdem generis from the provision for "ornaments, trimmings, and other articles * * * in part of beads," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189. Holcomb & Co. v. United States, 180 Fed. 795, 796.

"Spangled hat crowns" are, in a general way, of the same character as the class of materials considered under the provision in the Tariff Act for fabrics, wearing apparel, trimmings, etc., including "other articles * * * composed wholly or in part" of gelatin spangles, and are dutiable under said provision for "articles," rather than as manufactures of gelatin. Louis Metzger & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 381, 382.

Other bailee

The statute defining the crime of embezzlement by "any carrier or other bailee" is not confined to bailees of the class "carriers," but embraces all bailees. Faggard v. State, 104 Pac. 930, 931, 3 Okl. Cr. 159.

The word "bailee," used in its broad sense, includes every person to whom the possession of personal property is delivered by another. The words "other bailee," as used in Pen. Code Ga. 1895, § 191, providing that any factor, commission merchant, warehouse keeper, etc., or any "other bailee," who shall fraudulently convert anything of value intrusted to him, shall be guilty of a felony, are equivalent to the words "other like bailee," and it is necessary that the character of the relation be a more fiduciary one than that arising from a mere loan for the benefit of the borrower. Rice v. State, 64 S. E. 575, 6 Ga. App. 160 (citing Sanders v. State, 12 S. E. 1058, 86 Ga. 718; Cody v. State, 28 S. E. 106, 100 Ga. 109).

A person hiring a horse and buggy from the owner for one day contracts to return the property at the end of such period, and is a "bailee" within Kirby's Dig. § 1839, providing that any carrier or other bailee who shall embezzle or convert to his own use property in his possession as bailee shall be guilty of larceny; the term "bailee" in that section not being limited by the rule of ejusdem generis to bailees of the generic class of carriers, but embracing all bailees. Tally v. State, 150 S. W. 110, 111, 105 Ark. 28.

Other banking game

Slot machines where the chances are unequal, with the chances in favor of the machine, are "other banking games" within Laws 1907, p. 25, c. 64, § 1, making it unlawful to operate any banking games of chance such as faro, monte, etc., or any other banking games. Territory v. Jones, 99 Pac. 333, 342, 14 N. M. 579, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229, 20 Ann. Cas. 128.

Other borate material

The enumeration in paragraph 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 152, of "other borate material," refers only to borate materials found in nature in a raw condition, such as the "borates of lime or soda" included in the same provision, and does not embrace borate of manganese or bormangan, which is a manufactured article made from manganese and borates of lime or soda, and which is held to be dutiable as a chemical compound or salt under paragraph 3 of said act, § 1, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151. Hempstead v. Thomas, 129 Fed. 907, 908, 64 C. C. A. 339.

Other building

An awning in front of a building extending 13 feet from the house line to the curb supported by five posts and covered with a roof of transparent glass, is not covered by the words "dwelling house or other building" in a deed providing that the front line of any messuages, dwelling houses, or other buildings shall recede eight feet from the street line. Olcott v. Sheppard, Knapp & Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 201, 202, 96 App. Div. 281.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3541, subd. 4, authorizes municipal corporations to direct the location of tallow chandleries, soap factories, and other buildings and to prohibit the erection of such buildings, or the continuance of noxious trades therein. Subdivision 11 authorizes such corporations to direct the location of markets or slaughterhouses, and to regulate the same, and gives them jurisdiction for that purpose for two miles in all directions from the city limits. Held, that the express mention of slaughterhouses in subdivision 11 precludes the extension of the power of prohibition contained in subdivision 4, so as to include slaughterhouses within the general designation of "other buildings and structures." City of Elkhart v. Lipschitz, 74 N. E. 528, 529, 164 Ind. 671.

The phrase "wharf or place of storage, or in any warehouse, mill, store or other building," in Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 88, § 124, providing that whoever fraudulently utters any receipt or other written evidence of the delivery or deposit of any grain, flour, pork, etc., on any wharf or place of storage, or in any warehouse, mill, store or other building, when the quantity specified has not in fact been delivered or deposited, shall be imprisoned, do not limit the operation of the section, or of section 125, providing that whoever, having given any such receipt, shall sell or in any manner remove from the place of storage any such property, without the consent of the holder of the receipt, shall be imprisoned, to buildings alone in which goods are received in store for hire, but the words extend to all buildings in which goods are stored, whether for hire or otherwise, and hence one who, being the owner of an elevator, and having issued a receipt for grain therein also owned by him, thereafter removed the same without the consent of the holder, violated section 125. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 947, 230 Ill. 623.

Other cases

Rev. St. 1899, § 2932, provides that no petition for review of any judgment for divorce shall be allowed, but there may be review of any order or judgment touching the alimony and maintenance of the wife, and the care, custody, and maintenance of the children, or any of them, as in "other cases." Held, that the phrase "as in other cases" refers to a petition for review, the sole matter with which the section is concerned, and not to a writ of error, and the section means that there shall not be a petition for review of a divorce judgment, but may be a petition for review of the alimony and custody of children, as in ordinary cases where the petition may be had under sections 777-783. Elliott v. Elliott, 115 S. W. 486, 487, 135 Mo. App. 42.

Other casualty

"Other" is frequently used in an unrestricted sense—not limited by the rule ejusdem generis." As used in McClain's Code, § 1685, authorizing domestic insurance companies to insure houses, buildings and all other kinds of property against loss or damage by fire or other casualty, the words "other casualty" include other risks than those already mentioned in the specific reference to loss or damage by fire. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Council Bluffs, 108 N. W. 1046, 1048, 131 Iowa, 456 (citing Flower v. Witkovsky, 37 N. W. 864, 69 Mich. 371; People v. Stone [N. Y.] 9 Wend. 182; Hall v. State, 4 N. W. 1068, 48 Wis. 689).

Other causes

The words "other causes," as used in a contract of sale of a specified number of cars daily of furnace coke during a specified period of time, subject to strikes, accidents, or other causes, relate to shortage of cars, and hence a shortage of cars is a legal excuse for nondelivery. Hatfield v. Thomas Iron Co., 57 Atl. 950, 953, 208 Pa. 478.

Defendant contracted to use natural gas from plaintiffs' wells for a specified time at specified prices, the contract providing that, if by reason of fire, explosion, or other cause defendant's factory should be closed down, plaintiffs might during the time dispose of gas elsewhere, and, if the nonuse extended over a month, plaintiffs should have the right to cancel the contract. Held, that the words "other cause," following "fire and explosion," should be construed to mean other cause similar to fire or explosion under the rule of ejusdem generis, and did not therefore entitle defendant to shut down his factory for any cause whatsoever without a liability for breach of such contract. Hickman v. Cabot, 183 Fed. 747, 749, 106 C. C. A. 183.

Const. Ky. § 192, provides that a corporation shall not hold any real estate except such as may be necessary for carrying on its legitimate business, for a longer period than five years, under penalty of escheat. Ky. St. 1903, § 567, contains the same provisions. Ky. St. 1903, § 2971, being a part of the laws relating to the government of cities of the first class, provides that so much real, personal, or mixed property in the city which, from alienage, defect of heirs, failure of kindred, or other causes, shall escheat to the commonwealth shall vest in the board for the benefit of the schools, and that the board may, in the name of the commonwealth, sue for and recover the same. Held, that the Legislature intended by the use of the words "other causes" in section 2971 to provide for the recovery of escheats by school boards happening upon events of a different class than those specifically mentioned in the section, hence the board might sue to recover land escheated by a corporation under Const. § 192, and Ky. St. 1903, § 567. Commonwealth, for Use of Louisville School Board, v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 99 S. W. 596, 599, 124 Ky. 497.

While the extent of indulgence by a court in allowing supplemental affidavits of defense is largely in its discretion, such indulgence cannot be extended after a case has been finally passed upon by an appellate court, except for legal or equitable reasons of which defendant could not have availed himself when his original affidavit of defense was filed, and under Act March 18, 1874 (P. L. 64), providing that judgment should be entered for plaintiff where the refusal of judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense has been reversed by the appellate court, unless "other legal or equitable causes" shall be shown, means a defense which did not exist when the affidavit of defense was filed, and, where an original affidavit of defense setting forth that an assignment sued upon was void as contravening the federal bankruptcy law was held good by the lower court, but upon appeal was held insufficient, a supplemental affidavit setting up that the assignment was void under the state assignment acts of March 24, 1818 (P. L. 285), and April 17, 1843 (P. L. 273), could not be filed after return of the record and motion by plaintiffs for judgment. Wood v. Kerkeslager, 76 Atl. 425, 426, 227 Pa. 536; Third Nat. Bank v. Same, 76 Atl. 427, 227 Pa. 542.

Other children

In a statute providing that a wife shall be entitled to one-half of the estate of her deceased husband "if there was no 'other' heirs, and an heir's part if there should be 'other' heirs, in all cases where there is no will," the word "heirs" is used in the sense of "children," and the use of the word "other" before "children" was intended to include grandchildren or descendants of any child living at the death of the intestate. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 640, 20 Okl. 687.

Other circumstances

The "other circumstances" referred to in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 872, 882, requiring that the affidavit to take the testimony of a witness shall show that the witness is about to depart from the state or is sick, or that some other special circumstances exist requiring his examination in advance, means such as will make the presence and evidence of the witness at the trial doubtful and uncertain as bearing on the probability of his future attendance. W. P. Davis Mach. Co. v. Robinson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 42 Misc. Rep. 52.

Where plaintiff and defendant's testator arrived at a settlement as to their controversy and as to certain claims by plaintiff against the testator, and the latter made provision for plaintiff in his last will, and agreed never to revoke or modify the will, so as to defeat plaintiff's rights therein, and plaintiff agreed that upon faithful execution by the testator of the covenants to be performed by him she would release him "from all other and further claims, demands, and causes of action of every kind," and that thereupon she would take "no action at law or in equity to enforce any such other or further claim," the word "other," in such a contract, plaintiff having but one claim against the testator, must be taken in the sense of "additional," so that the meaning would be that, upon the transfer to plaintiff of the portion of the estate devised to her by the will, she would take such portion in full payment of her claim, and make no further or additional claim on the same indebtedness or cause of action. Colt v. O'Connor, 109 N. Y. Supp. 689, 694, 59 Misc. Rep. 83.

Other compensation

The words "other compensation," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 24, § 86, providing that if the salary, fees, or other compensation of certain city officers has been once fixed, such fees or compensation shall not be increased or diminished, to take effect during the term for which any such officer was elected or appointed, is broad enough to include allowances made for the payment of assistants and office expenses. City of Chicago v. Wolf, 77 N. E. 414-418, 221 Ill. 130.

Other corporations

Const. 1901, § 235, providing that municipal and other corporations invested with the power of eminent domain shall make compensation for property taken, "injured," or destroyed by the construction of their works, highways, or improvements, includes within the term "other corporations" counties, so as to make a county liable for damages to premises due to a change in the grade of a road, whereby the premises were left at a considerable distance above the road on a perpendicular embankment. Dallas County v. Dillard, 47 South. 135, 136, 156 Ala. 354, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884.

Other country

The Philippine Islands are not "another country" within the meaning of article 8 of the Cuban Treaty, providing that the rates therein granted shall continue preferential in respect to like imports from "other countries." Faber v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 659, 660, 221 U. S. 649, 55 L. Ed. 897.

Other county buildings

Shannon's Code, § 6045, subsec. 11, authorizes the expenditure of the general fund of a county by the county judge for building, repairing, and taking care of courthouses, jails, and "other county buildings." Held, that the words "other county buildings," as so used, under the rule of ejusdem generis, meant county buildings of the same nature and kind as courthouses and jails, and did not include schoolhouses and buildings used for school purposes. State ex rel. Davidson County Board of Education v. Pollard, 136 S. W. 427, 429, 430, 124 Tenn. 127.

Ky. St. 1903, § 3948, provides that the "jailer of each county shall be superintendent of the public square, courthouse, clerk's of-face, jail, stray-pen and other public county buildings at the seat of justice." Section 356 requires the jailer to furnish fuel, lights, and water to the circuit court rooms, and allows him $2 a day therefor, to be paid out of the state treasury. Section 1749 provides against the allowance of a fee bill for any ex officio services. Held that the duty and expense of maintaining, lighting, heating, and janitor's service for an armory erected at the seat of justice by the fiscal court at the expense of the county was not intended to be borne by the county jailer; the words "other county buildings" referring only to buildings of the same class as those specifically mentioned in the section. Fiscal Court of Jefferson County v. Pfanz, 104 S. W. 1002, 1003, 127 Ky. 8.

Other court

Const. art. 7, § 1, as amended in 1881, providing that the judicial power of the state should be vested in the Supreme Court, in circuit courts, and in such "other courts" as the General Assembly might establish, authorized the Legislature by Acts 1907, p. 7, c. 5, to create a superior court within a district composed of two counties with the same jurisdiction as circuit courts were then empowered to exercise. Board of Com'rs of Elkhart County v. Albright, 81 N. E. 579, 580, 168 Ind. 564; Mumaw v. Turner, 81 N. E. 721, 169 Ind. 701.

Other crops

The words "other crops," in Sess. Laws 1899, p. 176, c. 17, art. 1, § 5, providing for the insurance of grain in bins and stacks, "growing wheat, rye, barley, flax, oats, and other crops" include growing cotton. State Mut. Ins. Co. v. Clevenger, 87 Pac. 583, 17 Okl. 49.

Other damages

The actual damages from failure to unload a passenger's baggage at the proper station does not constitute "other element of recoverable damages" within the rule that mental suffering, without physical injury or other element of recoverable damages, cannot be made the subject of an independent action, though the act complained of was willful. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moss, 116 S. W. 192, 89 Ark. 187.

Other deadly weapon

"Where a statute, in defining a crime committed by use of weapons, mentions certain weapons 'or other deadly weapon,' it is held that those named in the statute need not be described as deadly weapons; but, if another than those named in the statute is relied upon as coming within the term 'other deadly weapon,' it must be so averred as to bring it within that designation." State v. Splgener, 50 South. 977, 96 Miss. 597 (quoting State v. Taylor, 93 Pac. 252, 50 Or. 449).

A pistol used in striking another is a deadly weapon, within Ky. St. § 1166, providing for the punishment of any one who shall willfully and maliciously "strike" another with a knife, sword, or "other deadly weapon," with intent to kill. Riggs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 33 S. W. 413, 414.

Other defects

A contract for a newly patented machine contained several specific warranties, and after them a general clause which provided that, if there were any "other defects" whatever, the contract should be void. Held, that the words "other defects" referred to defects in the patent and not in the machine itself. Vaughan v. Porter, 16 Vt. 266, 270.

Other defense

The term "or other defense," in Rev. St. 1899, § 4488, declaring that in actions on assigned accounts defendant shall be allowed every just set-off "or other defense" which existed in his favor at the time of his being notified of such assignment, is used in a restrictive sense and must be a defense to the demand itself, not a set-off or counterclaim. Scarritt Estate Co. v. J. F. Schmelzer & Sons Arms Co., 86 S. W. 489, 490, 110 Mo. App. 406.

Other demands

Rev. Code 1852, c. 89, § 25, fixing the order in which executors or administrators shall pay demands against decedent, does not mention taxes, though the last clause provides for payment of "other demands." Held, that though the statute does not mention taxes, in view of the intention to include all legal claims against the estate, taxes will be deemed to come under the class designated "other demands" to be paid after judgments. Dayett v. Willits, 74 Atl. 689, 691, 9 Del. Ch. 424.

Other disability

The nondeclaration of the result of an election for Governor is not a disability of the Governor such as is meant by Const. § 16, art. 7, providing that, in case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or "other disability" of the Governor, the president of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed. It is simply non-action or incomplete action by the agencies of the law assigned to vest the title in the candidate. It is not like insanity. Conviction of the officer for crime, continued absence, or other disability connected with the person of the Governor, death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, or resignation would produce a vacancy, and it would seem that the language "or other disability" means something of a different character from those cases named—something attaching to the person of the Governor and disabling him; and this construction seems confirmed by the after language of the section, providing that "the president of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed," thus using the words "vacancy" and "disability" as meaning different things; "vacancy" referring to death, conviction, failing to qualify, and resignation, but "disability" referring to something relating to the person, and for the time being disabling him, notwithstanding the use of the word "other." Carr v. Wilson, 9 S. E. 31, 35, 82 W. Va. 419, 8 L. R. A. 64.

Other disposition

A will gave testator's granddaughter a life estate, provided on her death the property should be divided among her living children and the heirs of any who should have died, authorized her on the eldest becoming of age to alienate and dispose of the remainder over in favor of such child or children, and empowered her in case she left no children or descendants to dispose of the property by will. A codicil provided in case the granddaughter should die without children or descendants, and making no will or "other disposition of the property," the remainder over should go to testator's nephew by marriage. Held that, by the words "other disposition," the codicil did not recognize a right in the granddaughter to make disposition of the property generally, but only as provided in the will, and so did not change her qualified title to an absolute title. Lichter v. Thiers, 121 N. W. 153, 139 Wis. 481.

Other domestic purposes

The right to cut timber from public mineral lands, subject to mineral entry only, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, given to any bona fide resident of certain states and territories by Act June 3, 1878, c. 150, 20 Stat. 88, extends to all such lands in the state or territory, without limitation to any local subdivision. Under such statute, a resident of Montana, where he observes the regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the protection of undergrowth, etc., may lawfully cut timber for firewood from public mineral lands within the state, and ship the same to any part of the state for sale and use there in households, hoisting works in mines, smelters, or other local purposes, all of which are domestic purposes within the meaning of the statute. United States v. Edgar, 140 Fed. 655, 659.

Other duties

The general words "other duties," in Const. art. 13, § 11, requiring that the board of equalization shall perform such other duties as may be required by law, must be restricted to mean other duties of general character, with duties indicated in the previous provision to be performed by the board. State v. Eldredge, 76 Pac. 337, 340, 27 Utah, 477.

The use of the word "other," in Snyder's Const. p. 203, art. 6, § 31, providing that the board of agriculture shall be the board of regents and shall discharge such "other" duties as may be provided by law, clearly indicates that the framers of the Constitution had in mind that certain duties would follow the creation of the board. Trapp v. Cook Const. Co., 106 Pac. 667, 669, 24 Okl. 350.

Other dwellers

Liquor Tax Law, Laws 1903, p. 1132, c. 486, § 31, subd. "k," defines a hotel as a building regularly kept open for the accommodation of all able to pay for their entertainment and who, without any stipulated engagement as to the duration of their stay, or as to compensation, are supplied with meals, lodging, and attention, and in which the only "other dwellers" are the family and servants of the hotel keeper. Held that, where a building contained rooms of the size and number required by the statute which were kept open and free for the accommodation of transient "guests" who might apply, persons who occupied some of such rooms continuously at a stipulated weekly or monthly rental should be regarded as "guests" and not "other dwellers" within such statute; the words "other dwellers" being limited to persons other than "guests" of any character, to wit, those who are in the hotel under a stipulated engagement or without any engagement. Cullinan v. Clark, 93 N. Y. Supp. 256, 257, 46 Misc. Rep. 188.

Other employés

Under subdivision 7, § 1617, Pol. Code authorizing boards of education and trustees of school districts to employ teachers "also to employ janitors and other employés of the schools, and to fix and order paid their compensation," the words "janitors and other employés of the schools" refer to persons employed in and about the schools and buildings, in the actual carrying out and maintenance of the schools themselves, and cannot by any reasonable construction be held to include a person rendering legal services to the board of education or board of trustees. Denman v. Webster, 73 Pac. 133, 139 Cal. 452.

Other employment

By "other employment," as used in the rule making it the duty of a servant discharged in violation of a contract of hiring to seek "other employment," is meant employment of a character such as that in which he was employed, or not of a more menial kind. Cooper v. Stronge & Warner Co., 126 N. W. 541, 111 Minn. 177, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011, 20 Ann. Cas. 663.

Other entertainment

Greater New York Charter, Laws 1895, p. 522, c. 378, § 1481, after prohibiting certain specified amusements on Sunday, prohibited "any other entertainment of the stage." Held, that the word "other" as so used was unrestrictedly comprehensive and embraced every other sort or kind of entertainment whether ejusdem generis with the class enumerated or not. In re Hammerstein, 108 N. Y. Supp. 197, 198, 57 Misc. Rep. 52.

Other equivalent circumstances

The law does not require the "other equivalent circumstances" referred to in Pen. Code 1895, § 65, making it a necessary element of voluntary manslaughter that there be an assault upon the person killing, or an attempt to commit a serious personal injury, or other equivalent circumstances to justify the excitement of passion and to exclude all idea of deliberation or malice, to be in the nature of an assault, or an attempt to commit a serious personal injury; but the circumstances referred to must be such as would as much exclude all doubt of deliberation or malice and justify the excitement of passion as would an assault, or attempt to commit a serious personal injury. Battle v. State, 65 S. E. 382, 384, 133 Ga. 182.

Where there was evidence that the deceased had been guilty of frequent sexual intercourse with the wife of the accused, and knowledge of that fact had been brought home to the accused before the killing, and after such knowledge the accused came upon the deceased, and, in a conversation with him in reference to the illicit relations, the passions of the accused were aroused, it was a question for the jury to determine whether the sight of the deceased and the conversation which then ensued constituted "other equivalent circumstances to justify the excitement of passion, and to exclude all idea of deliberation or malice, either express or implied"; and a charge to the effect that if the jury believed that the circumstances at that time were such as to arouse in the mind of accused that passion supposed to be irresistible, and he shot and killed under those circumstances, it would not be murder, but voluntary manslaughter, is substantially a correct statement of the law. The law does not require the "other equivalent circumstances," referred to in section 65, Pen. Code 1910, to be in the nature of an assault, or an attempt to commit a serious personal injury, by the deceased; but the circumstances therein referred to must be, in the opinion of the jury, the equivalent of an assault, or of an attempt to commit a serious personal injury on the slayer, in justifying the excitement of passion and excluding all idea of deliberation or malice. Land v. State, 78 S. E. 78, 11 Ga. App. 761 (citing Battle v. State, 65 S. E. 382, 133 Ga. 185).

Other estate

A judgment creditor expressly released his lien on certain described real estate of his debtor that it might be conveyed to a mortgagee, the debtor having a right to reconveyance on payment of the mortgage debt at any time before the property should be sold by the mortgagee. The release, however, provided that it should not affect the creditors' lien on the other estate of the debtor. Held, that on a sale of the property free from liens by the mortgagee and the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy, realizing a sum more than sufficient to pay the mortgage debt, such surplus did not constitute "other estate" within the meaning of the release, and that the judgment creditor had no claim thereto. In re Cullen, 178 Fed. 463, 464.

Other evidence

A disclosure or statement by the complainant, which depends wholly upon her veracity, is not "other evidence" in support of her version of the affair, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 283, providing that no conviction can be had for abduction, compulsory marriage, rape, or defilement, upon the testimony of the female abducted, compelled, or defiled, unsupported by "other evidence." People v. Green, 92 N. Y. Supp. 508, 511, 103 App. Div. 79 (citing People v. Page, 58 N. E. 750, 162 N. Y. 272).

Books of account, which being shown to conform to the requirements of Comp. Laws 1897, § 3031, are admissible in evidence, when so admitted in a suit against an administrator, may constitute "other material evidence," corroborating the claimant as required by section 3021. Radcliffe v. Chavez, 110 Pac. 699, 701, 15 N. M. 258.

Other evidence of indebtedness

See, also, Evidence of Indebtedness.

The warehouse receipts authorized to be issued under the State Warehouse Act (Laws 1912, p. 707) are not "scrip, certificates or other evidence of state indebtedness" within the meaning of Const. art. 10, § 7, restricting the issuance of such paper. State ex rel. Lyon v. McCown, 75 S. E. 392, 396, 92 S. O. 81.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2408, provides that it shall be unlawful for any public officer either directly or indirectly to buy, barter for, or otherwise engage in any manner in the purchase of any bonds, warrants, or any other evidence of indebtedness against the territory, any subdivision thereof, or municipality therein, of which he is an officer. Held, that the words "other evidence of indebtedness," under the rule ejusdem generis, applies only to bonds, warrants, and other evidence of indebtedness of that character, and did not prevent a county commissioner from advancing, on the credit of the county, money with which to employ a chain bearer in the survey of a road. Ticer v. State ex rel. Holt, 128 Pac. 493, 496, 35 Okl. 1.

Public Service Commissions Law (Laws 1907, c. 429) § 55, provides that any railroad corporation may issue stock, bonds, notes, or other evidence of indebtedness, payable at periods of more than 12 months after date, when necessary for certain enumerated purposes, provided it shall secure from the Pub-the Service Commission an order authorizing such issue. The vice presidents of several railroad companies calling themselves in combination the "New York Central Lines," parties of the first part, entered into an agreement with a trust company, designated as trustee, and the six railroad companies designated as parties of the third part, by which the parties of the first part sold certain rolling stock to the trust company, and the trust company rented the same to the several railroad companies; such companies issuing certificates to the trust company to the amount of the purchase price of the equipment, payable in installments, and denominated as rent. The trust company was not to be liable on the certificates in any event. Held that, while the words "other evidence of indebtedness" as used in the statute refer to obligations of like character with stock, bonds, and notes, the trust certificates were substantially obligations of that character, and hence the issuance of the same must be sanctioned by the Public Service Commission. People v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 125, 127, 138 App. Div. 601.

Other exhibition

Where, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5049, subd. 23, imposing a license tax on "circuses and other exhibitions," a Wild West show is not a circus, it cannot be held as "another exhibition," as, in construing laws imposing burdens of taxation, nothing should be left to inference. State v. Cody (Tex.) 120 S. W. 267, 269.

Other expenses

Charter of the City of St. Louis, art. 5, § 14, provides that no money shall be expended except by ordinance, the provisions of which shall be specific and definite. An appropriation ordinance provided for "publishing proceedings, printing, stationery, office expenses, furniture, rent of telephone and other expenses of house of delegates." Held, that the term "other expenses" means expenses of the character theretofore mentioned in that clause of the appropriation act, and does not include an appropriation for expenses incurred by a committee appointed by a resolution of the house of delegates to investigate tax returns. State ex rel. Gavigan v. Dierkes, 113 S. W. 1077, 1081, 214 Mo. 578; State ex rel. Barrett v. Same, 113 S. W. 1081, 214 Mo. 582.

Ky. St. 1909, § 4464, provides for an election upon the question of levying a tax to maintain a graded common school and for erecting or repairing suitable buildings therefor, if necessary. Section 4481 (section 5758) makes it the duty of the district trustees to provide funds for purchasing suitable buildings, or for erecting or repairing them, and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school, and permits them to use such part of the proceeds of the tax as they may deem necessary. Held, that the phrase "and for other expenses needful in conducting a good graded common school" implies the power to rent a suitable building temporarily and until one can be secured or built by the trustees, and a petition for the election, reciting that the proposed tax was to be used for the purpose of maintaining a graded common school and for the erecting, purchasing, leasing, and repairing of suitable buildings therefor if necessary, was no more than the two sections of the statute authorized, meaning that the trustees were to buy a building if they could, and, if not, to buy a lot and build a house, to repair any building bought or built by them, and in the meantime, to lease a suitable building for the continuation of the school, and did not render the petition insufficient. Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School, 122 S. W. 813, 817, 135 Ky. 488.

Blasting powder, although it may be a less dangerous explosive than dynamite or gunpowder, is none the less included in the words, "or other explosives," as used in a condition avoiding a policy of fire insurance if there be kept, used, or allowed on the premises, benzine, benzole, dynamite, ether, fireworks, gasoline, Greek fire, gunpowder, naphtha, nitroglycerin, or other explosives. Penman v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 30 Sup. Ct. 312, 313, 216 U. S. 311, 54 L. Ed. 493.

A provision of a fire insurance policy, making it void if, without permission endorsed thereon, there should be kept or allowed on the insured premises "benzine, benzole, dynamite, ether, fireworks, gasoline, Greek fire, gunpowder exceeding twenty-five pounds in quantity, naphtha, nitroglycerin or other explosives, phosphorus or petroleum or any of its products of greater inflammability than kerosene oil of the United States standard," must be construed to include blasting powder by the words "other explosives," in the absence of evidence showing that it is of less explosive force than any one of the substances enumerated, and therefore not in the same class. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Penman, 151 Fed. 961, 963, 81 C. C. A. 151.

Other gambling device, bank, table, or machine

It was held in Commonwealth v. Kallmer (Ky.) 13 S. W. 108, under a statute providing that "whoever . . . shall set up, carry on or conduct . . . a new bank, faro bank, or other machine or contrivance used in betting," etc., "shall be fined," etc., that "oontz," which is played with dice on a table or other surface, was not within the meaning of "other machine or contrivance." White v. State, 76 N. E. 551, 555, 37 Ind. App. 95.

Other good and valuable consideration

Where an instrument of advice had a consideration of $1 and other good and valuable consideration, the term "other good and valuable consideration" means nothing, and would be given no weight in the absence of evidence explaining the nature and character of that consideration. Where K. takes deed from M. to all his interest in a mining claim, which is all the property of M. in this state, for a consideration of $1, and other good and valuable consideration, the latter consideration is not explained, and at the time of such transfer K. has notice that his grantor is heavily indebted in this state, and has avoided personal service process, and has allowed a judgment in an action entered against him for over $50,000, and has been trying to buy up such claims for one-fifth their face value, and that he is not meeting his obligations in due course of business, and that he has no other property in the state out of which such indebtedness can be made, and during the meanwhile K. has occupied a close confidential relation with M., under such circumstances, held, that K. cannot restrain an execution sale of such property to pay creditors on the theory that he is an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration. California Consol. Min. Co. v. Manley, 81 Pac. 50-52, 10 Idaho, 786.

Other good material

Vitrified brick is "other good material," within Acts 1904, p. 225, c. 225, § 4, providing that the specifications of material to be used in the construction of public roads shall require the construction "of a macadamized or a telford or of other stone, or of a road constructed of gravel or of other good material." Anne Arundel County Com'rs v. United Ry. & Electric Co., 72 Atl. 542, 547, 39 Md. 377.

Other goods of same owner

Laws 1902, p. 1776, c. 608, § 2, gives a warehouseman a lien on goods stored for storage charges, etc., on such goods or "other goods belonging to the same owner." Held, that the words "other goods belonging to the same owner" should be restricted to actual, as distinguished from apparent, ownership due to possession, so that where selling agents, in possession of goods belonging to plaintiffs, stored the goods with other goods belonging to such agents, the warehouseman was not entitled to a lien on plaintiffs' goods for the storage charges on the goods belonging to the agents. Schwab v. Matman, 106 N. Y. Supp. 741, 747, 56 Misc. Rep. 393.

Other governing authority

The words "or other governing authority," used in Const. art. 290, in designating the authority whose consent would have to be obtained by riparian owners desiring to build wharves on their front, refer not necessarily to town councils which, in certain communities, are designated by other names, but to whatever body or functionary is vested by the Legislature with authority over the river front at the time the consent is solicited. State ex rel. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Com'rs of Orleans Levee Dist., 33 South. 385, 396, 109 La. 403.

Other grievances

A lease limiting the liability of the tenant respecting orders of a city department to those issued for the correction, prevention, and abatement of "nuisances" or "other grievances" does not render the tenant liable for the cost of a fire escape, as the words are to be taken in their natural and usual sense. The absence of a fire escape is not a "nuisance," as that word is commonly used, and the more generic words "other grievances" do not extend the plaintiff's liability so far as to render him liable for the cost of the fire escape. Kalman v. Cox, 92 N. Y. Supp. 816, 46 Misc. Rep. 589.

Other indebtedness

The Legislature, in 1900, after having made specific appropriation for payment of interest for the ensuing two years on certain designated debts of the state, appropriated a specific sum for each of the years 1900 and 1901 for the payment of interest on "other state indebtedness." Held, that such "other state indebtedness" included state bonds issued as provided by Acts 1896, p. 27, c. 34, and disclosed a legislative intention that such bonds should remain outstanding and interest-bearing for the whole of the year 1901. Colbert v. State, 39 South. 65, 66, 86 Miss. 769.

A provision of the articles of incorporation that a building and loan association shall have a lien upon the shares of each shareholder for any sum due it for subscription, money loaned, or any "other indebtedness due from the shareholder" did not give a lien for the amount of defalcation upon stock held by a defaulting officer; the phrase quoted having reference only to indebtedness as a shareholder. Jewell v. Nuhn (Iowa) 138 N. W. 457, 458.

Other industry

A cotton gin is embraced within the term "other industry," as used in Const. art. 9, § 33, which provides that any person owning or operating a coal, lead, iron, or zinc mine, or any sawmill, grain elevator, or other industry, when the Corporation Commission shall reasonably determine that the amount of business is sufficient to justify it, near or within a reasonable distance of any railroad, may, at the expense of such person, build and keep in repair a switch leading from the railroad to such mine, etc., or other industry, the railroad being required to furnish the switch stand and frog and other necessary materials for making connections with the side track. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Zalon-dek, 115 Pac. 867, 869, 28 Okl. 748.

Other intoxicating liquors

The phrase "other intoxicating liquors," in Laws 1906, p. 86, c. 21, using the words, "spirituous, vinous, malt or 'other intoxicating liquors'" in reference to local option elections, does not add anything to the legal effect of the statute, and the act is equivalent to Const. § 61, and Ky. St. 1903, § 2554, relating to local option elections, and using the words, "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors." O'Neal v. Minary, 101 S. W. 951, 954, 125 Ky. 571.

Other judicial officers

Const. art. 6, enumerates various judicial officers, including judges of the Court of Appeals, justices of the Supreme Court, county judges, surrogates, and justices of the peace, and authorizes the election of district court justices and the establishment of inferior local courts, and section 11 authorizes the removal of judges of the Court of Appeals and Supreme Court justices by concurrent resolution of both legislative houses, and provides that "all other judicial officers except justices of the peace and judges or justices of inferior courts not of record may be removed by the Senate," on the Governor's recommendation, for cause and after hearing. Held, that the Court of Claims was not included within the words "all other judicial officers"; they referring to judicial officers expressly named in the Constitution or those which it authorized the Legislature to create, so that the judges of that court could be removed summarily without hearing by the abolition of their offices. People ex rel. Swift v. Luce, 133 N. Y. Supp. 9, 15, 74 Misc. Rep. 551.

Other lands

The phrase "owner of other lands," used in Rev. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218ff, permitting owners of other lands contiguous to school lands, or within a radius of five miles thereof, to buy such school lands, which article is a part of the act of 1897 which permitted a settler to buy four sections of school land in all, provided not more than two were classed as agricultural lands, does not include the owner of a lot or lots in town, but applies only to persons engaged in agricultural or stock raising pursuits. Conn v. Terrell, 80 S. W. 608, 609, 97 Tex. 578.

A testator executed his will in 1885, which was probated in 1896. The substance of so much of the instrument as is here material was: Separate parcels of described realty were devised, respectively, to the three daughters of the testator, Lavinia, Josephine, and Emma, and to his son George, in items 1, 3, 5, and 8. Each of such devises was for and during the life of the devisee, with remainder to the child or children of the respective devisee living at the time of the death of the devisee. In item 6 certain other described realty was devised to Josephine, and to Emma, "in trust for Lucinda V. * * * said Josephine * * * to have and to hold the property in this item bequeathed to her for and during her natural life, and at her death to her children living at the time of her death. And the said Emma * * * to have and to hold the property in this item bequeathed to her as trustee for my daughter, said Lucinda V. * * * in trust for the use, benefit and behoof of the said Lucinda V., * * * for and during her natural life, and at her death to her children living at the time of her death." In item 7 certain other described realty was devised to Emma, in trust "to and for my daughter said Lucinda V., * * * for and during her natural life, then to vest in and become the property of the children of the said Lucinda V. * * * living at her death." Item 10 was as follows: "I give, devise and bequeath to my said daughter Lavinia, * * * Josephine, * * * Emma, * * * in trust for Lucinda V., * * * Emma, * * * and to my son George, * * * all my other lands not hereinbefore disposed of, of which I may die seised and possessed, for and during their natural lives, and at their deaths to their respective children living at the time of their death, to be divided among my said children, share and share alike. Item 18 was as follows: "Having fully provided for my deceased daughter Roxy Ann, * * * in her lifetime, and having advanced to her in lands and money a portion equal to the share given to each of my said children in this will, I make no provision or bequest to her children." The testator died seised and possessed in fee of other lands than those specifically devised in items 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the will, which others were subject to the provisions of item 10, and which, after the death of the testator, were partitioned in kind among the children of the testator, named in item 10 of the will. Lucinda V. subsequently died unmarried and without children. Held, item 10, in which was devised only all "other lands" of which the testator might die seised and possessed "not hereinbefore disposed of," did not purport to dispose of, nor dispose of, any of the lands previously devised to Lucinda V. in items 6 and 7, nor any reversionary interest therein. Lane v. Patterson, 78 S. E. 47, 138 Ga. 710.

Act April 28, 1876 (P. L. 53), providing that members of beneficial associations shall not be individually liable for the payment of periodical or funeral benefits or other liabilities of the association, and the sums shall be payable out of the treasury, by the words "other liabilities" means all liabilities properly chargeable to the treasury of the society, and contemplates obligations in addition to funeral expenses or death benefits. Wolfe v. Limestone Council No. 373, Order of Independent Americans, 82 Atl. 499, 501, 233 Pa. 357.

Other lawful expenses

Obligors in a bond given by them to a third person at the request, for the benefit of, and on the agreement of defendant and others to be responsible for their share, executed a declaration of trust reciting that the obligors held land in trust for defendant and the other beneficiaries, and that on demand each of the beneficiaries would pay his proportion of any interest charged, taxes, assessments, or "other lawful expense of said trust." Held, that the quoted words in the declaration of trust included any sum paid by the obligors on the bond, if paid in good faith, pursuant to a reasonable settlement of their liability thereon. Cunniff v. McDonell, 81 N. E. 879, 880, 196 Mass. 7.

Other lien

The holder of an invalid tax deed in possession of the real estate brought an action to quiet his title. The tax deed was held void as a muniment of title, but the lien of the taxes was preserved, and the land was ordered sold and was sold to satisfy it. Held, the redemption act (chapter 109, p. 188, Laws 1893), which provides that the act shall apply to all sales under foreclosure of mortgage, mechanics' lien, or "other lien," whether special or general, has no application to such a sale, and neither the defendant owner nor the holder of a mortgage lien has any right to redeem therefrom. The "other liens," general or special, to which the act makes reference, are those arising from obligations created in or connected with dealings between private parties. Davidson v. Plummer, 92 Pac. 705, 706, 76 Kan. 462.

The operation of Const. art. 5, § 15, declaring that the annual assessment for taxes made on landed property shall be a special lien thereon, and that the land shall be subject to sale for the payment of taxes and penalties, whereby landed property, whether homestead or not, is subject to a sale for taxes and for penalties accruing on account of a delinquency, is not limited by article 16, § 50, protecting the homestead against forced sale, and providing that no mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien on the homestead shall be valid; the words "other lien" including only such liens as are created by contract by husband and wife. City of San Antonio v. Toepferwein, 133 S. W. 416, 417, 104 Tex. 43.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 28, provides that if a trustee is adjudged chargeable for any personal property subject to mortgage, pledge, or other lien, the court may appoint a receiver and dispose of it, if more can be obtained for it than the claims upon it. Section 29 provides that, if a trustee is adjudged chargeable for any promissory note, or other security for payment of money, or any chose in action upon which execution cannot be levied, the court may appoint a receiver to collect it. Section 30 provides that the trustee may be adjudged trustee for the value of any note, chose in action, etc., which he refuses to deliver to the receiver, pursuant to the court's order. Section 31 requires a trustee adjudged chargeable to retain the sum or article other than that for which a receiver is appointed, for which he is so charged, until demanded of him upon execution issued, or the suit is otherwise terminated, and, by section 32, the proceeds of property in the hands of a receiver, for which the trustee was charged, shall be applied under the court's direction after paying costs, charges, and prior liens, in satisfaction of the judgment, and any surplus shall be paid to defendant. The trustee held a check payable to himself and defendant, who transferred his interest therein to claimant, after service of the writ with claimant's knowledge. Held, that the check held by the trustee was a chose in action, and his possession thereof is aptly described by the term "other lien," used in the statute, even though defendant did not indorse the check to him for collection, so that the trustee was chargeable therefor, and a receiver was properly appointed to collect it. Musgrove v. Goss, 72 Atl. 371, 373, 75 N. H. 208 (citing Mitchell v. Green, 62 N. H. 588, 590).

Other machinery

A policy describing the insured property as a frame building "while occupied as a flour and roller mill," and the fixed and movable machinery, pipes, belting, pulleys, shafting, roller mills, and appurtenances, smut mill and appurtenances, purifiers, blowers, dusters, tools, etc., "and such other machinery not more hazardous as is usual to roller mills" will be held to include machinery used in the manufacture of meal, bran, and other feed products, where not to do so would render the policy void from its execution. Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 109 Pac. 535, 537, 26 Okl. 286.

By "other machinery," in a statute using the term "mill and other machinery," machinery that is appurtenant to the mill proper is meant. Southwest Missouri Light Co. v. Scheurich, 73 S. W. 496, 498, 174 Mo. 235.

Other matter or thing

The general words "or other matter or thing," in Rev. St. § 1782, prohibiting a United States senator from receiving compensation for rendering services to any person in relation to any proceeding, contract, etc., or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, were intended to cover kindred subjects, like preliminary examinations and inquiries necessary to enable the government, acting through one of its departments, to determine whether a proceeding should be instituted, a charge or accusation made or an arrest ordered, or whether a contract or claim should be made. United States v. Burton, 131 Fed. 552, 556.

An order appointing an attorney to act for the county attorney in a case before the grand jury wherein the county attorney was under disability by reason of interest, and also to act as county attorney in "another matter," and fixing the compensation, was invalid, as it would be assumed that the payment included services in "another matter" which was beyond the court's jurisdiction. State v. Miller, 100 N. W. 1087, 1089, 132 Iowa, 587.

Other means

The phrase "by mechanical or other means," as used in the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person, not licensed, to record or register, by mechanical or other means, bets or wagers on trials of speed, etc., embraces something outside the mechanical class, and covers the registration of such bets by means of the initials or private marks of the parties written on cards. State v. Villines, 81 S. W. 212, 213, 107 Mo. App. 593.

The words "other means," as used in Gen. St. Kan. 1901, § 1249, cl. 23, enumerating some of the purposes for which corporations may be formed, among which being the manufacture and supply of gas or the supply of light or heat to the public by any other means, are broad enough to include natural gas, although when the act was passed the use of natural gas may not have been within the contemplation of the Legislature. Compton v. People's Gas Co., 80 Pac. 1039, 1040, 75 Kan. 572, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

In Comp. Laws, § 504, relating to allowance of alimony pendente lite, and providing that such orders may be enforced and made effectual by attachment, commitment, and by requiring security for obedience thereto, or by "other means according to the usages of courts," the words "other means according to the usages of courts" would not support the authority of the court to order an execution to issue; enforcement of interlocutory orders for payment of money by execution does not appear to be according to the usages of courts and can be resorted to only where the statutes specifically so provide, and the only provision for execution in our civil procedure is after final judgment. Kapp v. Seventh Judicial Dist. Court, 107 Pac. 95, 96, 32 Nev. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 177.

Other mechanical contrivances

See Vehicles and Other Mechanical Contrivances.

Other merchandise

Paragraph 8 of section 2 of the general tax act of 1902 (Acts 1902, p. 21), imposing a special tax upon traveling venders "of patent or proprietary medicines, special nostrums, jewelry, paper, soap, or other merchandise," does not embrace venders of merchandise not ejusdem generis with the articles expressly enumerated. Standard Oil Co. v. Swanson, 49 S. E. 262, 263, 121 Ga. 412.

Other mineral

The words "other minerals" or "other valuable minerals" taken in the broadest sense would include petroleum oil; but, if the parties did not intend that the title to petroleum and gas should pass, the title remains in the owner of the fee. A deed purporting to convey all minerals underlying described land does not convey the natural gas thereunder, where the parties do not contemplate a conveyance thereof. McKinney's Heirs v. Central Kentucky Natural Gas Co., 120 S. W. 314, 315, 134 Ky. 239, 20 Ann. Cas. 934 (quoting and adopting definition in Donahue, Petroleum & Gas, p. 220).

Other mineral substances

Pure Food and Drug Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 763, is entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines and liquors," and section 7 provides that an article shall be deemed adulterated, in the case of confectionery, if it contains terra alba, barytes, talc, chrome yellow, or other mineral substances or poisonous color or flavor, or other ingredient deleterious or detrimental to health. Held that, since the purpose of the act was to protect the purchaser of food products from having inferior and different articles passed off on him in place of those he desired, and to protect him from injury by prohibiting the addition to foods of substances poisonous or deleterious to health, the words "other mineral substances," under the doctrine of ejusdem generis, included other mineral substances which are deleterious or detrimental to health of the same nature as those specifically described preceding such words, and hence did not include a thin coating of pure silver covering candy, used principally by confectioners for decorative purposes, and not deleterious or detrimental to health. French Silver Dragée Co. v. United States, 179 Fed. 824, 827, 103 C. C. A. 316.

Other moneyed capital

See Moneyed Capital.

Other municipalities

The phrase, "other municipalities," contained in the title and body of P. L. 1906, p. 13, relative to official oaths of officers elected or appointed in towns, townships, and "other municipalities" of the state, is sufficiently descriptive of cities to include them. Ludlam v. Dallas, 81 Atl. 489, 490, 82 N. J. Law, 122.

The enactment of laws providing for the creation of municipal and public corporations is within the inherent legislative power, and Laws 1911, c. 92, authorizing the establishment of port districts, and providing for the development of a system of harbor improvements and terminal facilities, and the method of payment therefor, with defined powers to be exercised by a board of commissioners, is constitutional, there being no constitutional provision in terms prohibiting the creation of other municipal corporations than counties, cities, towns, and school districts, specifically recognized as municipal corporations; Const. art. 11, § 4, which requires the Legislature to establish a system of county government, and Const. art. 11, § 10, which declares that municipal corporations shall not be created by special laws, being only declarations of mandatory duty placed upon the Legislature's inherent powers, and the words "other municipal corporations," as used in Const. art. 8, § 6, limiting the rate of indebtedness of counties, cities, towns, and school districts, and other municipal corporations, having reference to others than those specifically named. Paine v. Port of Seattle, 126 Pac. 628, 630, 631, 70 Wash. 294.

Other necessities

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 4065, requiring the necessary expense incurred by the probate court for books, furniture, and other necessities, to be paid by the county, a probate judge was entitled to recover from the county the expense of a janitor, in his office, and for telephone service; the latter coming within the term "other necessities." Motley v. Pike County, 135 S. W. 39, 40, 233 Mo. 42.

Other necessary expenses

Acts 1873, p. 68, c. 24, provides that the trustees of the several townships, towns, and cities shall have the power to levy a special tax in their respective townships, towns, and cities for the construction, renting, or repairing of schoolhouses, for providing furniture, school apparatus, and fuel therefor, and for the payment of other necessary expenses of the school, etc. Held, that the clause for the payment of "other necessary expenses" of the school did not authorize the levying of a tax to provide free transportation for the pupils of a consolidated school district to and from the school. State v. Jackson, 81 N. E. 62, 64, 168 Ind. 384 (citing Honey Creek School Tp. v. Barnes, 21 N. E. 747, 119 Ind. 213; First Nat. Bank of Marion v. Adams School Tp., 46 N. E. 832, 17 Ind. App. 375; School City of Rushville v. Hays, 70 N. E. 134, 162 Ind. 183).

Other notes circulating as money

As used in Kirby's Dig. § 1814, making it a felony for a cashier of an insolvent bank to receive on deposit bank bills or notes, United States Treasury notes, or "other notes, bills, or drafts, circulating as money or currency," the quoted phrase refers to notes, bills, or drafts, other than United States Treasury notes and national bank notes, which pass from hand to hand; that is, such as are payable to bearer or are properly indorsed by the payee so that the legal title may pass by delivery. State v. Smith, 120 S. W. 156, 157, 91 Ark. 1.

Other nuisance

Where a deed provided that the grantor should not put upon the premises "any buildings, timber, trees or other nuisances," the words "other nuisances" will not include excavations unless it appears from the whole instrument that such was the intention. Cross v. Frost, 23 Atl. 916, 64 Vt. 179, 182.

Other obligation by which debt is secured

The phrase "other obligation by which a debt is secured," as used in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured shall, for the purpose of assessment or taxation, be deemed an interest in the property thereby affected, does not include a collateral security, or credits by loan on personality. Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, 101 Pac. 13, 14, 155 Cal. 352.

The term "contract or other obligation," in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage, deed of trust, or other obligation by which a deed is secured shall for the purpose of taxation be treated as an interest in property, were inserted to cover any and all possible contracts of lien upon realty which the ingenuity of lawyers might attempt to devise to evade the constitutional requirement. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1013, 144 Cal. 434.

Other occupation

Under charter authority to a city to regulate and prescribe the compensation of hackmen, cabmen, omnibus drivers, and all "others pursuing a like occupation," the city can limit the rate of fare to be charged by street railway companies, inasmuch as the phrase "others pursuing a like occupation," when construed ejusdem generis, includes street railway companies. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 65 N. E. 451, 460, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L. R. A. 631 (citing and adopting Union County v. Ussery, 35 N. E. 618, 147 Ill. 204; Misch v. Russell, 26 N. E. 528, 136 Ill. 22, 12 L. R. A. 125; First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 28 N. E. 955, 138 Ill. 483; Ritchie v. People, 40 N. E. 454, 155 Ill. 98, 20 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315).

Other offenses

See Assault to Commit Other Offense.

Other officers

The words, "other officer," as used in the statute covering bribery (Rev. St. § 6900), must be extended to include members of the council of a municipality. Amundson v. State, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 655, 656.

The words "other officers," in Rev. Code, 1852, as amended to 1893, p. 697, c. 92, § 2, authorizing the judges of the Superior Court to punish the contempt, omissions, neglects, and defaults of justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, clerks and "other officers" within the state, include the office of alderman, vested with jurisdiction to administer the criminal law. In re Tull (Del.) 78 Atl. 299, 300, 2 Boyce, 126.

The words "other officers," as used in Const. art. 8, § 3, making it the duty of the two houses of the General Assembly after organization at request of either house to join in grand committee for the purpose of electing other officers, undoubtedly meant such officers as by special direction of the Constitution or by law were to be elected by the General Assembly. In re Decision of Justices, 69 Atl. 555, 556, 28 R. I. 607.

A "solicitor of business" is not within the clause "and other officers," in Rev. St. U. S. § 5136, giving a national bank power to appoint a president, vice president, cashier, and other officers, and dismiss such officers at pleasure; but under subdivisions 3 and 7 of said section, empowering such a bank to make contracts and to exercise, by duly authorized "officers" or agents, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the banking business, it may employ a solicitor of business for a year. Case v. First Nat. Bank of Brooklyn, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1119, 1120, 59 Misc. Rep. 269.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1907, p. 730, c. 391, § 1, providing that a subpoena to require attendance out of court, before a judge, justice, or other officer authorized to administer oaths or take testimony in any matter under the laws, is to be issued by the judge, justice, or other officer before whom attendance is required, and if the subpoena is issued to require attendance before a commissioner or other officer upon the taking of a deposition, it must be issued by the clerk of the superior court of the county wherein the attendance is required, upon the order of such court or a judge thereof, the term "other officer" means any one authorized to administer oaths or take testimony, etc., and includes a notary public, in view of Pol. Code, § 794, providing that it is the duty of notaries public to take depositions and affidavits and administer oaths in all matters to be used before any court, etc., and it was proper for a judge of the superior court of S. county to order the clerk to issue a subpoena requiring a witness residing therein to attend before a notary in the county to give his deposition, and for the clerk to issue such subpoena. In re Scott, 96 Pac. 385, 387, 8 Cal. App. 12.

In Const. § 160, expressly making two years the term of office of city legislative boards generally, and in the next clause prescribing the manner of electing such boards in cities of the first and second class, and in the succeeding clause providing that "other officers" of towns or cities, if elected by the voters thereof, shall hold office for "four years, and until their successors shall be qualified," the provision as to the terms of office of "other officers" was plainly exclusive of the provisions as to the terms of city legislative boards, and was not open to construction. McDermott v. City of Louisville, 32 S. W. 264, 265, 98 Ky. 50.

Since 1835 there has been in Missouri a separate statute limiting the time within which actions against constables must be commenced (Rev. St. 1835, p. 116, § 4), which limitation was in 1889 extended from two to three years (Rev. St. 1889, § 2377; Rev. St. 1899, § 882). The term "or other officer," used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4274, limiting actions against a sheriff, coroner, or other officer to three years after accrual of cause, was not in the original act of 1848 (Acts 1848-49, p. 75, § 5), which related only to a sheriff or a coroner; the words being inserted in the revision of 1855 (Rev. St. 1855, p. 1048, c. 103, art. 2, § 4), in which revision there was a separate statute of limitations of two years as to constables (Rev. St. 1855, p. 347, c. 29, § 6). Held, that the term "or other officer," in section 4274, applies to a treasurer of a school district, and bars a civil action against him and his sureties on his official bond, if not brought within the time limited. State ex rel. School District of Sedalia v. Harter, 87 S. W. 941, 944, 188 Mo. 516.

The term "other officers," as used in Loc. Act Mich. 1907, No. 461, p. 362, which makes it the duty of a certain county treasurer and all "other officers" of the county having county funds in their possession or under their control to deposit them in depositories designated by the board of supervisors, may include deputies of the treasurer and persons appointed under Comp. Laws, § 3527, to perform the duties of treasurer but who are not designated as "treasurer." Gratiot County v. Munson, 122 N. W. 117, 118, 157 Mich. 505.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 258, 30 Stat. 171, relating to sardines "in bottles, jars, tin boxes, or cans" of various small sizes not exceeding 70 cubic inches, also "in other packages," the doctrine of noscitur a sociis is not to be so applied as to limit the latter phrase to packages of a retail size, and thus exclude sardines in large tins dealt in at wholesale. Strohmeier & Arpe Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 268, 101 C. C. A. 400.

Other paper

The words "other paper," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 3490, allowing the clerk of the circuit court 10 cents each "for filing complaint, answer, reply, petition, demurrer, affidavit, or 'other paper'" in a cause is a general term, but according to the old and settled rule of statutory construction must be confined in its meaning to that class of papers to which the preceding words belong. Hempstead County v. Harkness, 84 S. W. 799, 73 Ark. 600 (citing Eastern Arkansas Hedge-Fence Co. v. Tanner, 53 S. W. 886, 67 Ark. 156; Matthews v. Kimball, 66 S. W. 651, 69 S. W. 547, 70 Ark. 451; Sedg. St. & Const. Law [2d Ed.] pp. 360, 361; End. Interp. St. §§ 400-407; Suth. St. Const. 268-276; State v. Blackburn, 83 S. W. 529, 61 Ark. 407).

In a statute laying tariff on imported "paper hangings and paper for screens or for fire boards and all 'other paper' not specifically provided for in this act," there is no reason to suppose the words "other paper" were used with any different meaning from that given it in a former act in which the words were used in a like association, and therefore plain paper stamped by single operation into shapes with lace-like effects to be used on the tops of packages of candy, fruit, etc., or under finger bowls, was dutiable as "paper," rather than as "manufactures of paper." Hamilton v. United States, 167 Fed. 796, 798, 93 C. C. A. 186.

Other party

The term "other parties," as used in Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 389, providing that when a complete determination of a controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties court must then order them to be brought in, etc., means persons whose presence is essential to the complete determination of a controversy between parties who were already before the court. Alpers v. Bliss, 79 Pac. 171, 173, 145 Cal. 565.

Rev. St. 1890, § 4652, providing that in actions where one of the original parties to the contract in issue and on trial is dead the other party to such contract cannot testify in his own favor, means by the "other party" one who is a party to the suit, as well as to the contract. Jackson v. Smith, 123 S. W. 1026, 1028, 139 Mo. App. 691.

A decedent's executrix, in a suit to enforce subrogation to the rights of a mortgagee in certain land as against an heir of decedent by his first wife, was not disqualified to testify as the "other party" to any contract or cause of action in issue, under P. S. 1580, though she might benefit by a successful termination of the litigation by force of the decedent's will. Wilder's Ex'r v. Wilder, 72 Atl. 203, 206, 82 Vt. 123.

Notice of application by a landholder for the appointment of commissioners to review the assessment of damages to his land, by laying out a road over the same, must be given to the township committee, and not to the applicants. The town committee are "the other party" referred to in the act of March 1, 1850. Inhabitants of Hopewell Tp. v. Welling, 24 N. J. Law, 127, 128.

Other permanent fixtures

"Other permanent fixtures," as used in a policy providing that the insurer should not be liable, unless liability was specifically assumed, for loss of store or office furniture or fixtures, and describing the property insured as a building including gas, steam, and water pipes and all other permanent fixtures contained therein, did not cover or include counters, shelving, and office fixtures in the building which might be removed without injury to the building. Banyer v. Albany Ins. Co., 83 N. Y. Supp. 65, 85 App. Div. 122.

Other persons

Under Rev. St. § 5480, Act June 8, 1872, c. 335, 17 Stat. 323, as amended by Act March 2, 1889, c. 393, § 1, 25 Stat. 873, providing that if any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any person, whether resident within or outside the United States, by means of the post office establishment of the United States, or by inciting such "other person" or any person to open communication with the person so devising or intending, shall, in and for executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting so to do, mail any letter or receive any letter from the mail, he shall, upon conviction, be punishable by a fine or imprisonment, or both. The clause, or by inciting such "other person" or any person to open communication with the person so devising or intending, clearly indicates that the person mentioned in the preceding clause with whom the deviser opened or intends to open correspondence is to be such "other person" and not himself. Erbaugh v. United States, 173 Fed. 433, 434, 97 C. C. A. 663.

An employé in the customs service of the United States who makes and returns false weights in connection with an entry of imported merchandise is comprehended by the words "other person" in the provisions of the customs administration act (Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 1, 26 Stat. 131), for the forfeiture of goods or their value where "any owner, importer, consignee, agent, or other person" shall make an entry by means of false and fraudulent practices, or shall be guilty of any unlawful act or omission whereby the United States is deprived of the lawful duties, and for the punishment of such person by fine or imprisonment or both. United States v. Mescall, 80 Sup. Ct. 19, 20, 215 U. S. 26, 54 L. Ed. 77.

As used in General Tax Act 1905, § 2, par. 28 (Acts 1905, p. 30), which levies a special tax upon each brewing company for each plant or brewery in the state and "upon all other persons, firms, and corporations who are engaged in the sale of beer, whether on consignment or otherwise * * * for each place of business including all other persons, corporations, or agencies maintaining storage depots in this state," etc., the word "other" following the word "including" was not intended to contrast the persons, corpotations, and agencies enumerated after it with the persons, firms, or corporations just previously enumerated. The phrase "all other persons" has the same meaning as the identical words "all other persons" earlier in the paragraph. Whittlesey v. Acme Brewing Co., 56 S. E. 299, 300, 127 Ga. 208.

As used in Laws 1903, p. 141, c. 93, imposing a penalty on an officer of a corporation who makes exaggerated reports "to the stockholders or to other persons dealing with such corporation," the comprehensive class "stockholders or other persons" includes all persons dealing with corporations. State v. Merchant, 92 Pac. 890, 891, 48 Wash. 69.

The words "or other," in St. 1898, § 1165, providing that the owner or occupant of any land sold for taxes "or other" person may at any time within three years from the date of the certificate of sale redeem the same or any part thereof or interest therein, must be given such construction as will enable those whose rights will be directly prejudiced by absolutism of a tax title to redeem, though they be neither owners nor occupants, and a minor is entitled to redeem from a tax sale, and he has such an interest after executing and delivering a warranty deed as entitles him to redeem. Hoffman v. Peterson, 102 N. W. 47, 48, 123 Wis. 632.

Rev. St. § 725, which gives to federal courts power to punish as contempts disobedience or resistance by officers, "or by any party, juror, witness, or 'other person,' to any lawful writ, process, rule, decree or command of the said courts," extends the power of such court to enforce its decrees to persons other than those made parties by name; and it is the settled rule thereunder that, to render a person amenable to an injunction, it is neither necessary that he should have been a party to the suit nor have been actually served with a copy of the injunction, so long as he appears to have had actual notice. Employers' Teaming Co. v. Teamsters' Joint Council, 141 Fed. 679, 681.

The words "other person," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2774, providing that every transfer of property with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or "other person" of his demands is void against all creditors, includes a wife, and, where a husband by cruel treatment compels the wife to leave him and bring an action for divorce and alimony, she is a quasi creditor in relation to the alimony which the law awards her, and a transfer by the husband of property with intent to defraud the wife is void as against her. Bennett v. Bennett, 81 Pac. 632, 637, 15 Okl. 286, 70 L. R. A. 864.

The words "other person," in Mills' Ann. St. § 2564, providing if "any officer or other person," by virtue of any execution, shall take or seize property exempted from levy and sale, such officer or person shall be liable for three times the value of the property, includes an execution creditor, who authorizes or knowingly ratifies the act of an officer in seizing under execution and selling exempt property of the judgment debtor. Seerie v. Brewer, 90 Pac. 508, 509, 40 Colo. 299, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

In Rev. St. § 1165, authorizing the owner, occupant, or other person to redeem land sold for taxes, the words "or other person" do not embrace other persons having no interest whatever in the land. Rutledge v. Price Co., 27 N. W. 819, 920, 66 Wis. 33.

All noncombatants except the wives and children of military and civil officers were embraced in the words "other persons" in a contract with the United States for the transportation to Spain at the cabin rate of Spanish military and civil officers in the Philippine Islands, and at the steerage rate of such other persons as might be designated by the Secretary of War. J. M. Ceballos & Co. v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 583, 588, 214 U. S. 47, 53 L. Ed. 904.

In Act Aug. 13, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 727), regulating the issuance of prescriptions for intoxicating liquors by licensed physicians or other persons, the words "other persons" apply to a licensed physician, or one not licensed who assumed to practice medicine and therefore, whether the physician whose name was signed to the prescription by defendant was a licensed physician or not, if he practiced such profession, he was within the terms of the act. McAllister v. State, 45 South. 161, 163, 156 Ala. 122.

The term "other persons," as used in Act 1901 (23 St. at Large, p. 754), providing that the term public officer shall include all officers of the state, and other persons whose duties are defined by law, in its literal meaning would include guardians, administrators, and other trustees, and it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to include such persons in the definition of public officers. The intention probably was to include in the definition all persons whose public duties are defined by law such as poorhouse superintendents. Sanders v. Belue, 58 S. E. 762, 764, 79 S. C. 171.

Laws 1891, c. 114, § 1 (Gen. St. 1909, § 4643), providing that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers or other persons employed by any city, applies to the engineers and firemen who operate the water and electric plant of the city of Ottawa. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 396, 84 Kan. 100.

The words "other persons," as used in Gen. St. 1901, c. 38, § 3, subd. 8, providing that every person residing in this state and being the head of a family shall have exempt from seizure and sale upon any attachment, execution, or other process, the following articles of personal property: The necessary ols and implements of any mechanic, miner, or other person" used and kept in stock for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business, means other persons obliged to use tools or implements to carry on their trades or business in the same way that a mechanic or miner requires tools or implements to carry on his trade or business. Williams v. Vincent, 79 Pac. 121, 122, 70 Kan. 595, 68 L. A. 634, 109 Am. St. Rep. 469.

A person residing in the state who is the head of a family, and whose principal business is the running of a threshing machine, is included in the phrase, "or other person," as used in the statutes of Kansas relating to exemption of tools. Jackman v. Lambertson, 80 Pac. 55, 56, 71 Kan. 138.

The words "other person or persons," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8346, making it unlawful for any railroad, or any common carriers or agent thereof, or any drayman, or other person or persons, to ship, receive, transport, carry, or handle intoxicating liquors under false or fictitious names or titles, within the state, include all individuals, though they are not engaged in the business of a common carrier, so that an affidavit charging violation of the statute was not sufficient for failing to allege that defendants or either of them was either a railroad, common carrier, or agent thereof, or person engaged in transportation business or any business of like kind or character. State v. Decker, 89 N. E. 316, 317, 172 Ind. 614.

The clause "other person having the legal care and control of any infant," in Rev. St. 1899, § 1857, punishing any master or mistress of an apprentice, or "other person having the legal care and control of any infant," who shall unlawfully assault such apprentice or infant, is modified by the context, and has relation to the preceding words "master * * * of an apprentice," and this refers to a different kind of relationship from that of parent and child, and where one who adopted a child by a deed of adoption, as authorized by section 5248, providing that from the time of filing a deed of adoption a child adopted shall have the same rights for support and proper treatment as any child who by law commits an assault and battery on the child, the prosecution must be brought under section 1850, fixing the punishment for any one who shall assault another under such circumstances, as not to constitute any other offense, instead of under section 1857. State v. Koonse, 101 S. W. 139, 141, 123 Mo. App. 655.

Same—As ejusdem generis

In St. 1898, § 2320, providing that conveyances made with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, "or other persons," of their lawful actions or demands, shall be void as against such person, the words "other persons" refer to persons of the same general class having rights of action which may be hindered by conveyance.—Corry v. Shea, 128 N. W. 892, 894, 144 Wis. 135, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1154.

The words "and any other persons," as used in Laws 1897, p. 326, c. 112, § 1, giving cities power to construct and operate water-works to supply the inhabitants thereof and any other persons with water, does not include other municipalities. The words must be construed according to the rule of ejusdem generis. The specific words in the statute referred to that class of persons who are inhabitants of the city (that is to say, persons who are habitually and regularly within the corporate limits); and the general words following can have no broader application than to persons within the corporate limits, such as transient persons. Farwell v. City of Seattle, 86 Pac. 217, 218, 43 Wash. 141, 10 Ann. Cas. 130.

Other person interested

The purchaser of the interest of an heir to land owned by decedent is not entitled to apply for a sale thereof for the payment of debts, under Rev. St. 1899, § 150, providing that such application may be made by any "creditor or other person interested in the estate." The term "other person interested in the estate" contemplates persons who have an interest in the distribution of the estate or who have a right to participate in such distribution, such as an heir or one who is made the legatee by will or the guardian or creditor of one of the heirs of the estate or other persons who may be entitled to a distributive share of the estate. The purchase of the interest of two children of deceased in land which descended to them falls far short of creating any "interest in the estate," as contemplated by the statute. Stark v. Kirchengraber, 85 S. W. 868, 871, 186 Mo. 633, 105 Am. St. Rep. 629.

Other personal effects or property

The phrase "other personal property" in the iron-safe clause of a fire policy, requiring that the clause shall be complied with if the insurance covers merchandise or other personal property, means articles in the nature of merchandise, and does not include ordinary store fixtures such as show cases, iron safes, etc. American Ins. Co. v. Bagley, 65 S. E. 787, 6 Ga. App. 736.

Where a statute exempted stocks and other personal property from taxation in certain circumstances, the use of the word "other" is a clear indication that the Legislature regarded stocks as included within the description of personal estate. Trenton v. Standard Fire Ins. Co., 68 Atl. 1111, 1112, 76 N. J. Law, 79.

The word "other," as used in a provision of a tax law relating to the taxation of "rolling stock and other personal property," means other than located; i. e., the unlocated personalty or personalty of like nature with rolling stock. Greene County v. Wright, 54 S. E. 951, 954, 126 Ga. 504 (citing Columbus Southern Ry. Case, 15 S. E. 293, 86 Ga. 574).

Other place

In construing Rev. St. 1899, § 1856, which makes it an offense for any father or mother or any other person to whom a child under the age of six years has been confided to "expose such child in a street, field, or other place with intent wholly to abandon it," the rule of ejusdem generis does not apply, and "other places" will not be limited in its meaning to places like a street or field; and therefore an indictment charging accused with exposing a child under the age of six years in a certain street railway shelter or station with intent to unlawfully and feloniously wholly abandon such child charges an offense under the statute. State v. Eckhardt, 133 S. W. 321, 232 Mo. 49.

Act No. 176 of 1908, § 1, known as the "Gay-Shattuck Act," requires a license of from $200 to $1,600 based on the annual gross receipts of the business for every business conducting a barroom, cabaret, café, beer saloon, or other place where intoxicating or malt liquors are sold in quantities of less than five gallons. Section 3 contains a prohibition of the sale of malt liquors, etc., without a license, in substantially the same language designating the various places as in section 1. Section 4 provides that the statute shall not apply to groceries where liquor is sold in original packages, and not consumed on the premises. Section 8, in prescribing the formalities to be observed in licensing places where liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises, gives the same list of places as in section 1, but does not add "other places" where liquor is sold, and sections 10 and 11 also discriminate between barrooms and other places where liquors are sold not to be drunk on the premises. Held, that the statute required a license for the sale of malt liquors in original packages from a brewery warehouse; such warehouse coming within the provision "other place" where malt liquors are sold. State v. Pabst Brewing Co., 55 South. 349, 350, 128 La. 770.

Other place of public accommodation or amusement

A roller skating rink to which the public are invited on the sole condition of paying a fixed charge is a "public place of amusement," within St. 1898, § 4398c, providing that any person denying to another the equal enjoyment of the accommodations of "inns, restaurants, saloons, barber shops, eating houses, public conveyances, * * * or any other place of public accommodation or amusement," shall be liable to the person aggrieved. Jones v. Broadway Roller Rink Co., 118 N. W. 170, 171, 136 Wis. 595, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

Other places where refreshments are served

In construing the civil rights act (Code § 5008), declaring that all persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the privileges of inns, restaurants, chop-houses, eating houses, lunch counters and "all other places where refreshments are served," etc., the rule "ejusdem generis" applies, and the words "other places where refreshments are served" are limited to places of the same nature as public inns, restaurants, chop-houses, eating houses, etc., and hence does not include a merchant's booth in a pure food show, rented from a retail grocers' association maintaining the show, to which an admission was charged generally, where the merchant gave away cups of coffee, gratis, to prospective patrons for advertising purposes. Brown v. J. H. Bell Co., 123 N. W. 231, 234, 146 Iowa, 89, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 852.

Other portions of street

Code, § 834, providing that all street railway companies shall be required to make all the paving between the rails of their tracks and one foot outside thereof at their own expense, unless, by ordinance or by virtue of the provisions of any ordinance under which such street railway may have been constructed or may be maintained, it may be bound to pave other portions of said street as specified by ordinance, in the use of the words "other portions of said street," means not something less, but something more, than the statute requires. Des Moines City Ry. Co. v. City of Des Moines, 131 N. W. 43, 44, 152 Iowa, 18.

Other ports

Libelants signed shipping articles for a voyage from Seattle to Shanghai, China "and such other ports and places in any part of the world as the master may direct," and back to a final port of discharge on Puget Sound. It was during the time of the war between Japan and Russia, and the vessel was in fact loaded with a contraband cargo for the Russian government, and her destination was Vladivostok, if that port could be reached. It was not shown, even if it had been competent to do so, that the crew knew the real nature of the voyage. The voyage commenced in January, and the vessel proceeded first to Alaska and then by a northern route to avoid capture, and, owing to the season, she was caught in the ice and held for 41 days, and the crew suffered much hardship. She was subsequently captured by a Japanese warship, and condemned as a prize; the crew being detained for a time and then returned to Seattle, where their expenses and wages at the contract rate were paid, and they receipted for the same in full. Held, that the voyage made was not indicated by the articles, but one not rially different and more hazardous, and for which the current rate of wages was higher than those paid, and that under the circumstances libelants were entitled to recover damages for the unusual hardships to which they were subjected by reason of the violation. Turtle v. Northwestern S. S. Co., 14 Fed. 146, 147.

Other process

In construing the provision in the Tariff Act for "precious stones advanced in condition or value from their natural state by carving, splitting, cutting, or other process," a reference to intaglios incised in rock crystal (a precious stone), which have been actively and skillfully painted, the value and salability of the articles being chiefly attributable to the painting, the words "other process" include such process of painting, and such intaglios are dutiable under said provision, rather than as manufactures of rock crystal, not specially provided for. Benedict & Warner v. United States, 135 Fed. 242.

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 2231, providing that an extra judicial confession of defendant will not warrant a conviction, unless accompanied with "other proof" that such offense was committed, such confession may be considered as tending to prove (though insufficient in itself) the corpus delicti, as well as connection of defendant with the crime. Misenheimer v. State, 84 S. W. 494, 95, 73 Ark. 407 (citing People v. Jaehne, 8 J. E. 374, 103 N. Y. 182; People v. Badgley N. Y.] 16 Wend. 53; People v. Deacons, 16 J. E. 676, 109 N. Y. 374; Chunningham v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush [72 Ky.] 149; State v. Patterson, 73 Mo. 695; Blah. New Cr. Proc. § 1058; Underhill, Cr. Ev. § 147; Bradley v. State, 32 Ark. 704; Redd v. State, 40 J. W. 374, 63 Ark. 457).

Other property

A brass railing attached partly to the freehold and partly to an engine in an ice plant, the engine being attached to the freehold, comes within the purport of Revised 1905, § 3511, making it "larceny" for any person to enter on the lands of another and carry off any "wood or other kind of property whatsoever, growing or being thereon." State v. Beck, 53 S. E. 843, 141 N. C. 829.

Rev. St. 1898, § 4423, punishing one obtaining by false pretenses "any money, goods, wares, merchandise or other property" when considered in connection with section 4972, subds. 3, 4, defining the word "property" as including real and personal property and defining the words "personal property" as including things in action and evidences of debt, makes it a criminal offense to obtain by false pretenses a promissory note, notwithstanding the rule nosctur a sociis. Clawson v. State, 109 N. W. 578, 579, 129

Wis. 650, 116 Am. St. Rep. 972, 9 Ann. Cas. 966.

"Other property," as used in a statute providing that, if any person designedly or by false pretense, or by any privy or false token, and with intent to defraud, obtain from another any money, goods, or "other property," he shall be punished, means property of the class previously enumerated as similar to money or goods, and therefore does not include real property. State v. Eno, 109 N. W. 119, 120, 131 Iowa, 619, 9 Ann. Cas. 856.

Under Laws 1893, p. 197, c. 84, § 22, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 325, c. 153, § 23, authorizing assessments for street improvements on the several "lots, blocks, tracts and parcels of land or other property," a street railroad franchise in a street to be improved is a mere easement, and is not assessable as "other property"; the rule of ejusdem generis applying. In re City of Seattle, 103 Pac. 807, 808, 54 Wash. 460.

The water hydrants and electric light fixtures of the city are "private property" owned by it in its corporate capacity. They have a permanent situs within the drainage district and constitute "property" and "other property liable to assessment" within the meaning of chapter 80, Laws 1909. State v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 110 Pac. 92, 95, 83 Kan. 189.

Revenue Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 120) § 25, divides all personal property for assessment purposes into 36 classes, the thirty-sixth being "all other property required to be listed," and requires that the schedule when completed by the assessor shall distinctly show in appropriate columns the value of the property assessed. Held, that though the board of review, in making assessments, is required to make a list of the property assessed, setting down in the proper columns the separate kinds of property and the assessed value thereof, yet, where an assessment of complainant's property was all placed under the item "all other personal property required to be listed," it would be presumed that the assessment was of property not included in any of the kinds of property enumerated in the preceding classes, so that, in a suit to restrain the collection of taxes extended on such assessment, it was incumbent on complainant to show that he did not own any property within that class, and that the valuation was excessive, fraudulent, and dishonestly made. Holt v. Hendee, 93 N. E. 749, 750, 248 Ill. 288, 21 Ann. Cas. 202.

As used in the Railroad Law, § 12 (Laws 1890, p. 1087, c. 565), requiring intersecting railroads to receive from each other and forward to their destination "goods, merchandise, and other property," the phrase "other property" means any property which from its nature, and the condition in which

It is, is reasonably capable of being transported over the road. Such railroads must receive cars and freight from each other and transport the same. This section and section 35, requiring such lines to afford each other equal terms for accommodation in the transportation of cars, passengers, baggage, and freight, required such roads to interchange cars loaded with freight. Hudson Valley Ry. Co. v. Boston & M. R. R., 92 N. Y. Supp. 928, 932, 45 Misc. Rep. 520.

Other provisions

The authorities of the city of Chicago have power to adopt an ordinance requiring bakeries to be licensed, defining a "bakery" as any place used for the purpose of mixing, compounding, or baking, for sale, or for purposes of a restaurant, bakery, or hotel, any bread, biscuits, etc., or any food product of which flour or meal is a principal ingredient, and providing for ventilation, light, and other sanitary requirements in such bakeries, under Cities and Villages Act, § 62, par. 50 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 24), authorizing cities to regulate the sale of meats, poultry, etc., and all other provisions, and to provide for place and manner of selling them, and paragraph 53, giving them power to provide for and regulate the inspection of meats, poultry, etc., and other provisions, the phrase "other provisions" including bakery products, covered by the ordinance, and the power to regulate including the power to license, and also, by paragraph 78, giving cities power to do all acts and make all regulations which may be necessary or expedient for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease. City of Chicago v. Drogasawacz, 90 N. E. 869, 870, 256 Ill. 34.

Other public show

The phrase "or other public sports, exercises, or shows," in Pen. Code, § 265, prohibiting "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming or other public exercises or shows" on Sunday, when considered in connection with section 277, prohibiting theatrical plays, etc., on Sunday, does not include a moving picture show. People v. Hemleb, 111 N. Y. Supp. 690, 691, 127 App. Div. 356; William Fox Amusement Co. v. McClellan, 114 N. Y. Supp. 594, 598, 599, 62 Misc. Rep. 100; Edwards v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 181. But see Gale v. Bingham, 110 N. Y. Supp. 12, 13.

Other public use

The use of streets for moving a building is an unusual and extraordinary use, and is not such "other public use" as is contemplated by Comp. Laws 1897, § 6691, providing that every telephone company organized thereunder shall have the power to construct and maintain lines for the transmission of telephone messages through public streets and highways, with all necessary erections and fixtures therefor, provided that the same shall not injuriously interfere with other public uses of such places. Kibble Tel. Co. v. Landphere, 115 N. W. 244, 245, 151 Mich. 309, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689 (citing Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. v. Anderson, et al., 98 N. W. 708, 12 N. D. 585, 65 L. R. A. 771, 162 Am. St. Rep. 589, 1 Ann. Cas. 110; Williams v. Citizens' Ry. Co., 29 N. E. 408, 130 Ind. 71, 15 L. R. A. 64, 30 Am. St. Rep. 201; Dickson v. Kewanee Electric Light & Motor Co., 53 Ill. App. 379; Millville Traction Co. v. Goodwin, 32 Atl. 263, 53 N. J. Eq. 448; Taylor v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. St. Ry., 39 Atl. 560, 91 Me. 193, 64 Am. St. Rep. 216).

Other purposes

A religious association known as "Shiloh Association" purchased land and established a school called "Shiloh Institute," the deed for the property being executed to trustees appointed by the association, and reciting that it was upon trust to hold such property for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a school of general learning and for any other proper and legal purpose which the association might deem best, and giving the trustees power to sell or mortgage the property whenever requested by the association. Held, that the "other proper and legal purpose" should be construed as of the same general nature and kind as the main object of a school, and that the right to sell or mortgage meant a sale or mortgage in furtherance of the trust to maintain a school. Spring Green Church v. Thornton, 73 S. E. 810, 812, 158 N. C. 119.

As used in Act Nov. 29, 1890, entitled as act to create a new charter for the city of Columbus, and to consolidate and declare the rights and powers of such corporation, and for "other purposes," means other purposes appropriate to the subject-matter of the act (to wit, the creation of a new charter for the city of Columbus), not indicated in the phrase "to consolidate and declare the rights of such corporation," as each law must be limited to one subject. There can be no limitation that the phrase "and for other purposes," in the title of an act, refers to purposes other than those naturally or ordinarily appropriated to the subject-matter expressly declared. Blair v. State, 17 S. E. 96, 97, 90 Ga. 326, 85 Am. St. Rep. 206.

In the provision of the charter of the Barre Water Company authorizing the company to take water for the extinguishment of fires, and for domestic, sanitary, and other purposes, the words "other purposes" mean other purposes like those specially mentioned. Therefore a use of water for polishing granite has none of the elements of a public use, and in that respect is unlike fire, domestic, or sanitary uses. Smith v. Barre Water Co., 50 Atl. 1055, 73 Vt. 310, 311.

In Comp. Laws 1907, § 2866, providing that no person shall be allowed to acquire any right or title in or to any lands held by any town or city designated for public use as streets, lanes, avenues, parks, public squares, or for other purposes, the phrase "for other purposes" must be limited to things ejusdem generis, with the special property named, and so land held by a city for sale as business property is subject to adverse possession. Pioneer Investment & Trust Co. v. Board of Education of Salt Lake City, 99 Pac. 150, 153, 35 Utah, 1, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1016.

Other reasonable cause

The words "for other reasonable cause," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 815, which provides that courts of common pleas may grant new trial for mispleading or discovery of new evidence, or want of actual notice of suit to any defendant, or of a reasonable opportunity to appear and defend, when a just defense, in whole or in part, exists, or for other reasonable cause, according to the usual rules in such cases, should be construed to mean causes of the same general character as those specified, and hence the section did not authorize the granting of a new trial on the ground that, by reason of the death of the trial judge before filing findings, the plaintiff was precluded from reviewing errors of law, alleged to exist in the judgment, on an appeal. Etchells v. Wainwright, 57 Atl. 121, 124, 76 Conn. 534.

Other relative

In the interpretation of section 5971, Rev. St. 1892, to prevent the lapsing of a devise or legacy when made to any child or other relative of the testator if such child or other relative shall have been dead at the time of the making of the will, or shall die thereafter, leaving issue surviving the testator, the phrase "other relative" should, in accordance with the maxim "noscitur a sociis," be restricted to relationships of the character indicated by the associated word "child," and regarded as including those which are consanguineous but excluding those which are affinitive merely. Schaefer v. Bernhardt, 81 N. E. 640, 641, 76 Ohio St. 443, 10 Ann. Cas. 919.

A grandniece and grandnephew are "other relatives," within a statute providing that mutual benefit associations may, for the purpose of assisting the widows and orphans or other relatives of deceased members, provide in their by-laws for the raising of a fund by payments from members. Mathewson v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 110 N. W. 69, 71, 146 Mich. 671.

Other remedy

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1822, which bars rejected claims after six months from notice of dispute, unless the claimant commences an action for the recovery thereof within that time, declaring that in default thereof the claimant and all persons claiming under him are forever barred from maintaining any such action and from every "other remedy" to enforce payment thereof out of decedent's property, the words "other remedy" included summary proceedings by an undertaker to compel payment of his bill authorized by section 2729, subd. 3, which he could not maintain after the expiration of six months from notice of the rejection of his claim. In re Mudge, 118 N. Y. Supp. 568, 571.

Other representative of value

It is not a crime, under Pen. Code, § 330, making it an offense to operate any banking or percentage game played with any device, "for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value," to set up and operate a slot machine on which games are played unless played for money, checks, credits, or other representative of value, and, if played for something not included in these words, it is not a crime. The court said: "If the Legislature was intending to prohibit all gambling with banking devices or by banking games played with cards, dice, or any device, it seems to us there would have been no limitation as now to money, checks, or credits, but the statement would have been for anything of value or that represents value. Gambling such as it is sought to prohibit by section 330 is carried on almost exclusively for money, or some obligation or promise which calls for money, and not other property. * * * Courts have no power to legislate; and, if the Legislature intended to simply prohibit banking and percentage games where played for money, checks, credits, and other things similar to money, checks, and credits, this court has no power to add a further prohibition, and say that it will be a crime if such banking or percentage game is for other kinds of property, such as grain, fruit, horses, cattle, lumber, and all other things of whatever kind which may have a value." As stated in 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1012: "Where a statute or other document enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following and classed with such enumeration the class embraces 'other' persons or things, the word 'other' will generally be read as 'other such like,' so that the persons or things therein comprised may be read as of the same kind, class, or nature with, and not of a quality superior to, or different from, those specifically enumerated." It follows that "the very language of the statute itself shows that the gambling which the Legislature was attempting to prohibit was that sort of gambling usually carried on at a fixed place of business, where those seeking to play at games of chance could come, and where money is the thing usually wagered, or its representative, such as checks, or anything which is a demand to be paid in money. It would hardly be considered reasonable that the Legislature had in mind that the games and devices enumerated were played in the general markets where grain, animals, and stocks are bought and sold. The intent of the Legislature to legislate against games set up and carried on at a fixed place and in houses or rooms is shown by section 831 of the Penal Code, which attempts to prohibit the use of any house for the gambling prohibited in section 330. Neither is it plain that the Legislature had in mind any kind of property other than money, the thing most common for use in such games, and its representative, such as checks, and demands for the payment of money. Neither would it be a reasonable supposition that in 1872, when the act was passed, any banking game would be set up or carried on in gambling for anything but money and the instruments representing money, and therefore the Legislature could not have had in mind the cigar slot machine, and could not have prohibited its use. The ingenuity of man, however, has devised a banking game in the cigar slot machine by which gambling may be carried on for property not included within 'money, checks, credits or other representatives of value.' McLaughlin, J., in a concurring opinion says: "The words 'or other representative of value' found in the section must be construed in connection with the preceding language in the same sentence, for the word 'other' is a correlative and specifying word, meaning 'different from that which has been specified; not the same; not his or those.' * * * But, aside from this, there is another rule commanding that words not plainly used in a technical sense shall be taken in their ordinary, general sense, and if this is applied to the word 'representative,' as used in the section, it seems quite clear to my mind that cigars or tobacco cannot be considered as representative of value. The word 'representative,' as used in the statute, certainly means 'typifying;' 'presenting by means of something;' 'standing in the place of;' 'that which represents anything.' Cigars and tobacco are things of value; they have a value. This is beyond cavil. But in my opinion it could hardly be said that they represent their own inherent or market value. A certain coin or check or bill will represent the value of any quantity of cigars or tobacco, and these in turn will be inherently worth the price obtainable for them. But it would hardly be contended that because they have a certain value, measured by current mediums of exchange, they represent the value of the coin or currency paid for them, any more than they represent any other commodity which might be exchanged for them in the course of trade. Every commodity has a value measured according to fixed standards, but the various commodities sold and bought in many markets and transactions do not represent the value of the gold, silver, or currency paid for them. On the contrary, the medium of exchange established by law or recognized in business dealings represents their value." Ex parte Williams, 87 Pac. 566, 568, 7 Cal. Unrep. 301 (citing Chegaray v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 13 N. Y. 220; Shirk v. People, 11 N. E. 888, 121 Ill. 61; Commonwealth v. Kammerer [Ky.] 13 S. W. 106; People v. Bealoba, 17 Cal. 39; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 357; Stroud, Judicial Dict. p. 1359 et seq.; Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Const. §§ 423, 430; In re La Société Française d'Épargne et de Prévoyance Mutuelle, 56 Pac. 458, 123 Cal. 55; State v. Woodman, 67 Pac. 1120, 28 Mont. 348).

Other roads

The phrase "other roads," as used in Acts 1895, p. 174, c. 82, granting the board of county commissioners power to purchase toll roads, and declaring that when conveyed the roads shall be free and shall be kept in repair as provided by law for the repair of other roads, must be construed as meaning other free roads of the class or kind to which those purchased would belong when conveyed to the county. State ex rel. Shanks v. Board of Com'rs of Carroll County, 70 N. E. 138, 142, 162 Ind. 183.

Other security

The phrase "other security," as used in Const. art. 11, § 3, which provides that nothing in the article relating to homestead exemptions shall be construed to interfere with the sale of property under any mortgage, pledge, or other security, means "security of a like character; that is, such as is created by his (the debtor's) own act." Oppenheimer v. Myers, 39 S. E. 218, 219, 99 Va. 582 (quoting definition in White v. Owen, 30 Gratiot [71 Va.] 43).

Other serious ailment

The words "other serious ailment," in an application for life insurance, declaring that the applicant had never had any of listed diseases, some 60 in number, or any "other serious ailment," modify the negative answers to the list of questions as to whether the applicant had suffered from the listed diseases, and the words called for ailments of a serious character, and the statement was a representation and not a warranty, and insurer may not defeat a recovery on the policy without averring and proving the materiality of the statement and that it was known to be false when made. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Link, 82 N. E. 637, 639, 230 Ill. 273.

Other shows

Under section 51 of the Greater New York charter, and sections 305, 352, of ordinances passed pursuant to such charter provision, providing that a license may be required of all common shows, and providing that a "common show" shall be deemed to include Ferris wheel, gravity steeplechase, chute, scenic cave, bicycle carousel, scenic railway, striking machines, switchback, merry-go-round, puppet shows, ball games, and all "other shows of like character," the giving of a free moving picture show in an ice cream saloon and candy store, while not within the term "other shows of like character," is included in the words "common shows," since those words are not limited by the list given, but include many others not given. Weistblatt v. Bingham, 109 N. Y. Supp. 545, 546, 58 Misc. Rep. 828.

Other sources

In United States v. Norton, 91 U. S. 566, 568, 23 L. Ed. 454, the court, after quoting Webster's lexical definition of the term "revenue" as the "income of a nation, derived from its taxes, duties, or other sources, for the payment of the national expenses," say: "The phrase 'other sources' would include the proceeds of the public lands, those arising from the sale of public securities, the receipts of the Patent Office in excess of its expenditures, and those of the Post Office Department." People's United States Bank v. Goodwin, 162 Fed. 937, 941.

Other state or government

The phrase "other state," in P. L. 1893, p. 301, making it lawful for any corporation, created under the revised corporation act of 1875, to purchase, hold, and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any corporation created under the laws of any "other state," did not include a foreign country. Warren v. Pim, 59 Atl. 773, 775, 66 N. J. Eq. 353.

Other stock

The statute requiring actions against a railroad for damages for killing animals, such as horses, mules, cattle, or other stock, to be brought in the county where the killing occurred, does not apply to actions for killing dogs; "other stock" only including such animals as those mentioned, so that it was not necessary to prove that a dog was killed in the county where the action was brought. El Dorado & B. R. Co. v. Knox, 117 S. W. 779, 781, 90 Ark. 1, 134 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Under Pub. St. 1882, c. 11, § 20, providing that all personal estate shall be assessed to the owner in the city of which he is an inhabitant, except that all goods, wares, and merchandise, "and other stock in trade," in cities other than where the owner resides, shall be taxed in those places where the owner hires or occupies manufactories, stores, shops, or wharves, the capital used in conducting the business of a banker and broker was not taxable at the place where such business is located but at the place of residence of such banker and broker. Prince v. City of Boston, 79 N. E. 741, 193 Mass. 545 (citing Tisdale v. Harris [Mass.] 20 Pick. 9; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459; Boston Loan Co. v. Boston, 137 Mass. 332; Barron v. Boston, 72 N. E. 951, 187 Mass. 168; Martin v. Portland, 17 Atl. 72, 81 Me. 293).

The phrase "other structure," in 71 Ohio Laws, p. 168, § 1, providing that any person who shall perform labor or furnish machinery or materials for erecting, altering, repairing, or removing any house, mill, manufactory, or other building, fixture, bridge, or other structure, by virtue of a contract with the owner or owners, shall have a lien to secure the payment of the same, must be limited to improvements on the same class as those specifically named, and cannot be extended so as to include a railroad. Rutherford v. Cincinnati & P. R. Co., 35 Ohio St. 559, 563.

The term "other structure," as used in Act March 12, 1887 (St. 1886-87, p. 112, c. 95) § 8, declaring guilty of a felony one who maliciously deposits or explodes at, in, under, or near any building, vessel, railroad, tramroad, or cable road, or any train or car, or any depot, stable, car house, theater, schoolhouse, church, dwelling house, or other place where human beings usually inhabit, assemble, frequent, or pass and repass, any explosive, with intent to injure or destroy such building or other structure, does not apply only to the specifically enumerated, but includes the malicious depositing and exploding of dynamite in the levels, stopes, and chutes of a working mine. In re Mitchell, 82 Pac. 347, 348, 1 Cal. App. 396.

Const. art. 15, § 1, after authorizing the Legislature to establish harbor lines in front of cities, declares that the state shall not grant rights in the waters beyond such lines, nor relinquish control of any area lying between the harbor line and the line of ordinary high tide or such other line not less than 50 nor more than 600 feet from the harbor line as may be determined by the commissioners, but such area shall be reserved for "landings, wharves, streets and other conveniences of navigation and commerce." Section 2 directs that the Legislature shall provide for leasing the right to build wharves, docks, and other structures on the harbor areas, and Laws 1907, p. 674, c. 244, empowers railroads to appropriate lands by condemnation, but exempts harbor areas. Held, that the word "commerce" as used in section 1 included commerce by both land and sea, and that the words "other structures" in section 2 was equivalent in meaning to the words "other conveniences" in the first section; and hence neither the Constitution nor the statute precluded a railroad company from acquiring the right to cross the harbor area by obtaining a lease of the right of way from the state, provided that in doing so it did not interfere with navigation of the stream. State ex rel. Hulme v. Puget Sound & G. H. Ry. Co., 103 Pac. 809, 811, 54 Wash. 530.

The words "other structures," as used in Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Clark, 101 Fed. 678, 41 C. C. A. 597, in which it is held that "a riparian owner may construct necessary embankments, dykes, or other structures to maintain his bank of the stream in its original condition," does not include a "jetty," which is a dam projected into the stream for the purpose of deflecting the current so as to deepen the channel, or to form an eddy below the obstruction in which sediment may be deposited, thereby extending and protecting the banks. Morton v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 151, 153, 48 Or. 444, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344, 120 Am. St. Rep. 827.

As used in an act to regulate the location of "pesthouses, crematories, and other objectionable structures," the word "structures" means some structure of like character; that is, some sort of a building. Frelinghuysen v. Town of Morristown, 70 Atl. 77, 79, 76 N. J. Law, 271.

Other suitable articles

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 499, providing that the county surveyor shall be furnished "with all necessary cases and other suitable articles," and section 342 giving the county commissioners general charge of the county property and the management of the county funds and business, the county commissioners are bound to procure for the surveyor a surveyor's transit, which is within the quoted words "other suitable articles." State ex rel. Manning v. Major, 97 Pac. 249, 50 Wash. 355.

Other sums

The term "other sums," as used in an option for purchase of a mine, providing for certain payments and certain work at certain times, by the purchaser, and that if the purchaser shall fail to pay any of the installments of the purchase price, or shall fail to comply with any of the covenants or conditions, the contract shall terminate, and all payments or "other sums" which may have been paid by the purchaser shall be forfeited and become liquidated damages, includes money paid for work done on the mining claims referred to. K. P. Min. Co. v. Jacobson, 83 Pac. 728, 730, 30 Utah, 115, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 755.

Other supplies

California county government act (St. 1897, p. 459, c. 277, § 25, subd. 8) confers express authority on the board of supervisors to furnish a courthouse without requiring competitive bidding. Section 4 (page 452) gives the board general authority to purchase such personal property as may be necessary in the exercise of its powers; and section 25, subd. 21 (page 464), declares that the board shall annually advertise for bids for furnishing the county with stationery, clothing, bedding, groceries, provisions, drugs, medicines, "and all other supplies." Held, that the term "other supplies" had reference to ordinary supplies which the board was required to keep for use and replenish annually, if needed for distribution among the county officers, and did not include furnishings for the courthouse, which the board was authorized to purchase without advertising for bids. Riverside County v. Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co., 86 Pac. 900, 901, 3 Cal. App. 691.

Other tangible property

The term "other tangible property," in a statute providing that every person engaged in the business of buying and selling grain for profit shall be a grain broker and shall, at the time required by the act, determine under oath the average amount of capital invested in such business, exclusive of real estate or "other tangible property" assessed separately for the preceding year, and taxes shall be charged on such average capital the same as other property, is equivalent to all tangible property, including real estate, and where, in ascertaining the average capital for assessment as such, all tangible property that is capable of being assessed separately, including real estate, is separately assessed, and the value thereof deducted, the object of the statute is reached, and the constitutional requirement that all property shall be valued for taxation and required to bear its share of the public burden is accomplished, and the tangible property of a grain broker, including real estate, must be assessed in precisely the same manner as the property employed in other ways is assessed. Central Granaries Co. v. Lancaster County, 113 N. W. 190, 201, 77 Neb. 319.

Other taxing officer

The words "other taxing officers," as used in the act abolishing the state board of taxation and creating in lieu thereof a board for equalization, revision, review, and enforcement of tax assessments, and providing in section 34 that, where complaint is made to the created board by any person or corporation aggrieved by the assessment of property, the board shall have the power to review and correct the action of the local assessors or "other taxing officers" and of all "boards of tax review" by reducing or increasing such assessment, refers only to local taxing officers, and the term "boards of tax review" referred to in the statute means boards that exercise an appellate review of the acts of local assessors and other local taxing officers. Tuckerton R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 69, 70, 75 N. J. Law, 157.

Other thing

In an action on an insurance policy, a plea averring that the application made by assured provided, among "other things," that all statements contained in the application were true, and then alleging a false statement by assured, was bad in failing to allege or show that by the contract, taken as a whole, the answers were warranted as true and amounted to more than untrue representations immaterial to the risk. For all that is shown in the plea, the "other things" they aver to be in the application and contract may so control the particular provision therein mentioned as declaring a warranty as to show the answers relating to certain disease were not intended to be and were not in fact warranted to be true. Schloss & Kahn v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 37 South. 701, 141 Ala. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 58.

Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 323, c. 466, § 780, authorizes the marshal to enter any building to examine "the stoves and pipes thereto, ranges, furnaces and heating apparatus of every kind whatsoever, including the chimneys, flues and pipes with which the same may be connected, engine rooms, boilers, ovens, kettles, and also all chemical apparatus or other things which in his opinion may be dangerous in causing or promoting fires." Held, that the "other things" are not limited to the classes previously specified, and that a dumb-waiter shaft, extending from the basement to the roof, but without connection with the outer air at the roof, may be condemned as dangerous, and specific changes ordered therein. Lantry v. Mede, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1099, 1100, 58 Misc. Rep. 221.

The title of Laws 1899, p. 332, "An act for the improvement of the navigation of rivers and their tributaries . . . and for collecting tolls and charges thereon for the floating, driving and handling of sawlogs and other timber products and the navigation of barges and rafts," was broad enough to embrace "booms" and "bralls," which are composed of logs and timber products. St. Joe Imp. Co. v. Laumierster, 112 Pac. 683, 684, 19 Idaho, 66.

The terms "logs, lumber, or other timber," as used in Acts 1903, pp. 682-689, requiring persons hauling "logs, lumber, or other timber of whatsoever description over the public roads of the country to secure a license," do not, in the connection used, include firewood. Kenamer v. State, 43 South. 482, 483, 150 Ala. 74.

Other unlawful disposition

Where accused ordered liquor for another from a dealer without the state, receiving an amount sufficient to pay therefor, accused was an agent, and was not liable under Code 1907, § 7363, making it an offense to aid in an unlawful sale or purchase or other unlawful disposition of liquor, or to act as agent of the purchaser in procuring an unlawful purchase, etc.; the separation of accused's part of the liquor from that ordered for the other not being a "sale" or "other unlawful disposition of" liquor within the statute. Vernon v. State, 50 South. 57, 58, 161 Ala. 83.

Other unprofessional conduct

Act April 17, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 227, c. 123) § 11, authorizes the refusal of a license to practice medicine for a conviction of a crime of the grade of a felony, or one which involves moral turpitude, or procuring or aiding or abetting the procuring of a criminal abortion, or for "other grossly unprofessional or dishonorable conduct of a character likely to deceive or defraud the public." Held, that by the use of the word "other," in the clause quoted, it was intended that the conduct referred to therein should be similar in its nature to that designated in the preceding subdivision and defined as a crime of the grade of a felony, etc. Morse v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 122 S. W. 446, 447, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 93.

Other valuable minerals or deposits

The words "other valuable deposits" (Rev. St. § 2820) in the clause relating to the location of lode mining claims, "mining claims upon veins or lodes of quartz, or other rock in place bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, tin, copper, or other valuable deposits," include nonmetalliferous, as well as metalliferous, deposits. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., 157 Fed. 203, 205, 84 C. C. A. 651.

Const. art. 13, § 4, provides that all mines and mining claims, etc., containing or bearing gold, silver, copper, lead, coal, or other valuable mineral deposits, shall be taxed, etc., and the net annual proceeds of all mines and mining claims shall be taxed, etc. At the time the Constitution was framed the specified metals were the only ones mined in large quantities in the territory, and coal, with the exception of lime and common rock, was the only nonmetallic product mined in quantity sufficient to justify the method of taxation proposed. Held, that the classification was not intended as a limitation, but an enumeration of substances then produced in quantity sufficient to warrant the method of taxation imposed, and, under the exception to the rule of ejusdem generis that where the particular things enumerated are complete so that there remain no others of like kind, then the things that fall within the general words must be assumed to be of a different kind and not ejusdem generis with those enumerated, the phrase "other valuable mineral deposits" embraces all mineral deposits, including a deposit of gypsum and the net annual profits from the sale of products manufactured therefrom are taxable under the section. Nephi Plaster & Mfg. Co. v. Juab County, 93 Pac. 53, 54, 33 Utah, 114, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043.

The words "other minerals" or "other valuable minerals," taken in the broadest sense, would include petroleum oil, but, if the parties did not intend that the title to petroleum and gas should pass the title remains in the owner of the fee. A deed purporting to convey all minerals underlying described land does not convey the natural gas thereunder, where the parties do not contemplate a conveyance thereof. McKinney's Heirs v.

Central Kentucky Natural Gas Co., 120 S. W. 814, 315, 134 Ky. 239, 20 Ann. Cas. 934 (quoting and adopting definition in Donahue, Petroleum & Gas, p. 220).

Other value in business

Where the business of a decedent is continued by the administrator, the good will of such business is an asset subject to a transfer tax, under the term "other value in business." In re Keahon's Estate, 113 N. Y. Supp. 926, 927, 60 Misc. Rep. 508.

Other vehicles

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, subd. 1, authorizing an action for death by the negligence of the "proprietor, owner, charterer, hirer of any railroad, steamboat, stagecoach or other vehicle for the conveyance of goods or passengers," applies to carriers transporting persons or freight from some point of origin to some more or less distant point of destination, and does not apply to an elevator in an office building used to transport persons visiting the building; the words "other vehicle" meaning a vehicle performing, substantially at least, the same office and serving the same necessities as a railroad, steamboat, or stagecoach. Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Hanks, 137 S. W. 1120, 1125, 104 Tex. 320. Under the rule ejusdem generis, the words "other vehicles for the conveyance of goods or passengers" should be construed to mean vehicles for the conveyance of goods or passengers for hire, and that the section therefore did not confer a right of action for wrongful death caused by the alleged negligence of the driver of a private vehicle, used solely to further the owner's private business. Pulong v. Jacob Dold Packing Co., 182 Fed. 356, 359.

In the title to Laws 1909, c. 259 (Rev. Laws Supp. 1909, §§ 1278—1, 1278—25), "An act to license and define the road regulations of motor vehicles and other vehicles," etc., the term "other vehicles" is not limited to other vehicles of the same nature not usually known as "motor vehicles," such as steam or electrically propelled vehicles. State v. Buslan, 127 N. W. 495, 496, 111 Minn. 488, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682.

A municipal ordinance, providing that no person shall set up, employ, or use any hackney coach, cab, or "other vehicle" for the conveyance of passengers, for hire, without a license, though passed before the advent of automobiles, includes taxicabs used for hire. State v. Dunklee, 84 Atl. 40, 76 N. H. 439, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 754.

Other works

The words "other works," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 1039, which provides that misdemeanor convicts shall be sentenced to work on the public works, or on such other works as the county authorities may employ the chain gang, authorizes the employment of chain gangs on private works, providing the actual control of the prisoners is exercised by the county authorities. McDonald v. State, 64 S. E. 1108, 1110, 6 Ga. App. 332.

OTHER INSURANCE

Where the insured at the time of applying for insurance, informed the company's agent that there was a certain amount of insurance on the property, and that additional insurance was desired, and the company issued additional insurance, the continuation of the existing insurance, either by renewals of policies, already thereon, or by substituting other policies, was not "other insurance," within the company's policy, stipulating that it should be void if the insured should thereafter procure other insurance. Lewis v. Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 525, 527, 93 App. Div. 157.

The term "other insurance," used in an indorsement on a fire policy, means insurance in addition to that effected by the policy itself. De Loach & Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 62 S. E. 473, 474, 4 Ga. App. 746.

A void insurance policy does not constitute "other insurance," within a clause providing that a certain policy shall be void if insured has or shall make any other insurance on the property. Hayes v. Milford Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 49 N. E. 754, 756, 170 Mass. 492.

OTHERS

The word "others," in a complaint alleging that the action is brought for the benefit of plaintiff and of all "others" similarly situated and interested in the questions involved, and who may contribute to the expenses of the same, means two at least. Climax Specialty Co. v. Seneca Button Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 822, 824, 54 Misc. Rep. 132.

"* * * In order to read the expression 'survivors,' in a will, as meaning 'others,' there must be a gift over, or some other indication of the manifest intention to oust the ordinary interpretation." Hill v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 60 Atl. 446, 445, 101 Md. 60, 4 Ann. Cas. 577 (quoting and adopting definition in Anderson v. Brown, 85 Atl. 937, 84 Md. 271).

OTHERWISE

See Not Otherwise.

The words "or otherwise" in law, when used as a general phrase following an enumeration of particulars, are commonly interpreted in a restricted sense, as referring to such other matters as are kindred to the classes before mentioned, receiving an ejusdem generis interpretation. New York Life Ins. Co. v. McDearmon, 114 S. W. 57, 59, 153 Mo. App. 671 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5105); Fleming v. City of Rome, 61 S. E. 5, 6, 130 Ga. 383 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5105).

In Rev. St. § 903, providing that any officer of the state, or any other person, who shall convert to his own use, in any way whatever, or shall use, by way of investment in any kind of property or merchandise, or shall loan, with or without interest, or use in any other manner than as directed by law, any portion of the public money which he is authorized to collect, or which may be entrusted to his keeping or disbursement, or for any other purpose, shall be guilty of an embezzlement of the same, the words "or for any other purpose" are equivalent to "or otherwise." An indictment is not bad on the ground that the pleader used the words "or otherwise" in framing the indictment instead of "or for any other purpose." State v. Dudenhefer, 47 South. 614, 617, 618, 122 La. 288.

Specific language in one section of a by-law will prevail over a vague and general term "or otherwise" contained in another section of the by-law. Thus, where section 330 of the by-laws of a mutual benefit association provided that, if any designation of a beneficiary should fail "for illegality or otherwise," the benefit should be payable to the person or persons mentioned in class first, would be controlled by section 331, providing that in the event of the death before the decease of a member of one or more of the beneficiaries designated by him in accordance with the laws of the order, if he shall have made no other or further disposition thereof, as provided in the laws of the order upon his death, that part of the benefit made payable to the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries shall be paid to the surviving beneficiary or the surviving beneficiaries equally. Polhill v. Battle, 52 S. E. 87, 88, 124 Ga. 111.

In an action against the sureties on a bond given by a widow for community property, in which it appeared that prior to the date of the bond she had used the proceeds of the community property to pay debts for improvements on her own property, and where defendants contended that her use constituted a devastavit, a charge that defendants were not liable is she used the proceeds for the payment of debts and support of the children "or otherwise," before the date of the bond, was erroneous. Neaves v. Griffin (Tex.) 80 S. W. 420, 421.

Ribbons composed chiefly of silk, but in part of cotton, are not "ribbons * * * of cotton, * * * whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 320, 30 Stat. 179, for the word "otherwise" is there used with the meaning of "not," and not as relating to other materials than india rubber. Such ribbons are properly assessed as manufactures of silk, under paragraph 391 of Schedule I. Gartner, Sons & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 957, 958.

Otherwise change

Authority under the charter of the city of Atlanta "to open, lay out, to widen, straighten, or otherwise change streets" within the city does not comprehend the power to abandon a thoroughfare and open another to take its place over a strip of land running parallel with, but some 26 feet distant from, the nearest boundary line of the street sought to be vacated and devoted to a purpose inconsistent with its use by the public. Coker v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 481, 482, 123 Ga. 483.

Otherwise convey

The term "otherwise convey," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 651, providing that every corporation shall have power to hold, purchase, sell, mortgage, or "otherwise convey" such real estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require, embraces the power to lease the real estate of the corporation. Starke v. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co., 86 S. W. 1, 3, 98 Tex. 542, 4 Ann. Cas. 1057.

Otherwise dispose of

The phrase "or otherwise dispose of," as used in a statute making it an offense to "sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of" liquor without a license, must be construed as extending only to a disposition in ejusdem generis with a sale or a gift. They are not to be extended to any and every act which may be said to be a disposition. It would be a departure from the rule of statutory construction to give the general words "or otherwise dispose of" so loose and expansive a construction as to include within them any act not akin to a sale or gift, not intended as, and not having in it any of the properties of, a parting with property by one person to another. Where defendant, having no possession or otherwise of whisky, at the request of another got and gave it to the latter, it being the property and in the possession of a third person, and taken from him without any authority, there was no violation of the statute. Maxwell v. State, 37 South. 266, 140 Ala. 131.

In view of Acts 1909 (Sp. Sess.) p. 91, § 31, providing that the term "otherwise dispose of" following the words "sold, offered for sale," etc., when used in any indictment, shall include a barter, exchange, giving away, furnishing, or other manner of disposition, the delivery of a bottle of whisky by accused to an acquaintance to keep for him, while accused went before the grand jury to testify, would not support an indictment charging that he sold or "otherwise disposed of" intoxicants contrary to law, in absence of a showing that he intended or consented that such acquaintance could use some part of the liquor. O'Brien v. State, 57 South. 1028, 1029, 3 Ala. App. 173.

The words "otherwise 'disqualified'" and "not 'disqualified,'" employed in Administration Act (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 270, c. 3) § 5, provided that where two executors are appointed by the same will, and one or more of them dies, refuses to qualify or is otherwise disqualified, letters testamentary shall be granted to the other person, not renouncing and not disqualified, plainly mean not otherwise legally incompetent, or not legally competent under the statute. Clark v. Patterson, 73 N. E. 806, 809, 214 Ill. 533, 105 Am. St. Rep. 127.

Otherwise improve

Under a grant to a city "otherwise to improve any street," a city had power to pass an ordinance condemning and ordering the removal of an old brick sidewalk. Scott v. City of Marshall, 85 S. W. 98, 99, 110 Mo. App. 178.

Otherwise injured

Crimes Act, § 107 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2100), provides that every person who shall maliciously injure specified property "or cut down, lop, girdle, or otherwise injure or destroy any fruit or ornamental shade tree, being the property of another," shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held that, by the use of the words "or otherwise," the malice which is made an ingredient of the offense may exist against the owner "or otherwise," viz., against the property itself. State v. Boles, 74 Pac. 630, 633, 68 Kan. 167, 1 Ann. Cas. 491.

Where insured, in his application for accident insurance, warranted that he had never had "paralysis, fits of any kind, brain disorder, diabetes, hernia, varicose veins, or any bodily or mental infirmity, injuries or wounds," or suffered the loss of a limb or an eye, except as stated, and that he had never been ruptured or "otherwise injured," the words "injuries or wounds" and "otherwise injured" should be construed to refer only to such serious other wounds or injuries not specified as might affect the risk. Trenton v. North American Acc. Ins. Co. (Tex.) 89 S. W. 276, 277.

Otherwise injuriously affected

The clause "misrepresented or otherwise injuriously affected," in Pen. Code, § 514, subd. 3, providing that any person who shall utter a writing purporting to have been written or signed by another, which writing the person uttering it knows to be false, forged, or counterfeited, and by the uttering of which the sentiments, opinions, conduct, interests, or the rights of the person purporting to have signed it shall be "misrepresented or otherwise injuriously affected," is guilty of forgery, is in the alternative, and the disjunctive clause "or otherwise injuriously affected" does not qualify or govern the meaning of the word "misrepresented," and means that if the opinions, conduct, rights, etc., be injuriously affected by other means, or in other respects, or from other causes than misrepresentation, an offense is committed, the same as if committed by misrepresentation. People v. Abeel, 91 N. Y. Supp. 699, 703, 45 Misc. Rep. 86.

Otherwise payable

An accident insurance policy provided generally for the payment of $5,000 in case of accidental death, or $10,000 if the fatal injuries should be received in certain specified circumstances. It also provided that, in case of suicide, the company should only be liable for one-twentieth of the "amount 'otherwise payable.'" The assured committed suicide in a manner and place in no way connected with the particular circumstances which would render the company liable for $10,000. Held, that the "amount otherwise payable" plainly meant the amount payable had the death been accidental, and not by suicide; i. e., one-twentieth of $5,000. Van Slooten v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 79 N. Y. Supp. 608, 609, 78 App. Div. 527.

Otherwise proved

The words "otherwise be proved," in Rev. Code 1871, § 1101, providing that if any person shall be a subscribing witness to a will wherein any devise or bequest is made to such subscribing witness, and the will cannot "otherwise be proved," such devise or bequest shall be void, refer to the execution of the will, and not to proof of its contents. Swanzy v. Kolb (Miss.) 46 South. 549, 550.

Otherwise provided

Laws 1860, p. 592, c. 345, provides that the lessees or occupants of any building which shall, without any fault or neglect on their part, be destroyed or so injured by the elements or any other cause as to be untenable shall not be liable for rent to the lessor or owner, after such destruction or injury, unless "otherwise expressly provided" by written agreement or covenant, etc. Held that, where a lease provided that, in case of partial damage by fire not sufficient to render the premises untenable, the landlord should repair as speedily as possible, and in case of total destruction the rent should be paid up to the time of the fire and the lease be terminated, and, in case the damage by fire was so extensive as to render the premises untenable, the rent was to cease to such time as the building could be put in complete repair, without any provision for termination of the lease, the rights of the parties were "otherwise expressly provided," and the statute did not apply. Weinberg v. Savitzky, 93 N. Y. Supp. 435, 436, 47 Misc. Rep. 132.

Where the city charter provides that one convicted in the recorder's court may appeal to the city court, it is "otherwise provided," within Code 1896, § 2969, providing that, if not otherwise provided by the charter of a city, an appeal to the circuit court will lie from a judgment of conviction for a violation of an ordinance. Reid v. Greene, 47 South. 195, 156 Ala. 640.

Statutes 1907, p. 531, c. 550, regulating construction, alteration, and maintenance of buildings in Boston, by section 12 declares every building shall have, with reference to its height, condition, construction, etc., reasonable means of egress in case of fire, satisfactory to the commissioner. Section 13 provides no part of any structure, except cornices, permanent awnings, string courses, window caps and sills, bay windows, under such terms, regulations, and restrictions as may be required by the mayor and board of aldermen, and outside means of egress as "otherwise provided," shall project over any public way or square. Section 17 prohibits less than two means of egress from every story of a building used above the first for storage or sale of merchandise, one of which means may be an outside fire escape. Held, that the phrase "otherwise provided," in section 13, refers to provisions of sections 12 and 17, and hence, where it appeared sufficient means of egress satisfactory to the building commissioner were provided in a building, the erection of a proposed covered way attached thereto was within the general prohibition of section 13, and properly disallowed. Jordan v. Swasey, 89 N. E. 108, 203 Mass. 48.

Otherwise provided by law

As used in Pol. Code 1895, § 4350, declaring that the county treasurer shall dispense the county's moneys only on county warrants issued by the county clerk based on orders of the board of county commissioners, "or as otherwise provided by law," the words "or as otherwise provided by law" include jurors' and witnesses' certificates, and hence the restriction of the treasurer's power of payment applies as well to them as to other claims against the county. Silver Bow County v. Davies, 107 Pac. 81, 84, 40 Mont. 418.

The appeal required by Act June 22, 1860, c. 188 (12 Stat. 85, 87) § 11, to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States if the decree of the District Court in certain private land claim cases is against the United States, is "otherwise provided by law" within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, 26 Stat. 528, § 8, making the Circuit Court of Appeals the proper tribunal for the review of final decisions of the District Court in other than certain excepted cases, which include those where it is otherwise provided by law. United States v. Dalcour, 27 Sup. Ct. 58, 59, 203 U. S. 408, 51 L. Ed. 248.

Otherwise united in interest

The owner of the premises and a contractor for work thereon are not joint contractors as to a subcontractor, or "otherwise united in interest," within Code Civ. Proc.

§ 399, providing that an attempt to commence an action is the commencement thereof against each defendant, when the summons is delivered to be served to officers of the county in which one of two codefendants, who are joint contractors or otherwise united in interest, resides. Martens v. O'Neill, 115 N. Y. Supp. 260, 262, 131 App. Div. 123.

Admissions in pleadings or otherwise

"Otherwise," as used in Code 1899, c. 64, § 8, providing that divorce suits shall be conducted as other suits in equity, except that the bill shall not be taken for confessed, and, whether the defendant answer or not, the cause shall be heard independently of the admissions of either party in the pleadings or "otherwise," operates in a suit for divorce on the ground of defendant's adultery to exclude evidence of defendant's confessions of adultery made in the country. Trough v. Trough, 53 S. E. 630, 634, 59 W. Va. 464, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 940, 8 Ann. Cas. 837 (citing and adopting Hampton v. Hampton, 12 S. E. 340, 87 Va. 148).

Advancement or otherwise

The word "otherwise," as used in Civ. Code art. 1227, defining the collation of goods as the supposed or real return to the mass of the succession which an heir makes of property, which he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided, together with the other effects of the succession, refers to the provisions contained in the other articles relating to collation, and includes everything that may have been received by the heir from the parent himself, save where the latter has indicated unequivocally that it was intended as an advantage. Sibley v. Pierson, 51 South. 502, 513, 125 La. 478.

Assignment or otherwise

In Code, § 4604, providing that no person from whom a party in interest derives his interest by assignment or "otherwise" shall be examined as a witness as to any personal transaction with a deceased person against an executor of such person, the word "otherwise" is of broad significance. It means that, if the right asserted by a claimant depends for its existence and validity upon a transaction between the deceased and a third person, the evidence of such third person shall not be allowed to prove the transaction. McClanahan v. McClanahan, 105 N. W. 833, 834, 129 Iowa, 411.

The word "otherwise," as used in Code, § 4604, providing that no person interested in the event of an action, nor any person from whom any party or interested person derives any title by assignment or otherwise, shall be a witness as to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person deceased, means another manner or way, as by devise or descent, and "derives" is defined as meaning "to receive, as from a source or origin, to obtain by descent or transmission"; and the statute does not disqualify an agent as a witness, since an agent is not interested in the result of the action or bound by the judgment. Stiles v. Beed, 130 N. W. 376, 380, 151 Iowa, 86.

Contiguous property or otherwise

As used in a constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to vest cities, villages, and towns with the right to make local improvements by special assessment, special taxation of contiguous property, or "otherwise," the words "or otherwise" were used for the purpose of excluding possibility of misapprehension that, because only cities, towns, and villages could be authorized to make local improvements by special assessment or special taxation, they could not be authorized to make them by general taxation. City of Chicago v. Brede, 75 N. E. 1044, 1045, 218 Ill. 528.

Credit or otherwise

"On credit or otherwise," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 1115a, authorizing towns to purchase road machinery on credit or otherwise, means that the purchase may be made to be paid for out of the general fund and not made on credit to be paid out of special taxes. Bank of Park River v. Town of Norton, 104 N. W. 525, 526, 14 N. D. 143.

Deed, mortgage, or otherwise

Const. art. 3, § 28, providing that a homestead set off and recorded shall not be waived by deed of conveyance, mortgage, or "otherwise," includes a devise, and prevents the alienation of the homestead, either by deed or devise, or in any other manner, unless the wife joins the husband in the disposition. Davis v. Millady, 75 S. E. 363, 364, 92 S. C. 135.

Forfeiture or otherwise

Under the rule ejusdem generis, the words "or otherwise," as used in Comp. Laws, § 8534, providing that all corporations whose charters shall expire by their own limitation, or shall be annulled by forfeiture, "or otherwise," shall nevertheless continue for three years after dissolution to prosecute and defend suits, and to enable them gradually to close their concerns, to dispose of and convey their property, and to divide their capital stock, but not to continue the business for which they may have been established, should be referred to corporate termination by circumstances or acts not dependent on the voluntary act of the corporation, and not to voluntary proceedings in its behalf; the provision of the section being reasonable and beneficial as applied to a corporation whose charter has expired or has been forfeited at the suit of the Attorney General, but being inapplicable to dissolution proceedings under sections 10,852-10,890. Jacobs v. E. Bement's Sons, 126 N. W. 1043, 1044, 161 Mich. 415.

Indebtedness due under policy or otherwise

A provision of a life policy that any indebtedness due the company under any provision of the policy, "or otherwise," including any balance of the premiums remaining unpaid, will be deducted upon settlement of the policy, could not be construed to cover merely indebtedness arising under the policy, but covered all debts due the company, and would include advances made to insured on a running account. Webb v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., 115 S. W. 481, 482, 134 Mo. App. 576.

Investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise

As used in Bates' Ann. St. § 2731, providing that all property, real or personal, in this state, whether belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be taxed, etc., the word "otherwise" includes only such property or investments as are specifically mentioned and required to be taxed in the subsequent sections, and property or investments not so mentioned cannot be taxed. Chisholm v. Shields, 66 N. E. 93, 94, 67 Ohio St. 374.

Manufacture or otherwise

"Changed in condition by manufacture or otherwise," as used in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 5, 30 Stat. 205, means only changed in condition by manufacture, or by some process similar to manufacture. But any artificial process is a process of manufacture, and surely the words "or otherwise" cannot be considered to mean only processes similar to manufacture, for that construction would be meaningless. The words unquestionably mean changed in condition from any cause, and, as "remanufacture" would cover all artificial processes, so "or otherwise" will cover such changes as occur from natural causes, such as those here under discussion. Franklin Sugar Refining Co. v. United States, 137 Fed. 655, 658.

Negligence or otherwise

Plaintiff, having contracted to construct the superstructure of a bridge, agreed to indemnify the bridge company against all liability or damage on account of accident whether occasioned by the omission or negligence of plaintiff, its agents, or workmen "or otherwise," during the continuance of the agreement, plaintiff to pay all judgments recovered by reason of such accident by reason of any suit or suits against the bridge company, including costs, expenses, etc., and to give the bridge company an indemnifying bond against all claims for damages to persons or property of whatsoever nature arising during construction of the bridge. Held that the words "or otherwise" did not broaden the scope of plaintiff's liability which was limited to accidents arising from acts of negligence and omissions by plaintiff, its agents and servants, and, so construed, was not contrary to public policy. Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Washington & Berkeley Bridge Co., 194 Fed. 1011, 1017.

Owner or otherwise

The consent of the sublessee of the owner to, or his knowledge of, repairs made by a garage keeper to an automobile, was not sufficient to give the garage keeper a lien thereon, under Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 184, giving a lien for repairs made by order of the owner, whether conditional vendee, mortgagor, or otherwise; the words "or otherwise," in the statute, not including a lessee or sublessee. Lloyd v. Kilpatrick, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 1098, 71 Misc. Rep. 19.

Prohibited by law or otherwise

The word "otherwise," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 428, as amended by Acts 1897, p. 39, which is by its terms made applicable only in those counties, cities, or other localities where the sale of liquors "is prohibited by law, high license or otherwise" really means nothing in the statute. When the Legislature used the words prohibited by law, it exhausted the subject, and the addition of the words "high license or otherwise" was wasteful and ridiculous excess. These general words are sometimes added to specific enumeration in statutes out of abundance of caution, but they usually mean nothing, and the use of the word "otherwise," following the words "prohibited by law," meant that the otherwise prohibition of the sale of liquor was to be a legal prohibition; that is, prohibited by the law of high license or otherwise prohibited by law. Rose v. State, 58 S. E. 20, 22, 1 Ga. App. 600.

Received in cash or otherwise

Ky. St. 1903, § 4226, provides that every life insurance company, other than fraternal assessment life insurance companies, not organized under the laws of the state, but doing business therein, shall annually return to the Auditor of Public Accounts, for deposit in the insurance department, a statement under oath of all premiums receipted for on the face of the policy for original insurance, and all renewal premiums received in cash or otherwise on business done in the state during the year, and shall at the same time pay into the state treasury a tax of $2 upon each 100 of said premiums as ascertained. Held, that where an insurance company in its policy stipulated for a premium larger than was actually needed to carry the risks insured against under ordinary conditions, but which might be needed in case of extraordinary conditions, and, in order to provide in advance against such a contingency, collected as premium for the first year the full amount stipulated for, setting aside so much thereof as was overpayment as a guarantee against misfortune, and then for the premiums for the succeeding years did not collect the entire amount stipulated for because of the sufficiency of the overpayment of the first year's premium to guard against additional risks, but designated the part not collected from the policy holder as a dividend, the company was not liable to taxation on the entire premiums stipulated for in the policy, but only for the amount actually collected, as the part of such premiums designated by the company as a dividend was not in fact a dividend, but merely an overcharge, which was never collected from the policy holder; and hence was not received by the company as "cash or otherwise" within the terms of the statute. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 107 S. W. 802, 803, 128 Ky. 174.

Vacancy created by death, resignation, or otherwise

As used in Laws 1901, p. 18, c. 2, § 1, providing that, whenever a vacancy in any county office shall occur by reason of death, resignation, "or otherwise," it shall be the duty of the Governor of the territory to fill such vacancy by appointment, and that the appointee shall be entitled to hold the office until his successor is elected and qualifies, the words "or otherwise" should not be construed ejusdem generis, but rather as extending the scope of the statute to include vacancies other than such as were created by death or resignation. Territory ex rel. Curran v. Gutierrez, 78 Pac. 139, 144, 12 N. M. 254.

UGHT

Const. 1890, § 71, providing that the title of a statute ought to indicate clearly its subject-matter, leaves to the Legislature the sufficiency of the title of an act; the word "ought" in such section being used in an admonitory or advisory sense. City of Jackson v. State, 59 South. 873, 874, 102 Miss. 663.

As synonymous with should

An instruction that, when a criminal charge is to be proved on circumstantial evidence, the proof ought to be not only consistent with the prisoner's guilt, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, is not erroneous in failing to make that condition mandatory; the word "ought" meaning to be bound in duty or by moral obligation, to be necessary or becoming, and to be synonymous with "should." State v. Blaine, 124 Pac. 516, 517, 45 Mont. 482.

The phrase "our children," in a will giving and bequeathing to testator's wife all his property, "to hold and dispose of as she may think best for the welfare of herself and our children," and suggesting that a son be given at his maturity whatever sum is necessary to make his property equal to the other son's property at his majority, and providing that in case of further issue the same rule to apply, embraces an after-born child, and an after-born child is included with the children living at the date of the will in the benefit, if any, of the provisions for the children. Kidder's Ex'rs v. Kidder (N. J.) 56 Atl. 154, 135.

OUSTER

Discontinuance within law relating to ouster, see Discontinuance.

"Ouster" is a wrongful dispossession or exclusion of a party from real property who is entitled to the possession. Ferris v. McNally, 121 Pac. 889, 893, 45 Mont. 20.

"An entry by one man on the land of another is an 'ouster' of the legal possession arising from the title, or is not, according to the intention with which it is done. If made under claim or color of right, it is an 'ouster'; otherwise it is a mere trespass. The intention guides the entry and fixes its character." Swope v. Ward, 84 S. W. 895, 897, 185 Mo. 316 (quoting and adopting definition in Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. [36 U. S.] 41, 9 L. Ed. 624); Jasperson v. Scharnikow, 150 Fed. 571, 573, 80 C. C. A. 373, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1178 (quoting and adopting definition in Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. [36 U. S.] 51, 9 L. Ed. 624).

"Ouster," or dispossession, according to Blackstone, is a wrong or injury that carries with it the amotion of possession, for thereby the wrongdoer gets into actual occupation of the land or hereditament, and obliges him that has a right to seek his legal remedy, in order to gain possession of the freehold and damages for the injury sustained. It is effected by one of the following methods: (1) Abatement. (2) Intrusion. (3) Disseisin. (4) Discontinuance. (5) De-forcement. Dobbins v. Dobbins, 53 S. E. 870, 872, 141 N. C. 210, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, 115 Am. St. Rep. 682 (citing 3 Black. Com. 167).

"Ouster by abatement" is where a person dies seised of an inheritance, and, before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger who has no right makes an entry and gets possession of the freehold. It is a figurative expression to denote that the rightful possession of the freehold of the heir or devisee is overthrown by the rude intervention of a stranger, and is always consequent upon the descent or devise of an estate in fee simple. Brown v. Burdick, 25 Ohio St. 260, 268 (quoting 3 Bl. Comm. 167-169).

"Ouster" means very much the same thing as "adverse possession." Earnest v. Little River Land & Lumber Co., 75 S. W. 1122, 1126, 109 Tenn. 427 (citing Tied. Real Prop. § 693).

A conveyance alone does not amount to an "ouster," where no possession is taken in pursuance of it, and the same is true of a mortgage. Scottish-American Mortgage Co. v. Bunckley, 41 South. 502, 503, 88 Miss. 641, 117 Am. St. Rep. 763 (citing Freem. Cotenancy, § 226; Warv. Eject. § 450 et seq.; Wood, Lim. p. 621).

By tenant in common

"'Ouster,' in a legal sense, is the wrongful dispossession or exclusion from real property of a party entitled to the possession thereof. As applied to cotenants, limitations do not begin to run in favor of one against another until actual ouster or some other act or acts amounting to a total denial of the right and until notice or knowledge of the act or acts relied on as an ouster is brought home to the party dispossessed. The notice or knowledge required must be either actual, or the act or acts relied on as an ouster must be of such an open and notorious character as to be notice of themselves, or reasonably sufficient to put the disseised cotenant on inquiry which, if diligently pursued, will lead to notice or knowledge in fact." Clark v. Beard, 53 S. E. 597, 598, 59 W. Va. 669.

A tenant in common in sole possession may make his possession adverse to his cotenant by repudiating the relation of tenancy in common between them, and any act or conduct signifying intention to occupy and enjoy the land exclusively, of which the tenant out of possession has knowledge or sufficient information to put him on inquiry amounts to an "ouster," and from the time he has notice thereof the possession is adverse. Russell v. Tennant, 60 S. E. 609, 611, 63 W. Va. 623, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1024.

Where, on redemption of certain land from foreclosure for the benefit of the heirs and distributees of the former owner, the deed was made to J., one of such heirs, in his own right, and he thereafter held exclusive possession of the land, paid taxes thereon, collected rents, mortgaged the land, and openly claimed it as his own, such acts were insufficient to constitute an "ouster" of the interest of his cotenants, who had knowledge that the interest held by J. had been acquired under a contract made for the benefit of all. Donason v. Barbero, 82 N. E. 620, 625, 230 Ill. 138.

A tenant in common in possession cannot occupy the opposing positions of recognizing and purchasing the interests of some of his cotenants, and at the same time claim that he has ousted other cotenants. Before a tenant in common can rely on an "ouster" of his cotenant, he must claim the entire title to the land in himself, and must hold the exclusive and adverse possession against every other person. Schoonover v. Tyner, 84 Pac. 124, 125, 72 Kan. 475.

The mere taking of a tax title by a tenant in common to unimproved wild land, without any exclusive residence on and occupation of it, is not such an "ouster" of his cotenants as will set the statute of limitations in motion. Barrett v. McCarty, 104 N. W. 907, 909, 20 S. D. 75.

OUT OF BANKS (Of Stream)

When it is said that a river is "out of its banks," no more is implied than that its volume then exceeds what it ordinarily is. Whether high or low, the entire volume at any one time constitutes the water of the river at such time, and is no longer surface water, and the land over which its current flows must be regarded as its channel, so that, when swollen by rains and melting snows, it extends and flows over the bottoms along its course (that is, its flood channel), as when, by droughts, it is reduced to its minimum, it is then in its low-water channel. Price v. Oregon R. Co., 83 Pac. 843, 846, 47 Or. 350.

OUT OF COURT

The words "out of court" are the accepted and ordinary words to describe the process of execution, thus an allegation that an execution was issued out of the Supreme Court was sufficient to show that it was issued by the county clerk. Jaques v. Willett, 104 N. Y. Supp. 500, 501.

OUT OF OFFICE

The plaintiff took an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court, and his bill of exceptions was signed by a judge other than the one before whom the case was heard, but who was then sitting in the division in which the action had been tried. Rev. St. 1909, § 4149, relating to the circuit court of the Eighth circuit, provides that the judges of that circuit may rotate in service between the civil and criminal divisions, and by section 4152 the court was specially empowered to make all rules which its peculiar organization should require. By Rev. St. 1909, § 2032, it is provided that where the judge who heard the case "shall go out of office" before signing the bill of exceptions, it shall be signed by the succeeding or acting judge of the court in which the case was heard. Held, that the words "shall go out of office" do not mean that the judge's term of office must have expired, but mean only that he "shall go out of office" so far as relates to presiding in that particular division of court, and therefore a bill of exceptions signed by the then acting judge of that division is a bill signed by the proper judge. Fenn v. Reber, 132 S. W. 627, 631, 153 Mo. App. 219.

In Rev. St. 1899, § 781, providing that where the judge who heard a cause shall "go out of office" before signing a bill of exceptions, the bill, if agreed to be true by the parties to the action or their attorneys, or shown to the judge to be correct, shall be signed by the succeeding or "acting judge" of the court where the case was heard, the expression "go out of office" should not be confined to the death or resignation of the judge, but covered a case where the regular judge was disabled by sickness to hold court, and an acting judge was elected to hold the ensuing term, as required by section 1679, in which case such newly elected judge was the "acting judge," with all the powers of the regular judge, as provided by section 1682, and was the proper person to sign a bill of exceptions at the term over which he presided in a case tried before the regular judge at the prior term. Ranney v. Hammond Packing Co., 110 S. W. 613, 132 Mo. App. 324.

OUT OF PLUMB

There is no variance between an allegation that a wheel driving the belting was "out of plumb and wabbly," causing the belting to alternately tighten and loosen, in such manner as to tear out the rivets holding sections of the belt together, and proof that the surface of the wheel over which the belting worked was not true to the axle, that the axle had gotten out of the true center by the wheel having worn on one side, and that its operation was thereby rendered irregular and unsteady. Receivers of Kirby Lumber Co. v. Poindexter (Tex.) 103 S. W. 439, 440.

OUT OF THE ORDER NAMED

The charter of a fraternal order provided for the payment of money on the death of a member to such person of his immediate family as the member should designate, or to such person or persons, in default of such family, of the blood relatives of the member, as by him designated, or in default of any designation by the member, or "out of the order named," then to such family or relatives who were heirs at law of the member. A member, while unmarried, designated his father, and afterwards married, and died without having changed the designation, as he was authorized to do under the laws of the order; his wife remaining a member of his family until his death. Held, that the words quoted were susceptible of an interpretation which sets aside the designation if out of the order named when applied to the member's family as it is at the time of his death, and that the widow was entitled to the money due from the order. Larkin v. Knights of Columbus, 73 N. E. 850, 851, 188 Mass. 22.

OUT OF THE STATE

Any person out of state, see Any.

A foreign corporation is "out of the state," within Gen. St. 1901, § 4449, providing that when a cause of action accrues against a person, if he be out of the state, the period limited for the commencement of the action shall not begin to run until he comes into the state. Williams v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 74 Pac. 600, 602, 68 Kan. 17, 64 L. R. A. 794, 104 Am. St. Rep. 377, 1 Ann. Cas. 6.

A statute provides that if, on an application for probate, it shall appear that any heir of testator resides or has gone "out of this state," or that any such heir on diligent inquiry cannot be found, the judge of the county court shall cause notice to him to be published in a newspaper. Held, that an affidavit for publication under such section, alleging that certain heirs of the deceased could not, after due diligence and inquiry, be found "in this state," was sufficient, though it also stated on information and belief that they resided in California, which statement was surplusage. Whitney v. Hanington, 85 Pac. 84, 85, 36 Colo. 407.

OUT OF WHICH PAYMENT CAN BE MADE

Laws 1907, p. 909, c. 267, in amendment of St. 1898, § 4041a, provides that a guardian ad litem for an infant who is a necessary party to a proceeding to probate or to construe a will or to settle an estate may be allowed compensation for his services and expenditures to be fixed by the court in which such proceeding is had and paid out of the body of the estate, if the infant has no available property out of which such payment can be directed. Held, that the clause "out of which such payment can be directed by the court" limits the right of direction to property in custodia legis, leaving the balance, if any, allowed, collectible out of the property of the infant as his debt. In re McNaughton's Will, 118 N. W. 997, 1006, 138 Wis. 179.

OUTAGE

"Normal outage or wantage" may be defined to be the difference between the capacity of a cask or bottle and the quantity of wine or liquor which is usually placed in it according to the custom of trade; a certain vacancy being allowed for the expansion of such wines and liquors. Such practice among merchants is well known, and is a matter of common knowledge, and is recognized by customs practice. No objection can be made by the importers to an allowance for such normal outage, for it is favorable, and not prejudicial, to their interests." United States v. A. D. Shaw & Co., 144 Fed. 329, 331, 75 C. A. 291.

The normal "outage" or "wantage" is defined by the Board of General Appraisers as: "The difference between the capacity of a cask or bottle and the quantity of wine or liquor which is usually placed in it, according to the custom of trade; a certain vacancy being allowed for the expansion of such wines and liquors." Alexander D. Shaw & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 469, 470.

OUTBUILDING

See Usual Outbuildings.

An "outbuilding" is a building adjoining or belonging to a dwelling house; "outbuilding" comprehends something used in connection with a main building. Firth v. Marovich, 116 Pac. 729, 731, 160 Cal. 257, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190.

OUTER

In the Century Dictionary the word "outer" is defined as "opposed to inner." Brislin v. Carnegie Steel Co., 118 Fed. 579, 595.

OUTHOUSE

An "outhouse" is a building adjoining or belonging to a dwelling house; "outbuilding" comprehends something used in connection with a main building. Firth v. Marovich, 116 Pac. 729, 731, 160 Cal. 257, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190.

An "outhouse" has a technical meaning, being a house that belongs to a dwelling, and is in some respect parcel of such dwelling house, and situated within the curtilage. State v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 58, 59, 153 N. C. 610.

The word "outhouse," as used in 2 Balfinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7104, defining burglary as the unlawful breaking and entering of any outhouse adjoining any dwelling house and occupied therewith, uses the word "outhouse" in its ordinary and usual acceptation, and means that any outhouse, to be a subject of burglary, must be both adjoining to the dwelling house and occupied therewith. Other outhouses, even though within the inclosure, are not subject to burglary. The term "outhouse" has a well defined and understood meaning, and denotes a building contributory to the dwelling, either within or without the curtilage. State v. Randall,

Smokehouse

A "smokehouse" is not necessarily an "outhouse" belonging to or used with a dwelling house. It usually is used with a dwelling house, but is not always so. Under the statute making it a crime to feloniously break into a dwelling house, or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, etc., an indictment charging defendant with having feloniously broken into and entered the smokehouse of a certain person, but failing to allege that such smokehouse belonged to or was used with any dwelling house, was insufficient. Dunn v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 321, 119 Ky. 457.

OUTLAW

"A person does not become an 'outlaw' and lose all rights by doing an illegal act." National Bank & Loan Co. v. Petrie, 23 Sup. Ct. 512, 513, 189 U. S. 423, 47 L. Ed. 879.

The word "outlaw," in its ordinary and accepted meaning, refers to a person who has been deprived of the law or excluded from its protection. Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 55 S. E. 257, 260, 142 N. C. 333 (dissenting opinion of Walker, J.). See, also, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 157 Fed. 944, 952.

As applied to animals

"Outlaw," as applied to cattle, means that the ownership thereof is unknown. State v. Eddy, 90 Pac. 641, 46 Wash. 494.

OUTLAYS

The word "outlays," when used in connection with an attorney's agreement for compensation, so as to provide for his reimbursement for outlays, does not ordinarily mean the personal or traveling expenses of the attorney, but refers to costs of suit and other expenses paid to third persons for similar purposes. Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 105 Pac. 981, 987, 156 Cal. 510.

OUTPUT

A contract to sell the entire "output" of a cement mill for a year required the seller to deliver no more than he actually produced in the mill during the year, though that amount did not equal the estimated capacity of the mill. Burt v. Garden City Sand Co., 86 N. E. 1055, 1057, 237 Ill. 478.

OUTSIDE OF TRACKS

Under Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1112, c. 565, § 98), requiring a railroad company to keep in repair that portion of the street "between its tracks, the rails of its tracks, and two feet in width 'outside of its tracks,'" it is required to keep in repair a space two feet outside of each rail. City of Amsterdam v. Fonda, J. & G. R. Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 411, 412, 119 App. Div. 680.

OUTSIDE WHICH

Acts 1904, p. 1077, c. 616, § 1, prohibiting the obstruction of the sidewalks of Baltimore city, gives the board of estimates authority to regulate the limits within which it shall be lawful to erect any steps for houses, but that no such regulation shall permit any erection at any point between the grade of the sidewalk and a point 10 feet above the grade, provided "that 'outside which'" such erections shall lawfully exist between the grade of the sidewalk, etc., at the time of the passage of the statute, other such erections may be permitted; and the section then defines the "burned district," within the meaning of the section. Held, that the proviso was void, as meaningless; the courts having no right to construe it by inserting the phrase "burned district" after the word "outside," and to eliminate "which," and substitute therefor the word "where." Storck v. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 330, 332, 101 Md. 476.

OUTSTANDING

Where defendant corporation guaranteed payment of a fixed dividend on stock in another corporation, so long as the certificate of stock should be "outstanding," a dissolution of such other corporation, and a decree distributing its assets, terminated a stockholder's right to dividends under the agreement; the term "outstanding," as used, meaning "lawfully outstanding," and the certificate remaining effective only for the purpose of production as evidence of the holder's right under the decree of distribution. Bljur v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co., 70 Atl. 934, 937, 74 N. J. Eq. 546.

OUTSTANDING ACCOUNTS

The expression "outstanding and open account" has a well-defined and well-understood meaning. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions not reduced to writing and subject to future settlement and adjustment. It does not include bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other written evidence of indebtedness. Kramer v. Gardner, 116 N. W. 925, 926, 104 Minn. 370, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492.

OUTSTANDING STOCK

Stock once issued is and remains outstanding, within the purview of the franchise tax act, although owned by the corporation issuing the same, until retired and canceled as provided by statute for the reduction of capital stock. Goldstein-Fineberg Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 83 Atl. 773, 83 N. J. Law, 61.

OUTSTANDING TITLE

An outstanding mortgage or deed of trust, without entry of foreclosure, though the condition has been broken, is not such an "outstanding legal title" as will defeat a recovery in an action of ejectment; but where such mortgage or deed of trust has been foreclosed, and the legal title has been transmitted to a purchaser at the foreclosure sale, such title constitutes an outstanding title which will defeat ejectment, even between third persons not claiming thereunder. Benton Land Co. v. Zeitler, 81 S. W. 193, 197, 182 Mo. 251, 70 L. R. A. 94.

The paramount title of the state to lands under water is an "outstanding title," within the term of a conveyance of lands and water rights, providing that, in case the purchaser should be put to any expense in extinguishing any outstanding title, the vendor should bear its share of the loss and expense according to its proportional relation to the entire property. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Long Dock Co., 38 N. J. Eq. 142, 147.

An indictment alleging that accused practicing medicine without a license treated a patient, and that the treatment consisted in physical manipulations with accused's hands "over" the patient, is sustained by proof that accused placed his hands "upon" the patient and rubbed and manipulated his hands "upon" his body; the words "upon" and "over" being synonymous. Milling v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 434, 436.

The grant to a telephone company of the right to construct and maintain a line "over and along" a certain tract, including necessary poles along the roads adjoining the tract, limited the grantee's rights to the construction and maintenance of a line along the highways which extended through the tract, and not across the land. Morison v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 140, 141, 115 App. Div. 744.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 6116, providing that before granting any franchise for constructing and operating an elevated, underground, or other street railroad on, "over," or under any street or alley, etc., the word "over" means "over" and can only apply to elevated roads. Ruckert v. Grand Ave. Ry. Co., 63 S. W. 814, 818, 163 Mo. 290.

As across at same or higher level

By the word "over," in Rev. Laws, § 3381, relating to railroad crossings was intended, not "upon," but "above," so the railroad should pass under the highway. Vermont Central R. Co. v. Royalton, 4 Atl. 968, 58 Vt. 234.

Where a railroad's charter required it to construct good and sufficient bridges or passages "over" its railroad or roads where any public highway shall cross the same, the word "over" was used in its ordinary sense to mean "above." Borough of South Amboy v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 73 Atl. 852, 858, 76 N. J. Eq. 57.

"Overbuilding" the poles and wires of a telephone system is the stringing of wires above the wires of such system. Chicago Telephone Co. v. Northwestern Telephone Co. 65 N. E. 329, 338, 199 Ill. 324.

OVER WHOLE LINE OF RAILROAD

In a statute regulating the additional charges of way freight over through freight, the words "over the whole line of its road" mean, and only mean, freight which is taken on at one terminus and discharged at the other, and do not mean the pro rata allowance which may fall to the road in question under the disposition of the products of transportation of through freights proper—those freights which, in their transit, pass over more than one railroad, and merely traverse this road as a stage in a more extended shipment. Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559, 597.

OVERCHARGE

A carrier, charging a higher rate for carrying freight in one direction than it does for carrying freight of the same class in the opposite direction, does not, as a matter of law, make an "overcharge," within Revised 1903, §§ 2642-2644, imposing a penalty on a railroad charging more for the transportation of property than is allowed by law, etc. James H. Scull & Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 876, 877, 144 N. C. 180.

"Overcharges" falling within the jurisdiction of the federal tribunals, mentioned in the Interstate Commerce Act, § 9, are overcharges growing out of excessive rates over and above the rates fixed by schedules filed, published and posted as required by the act, and where no such schedules have been posted, and the overcharge is merely one in excess of the rate agreed on with the shipper, action therefor may be maintained in the state courts. Wabash R. Co. v. Sloop 98 S. W. 607, 613, 200 Mo. 198.

An "overdraft" arises where a customer of a bank draws from it more money than is standing to his credit in his account with it. State v. Jackson, 113 N. W. 880, 882, 21 S. D. 494, 16 Ann. Cas. 87.

OVERFLOW

Subject to overflow, see Subject to.

OVERFLOWED LANDS

See Swamp and Overflowed Lands.

Overflowed lands are those that are covered by nonnavigable waters, or are subject to such periodical or frequent overflows of water, salt or fresh (not including lands between ordinary high and low water marks of navigable waters) as to require drainage or levees or embankments to keep out the waters and thereby render the lands suitable for successful cultivation. State ex rel. Ellis v. Gerbing, 47 South. 353, 357, 56 Fla. 608, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

OVERLOOK

Under Code, § 1374, providing that "when property subject to taxation is withheld, overlooked or from any other cause is not listed or assessed," the county treasurer may within a specified time demand of the owner the amount the property should have been taxed in each year the same was so withheld or overlooked and not listed and assessed, etc., a county treasurer may list for taxation all taxable property which has not been listed for taxation, and may list for taxation property which the assessor knowingly omitted because of the erroneous decision that it was not taxable; the word "withhold" meaning to hold back, to restrain, to keep from action, to refrain from giving, and the word "overlook" meaning to look beyond, so that what is near by is not perceived, to omit to see by looking at other objects, to refrain knowingly from notice, etc. Taley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 253, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

OVERRATE

"Overrated," in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 96, means overrated with reference to the fair value of the property in question, and not by comparison with the valuation placed upon other specific pieces of property in the town. Penobscot Chemical Fibre Co. v. Inhabitants of Town of Bradley, 59 Atl. 83, 85, 99 Me. 263.

OVERRULING

Under a statute providing that defendant, on the "overruling" of a plea in abatement, may plead to the merits, and rely on any defenses as if said plea had not been interposed, defendant, on judgment being rendered against a plea in abatement, either on motion to strike out, or on being set down for argument on its sufficiency, or on demurrer, or on an issue as to its merits, may plead over. Sewell v. Tuthill & Pattison, 79 S. W. 376, 377, 112 Tenn. 271.

OVERSEE

OVERSEER OF ELECTION

"Overseers of election" are persons appointed by the court to oversee the election. They are entitled to be present with the election officers during the time the latter are engaged in receiving and counting the votes and making up and signing the returns to challenge any person offering to vote and interrogate him and his witnesses under oath, in regard to his right and suffrage as well as to examine any papers the voter may produce. The overseers are required to oversee and certify the returns or note on each return their reason for not certifying it, and are entitled to supervise the proceedings of the election officers and report to the court. The election board is required to afford overseers every facility for the discharge of their duties, and if, by violence or intimidation, they are driven from the polls, the entire vote polled in that district may be rejected. In re Parrish, 63 Atl. 460, 461, 214 Pa. 63.

OVERSEER OF HIGHWAYS

The word "overseer," in a statute relating to the obstruction of public roads, means an overseer of country roads. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, 107 S. W. 668, 669, 85 Ark. 131.

Since the term "road precinct," as employed in Code 1896, form 75, giving a form charging an overseer of a road precinct with failure to perform his duties, and in Code 1896, §§ 2454, 2461, 2462, 2470, relating to the apportionment of road precincts, the appointment of overseers, and their duties, etc., designates any road apportioned to an overseer, so that a road overseer of a particular road is properly called "overseer of a road precinct," an indictment in the Code form, alleging that defendant, an "overseer of a road precinct, failed to discharge his duties, is sufficient under the express provisions of sections 4923, 5395, and is technically accurate in designating the officer as an overseer of a road precinct. Ward v. State (Ala.) 39 South. 923, 924.

OVERSEER OF POOR

As city officer, see City Officer.

OVERT ACT

See, also, Attempt to Commit Crime; Attempt to Enter.

An overt act essential to establish an attempt to commit a crime is an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result unless prevented by some extraneous cause. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 790, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 131.

No exact definition of an "overt act" can be given. It may be a motion, a gesture, conduct, or demonstration, or anything else which evidences reasonably a present design to take the life of the accused or to do him great bodily harm. Such purpose may be manifested by conduct, falling short of personal violence or actual assault, and in some instances the extent of the "overt act" which would induce the accused to act in self-defense is measured by the character of the deceased for a violent, dangerous man, notorious in the community, or known to the accused as such. State v. Golden, 37 South. 757, 761, 113 La. 791.

Since the term "overt" simply means "open," and in homicide cases an "overt act" is an open act, indicating a present purpose to do immediate great bodily harm, which can be shown in a given case only by evidence as a question of fact, a requested charge, undertaking to instruct what was an overt act, was properly refused; it being a question of fact for the jury. Johnson v. State, 143 S. W. 1134, 1137, 125 Tenn. 420, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 261.

Before the offense of conspiracy is completed, one or more of the parties must do some act to effect the object of the conspiracy. Such act is termed an "overt act." An "overt act" as effecting the object of a conspiracy "must be one independent of the conspiracy and agreement. It must not be one of a series of acts constituting the agreement or conspiring together, but it must be a subsequent, independent act following the complete agreement or conspiracy and done to carry into effect the object of the original combination." United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 446.

To constitute an indictable conspiracy there must be some "overt act," which must tend to carry out the object of the conspiracy, or in some way effectuate it, and if the conspiracy ceases without an overt act it would not constitute an offense, though when consummated it is the conspiracy rather than the overt act which constitutes the crime. United States v. McLaughlin, 169 Fed. 302, 307.

OVERTONES

When a tubular bell is struck a blow by a hammer, the fundamental sound is followed by nascent, undulatory, longitudinal vibrations, extending the entire length of the tube. These vibrations are styled "overtones," or "partials." Durfee v. Bawo, 118 Fed. 853, 855.

OVERVALUATION

See, also, Overtaxed.

An owner of cut-over lands, assessed for taxation as timbered lands, is entitled to reduction of the assessment as for "overvalua-tion" known to be such, within Code 1906, § 4312. Board of Sup'rs of Wayne County v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 56 South. 173, 99 Miss. 845.

OVERWHELMING

A juror was disqualified to sit in a murder case in which the sole defense was insanity, who stated on his voir dire that he would require overwhelming proof of insanity before acquitting on that ground; the law only requiring proof of insanity by a "preponderance" of the evidence, which may leave the mind in doubt, while "overwhelming" proof is such as is sufficient to remove every doubt from the mind. Jones v. State, 131 S. W. 572, 576, 60 Tex. Cr. 139.

OWE

See Debt Owed; Due and Owing; Money Owing.

Legally due and owing, see Legally Due.

Ordinarily, the words "due," "owing," and "payable" are conclusions of law, denial of which raises no issue. Irwin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 116 Pac. 294, 295, 16 Cal. App. 143.

The word "due" in Code, §§ 1308, 1309, making credits taxable and defining "credit" as including every claim or demand due or to become due, etc., is synonymous with "owing," and does not have reference to the time of payment or the fulfillment of an obligation. Talley v. Brown, 125 N. W. 248, 249, 146 Iowa, 360, 140 Am. St. Rep. 282.

Testator bequeathed a sum to his daughter, but provided the "amount she may be owing on my books" should be deducted therefrom, and his account books showed sums charged to his daughter, but the evidence showed that most of them were advanced to her husband. Held that, the meaning of the word "owing" could be explained by the connection in which it was used, and that testator intended the amount advanced to his daughter's husband to be charged to her and deducted from the legacy. In re Bresler's Estate, 119 N. W. 1104, 1106, 155 Mich. 567.

As due and unpaid

Due as meaning owing, see Due.

The allegation that a debt is owing is not the equivalent of an allegation that it is due and unpaid; an allegation that one "owes" a debt meaning simply that he is obliged or bound to pay, which is as true of an immature as of an overdue obligation. McDuffie v. Lynchburg Shoe Co. (Ala.) 59 South. 567, 568.

Enforceable obligation

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 11, 30 Stat. 544, provides that "debt" shall include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy; section 4 declares that any "person" who "owes debts," except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of the act as a voluntary bankrupt; and section 63 declares that debts shall be a fixed liability, absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition, etc. Held, that the words "owes debts" mean an obligation for which a debtor is legally liable, and hence the bankruptcy act includes an infant, where he owes debts for which his property is legally chargeable. In re Walrath, 175 Fed. 243, 244.

OWELTY

"Owely of partition" is a sum paid or secured, in the case of partition in unequal proportions, by him who has received the larger portion to him who has the less, for the purpose of equalizing the portions" (quoting 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1179, par. 4). But where, in a partition suit between a father and his children, land apportioned to the children was charged with owelty to the amount of a debt of the father, who had given a trust deed on the land to secure the same, such amount was not owelty as to the creditor, who was not a party to the proceeding. Stone v. McGregor, 87 S. W. 334, 335, 99 Tex. 51.

OWN

See For His Own Use and Benefit; Not His Own.
His own, see His.

"Own," as an adjective, means "peculiar, proper, exclusive, particular, individual, private, and as indicative of possession." In certifying the acknowledgment of a woman, the officer stated that she acknowledged the same to be her own act and deed. The use of the word does nothing more than indicate that the signing of the deed was her act in compliance with the statute. It does not convey the idea that she had willingly signed, and the certificate was not a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring that the wife should acknowledge the instrument to be her act and deed, should declare that she had freely and willingly signed and sealed it, and that she wished not to retract. Tiemann v. Cobb, 80 S. W. 250, 251, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 289 (citing Cent. Dict. in verb "Own").

OWN (Verb)

See Property Owned; Then Owned.

As titles and rights to real property vary from the absolute and unqualified fee simple to that of the mere occupant, so the word "own" varies in its significance. The word "owned" is not a technical term. It is a general expression used to describe a great variety of interests, and may vary in significance, according to context and subject-matter. Peterson v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 659, 660, 132 Wis. 290 (citing Merrill Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 96 N. W. 686, 119 Wis. 249; and 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4904).

Under Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 802, c. 908) § 11, providing that all the personality of every corporation liable to taxation on its capital shall be assessed in the tax district where its principal office is located, and section 3 (Laws 1896, p. 797, c. 908) declaring that all personality situate or "owned" within the state is taxable, merchandise and materials belonging to a manufacturing corporation having its principal office in New York, but which materials are situate at the company's mills in another state, are not taxable. Chattels or property having a defined situs is not "owned" in the state when it is actually located in a foreign state. Indebtedness due the corporation was taxable, irrespective of the residence of the debtors. People ex rel. Orinoka Mills v. Barker, 83 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 84 App. Div. 469.

Const. art. 13, § 10, provides that all persons in the state shall be subject to taxation on the real and personal property "owned" or used by them within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and Laws 1896, c. 129, § 13 (Comp. Laws 1907, § 2515), declares that all of the taxable property must be assessed in the county, city, or district in which it is situated. Held, that the word "owned," as used in the constitutional provision, does not mean that the property was owned where the owner thereof necessarily resides, but that personal property must be considered according to the legislative construction of the term to be "owned" where it is situated, and hence, where a band of sheep had never been within the territorial limits of a city during the period for which taxes were assessed, they were not taxable there. Murdock v. Murdock, 113 Pac. 330, 331, 38 Utah, 373.

Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 2967, 2968, declaring that all property of the husband "owned or claimed" by him before marriage, and that "acquired" afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, shall be his separate property, and all property "acquired" by the husband or wife during the marriage, except that "acquired" by gift, devise, or descent, shall be the common property of the husband and wife, ownership resting in adverse possession for 10 years, existing in part before marriage and in part after marriage, is community property; the word "acquired" denoting all property coming to husband or wife during coverture by title, other than by gift, devise, or descent; and the word "claim," when applied to land, importing a legal or equitable right to the land; and the words "owned or claimed" signifying a legal or equitable ownership or legal or equitable right to demand the land. Sauvage v. Wauhop (Tex.) 143 S. W. 259, 263.

As absolute ownership

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 120, § 2, cl. 2, providing that church property "owned" by the congregation shall be exempt from taxation, land held by the congregation under a contract for a deed is not exempt. People v. Logan Square Presbyterian Church, 94 N. E. 155, 249 Ill. 9.

As now owned

A deed of trust conveying certain lands specifically described, and all other lands "owned" by the grantor, in the same counties, conveys only those lands owned by the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed of trust. Ross v. Lafferty (Tex.) 95 S. W. 18, 19 (citing Galbraith v. Engleke [Tex.] 1 S. W. 346; Jemison v. Scottish-American Mortgage Co., 46 S. W. 886, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 232; Brown v. Jackson, 3 Wheat. [16 U. S.] 449, 4 L. Ed. 432; Butterfield v. Smith, 11 Ill. 485; Fitzgerald v. Libby, 7 N. E. 917, 142 Mass. 235).

As owned in the future

The accrued interest of an heir, though undivided, is not a property right to be "owned in the future," within the Porto Rico Mortgage Law, defining things not mortgageable as the property right in things which, although they will be owned in the future, are not yet recorded in the name of the person who will have a right to own them. Cabrera v. American Colonial Bank, 29 Sup. Ct. 623, 628, 214 U. S. 224, 53 L. Ed. 974.

Leasehold interest

A railway corporation operating a line of railroad is the corporation "owning" the railroad within a statute imposing a penalty on a corporation "owning" a railroad for failing to equip its locomotives with bells or whistles, etc. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 199, 84 Ark. 409.

Under a statute subjecting street railway companies to a charge on their gross revenues in lieu of other taxation, and exempting from taxation on the payment of such license fee all real estate "owned" and actually and necessarily used by the company in the operation of its business, real property leased by a street railway company, which has paid the license tax, for five years, and actually and necessarily used by it in the operation of its business, is exempt from general taxation. Merrill Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 96 N. W. 686, 119 Wis. 249.

There is no substantial difference between the meaning of the words "possess" and "own." They are equivalents in common speech, and according to all the lexicographers. Thomas v. Blair, 35 South. 811, 813, 111 La. 678.

The word "possessed," as used in an allegation, in an action by an administrator for the conversion of goods claimed to have been owned by intestate, that intestate, at the time of his death, was "seised and possessed" of the property, means "owned"; that is, that the intestate was the owner of the goods at the time. Grant v. Hathaway, 96 S. W. 417, 118 Mo. App. 604 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5463).

The word "own" is a synonym of "possess." To own is to have a good legal title to. Acts 1905, p. 82, c. 52, is entitled an act to regulate and in certain cases to prohibit the manufacture, sale, "keeping for sale, owning, or giving away of cigarettes" etc. and providing penalties for violation thereof and declares that it shall be unlawful for any person directly or indirectly to manufacture, sell, dispose of, give away, or keep for sale any cigarettes, etc., or "keep or own or to be in any way concerned, engaged, or employed in owning or keeping any such cigarettes." The act passed the Senate under a title "An act to regulate the manufacture, sale, and the giving away of cigarettes," etc. When the bill passed the House on third reading, it retained such title, which was afterwards amended by adding a penalty clause. The bill then went back to the Senate, and a conference committee reported the bill with its present title under which it was adopted. Held, that the act should not be construed as intending to prohibit the act of smoking cigarettes or keeping them in possession for the sole purpose of smoking them. State v. Lowry, 77 N. E. 723-734, 166 Ind. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350.

A person who leased a farm to carry on at the halves, and the same was put in the list to himself and the lessor jointly, did not hold the land in his "own right" so as to give him a settlement under the pauper act of 1817. Town of Newfane v. Town of Dunmerston, 34 Vt. 184, 187.

Real estate held jure uxoris is not held in the husband's "own right," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 19, § 1, subd. 4, which provides that every person whose ratable estate held in his own right shall be set in the list and gain a settlement, etc. Town of Baltimore v. Town of Chester, 47 Vt. 648, 650.

OWNER

See Consent of Owner; Equitable Owner; Former Owner; Landowner; Real Owner; Reputed Owner; Resident Owner; Riparian Owner; Signed by the Owner; True Owner; Unknown Owner; Upland Owner.

Owner or otherwise, see Otherwise.

Unconditional and sole owner, see Unconditional and Sole Ownership.

"To own" is defined "to hold as property; to have a legal or rightful title to; to have; to possess." And an "owner" is "one who owns; a rightful proprietor." An "owner" is not necessarily one owning the fee simple or one having in the property the highest estate it will admit of. One having a lesser estate may be an owner, and, indeed, there may be different estates in the same property vested in different persons, and each be an owner thereof." United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 971, 72 C. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185 (quoting Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Walker, 16 N. E. 475, 480, 45 Ohio St. 577, 585); Jones v. State, 70 N. E. 952, 954, 70 Ohio St. 36, 1 Ann. Cas. 618 (quoting and adopting definition in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Walker, 16 N. E. 475, 45 Ohio St. 577).

The word "owner," as applied to land, is descriptive of various rights to and interests in land. As titles and rights to real property vary from the absolute and unqualified fee simple to that of the mere occupant, so the word "own" and "ownership" varies in its significance, according to context and subject-matter. Peterson v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 659, 660, 132 Wis. 280 (citing Merrill Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 96 N. W. 686, 119 Wis. 249; and 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4904).

The word "owner," as applied to real estate, may designate the owner of the fee or the owner of a less estate, as a lessee for a term of years, or any rightful proprietor, and its meaning is to be gathered from the connection in which it is used, and from the subject-matter to which it is applied and when used in a statute, the obvious nature and purpose of the statute may indicate its meaning. Guild v. Prentiss, 74 Atl. 1115, 1116, 83 Vt. 212, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 313.

An "owner" of a thing is he who has dominion over it, including the idea of right of possession. The word "owner," as applied to land, has no fixed meaning which can be declared to be applicable under all circumstances and as to any and every enactment. It usually denotes a fee-simple estate, but it has been defined to be "one who has the usufruct, control, or occupation of land with a claim of ownership, whether his interest be an absolute fee or a less estate." As used in B. & C. Comp. § 1830, prohibiting the trespass by one not the owner of the land nor an officer on lawful business, it is not limited to the holder of the fee-simple estate, but also includes one holding merely a usufructuary interest. Binhoff v. State, 90 Pac. 586, 587, 49 Or. 419 (quoting and adopting definition in Anderson's Law Dict. and Coombs v. People, 64 N. E. 1056, 198 Ill. 586).

One in possession of unsurveyed public land, with intent to procure title and prepare it for cultivation and plant a crop, is the owner within articles of a corporation organized to secure a supply of water for irrigation, and to distribute it among stockholders for use on lands "owned" by them; for the word "owned" means held or occupied, and the words "owning," "owner," and "owned" being general terms, and their precise meaning depending on the nature of the subject-matter and connection in which they are used. Miller v. Imperial Water Co., No. 8, 103 Pac. 227, 229, 156 Cal. 27, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5134).

In construing the redemption laws, the word "owner" is a generic term which embraces the different species of interest which may be carved out of a fee-simple estate. Hodges v. Harkleroad, 85 S. W. 779, 781, 74 Ark. 343 (citing 2 Blackw. Tax Titles, § 705).

"Although the word 'owner' has a variety of meanings, and may, under certain circumstances, include an equitable as well as a legal ownership, or even a right of present use and possession, it implies something more than a bare legal title, and we know of no authority for saying that a person in possession of land under a void deed can be regarded as the 'owner' thereof. Ownership may not imply a perfect title, but it implies something more than the possession of land under a title which is void." Hyde v. Shine, 25 Sup. Ct. 760, 763, 199 U. S. 62, 50 L. Ed. 90.

The word "owner," as used in an answer to a complaint in an action for the specific performance of a lease, which alleges that, during all the time referred to in the complaint, defendant was the owner of certain lots, has a definite meaning, and is one who has dominion over a thing, which he may use as he pleases, except as restrained by law or by agreement. West v. Washington R. Co., 90 Pac. 666, 672, 49 Or. 436.

The "owner" of land is commonly understood to be the person who has the legal title thereto, and, as used in a statute requiring consents of the owners of dwellings within a certain distance of the premises in which traffic in liquors is to be carried on, it cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended anybody except the persons having the legal title. In re Clement, 101 N. Y. Supp. 447, 450.

The word "owner," while not a technical term, but one of wide application in various connections, primarily means, with respect to land, a person who is seized of a freehold estate therein, one who owes no service to another which limits his dominion. American Woolen Co. v. Town Council of North Smith- field, 69 Atl. 293, 29 R. I. 93, 16 Ann. Cas. 1227.

The word "owner," as used in Act June 4, 1897, c. 2, § 1, 30 Stat. 34, providing that, in cases in which a tract covered by an unperfected bona fide claim or by a patent is included within the limits of a public forest reservation, the settler or owner thereof may relinquish the tract to the government, and select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land open to settlement not exceeding in area the tract covered by his claim or patent, refers only to one who holds both the legal and equitable title to the patented land. United States v. Hyde, 132 Fed. 545, 548.

The term "owner," as used in determining who may redeem from tax sale, includes mortgagees, judgment creditors, and holders of contingent interests in the land affected by the sale. Thus, where the holder of a junior judgment lien on certain land purchased the same on execution on his judgment, and thereafter purchased an outstanding tax lien against the property, under which he obtained title, the purchase of such tax certificate by him would be construed in equity as a redemption, since he would not be permitted thereby, as against the holder of the senior judgment lien, to absorb the land, which was the entire fund for the payment of both judgments. Lane v. Wright, 96 N. W. 902, 903, 121 Iowa, 376, 100 Am. St. Rep. 362 (citing Adams v. Beale, 19 Iowa, 61; Swan v. Harvey, 90 N. W. 489, 117 Iowa, 58).

The word "property," as well as "owner," may be used to convey a meaning sometimes broad and sometimes quite restricted. In its general and commonly accepted sense, ownership and property would necessarily imply the power of sale. They are frequently used in a more restricted sense, and as used in Laws 1903, p. 200, providing that the probate court shall not have jurisdiction to inquire into the insanity of any person who is the owner of no property, the property which the person thought to be insane must own is property which he has been managing and controlling, or which he may manage and control in his direction of his affairs. The statute contemplates that, if he be found of unsound mind, a guardian of his person and his property be appointed who shall take upon himself the management and control of such property. Where testator provides for the setting aside of property sufficient to produce a certain income to be paid to one as trustee for another, an incompetent, who shall pay the same out for the benefit of the incompetent, the incompetent owns no property, within the meaning of the act. Carter v. Bolster, 98 S. W. 105, 106, 122 Mo. App. 135.

The word "owner," in 1 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 1, c. 16, tit. 1, § 64, providing that no highway shall be opened or worked without a release by the owner or an assessment of his damages, means the person entitled to the legal estate. In re Riddell, 116 N. Y. Supp. 261, 264.

The word "owner" in Ky. St. § 2361, authorizing the owner of land, though not in actual possession, to sue for trespass thereon, means one who owns the land by a title of record deducible from the commonwealth, or who has acquired ownership by adverse possession of the land. Scroggins v. Nave, 119 S. W. 158, 159, 133 Ky. 732.

Grantee in possession under an unrecorded deed is the "owner" within Lien Law (Laws 1897, pp. 515, 518, c. 418) §§ 2, 9, requiring a notice of lien to state the name of the owner of the property, defined to include the owner in fee or of a less estate therein, etc. Vogel & Binder Co. v. Charles P. Evans Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 10, 14, 133 App. Div. 836.

The word "owner," as used in Const. § 6, art. 13, making it the duty of every "owner" to enter his land for taxation under penalty of forfeiture, means or includes a bona fide claimant. Nowhere is the verity of ownership determined in charging a tax on real estate. The charging is always made against the man who appears to be owner and claims to be. State v. West Branch Lumber Co., 63 S. E. 372, 377, 64 W. Va. 673.

In the absence of knowledge to the contrary, the person shown by the public records to be vested with the title to real property is the "owner" thereof, within Rev. St. 1899, § 5686, requiring special tax bills to state the name of the "owner" of the property. City of St. Joseph ex rel. Swenson v. Forsee, 84 S. W. 98, 110 Mo. App. 127 (citing Smith v. Barrett, 41 Mo. App. 490; Vance v. Corrigan, 78 Mo. 94; Cowell v. Gray, 85 Mo. 169; Payne v. Lott, 3 S. W. 402, 90 Mo. 676; Crane v. Dameron, 12 S. W. 251, 98 Mo. 567).

Any person owning land, whether his title be of record in the office of the register of deeds or not, may maintain proceedings as "owner," under the Torrens Act, for land transfers to register his title. National Bond, etc., Co. v. Alderson, 108 N. W. 861, 99 Minn. 137.

The object of the lien law of 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 514, c. 418), giving a lien on the real property improved to the extent of the "owner's right, title or interest" therein, providing that the term "owner" includes the owner in fee or of a less estate therein, etc., is to bind the interest of the person against whom the notice of lien is filed, and it is not the legislative intent to give a lien on the property through the filing of any notice describing it, notwithstanding the statutory definition of the word "owner." Stranahan v. Pace, 88 N. E. 51, 52, 195 N. Y. 167.

Whenever the word "owner" or "reputed owner" is used in the mechanic's lien statutes, it means the owner or reputed owner with whom the contract was made, and he is therefore the only necessary defendant under the statute. Carswell v. Patzowski, 55 Atl. 342, 343, 4 Pennwille, 403.

It is not necessary to the attachment of a mechanic's lien that the person for whom a building is erected should own the fee-simple title, but the word "owner," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4819, providing that a person claiming a mechanic's lien for material or labor under a subcontract, with the contractor, etc., shall file with the clerk of the district court a statement verified by affidavit setting forth the amount due from the subcontractor to the claimant, the value, etc., includes every character of title, whether legal or equitable, fee-simple, or leasehold. Crutcher v. Block, 91 Pac. 895, 896, 19 Okl. 246, 14 Ann. Cas. 1029.

Under Code Iowa, § 2311, defining an "owner" of land as the person having title thereto, or the lessee or occupant thereof, and section 3096 providing that every person for whose use or benefit any improvement is made, having the capacity to contract, shall be included in the word "owner," the mere fact that a contract for the erection of a building and the bond given by the contractors for the faithful performance thereof speak of the obligee of the bond as the "owner" of the premises does not constitute a false representation to the surety on the bond on the part of the obligee, though the legal title to the lot on which the house was built is in the name of another; there being no pretense that the obligee of the bond was a trespasser on the land, or that he was not the owner of the building. Getchell & Martin Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Peterson & Sampson, 100 N. W. 550, 552, 124 Iowa, 599.

Where an indictment alleged that defendants had conspired to defraud the United States by fraudulently obtaining title to state land within a forest reservation for the purpose of exchanging the same as authorized by Forest Reserve Act June 4, 1897, c. 2, 30 Stat. 34, it stated an offense against the United States, since, when Congress provided in such act that the "owner" of land within a forest reservation might exchange his land for land open for settlement outside the reservation, the owner of a full, complete, and indefeasible title was meant, and not one who held land the title to which was subject to forfeiture for fraud. Ex parte Hyde, 194 Fed. 207, 214.

A married woman permitting a dog of her husband's to remain on the home premises, the title to which is in her, is not harboring a dog as an "owner," within Code, § 2340, making an owner liable for damages done by his dog, and she is not liable for injuries to a driver on a public road in consequence of the dog frightening her horses, causing them to run away. Burch v. Lowary, 109 N. W. 282, 283, 131 Iowa, 719, 117 Am. St. Rep. 443.

The word "owner," in Code, § 2340, making the "owner" liable for damages done by his dog, when construed according to the context and approved usage of the language as required by section 48, signifies the person to whom the dog belongs, and the owner is liable without proof of knowledge of evil propensities; but one harboring a dog is not liable, in the absence of previous knowledge of viciousness. Alexander v. Crosby, 119 N. W. 717, 718, 143 Iowa, 50.

The "owner," within the meaning of Act No. 57 of 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 64), to prohibit any person as agent, owner, officer, or employé from engaging, encouraging, promoting, aiding, or assisting in the operation of a betting book upon horse races, or in selling auction pools upon any horse race, is one who conducts the betting by using "betting books," "sheets," "tickets," and "other devices." State v. Scheffield, 48 South. 932, 934, 123 La. 271.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4497, giving the penalty for failure to furnish a shipper with cars, and providing that when the "owner" of any freight shall apply in writing, etc., a shipper of crushed stone, who intended to load from the crusher and save expense in handling the crushed product, was not the "owner" of any crushed rock when he ordered cars. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Risley Bros. & Co., 119 S. W. 897, 898, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 66.

One who has represented himself to be the "owner" of real property, and who is estopped from asserting the contrary, is the "owner" thereof, within Pen. Code, § 640d, making the act of offering real property for sale, by a person not possessed of authority in writing from the "owner," a misdemeanor. Lopard v. Fritz, 91 N. Y. Supp. 5, 6, 45 Misc. Rep. 620.

Code, § 2814, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 152, c. 153, authorizes school corporations to hold, within certain limitations, land for schoolhouse sites, which must be upon public roads, and except in cities, etc., at least 30 rods from the residence of any "owner" who objects to a site being placed nearer. Section 2815 provides for condemnation of a site if the owner refuses or neglects to convey, etc. Section 2773 authorizes boards of directors to fix schoolhouse sites. Held, that the term "owner," used in section 2814, refers to the owner of a residence within 30 rods of a schoolhouse site, and not to the owner of a site, and that the prohibition against locating a site within 30 rods of a residence applies to schoolhouse sites, whether acquired by purchase, devise, gift, or condemnation. Mendenhall v. Board of Directors of Inde- pendent School Dist. of Leighton, 115 N. W. 11, 12, 187 Iowa, 554.

Defendants were the agents and their principal was the grantee of land, and on September 10, 1908, defendants gave plaintiff an option to buy the land, and, a dispute arising whether this option had expired, the parties on February 23, 1909, made a written agreement by which defendants agreed to procure and deliver to plaintiff within 10 days a written extension of the option, to be binding on defendants and the owner. Within the time allowed defendants offered to plaintiff a contract signed by them and by their principal extending the original option for 90 days. The land had been bought by the defendants previous to the contract with plaintiff and by them sold to their principal, and the holder of defendants' purchase-money notes secured by vendor's liens obtained a judgment in foreclosure for title and possession of the land in July, 1909, at which time there were also other judgments and incumbrances against the property. Held, that until July 1, 1909, when the vendor's liens were foreclosed, defendants' principal was the "owner" of the land, and hence the instrument offered by defendants was a compliance with its contract to extend the plaintiff's option. Hahl v. McPherson (Tex.) 133 S. W. 515, 517.

St. 1885, c. 153, § 16, relating to foreclosure of liens for street improvements, making the executor, administrator, or guardian of the "owner" and persons in possession under claim or exercising acts of ownership over the same, also "owners" for the purposes of the law, recognizes constructive or virtual representation as sufficient to give jurisdiction of the property in the equitable action to be brought against the "owner," pursuant to section 12, though the proceeding be held not to be one in rem because the res is not made defendant. Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 640, 647, 13 Cal. App. 234.

Const. art. 14, § 7, providing that the state thereby releases to the owner or owners of the soil all mines and minerals thereon, was curative in its nature and retrospective in its effect, and intended as an extinguishment of the rights of the state in only those mines and minerals in soil owned at the time of its adoption, and was not intended to prevent the state from reserving mines and minerals in lands of the public domain subsequently granted by it, in view of the facts that this provision was originally adopted by the convention which framed the Constitution of 1866 at a time when the state could not afford to be generous in its disposal of the ungranted public domain; that it was adopted, not as a general provision of the Constitution, but as an ordinance substituted for one having special reference to the title to a salt lake, then in dispute; and that its language has remained unchanged in subsequent Constitutions, especially as the term "release" commonly means to surrender a right or discharge a liability which presupposes the existence of some person against whom the right may be exercised or the liability enforced, and the word "owner" ordinarily means one who already has a legal or rightful title, and not one who must acquire such title in the future in order to come within the term; and hence Rev. St. 1895, art. 349m, reserving minerals on lands thereafter granted by the state, is valid. Cox v. Robison, 150 S. W. 1149, 1150, 105 Tex. 426.

As owner at the time of

The word "owner," in Rev. St. 1890, § 2893, requiring the statement filed by a mechanic's lien claimant to state the name of "the owner or owners * * * if known" when considered in connection with section 2889, giving a person performing work or furnishing materials by virtue of a contract with the owner a lien therefor, and section 2894 making it the duty of the county clerk to make an abstract of every lien account filed, containing the name of the person against whose property the lien is filed, etc., means the owner at the time the statement is made and filed. Davis v. Big Horn Lumber Co., 85 Pac. 980, 981, 14 Wyo. 517.

By the expression "the owner of the house for the time being," as used in Act April 10, 1849, § 4 (P. L. 600), providing that in all conveyances the right to compensation for a party wall shall pass to the purchaser, unless otherwise expressed, and the owner of the house for the time being shall have all the remedies with respect to such party wall as he may have in relation to the house to which it is attached, must be understood the owner when the wall is injured. The obvious intent of the act is to give the right of compensation to the person who is injured. The injury arises from the use of the wall in the construction of an adjoining building. Until such use there is no injury. Lea v. Jones, 57 Atl. 1113, 209 Pa. 22.

As right to possession

"Ownership of chattels usually draws to it the right of possession. Proof of ownership would warrant the inference that the owner was entitled to possession." A complaint in claim and delivery under the Code, alleging that plaintiff is the "owner," sufficiently answers the requirement that plaintiff shall allege that he is entitled to possession. Illinois Sewing Mach. Co. v. Harrison, 96 Pac. 177, 43 Colo. 362 (quoting and adopting definition in Wells, Replevin [2d Ed.] § 39).

Absolute or qualified owner

The word "owner" is often used to designate a person having an interest in property under a special title, and in Rev. St. § 3337, giving compensation to an owner for driving the logs of another which have become so intermixed with his own that they cannot be conveniently separated, it includes a person having possession under a special title or interest as a bailee as well as the absolute owner of the property. Wisconsin River Log-Driving Ass'n v. D. F. Comstock Lumber Co., 40 N. W. 148, 147, 72 Wis. 464, 1 L. R. A. 717.

The word "owner" in the St. Louis city charter, providing for special taxes for street improvements against the property benefited, and providing that tax bill shall be a lien on the property charged therewith, and that suits for the enforcement thereof shall be brought against the owner of the land, is used in its restricted sense, and means the "legal owner," though the term in its wider sense may include any person beneficially interested in the property. Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. Parkview Realty & Improvement Co., 151 S. W. 479, 481, 168 Mo. App. 468.

The word "owner" is a word of very comprehensive meaning, and may be applied to more than one person in regard to the same property at the same time; one being regarded as owner for a certain purpose, and another for an entirely different purpose. The word applied to real estate, without any qualifying words, has been held to mean prima facie the person who has the fee simple; but an owner need not necessarily have the fee simple, and one having a lesser estate, such as a trustee and mortgagor in possession, may be an owner. Good v. Jarrard, 76 S. E. 698, 701, 93 S. C. 229, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383.

The determination of the ownership of real property, for purposes of taxation, is sometimes a question of serious difficulty. The authorities, however, appear to hold that by the "owner" is meant the person who has the legal title or estate to or in the land, and not one who by contract or otherwise has a mere equity therein, or a right to compel a conveyance of such legal title or estate to himself. Collins v. Reger, 57 S. E. 743, 746, 62 W. Va. 195 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Tax Titles, § 106).

A city holding a qualified fee in lands is the owner thereof within P. L. 1909, p. 27, authorizing cities bordering on the Atlantic Ocean owning lands contiguous to the beach or ocean front to improve the same for public use and recreation, and to issue bonds therefor. Bew v. Ventnor City, 90 Atl. 28, 29, 81 N. J. Law, 207.

One who had a right to shoot on certain land could maintain an action under V. S. 4626, providing that one willfully entering on land on which shooting was prohibited with permission of the "owner" would forfeit the penalty at the suit of such owner. Defendant's contention that the word "owner" had reference to the person who owned the legal title and not to a person having an ownership for a particular purpose was overruled. Payne v. Sheets, 55 Atl. 656, 657, 75 Vt. 335.

Administrator

A personal representative in the possession of and exercising complete control over real estate of decedent, if his authority to remonstrate is not challenged by an heir or devisee, is the "owner" of such real estate within Laws 1905, p. 228, c. 20, in amendment of Laws 1903, p. 186, c. 17, § 128, providing that no repavement shall be ordered if remonstrated against by the owners of 50 per cent. of the foot frontage. Chan v. City of South Omaha, 123 N. W. 464, 466, 85 Neb. 434, 133 Am. St. Rep. 670.

In proceedings against an administrator to enforce a mechanic's lien on premises, the interest of the owner being a leasehold, the administrator was properly described as the "owner" or proprietor thereof, as the leasehold, being a chattel real, descended to the administrator. Lavergne v. Evans Bros. Const. Co., 52 South. 318, 320, 166 Ala. 289.

Agent or servant

In a city charter authorizing the city to require "owners" of dangerous buildings to remove the same at their own expense, while it may be convenient, in the exercise of the power granted by the provisions of the charter, to extend the application of the term to agents of the owners, it is not a reasonably necessary incident to the express power granted, which confines it to the owners. The rule is that it not only must be reasonably incident to the express powers granted or convenient for the exercise of such power, but it must be essential and indispensable to the purposes to be accomplished by the corporation. City of St. Louis v. J. E. Kalme & Bro. Real Estate Co., 79 S. W. 140, 142, 180 Mo. 309.

One appointed by a duly executed writing as manager and attorney in fact for the owner in conducting a mercantile business has such authority that a materially false property statement made by him for the purpose of obtaining goods for sale in such business on credit is one made by the "owner" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b (3), as added by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. 797, which makes the obtaining of property on credit by means of such a statement ground for refusal of a discharge. In re Reed, 191 Fed. 920, 930.

All persons having an interest

"The word 'owner' is a comprehensive term, and is applied to any person who has dominion of a thing real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, and a right of enjoyment and disposition." Bouvier. When the term is employed in the statutes relating to eminent domain, to designate the persons who are to be made parties to the proceedings, and who are entitled to receive compensation for land taken against their will, it should be held to include all those who have any lawful interest in the property to be condemned. Brigham City v. Chase, 85 Pac. 436, 437, 438, 30 Utah, 410 (citing 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 335).

The word "owner," in the statute giving a company power to condemn land and providing that it shall be liable for all such damages as may be established by any landowner, embraces not only the owner of the fee but a lessee for years and any other person who has an interest in the property affected by the condemnation. Woodstock Hardwood & Spool Mfg. Co. v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 66 S. E. 194, 196, 84 S. C. 306.

All persons having an interest in land are "owners" within the meaning of the statute relating to parties in condemnation proceedings. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 105 N. W. 983, 985, 75 Neb. 4.

The word "owner," as used in the road laws (Comp. St. 1905, c. 78, §§ 18-29), applies to all persons having an interest in the estate taken or damaged. Beste v. Cedar County, 128 N. W. 29, 30, 87 Neb. 689.

The word "owner," as used in the condemnation law, includes all persons having any estate, interest, or easement in the property to be taken, or any lien, charge, or incumbrance thereon and includes a person who claims an interest in land, and between whom and another there is a dispute over the title. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Matthews, 128 N. Y. Supp. 138, 141, 70 Misc. Rep. 567; 129 N. Y. Supp. 828, 144 App. Div. 732.

The statutory requirement that a tax deed shall recite that the land sold at a tax sale has not been redeemed is sufficiently fulfilled by a recital that the owner has not offered to redeem; the word "owner" in this connection including any one who has a substantial interest in the property. Steele v. Dye, 105 Pac. 700, 702, 81 Kan. 286.

"The owner," as used in Act 1874 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1893, c. 82), relating to mechanics' liens, means the owner of any interest in the land. Sorg v. Crandall, 84 N. E. 181, 184, 233 Ill. 79.

Under Mechanic's Lien Act June 14, 1898, § 3 (P. L. p. 538), requiring stop notices to be served on the "owner of the building," a stop notice is properly served upon the owner of the land and not upon the person liable under contract for the price of the building. Gardner & Meeks Co. v. Herold, 72 Atl. 24, 25, 76 N. J. Law, 524.

"Where it is manifest that the building was erected for the immediate use, enjoyment, or benefit of a particular person, that person, within the meaning of the statute concerning mechanics' liens, is to be regarded as the 'owner or proprietor' thereof." Winslow Bros. Co. v. McCully Stone Mason Co., 69 S. W. 304, 306, 169 Mo. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Burgwald v. Weippert, 49 Mo. 60).

Corporations

Rev. Civ. Code, § 415, designates the owners of shares in a corporation with a capital stock as stockholders, and the corporators of a corporation having no capital stock and their successors as members. Section 742 provides that the private property of the members of benevolent corporations are not liable for corporate debts, unless it is so provided in the articles of incorporation. Sections 740 and 411 make persons signing articles of association and their associates and successors on complying with the statute a body corporate. Section 182 provides that ownership is the right to possess and use to the exclusion of others. Held, that an incorporated commercial club, whose articles of association provided that its members should not be liable for corporate debts, and not its members, was the "owner" of liquors kept to be furnished the members in exchange for checks for which they paid. State v. Mudie, 115 N. W. 107, 110, 22 S. D. 41.

Creditor secured by deed of trust

Creditors secured by a deed of trust are not owners of land within the meaning of an act providing that the owners shall be given notice and opportunity to be heard before assessments for improvements are levied against the property. City of Richmond v. Williams, 47 S. E. 844, 845, 102 Va. 733.

Equitable owner

A person who has paid the consideration for land, though it is deeded to another, is the "owner" thereof, within Code Civ. Proc. § 696, giving a lien for labor or material furnished under a contract with the owner. J. F. Anderson Lumber Co. v. Spears, 127 N. W. 643, 645, 25 S. D. 624.

Executor

The signatures by executors and trustees of an estate are the signatures of the "owners" within the meaning of the statute as to special assessments. Shannon v. City of Omaha, 103 N. W. 53, 55, 73 Neb. 507 (citing Portsmouth Savings Bank v. City of Omaha, 93 N. W. 231, 67 Neb. 50).

An executor is not an "owner" of realty, and his signature to a petition for a street improvement as executor is not authorized. People v. Board of Assessors of City of Buffalo, 109 N. Y. Supp. 991, 994.

Where certain real estate abutting on a street, the sidewalk of which was to be improved, was vested in defendant executors for 10 years, the heirs having only the right to the proceeds, the executors were the "owners" of such property, within Ky. St. § 3567 (Russell's St. § 1589), requiring notice to be given property owners of such contemplated improvement; and hence, notice having been given to such executors and they having failed to begin the performance of the improvement within the time specified, the city was entitled to do the work and enforce a lien on the property therefor. City of Winchester v. Bush, 133 S. W. 791, 792, 141 Ky. 709.

Greater New York Charter, § 894a, added to Laws 1901, c. 466, by Laws 1906, c. 207, providing that, so long as the books of annual record of assessed valuation of personalty remain open for correction, the board of taxes and assessments, on 10 days' notice to the person in interest, may add to the assessment roll the name of the owner of any personalty, and its assessed valuation, that may have been omitted, authorizes the addition of the name of an executor holding personal property of a testator dying before the second Monday of January; the executor being the "owner" of the personal estate of testator. People ex rel. Stebbins v. Purdy, 129 N. Y. Supp. 273, 278, 144 App. Div. 361.

Fee-simple owner

The word "owner," standing alone, signifies absolute owner, or owner in fee simple, not a qualified or limited estate in the land. Phillips v. Hardenburg, 80 S. W. 891, 895, 181 Mo. 463.

A covenant in a mortgage that the mortgagor is the "owner" is that he is the owner in fee simple. Slater Trust Co. v. Randolph-Macon Coal Co., 166 Fed. 171, 174.

The word "owner," as applied to land, usually refers to a fee simple, though the meaning may not be the same under all circumstances. People v. Bennett Medical College, 94 N. E. 110, 112, 248 Ill. 608, 140 Am. St. Rep. 237.

A building restriction agreement executed by persons who are "owners in fee simple" is valid, though not signed by the wife of one of the owners, and, where he and the wife subsequently executed a conveyance to a third person subject to the agreement, the property was subject to the agreement; the quoted words only meaning that the fee simple of the property was vested in the parties to the agreement. Goodhue v. Cameron, 127 N. Y. Supp. 120, 126, 142 App. Div. 470.

Grantee of standing timber

Under a statute imposing a penalty for cutting trees, recoverable by the owner, and defining the "owner" to be the owner of the timber when one owns the timber and another owns the land, where there is no separate ownership of the timber and land the owner of the land is the owner of the timber. Brasher v. Shelby Iron Co., 40 South. 80, 144 Ala. 659.

The owner of timber upon lands is not an "owner of timbered lands" within the meaning of Rev. St. 1892, § 1469, providing that courts of chancery shall entertain suits by any person claiming to own any timbered lands, to enjoin trespass on such lands by the cutting of trees, etc. Doke v. Peek, 34 South. 896, 45 Fla. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 70.

Guardian

A guardian in possession of and exercising complete control over his ward's real estate is the "owner" thereof within Laws 1905, p. 228, c. 20, in amendment of Laws 1903, p. 186, c. 17, § 128, providing that no repavement shall be ordered if remonstrated against by the owners of 50 per cent. of the foot frontage. Chan v. City of South Omaha, 123 N. W. 464, 466, 85 Neb. 434, 133 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Incumbrancer or Lienholder

As statutes conferring power on the state to sue "owners" of property for delinquent general taxes are construed to contemplate as "owners" all incumbrancers, and thereby give the state a first lien, St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 18, providing that the expense of improving streets shall be charged to the adjoining property as a special tax, and section 25, which provides that special assessments and taxes may be collected of the owner of the land in any court of competent jurisdiction, and that the owner, or any other person having an interest in the property charged with a tax bill, may pay the same, without interest, within 30 days after the notice of the bill, must be construed to give a right to sue the incumbrancers as well as the legal owners, and to make a special tax levied thereunder a first lien on property affected; the tax being on the property, and not on the individual owner, and the rule giving general taxes priority being applicable to special assessments, irrespective of the absence of express statutory declaration as to such priority. Morey Engineering & Construction Co. v. St. Louis Artificial Ice Rink Co., 146 S. W. 1142, 1146, 242 Mo. 241, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 119, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1200.

The Supreme Court of Nebraska has held that the term "owner," as used in a statute providing for the foreclosure of a tax lien and providing for service of process where the "owner" of the land is not known, applies to the owner of the fee and does not include a person holding a lien upon the premises. Leigh v. Green, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 391, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. Ed. 623.

Penal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1427, subd. 2, providing that "any person, who not being the owner thereof, and without lawful authority, willfully injures or disfigures * * * a monument * * * in a cemetery * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor," is not to be construed as though the word "sole" were before the word "owner," and so does not apply to a joint owner of a monument, who, though without right, removes an inscription therefrom. People v. Otis, 121 N. Y. Supp. 810, 811, 137 App. Div. 426.

Lessee

The word "owner," as used in Civ. Code, §§ 542-544, providing that, when the owner of any tract of land abutting on a railroad constructs a fence about it on all sides except along the railroad, it shall be the duty of the railroad company to construct a fence along its right of way, means the owner of the fee, and does not include a lessee. Crary v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 100 N. W. 18, 19, 18 S. D. 237.

A railway corporation operating a line of railroad is the "owner" thereof within a statute imposing a penalty on a corporation owning a railroad for failure to equip its locomotives with bells or whistles. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. State, 106 S. W. 199, 84 Ark. 409.

The term "owner in possession" of premises, within a statute prescribing a penalty against such persons, where intoxicants are unlawfully sold on their premises, includes a tenant for a term of years, or of any freehold or greater estate. Commonwealth v. Smith & McGuffar, 105 S. W. 397, 398, 127 Ky. 171.

Lessees are not "owners" within Laws 1906, c. 1355, § 2, providing that no liquor license shall be granted where the owners of the greater part of the land within 200 feet of such plaintiff shall object. American Woolen Co. v. Town Council of North Smithfield, 69 Atl. 293, 298, 29 R. I. 93, 16 Ann. Cas. 1227.

The holder of an unexpired lease of premises is entitled to an award of damages as an "owner" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3358, defining such term to include all persons having any estate, interest, or easement in the premises condemned, or any lien, charge, or incumbrance thereon. People v. Thornton, 106 N. Y. Supp. 704, 705, 122 App. Div. 287. And a tenant in possession under a lease for six years is an "owner," under this section. Baker v. State, 118 N. Y. Supp. 618, 620, 63 Misc. Rep. 549.

The word "owner," as used in Rev. St. § 4275, making a building liable if the owner knowingly permits it to be used for gaming, includes a lessee, and the interest of a lessee subletting to one who, with the knowledge of lessee, uses it for gaming, may be subjected to the judgment against sublessee for a loss therein at gaming. Iroquois Co. v. Meyer, 89 N. E. 90, 91, 80 Ohio St. 676.

Laws 1907, p. 94, § 44, which makes it unlawful to hunt on land of another without written permission from the owner or his agent, and which also provides that said permission shall be good for one year from the date of its issuance, unless otherwise provided therein, and said permission shall expire unless otherwise provided, at the expiration of one year from the date of its issuance, do not authorize a mere tenant of an owner to give the written permission; the term "owner" being employed in its primary meaning, which is he who has the title, as distinguished from a mere possessory right to the premises. Barclay v. State, 47 South. 75, 76, 156 Ala. 163 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5134 et seq.).

One who has an ordinary oil and gas lease, authorizing entry on the land to explore for oil and gas, is not an "owner" within the mechanic's lien law, and hence one who performs labor for him cannot obtain a mechanic's lien. Eastern Ohio Oil Co. v. McEvoy, 89 Pac. 1048, 1049, 75 Kan. 515.

The word "owner," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4817, providing that any person who shall under contract with the owner of land furnish material for the erection of any building thereon shall have a lien on the land, building, and appurtenances, includes a leasehold under a lease from the school land leasing board, and a lien for materials attaches to such a leasehold estate, subject to the paramount interest of the United States, the lessor, or the holder of the fee. Block v. Pearson, 91 Pac. 714, 716, 19 Okl. 422.

The word "owner," in Code Civ. Proc. § 619 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4817), providing that any person who shall under contract with the "owner" of any tract of land furnish material for the erection, alteration, or repair of any building thereon, shall have a lien on the tract, includes any interest in lands, no matter how slight, and a mechanic's lien will attach to a leasehold estate. Jarrell v. Block, 92 Pac. 167, 169, 19 Okl. 467.

A tenant in possession who constructs an improvement for his own use and benefit, with the knowledge and approval of his landlord, is an "owner" within Code, § 3089, requiring a mechanic's lien to be predicated on a contract with the owner, and section 3096, declaring an owner to be any person for whose use or benefit any building, erection, or other improvement is made. Webster City Steel Radiator Co. v. Chamberlin, 115 N. W. 504, 505, 137 Iowa, 717.

In Laws 1891, p. 179, c. 96, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 173, c. 86, providing that any person is guilty of forcible entry or detainer, who, without the permission of the "owner," enters on the land of another and fails to remove therefrom after certain notice, the word "owner" is used in a more comprehensive sense than the record or title owner of the land. Where defendant went into possession under an agreement with the lessee in a lease which, by its provisions, could not be assigned without the consent of the landlord, and no such consent was obtained, and subsequently plaintiff obtained a ease from the landlord, and thereafter defendant paid rent to plaintiff, there was such relationship between plaintiff and defendant, that plaintiff might maintain unlawful detainer. Stahl Brewing & Malting Co. v. Van Buren, 88 Pac. 837, 838, 45 Wash. 451.

The phrase "the person owning the adjoining fields," in Rev. St. 1899, § 4573, ¶ 2, forbidding under penalty the throwing down of partition fences, should not be construed to mean only the owner of the land, as a tenant may own the field and be an "owner" within the meaning and protection of the statute. Robinson v. Schiltz, 115 S. W. 472, 473, 135 Mo. App. 32.

As used in St. 1898, § 1391, providing that respective occupants of adjoining lands used for farming shall maintain partition fences, unless they mutually otherwise agree, and owners of land who do not maintain lawful partition fences cannot recover for trespass by the animals of owners of the adjoining lands, with whom partition fences might have been maintained, the term "owners of lands" includes a tenant as the occupant of land; and where he failed to maintain a partition fence he was precluded from recovering for trespass by animals of the owner of the adjoining land, with whom a partition fence might have been maintained. Peterson v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 659, 660, 132 Wis. 280.

The term "owner," used in Act March 27, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 219, § 1), requiring the owners of certain hotels to provide fire escapes, does not refer to the proprietor of the business, but to the owner of the building. Yall v. Snow, 100 S. W. 1, 3, 201 Mo. 511, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 177, 119 Am. St. Rep. 781, 9 Ann. Cas. 1161.

Lessor

Act March 27, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 219, § 1), requiring the "owner, proprietor, lessee or keeper" of certain hotels to provide fire escapes, places the initial duty upon the owner of the building without regard to the liability of his lessee. Yall v. Snow, 100 S. W. 1, 3, 201 Mo. 511, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 177, 119 Am. St. Rep. 781, 9 Ann. Cas. 1161. The use of the word "owners" in this act indicates clearly that the Legislature meant to impose the duty upon more persons than the occupant alone. A person may be the owner of a hotel building, and still not be the occupant or keeper thereof, and hence the liability of the "owner" is not contingent upon his being in possession. Johnson v. Snow, 100 S. W. 1, 3, 201 Mo. 450.

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 482, c. 415) art. 6, § 86, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 1049, c. 490, requires the owner, agent, or lessee of a factory to provide in each workroom thereof sufficient ventilation and makes such persons otherwise liable to a penalty. Section 94, as added by Laws 1906, p. 303, c. 178, and amended by Laws 1908, p. 1217, c. 426, § 2, provides that the term "owner" shall mean the owner of the freehold or the lessee, and defines the term "tenant factory" as a building, separate parts of which are occupied by different persons, and one or more of which parts is so used as to constitute a factory, and makes the owner of such tenant factory responsible for the nonobservance of section 86, and provides that the lessee shall permit the owner to enter the premises to comply with the law. Held, that where the owner of a building leases the lower floor under a lease requiring the tenant to observe such regulations, and the latter partitions the floor, puts in workbenches, stoves, etc., thereby creating poor ventilation, the owner is personally liable, though he did not create the condition, and though the tenant may be also liable. People ex rel. Williams v. Eno, 119 N. Y. Supp. 600, 602, 134 App. Div. 527.

Mortgagee

"Some courts, considering that word [owner] strictly in such statutes [statutes regulating the enforcement of the right of eminent domain], have held it not to embrace a mortgagee. * * * Other courts, however, have held that a consideration of the context of the statutes which they were interpreting, and the evident purpose intended thereby to be subserved, that mortgagees were embraced." Glover v. United States, 17 Sup. Ct. 95, 97, 164 U. S. 294, 41 L. Ed. 440.

Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, mortgagees of property in that state have an estate in the property mortgaged separate and distinct from that of the mortgagors, and are comprehended within the term "owner" in cases where "owners" are required to be made parties to suits. City of Omaha v. Omaha Water Co., 192 Fed. 246, 249, 112 C. C. A. 504.

The "owners" entitled to institute proceedings, under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 5496-5541, for the organization of drainage districts by circuit courts, and elect commissioners, and otherwise act, are the title owners of the land, and mortgagees are not necessary signers. Sibbett v. Steele, 144 S. W. 439, 440, 240 Mo. 85.

A mortgagee is within the protection of a provision of a city charter requiring the street commissioners, in condemning land, to ascertain the damages for which the "owner" or occupant of "any right or interest claimed in any ground or improvements" ought to be compensated. Mayor, etc., of Hagerstown v. Groh, 61 Atl. 467, 468, 101 Md. 560.

Under Rev. St. Me. c. 93, § 29, which gives a lien for labor or materials furnished in erecting, altering, or repairing a house, building, or appurtenances by virtue of a contract with or "by consent of the owner," as construed by the Supreme Judicial Court of the state, in order that the interests in real estate of any person shall be affected by reason of his statutory consent, he must be held to have set in motion a train of circumstances which necessarily, or reasonably, or ordinarily, resulted in the furnishing of labor and materials for which the lien is claimed. A mortgagee out of possession is not an "owner" within the meaning of the statute, nor can he be held to have consented to the displacement of his own lien merely because he may have knowledge of the making of the improvements. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Bodwell Water Power Co., 181 Fed. 735, 738.

A mortgagee not in possession is not an "owner" within the meaning of the Maine mechanic's lien statute (Rev. St. Me. c. 93, § 29), which gives a lien for labor or materials only when they are furnished "by virtue of a contract with or by consent of the owner," and he is not required to serve notice of his dissent where he has knowledge that improvements are being made on the property, as is required of the owner, in order to prevent the displacement of his mortgage. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 190 Fed. 700, 702, 111 C. C. A. 428, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 84.

Mortgagor

The phrase "owner of an equity of redemption," in Rev. Laws, c. 187, § 33, providing that if the owner of an equity of redemption dies, the administrator may redeem, having been substituted without comment by the commissioners for revision, in place of the words of the original act, "a person entitled to redeem" will be construed to include the grantor of an absolute deed intended as a mortgage. An administrator may redeem without taking out a license to sell, but in such case the result inures to the benefit of the widow and heirs, though at common law the right to redeem from a deed absolute in form but intended as a mortgage survives to the grantor's heir and not to the administrator. Clark v. Seagraves, 71 N. E. 813, 815, 186 Mass. 430.

Municipality

The setting off of fireworks by a municipality, which holds ground for the public as a playground, solely for the public use, under Rev. Laws, c. 28, § 19, and St. 1910, c. 508, is not a nuisance, as the town is not the owner of the playground in the ordinary sense; and, furthermore, the setting off of fireworks on a single occasion does not create any permanent or continuing condition of real estate, and ordinary negligence is not a nuisance. Kerr v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 94 N. E. 257, 208 Mass. 190, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 464.

Person in possession or control

The word "owner," in Act 1887 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 38, §§ 256a-256g), entitled "an act to indemnify property owners for damages caused by mobs and riots," did not restrict the right of recovery to the legal owner so that a railroad company which had in its possession cars of other roads received for transportation could recover against a municipality for their destruction by a mob within the city. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 89 N. E. 1022, 1024, 242 Ill. 178, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 358, 134 Am. St. Rep. 316.

One who has possessed a tract of land as owner for a number of years is considered in law as provisional owner, with exclusive rights of entry and possession, and is entitled to redeem the land from a tax sale. Bentley v. Cavallier, 46 South. 101, 102, 121 La. 60.

Respondent, a coal company, having in its possession a loaded coal flat moored to its float in the Allegheny river in Pittsburgh with the right to retain it until it was unloaded, cast it loose during a flood to avoid injury to its float and other vessels, and it sank some distance below. The place was not marked, and some three weeks later libellant's vessel ran into it and was injured. Held, that respondent stood in the place of the owner within the meaning of Act March 3, 1899, c. 425, § 15, 30 Stat. 1152, requiring the owner of any vessel sunk in a navigable channel to immediately mark the place and maintain the marks until it is removed or abandoned, and, it appearing that there had been no abandonment, that respondent was liable to libellant for the injury to its vessel. Second Pool Coal Co. v. People's Coal Co., 188 Fed. 892, 894, 110 C. C. A. 528.

Person taxed as owner

The word "owner," in St. 1893, § 5379, providing that land shall be assessed to the owner thereof on the 1st day of January of each year, and the owner on that day shall be liable for the tax of that year, fixes the person liable for the tax for a year, and one owning land on the 1st day of January, who subsequently conveys the same, is still liable for the tax, independent of the deed, which liability continues, as between the owner and the territory, until the tax is actually paid. Rudd v. Dunlap, 83 Pac. 431, 15 Okl. 458.

Pledgee

A pledgee of personal property is not "owner" thereof, within the meaning of an insurance policy. Whelen v. Goldman, 115 N. Y. Supp. 1006, 1010, 62 Misc. Rep. 108.

School board

Rev. St. § 2676, providing that if the "owner" or "possessor" of any lot or land in any city or village digs or causes to be dug any cellar, pit, vault, or excavation to a greater depth than 9 feet below the curb of the street on which such lot or land abuts, or, if there be no curb, below the surface of the adjoining lots, and by such excavation causes any damage to any wall, house, or other buildings on the lot adjoining thereto, such owner or possessor shall be liable in a civil action to the party injured to the full amount of the damages aforesaid, does not apply to boards of education holding titles to the lot or land being excavated for school and school building purposes. Board of Education of Cincinnati v. Volk, 74 N. E. 646, 649, 72 Ohio St. 469.

State

The word "owner," in a contract for the construction of a public building for the commonwealth which provides that the "owner" may retain out of any payment due the contractor an amount sufficient to indemnify him against liens for which, if established, the "owner" might become liable, is used in a sense of an ordinary "owner." Laborers and materialmen of the contractor are entitled in equity to be paid out of the fund retained by the commonwealth; the statute requiring officers of the commonwealth to obtain security for payment by the contractor for labor performed and materials furnished being enacted to give laborers and materialmen security equivalent to the lien which the law creates on the property of other owners. Burr v. Massachusetts School for Feeble-Minded, 83 N. E. 883, 884, 197 Mass. 357.

Stockholder

Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, make each stockholder of a corporation individually liable for such proportion of its debts incurred while he was a stockholder as the shares owned by him bear to the whole of the subscribed shares of the corporation, and the Code section also provides that the term "stockholder," as used therein applies, not only to such as appear by the corporate books to be such, but to every equitable owner of stock though it is on the books in another's name. Const. art. 12, § 14, requires books to be kept by the corporation wherein shall be recorded the amount of the capital stock subscribed, the names of the owners, and the amount of stock owned by each. Held, that the stockholders were not bound to see that not only their own names, but also the names of all other stockholders, were entered on the books as such, and that it would not be presumed that the corporation had entered the names of all stockholders on its books, so as to prevent a stockholder from showing other subscriptions than those shown by the corporate books, when sued on his statutory liability under section 322, so as to reduce the amount of such liability; the terms "owner" and "stockholder" in the statute including the real owner, though his name does not appear on the corporate books as owner. Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Wilcox, 108 Pac. 871, 873, 13 Cal. App. 22.

In June, 1905, defendant newspaper published an article to the effect that bookmakers at a race track were committing a felony, and that "the owners of the race track are equally guilty with the bookmakers under the statute." At that time the race track was owned by a corporation, of which another corporation, a jockey club, was lessee, and plaintiff and two others were the principal stockholders in the lessee corporation, but during the year 1905 plaintiff was not actively engaged in managing the jockey club, and on May 1, 1905, he left for Europe, and was there when the article was published. During his absence the management of the race track was left to the discretion of the other two principal stock owners. Defendant's paper had on numerous occasions published the fact that the plaintiff and the two other principal stockholders were the owners of the race track. Held, that plaintiff was included within the term "owners" as used in the published article, so that it was libelous as to him. Tilles v. Pulitzer Pub. Co., 145 S. W. 1143, 1149, 241 Mo. 609.

As successful claimant

See Successful Claimant.

Surviving spouse

A surviving spouse in the possession of and exercising complete control over the homestead of the deceased spouse is the "owner" thereof within Laws 1905, p. 228, c. 20, in amendment of Laws 1903, p. 186, c. 17, § 128, providing that no repavement shall be ordered if remonstrated against by the owners of 50 per cent. of the foot frontage. Chan v. City of South Omaha, 123 N. W. 464, 466, 85 Neb. 434, 133 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Tax sale purchaser

Where a statute limits the right of redemption from a sale for taxes to the owner, the word "owner" is not limited to the person who owned the land when the tax from which redemption is sought was assessed, but includes a purchaser at tax sale, who thereupon becomes entitled as owner to redeem from prior sales. Rogers v. City of Lynn, 86 N. E. 889, 890, 200 Mass. 354.

Notwithstanding the paramount nature of a tax title, the statute providing that "the owner of land taken or sold for payment of taxes may redeem the same" recognizes that another person than the purchaser at the tax sale may be the "owner," so as to be entitled to redeem. Hillis v. O'Keefe, 75 N. E. 147, 148, 189 Mass. 139.

Tenant by entirety

One of two tenants by entireties is not the "owner" of lands for the purpose of making a contract with a broker for commissions for the sale of such lands without the consent of the other tenant, within Gen. St. p. 1604, § 10, providing that no broker shall be entitled to any commission unless the authority for the sale is in writing signed by the owner or his authorized agent. Murphy v. Lewis, 69 Atl. 483, 76 N. J. Law, 141.

Tenant for life

Under Code, § 785, requiring a city changing an established grade of a street to the injury of abutting property to pay the damages to the owner, and section 48 (8, 10), defining "real property" as including lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, and the word "property" as including real property, a tenant for life or for years of a city lot is an "owner" to the extent of his interest, and may sue the city for injuries sustained by a change in the established grade of the street in front of the property. Chiesa & Co. v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 138 N. W. 922, 923.

Tenant in common

A tenant in common is an "owner" within Laws 1905, p. 228, c. 20, in amendment of Laws 1903, p. 186, c. 17, § 128, providing that no repayment shall be ordered if remonstrated against by the owners of 50 per cent. of the foot frontage. Chan v. City of South Omaha, 123 N. W. 464, 466, 85 Neb. 434, 133 Am. St. Rep. 670.

Trustee

Under Civ. Code 1896, § 1713, as amended by Act Oct. 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 374), requiring an application for the condemnation of land to state the names and residence of the owners of each tract, if known, in trust estates, the trustee being the only proper party, it is unnecessary to name the cestui que trust. Birmingham & A. A. R. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 44 South. 679, 681, 152 Ala. 422.

Vendee under bond or contract

A vendee of realty, in possession under an executory contract of sale at the date of the assessment, is the real "owner" for the purpose of taxation, and that, too, whether prior to said sale the same was subject to taxation in the hands of his vendor or not. Bowls v. Oklahoma City, 104 Pac. 902, 903, 24 Okl. 579, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1299.

A contract to purchase land does not make the purchaser the "owner" within the mechanics' lien statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 3294). Hubbell v. Texas Southern R. Co., 126 S. W. 313, 316.

One who contracts to purchase land, pays part of the price, and takes possession under his contract, is an "owner" within Civ. Code 1902, § 3008, which gives a mechanic's lien for labor performed or materials furnished for a building under contract with, or consent of, the owner. Ridgeway v. Broadway, 75 S. E. 132, 133, 91 S. C. 544.

"The lien law, designed to protect materialmen and laborers, should be liberally construed to effectuate that purpose. The definition given by the statute to the word 'owner' is a very broad one, and excludes all idea that a lien is only given to the fee owner. In this state, relation of a vendee in a contract for the purpose of real property by future payments has been passed upon. The vendee becomes the equitable owner of the land, and the vendor holds the legal title in trust for the purchaser and as security for the payment of the purchase price. Payment of the purchase price entitles the purchaser to a deed, and, until such payment, his rights are measured under the rules applying to equitable owners. The statute (section 6243), in express terms, permits the lienholder to enforce his lien to the extent of all the right, title, and interest of the owner. This precludes the idea that there must be absolute ownership before the lien attaches. We think it clear that a vendee under a contract of sale of real estate is expressly entitled to incumber his interest in the land through purchase of materials entitling the person proving them to a lien." Salzer Lumber Co. v. Clafin, 113 N. W. 1036, 1037, 16 N. D. 601.

One is the "owner" of land, and so, under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4218fff, entitled to purchase contiguous public lands, where he has an oral contract to purchase it, under which he has taken possession and made improvements permanent and valuable relative to the value of the land. Bone v. Cowan, 84 S. W. 385, 386, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 519 (citing Smith v. Rothe [Tex.] 55 S. W. 754).

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255, providing that if a majority of the resident owners of property liable to taxation for a street improvement at the date of the passage of the resolution therefor, owning a majority of the front feet owned by residents of the city abutting on the street, shall not file a protest, a contract may be let for the work, a person having a contract for property of which he has taken possession, and on which he is living, and who has made part payment of the purchase price and been offered a deed, which has not been delivered because corrections therein were required, is a "property owner" entitled to sign such a protest. Shaw v. Goben, 151 S. W. 209, 210, 167 Mo. App. 125.

Vendor in contract of sale

"Under the provisions of the Mechanics' Lien Law, the 'owner' of real estate on whose interest a mechanic's lien attached is a person for whose immediate use and benefit the building, erection, or improvement is made." A vendor under an executory contract of sale whose vendee is in possession, and who makes improvements by erecting buildings on the real estate covered by such executory contract, is not the "owner" within the meaning of this law. Johnson v. Soliday, 126 N. W. 99, 100, 19 N. D. 463.

Under Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418, § 3, declaring that a contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman in the performance, labor, or furnishing of materials for the improvement of any real property, "with the consent," or at the request, of the owner hereof, or his agent, contractor, or subcontractor, shall have a lien, etc., a person who has contracted to sell real estate remains "the owner" within such act until title passes. Schnauffer v. Ahr, 103 N. Y. Supp. 195, 99, 53 Misc. Rep. 290 (citing Packard v. Sugarman, 66 N. Y. Supp. 30, 31 Misc. Rep. 223).

Owner of import

One having full dominion over property, with a right to sell or otherwise dispose of it without accountability to any one, may be considered the "owner" within Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 5, 26 Stat. 132, requiring that, "whenever merchandise imported into the United States is entered by invoice, one of the following declarations, according to the nature of the case, shall be filed with the collector of the port at the time of entry by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent," etc., and hence he might properly make the required declaration. United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 132 Fed. 579. See, also, Id., 139 Fed. 961, 970, 72 U. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

Owner of railroad

Under Const. art. 9, § 8, prohibiting the granting of a license to a foreign corporation to build a railroad within the state, and providing that where a railroad is partly in the state the "owners" or projectors thereof must incorporate in the state, the term "owners" applies more especially to those who have a right of property in a tangible railroad in existence in such form as to constitute the subject of ownership, 23 St. at Large, p. 1053, providing for the domestication of foreign railroad corporations, is invalid under such constitutional provision. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. v. McCown, 68 S. E. 418, 423, 84 S. C. 318.

Owner of street

In Code Civ. Proc. § 3358, the word "owner" is defined as including all persons having any estate, interest, or easement in the property to be taken. In proceedings to condemn property in a public street, the fee of which was in a private individual for the erection and maintenance of a telephone system, neither the municipality nor its board of trustees has, as such, any estate, interest, or easement in the property sought to be taken, and they were in no sense "owners" of the property within the meaning of that term as used in the statute. New Union

Telephone Co. v. Marsh, 89 N. Y. Supp. 79, 82, 96 App. Div. 122.

One who owns the fee of the street in front of premises for which a liquor license is sought is, notwithstanding the easement of the public to use the street for travel, the "owner of real estate" within 25 feet of the premises, and so entitled under Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 15, to object to the granting of the license. Moran v. Gallagher, 85 N. E. 579, 580, 199 Mass. 486, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 116.

Owner of vessel

The word "owner," as used in the statute creating a lien on vessels, does not include a charterer. Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5953, providing that all steamers, vessels, etc., are liable for the nonperformance or malperformance of any contract for the transportation of passengers or property between places within the state, or to or from places within the state, made by their respective owners, masters, agents, or assignees, does not create a lien on the vessel for breach of contract of affreightment made by her charterer. Guffey v. Alaska & P. S. S. Co., 130 Fed. 271, 279, 64 C. C. A. 517 (citing The C. W. Moore, 107 Fed. 957).

OWNER AFFECTED

See Affected.

OWNER OF RECORD

One holding under a recorded tax deed, invalid on its face, is not a "person appearing of record as owner," within Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 15, requiring an assessment to the owner of record; for, when a tax deed fails to convey a title, it fails to convey the rights of the original owner, who remains the only person appearing of record as owner, and a sale founded thereon is void. Connors v. City of Lowell, 95 N. E. 412, 416, 209 Mass. 111, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 627.

OWNER'S RISK

See At Owner's Risk.

The general words of exemption for liability for damage in the case of shipment of glass and the words "owner's risk" do not relieve a carrier from the consequences of its negligence. Rieser v. Metropolitan Exp. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 170, 171, 45 Misc. Rep. 632.

See Act of Ownership; Claim of Ownership; Clothed with Indicia of Ownership; Entire, Unconditional and Sole Ownership; Exclusive Ownership; Fiducial Acts of Ownership; Imperfect Ownership; Joint Ownership; Perfect Ownership; Qualified Ownership; Sole and Unconditional Ownership; Unconditional and Sole Ownership.

Element of robbery, see Robbery.

As titles and rights to real property vary from the absolute and unqualified fee simple to that of the mere occupant, so the word "ownership" varies in its significance, according to context and subject-matter. Peterson v. Johnson, 111 N. W. 659, 660, 132 Wis. 280 (citing Merrill Ry. & Lighting Co. v. Merrill, 96 N. W. 683, 119 Wis. 249 and 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4904).

"Ownership" is the state of being an owner, the right to own, exclusive right of possession, legal or just claim or title, proprietorship; so that claim of "ownership" is synonymous with claim of title. Stryker v. Meagher, 107 N. W. 792, 793, 76 Neb. 610 (citing Bouv. Dict.).

Where a full abstract of title to land tendered United States in exchange for lieu land was furnished, that grantors did not have an unincumbered title to land offered in exchange, in absence of fraud, did not entitle the government to rescind a patent granted for the lieu land, as "ownership" of land authorized to be conveyed in exchange does not imply perfect title. United States v. Conklin, 169 Fed. 177, 183.

Under Rev. Codes, 1905, § 4702, defining "ownership" as the right to possession and use to the exclusion of others, the term is broader than either "title" or "possession" and includes both. Fleming v. Sherwood (N. D.) 139 N. W. 101, 103, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945.

Homestead entry

The relation between a homesteader and land which he has entered under the federal homestead law is an "ownership." It is what is described by the Louisiana Code as an "imperfect ownership," by which is meant an ownership which does not invest the titular with the right to use, enjoy, and dispose of the property in an unlimited manner. It is furthermore a conditional ownership. An imperfect conditional ownership under the Louisiana Code is an "ownership." The acquisition of land by the homesteader dates from the entry. The occupying and cultivating of the land for five years and the making of final proofs are merely conditions imposed upon the title, and the accomplishment of these conditions has a retroactive effect to the date of the entry. Consequently the homestead becomes the joint property of the husband and wife if the community of acquets and gains existed between them at the time of the entry, even though the proofs were made and the certificate of the patent issued only after the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife. Crochet v. McCamant, 40 South. 474, 476, 477, 116 La. 1, 114 Am. St. Rep. 538.

The homesteader by settlement and entry under the federal homestead laws acquires an inchoate title, which, when perfected, relates back to the date of entry. His possession is therefore that of quasi owner. Mott v. Hopper, 40 South. 921, 923, 116 La. 629.

Occupancy, possession, or seisin

"Ownership" of land has a broader significance than mere right of occupancy. An owner has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases. "Ownership" is the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all others. Indian agreement 1883 between the United States and Chiefs Moses and Sar-sarp-kin, of the Columbia reservation, and Tonasket and Lot, of the Colville reservation, provided for the removal of the tribes to the Colville reservation at their election, for their surrender of a large quantity of reservation lands, and for the allotment in severalty of one square mile of land to each head of a family or male adult, "in the possession or 'ownership' of which they shall be guaranteed and protected." This agreement was ratified by Act Cong. July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. 79, c. 180), providing that, in case the Indians elect to remain on the Columbia reservation, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the quantity of land stipulated in the agreement to be allowed them; the same, when selected, "to be held for the exclusive use and occupation" of such Indians, and the remainder of the reservation to be restored to the public domain. Held, that land allotted to such Indians in severalty vested in them in fee, as distinguished from a mere right of possession. United States v. Moore, 154 Fed. 712, 715.

There may be an "ownership"—that is, a right of property—without possession or a right to possession. Schwald v. Brunjes, 123 S. W. 472, 139 Mo. App. 516.

"The law recognizes two kinds of ownership in personal property; general and special." Where a person had the general property in goods seized under execution against another, and the judgment was satisfied, he became entitled to the immediate possession thereof, and had such ownership as would support an indictment for larceny against one stealing them while in custody of the law under the execution subsequent to the satisfaction of the judgment. People v. Frankenberg, 86 N. E. 128, 131, 236 Ill. 408.

"In burglary, 'ownership' means any possession which is rightful against the burglar." In a prosecution for burglary in entering a chicken house, evidence that prosecutor was in actual possession of the house as alleged at the time the burglary was committed was sufficient to sustain an allegation that prosecutor was the owner of the house. State v. McGuire, 91 S. W. 939, 942, 193 Mo. 215 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 37).

In a prosecution for theft, the test of "ownership" is not whether the person from whom the property was taken would be responsible for its loss to the real owner, but whether he had the actual care, control, and management of the property. King v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 387, 389.

The statute relating to the allegation of ownership of property, in indictments for crimes involving personal property, provides that "ownership" is constituted by the actual care, control, and management of the property. A minor son was living with his father, and under his direction and control, and was temporarily looking after horses which were on the range. Held, that the ownership of the horses was in the father, and an indictment for receiving the horses, which had been stolen, and bringing them into the state, which alleged ownership in the son, was insufficient. Bryan v. State, 111 S. W. 1035, 1036, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 59.

Where an indictment for burglary charged the entering of a warehouse, the property of H., proof that H. had the keys to the property, was in apparent control and occupancy thereof, and had been so for many years, that he stored therein beer belonging to a brewing company and property of his own and others, sufficiently showed him to have been the owner though the title was in the brewing company; the term "ownership" as used in an indictment for burglary meaning any possession which is rightful as against the burglar. State v. Burns, 136 N. W. 520, 155 Iowa, 488.

Under the acts of descent in this country, the word "seisin" is equivalent to "ownership." North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 287, 270, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 128 Am. St. Rep. 189 (citing Cook v. Hammond, 6 Fed. Cas. 399, 4 Mason, 467).

Ownership of corporate stock

The ownership of stock in a corporation is the right to participate in the immunities and benefits of the corporation, and in the choice of its officers and management of its concerns, to share in its dividends and profits, and to receive an aliquot part of the proceeds of the capital on the winding up and termination of the active existence of the corporation. Marbury Lumber Co. v. Hunter, 53 South. 1028, 1029, 169 Ala. 503.

Ownership of game

There is a fundamental distinction between the "ownership" which one may acquire in game and the "ownership" which one may acquire in chattels or lands. Sherwood v. Stephens, 90 Pac. 345, 346, 13 Idaho, 299.

Person assessed

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 367, c. 378) § 1027, provides that when taxes remain unpaid, the collector shall advertise such lands for sale at a day specified, and there shall be appended to the notice of sale a statement of the property sold, or the statement of the property may be published in a pamphlet, and the notice shall also state that the statement of the taxes and "ownership of the property" is published in the pamphlet. In a pamphlet published under this section, the name of the owner of property was not given, but opposite the description of the lot, under the heading "To Whom Assessed," appeared the name of the person to whom the lot was assessed. Under Greater New York Charter, § 889 (page 317), the name of the owner or occupant is to be given in the assessment of property if known, but under section 894 (page 319) a tax is not invalid because the name of the lawful owner is not inscribed in the assessment roll. Held, that by the "ownership of the property" is meant the name of the person to whom it is assessed, and that the sale based on this notice was valid. People ex rel. Myers v. Moynahan, 114 N. Y. Supp. 417, 419, 130 App. Div. 46.

J. A. & W. Bird & Co.*, 167 Fed. 319, 320, 92 C. C. A. 631.

OYER

"By the 'oyer,' the bond is made a part of the declaration." Cooke v. Graham, 3 Cranch [7 U. S.] 229, 235, 2 L. Ed. 420.

The purpose of making "profert" of a deed, letters testamentary, letters of administration, or other instruments under seal, is to enable the opposite party to crave oyer thereof. The purpose of "oyer" is to enable the party craving it to hear the deed, etc., read, so that he may enter it upon the pleading and take advantage of any part thereof not already pleaded by his adversary. Thus a defendant may crave oyer and set out letters of administration if he wish to avail himself of any variance in the statement of them in the declaration. Sautter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 63 Atl. 994, 995, 73 N. J. Law, 455 (citing 1 Chit. Pl. 431, 432).

OYSTER

As personal property, see Personal Property.

"'Oysters' are produced from eggs from which there hatches out a small free-swimming larva becoming in a few days spat. These seek and attach themselves to some solid support where they remain." The ownership of land whereon "oysters" are deposited is not a prerequisite to the ownership of the oysters, and the fact that a person is guilty of trespass in planting and cultivating oysters on the land of another does not authorize the owner to take the oysters for his own use, though the owner may compel him to take them up or remove them as a nuisance. Vroom v. Tilly, 91 N. Y. Supp. 5152, 99 App. Div. 516 (citing Enc. Amer.).

"P. a.," as used in a promissory note reciting, "Int. @ 6% p. a.," is an abbreviation for "per annum." Belford v. Beatty, 34 N. E. 254, 255, 145 Ill. 414.

P. M.

After the general use of solar time became obsolete, the abbreviations "a. m." and "p. m." in designating time remained in use to distinguish between forenoon and afternoon. The accepted meaning of such an expression as "2 p. m." is afternoon, standard time, and it would have such meaning in a notice of foreclosure sale. Orvik v. Casselman, 105 N. W. 1105, 1106, 15 N. D. 34.

PT.

The abbreviation "Pt.," written in a draft following the name of the president of the company, suggests his official position; but, as they do not seem to be commonly employed as indicating "president," parol proof was admissible. *Griffin v. PACKAGE

See Cumbersome Package; Original Package; Unbroken Package.

Other packages, see Other.

See, also, Packet.

The term "in bulk" has long been understood in commercial circles as contradistinguished from "package" or "parcel," as where wheat, lard, and the like are sold in bulk. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 32 S. W. 1020, 1022, 119 Ky. 75.

A "package" is a number of things bound together convenient for handling in conveyance. Generally the words "package" and "bundle," two words about as synonymous as can be, apply if they do not directly convey the exclusive idea of union or gathering together of several things attached or put up together. To put goods in a box or clothing in a trunk or bundle suggests the meaning of pack, and its derivative, "package," as including several things. Defendant bought sewing machines in Illinois where manufactured and the parts of the machine were put together and packed and shipped in separate packages, each machine placed in one package, and, as so delivered to defendant, were delivered by her to customers without breaking the package. It was held that these were packages exempt from taxation and did not necessitate that the defendant have a peddler's license. Henderson v. Ortte, 38 South. 440, 441, 114 La. 523.

"Package" usually means a bundle put up for commercial handling. State v. Neslund, 120 N. W. 107, 108, 141 Iowa, 461.

The word "package," as used in the pure food law (Laws 1907, p. 243, c. 63), is liable to various interpretations, and applies to articles of food that are packed, bound, or put together in sizes determined by the manufacturer, and intended to pass as weighing one pound and so on through a great variety of foods, and does not apply to a ham or a side of bacon whose form, size, and weights are determined by the size, weight, and condition of the slaughtered animal. State v. Swift & Co., 120 N. W. 1127, 1129, 84 Neb. 244.

PACKERS' SKINS

The term "packers' skins" is used to designate skins removed from animals in large slaughterhouses, and are free from defects and are cleaner and better cured and can be worked into better leather than the skins which were known as "country skins." Well v. Stone, 69 N. E. 698, 33 Ind. App. 112, 104 Am. St. Rep. 243.

PACKET

The word "packet," as used in Rev. St. § 3982, prohibiting the establishment of any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets over post routes, is limited to its original meaning throughout the postal laws to cover only a written communication of four or more sheets, which by Act March 2, 1827, § 5, c. 61, 4 Stat. 238, was required to pay quadruple postage, and does not include a "packet of merchandise" not exceeding four pounds sent by mail. Williams v. Wells Fargo & Co. Express, 177 Fed. 352, 357, 101 C. C. A. 328, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, 21 Ann. Cas. 699.

PAID

See Be Paid; Duly Paid; Erroneously Exacted or Paid; Money Paid; Unpaid.

It is sufficient to allege that defendant has not "paid" said sum, without adding that he has not paid any part of it. Judson v. Eslava, Minor (Ala.) 2, 3.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 5198, declaring the charging a rate of interest by a national bank greater than is allowed by the laws of the state where the bank is located, when knowingly done, to be a forfeiture of the entire interest, and providing that, where a greater rate has been "paid," the person paying it may recover in an action of debt of the bank receiving it twice the amount of interest paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurred, a cause of action for the penalty arises immediately, and only when one who has given a bank a usurious note actually pays money thereon, which, with his knowledge and consent, it applies in payment of usurious interest, regardless of whether the principal debt has been paid. McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank of Rapid City, 121 N. W. 853, 860, 23 S. D. 269, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 437.

The words "shall be paid," in a will whereby testator gave his property to trustees to convert the same into cash and invest the proceeds in real estate producing a steady income and whereby he directed that the net income of the estate should be divided into shares and one-fifth of the income "shall be paid quarterly" to the widow for life, and on her death one-fifth of the principal of the estate, transferred and distributed as she might direct, whereby other shares of the income should be paid to designated persons for life and on their respective death, a fifth of the estate should go as directed, mean that the property was devised to the remaindermen, and there is nothing in them implying a conveyance of the title by the trustees. In re Dunphy's Estate, 81 Pac. 317, 318, 147 Cal. 95.

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 25, as amended in 1901, providing that tax bills for public improvements shall be divided into not less than three nor more than 7 equal parts, payable in annual installments, the first payable 30 days after notice, provided that, where bills are not paid in installments, the lien thereof shall terminate within two years after their date, gives the right to pay special assessments in installments, and, where tax bills are so payable, an action is not barred in two years, though the holder of the bills elects to adjudge all the installments due on default in payment of the first installment, the word "paid" in the proviso meaning "payable," so that the proviso will read that, where bills are not payable in installments, the lien shall terminate within two years after their date. Fruin v. Meredith, 122 S. W. 1107, 1112, 145 Mo. App. 586.

As satisfied

The word "paid," as used in a finding that notes had been paid, means, prima facie, that the obligation has been satisfied and the demand extinguished. Lynds v. Van Valkenburgh, 93 Pac. 615, 621, 77 Kan. 24.

There is no substantial distinction between the words "paid" and "satisfied." Under Pen. Code, § 1205, providing that a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, a judgment fining defendant $100 and directing his imprisonment "until said fine is paid, such imprisonment not to exceed one day for each $20 of said fine that shall so remain unpaid," is not void for using the word "paid" instead of "satisfied," and does not deprive defendant of the right to discharge part of the fine by imprisonment for part of the time. Ex parte Krouse, 82 Pac. 1043, 1044, 148 Cal. 232 (citing Ex parte Henshaw, 15 Pac. 110, 73 Cal. 486).

PAID COMMUNICATION

The phrase "paid communication," referring to a newspaper article published as a paid communication, means that the article is inserted as an advertisement, though it may appear in the editorial or literary part of the newspaper and possibly as notice that the paper does not hold itself responsible for the accuracy of the statements therein contained, but for that refers its readers to the persons over whose signature the article appears. Del Ponte v. Societa Italiana Di M. S. Guglielmo Marconi, 60 Atl. 237, 239, 2 R. I. 1, 70 L. R. A. 188, 114 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Held, that such department was a paid department within the meaning of section 2968, Rev. Codes 1905, relating to distribution of certain funds. Continental Hose Co. No. 1 v. City of Fargo, 114 N. W. 834, 836, 17 N. D. 5.

PAID INTO COURT

A deposit by a guardian ad litem of infants of proceeds of actions brought for the infants in a savings bank, not a designated depository of funds of the court and not made under any order of the court, is not "money paid into court," within Code Civ. Proc. § 744a, and the court may not direct its transfer to the city chamberlain. In re Harris, 137 N. Y. Supp. 234, 235, 77 Misc. Rep. 590.

Money appropriated by the board of supervisors of a county to pay defalcations in the surrogate's office, and intrusting the distribution thereof to the surrogate in his administrative capacity, is not money "paid into court," within Laws 1892, c. 651, § 2, providing for the payment over of funds paid into court. In re City of New York (Special Fund), 122 N. Y. Supp. 656, 660, 137 App. Div. 803.

PAID OFF

A reference in a pleading to a bond as "paid off" would seem to be a plainly implied admission that it was properly paid. Liberty Sav. Bank v. Campbell, 75 Va. 534, 543.

PAID TAX

The words "paid tax," as used in Code N. C. § 1722, providing that grand jurors shall be selected from "such persons only as have paid tax for the preceding year," means that such person shall have paid all of the taxes assessed against him, and not merely a person who has paid a tax or part of the taxes. Breese v. United States, 143 Fed. 250, 253, 74 C. C. A. 388.

PAID UP

A "paid-up policy" of insurance issues as a redemption from a forfeiture of the original policy which otherwise would cease and determine for nonpayment of premiums. Lenon v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 98 S. W. 117, 119, 80 Ark. 563, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193, 10 Ann. Cas. 467.

A 20-year insurance policy provided the manner in which the policy could, before the expiration of the period, on default in payment of premiums, be transferred into a fully "paid-up policy" for a certain percentage of the original amount, and among the requirements were the surrender of the policy and the acceptance of a new form of policy, and in the same connection provided that a "paid-up policy" would not entitle insured to the surplus for which provision was made in the 20-year policy. Insured, before the expiration of the period, and while his policy was still in force with all premiums paid, consulted the company's officers and stated that he wished to commute the premiums for the remaining time, and was told that the premiums would be commuted, but that, if he died, he would lose the premiums paid. A written memorandum of the commutation was made on the policy, which simply provided that a gross sum be paid in lieu with the premiums thereafter to become due, and concluded with the expression "making the policy paid up." Held, that the written memorandum would not make the policy a "paid-up policy" within the meaning of the other terms of the policy, so as to exclude insured from participation in the surplus. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Murray, 75 Atl. 348, 350, 111 Md. 600.

A resolution adopted by a corporation's directors directed the secretary and president to issue to the stockholders the shares of stock subscribed by them respectively, and later another resolution was passed that, in consideration of the assignment to the corporation of certain property, 240 shares of stock should be issued to R., 239 shares to B., and in consideration of $1 and their good will and services other shares should be issued to certain others. Held, that under Const. art. 12, § 11, and Civ. Code, §§ 323, 359, prohibiting the issuance of certificates not paid up, the stock issued under such resolutions should be considered as "paid-up stock." Turner v. Fidelity Loan Concern, 83 Pac. 62, 66, 2 Cal. App. 122.

PAIN

Where plaintiff demanded compensation for physical and mental pain, and the court charged that plaintiff demanded compensation for physical and mental pain, an instruction directing the jury in assessing the damages to consider the personal injury suffered, the pain already suffered, or which he might suffer in the future, etc., was not objectionable as restricting the damages to physical pain only, in the absence of any requested instruction on the subject, for the word "pain" was broad enough to include both physical and mental suffering. Hall v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 122 N. W. 894, 896, 145 Iowa, 291.

PAINT

See White Paint.

PAINTER

PAINTINGS

As household goods, see Household Goods.

The term "paintings," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, includes handpainted panels having a small calendar affixed, which is a trifling part of the entire article. A. A. Vantine & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 562.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194, for "paintings" in oil or water colors, does not include articles consisting of lithographic prints pasted on wood, and painted to a slight extent, and varnished. Steinhardt & Bro. v. United States, 172 Fed. 168, 169.

Splash mats or screens, which have been crudely decorated at an expense of about 2½ cents apiece by stenciling and by hand painting, which are worth about 4 cents apiece, and which primarily are articles of utility rather than for decoration, are not dutiable as "paintings in oil or water colors" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 454, 30 Stat. 194. F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 483, 484.

PAINTS

Persian berry extract, which is used in staining food products, and also as a dyestuff for coloring fabrics, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 58, 30 Stat. 154, as a color not belonging to the "paints, colors, pigments," etc., therein enumerated, nor, by similitude, under paragraph 20 or 22, 30 Stat. 152, relating respectively to berries advanced in value and to extracts of barks, etc., used for dyeing but is dutiable as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Berlin Aniline Works, 154 Fed. 925, 926.

Enamel white paint, which contains zinc, but not lead, and is ground in oil, and to which, after grinding, ingredients are added to increase the gloss, is dutiable as "white paint * * * containing zinc, but not containing lead, * * * ground in oil," rather than "paints * * * ground * * * with solutions other than oil," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, pars. 57, 58, 30 Stat. 154. United States v. J. A. & W. Bird & Co., 167 Fed. 319, 320, 92 C. C. A. 631.

PAIR

Primarily "pair" means two things of a kind, similar in form, identical in purpose, and matched or used together; but secondarily the word means a single thing composed essentially of two pieces or parts which are used only in combination and named only in the plural. For example, a pair of scissors has two blades, but one may be shorter than the other, and they are different types, etc. Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Co. v. Syracuse Rapid Transit R. Co., 152 Fed. 453, 460.

PALPABLE

The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding and satisfactory to the judgment." "Palpable" is a synonym. State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting with approval from Webst. Dict.).

PALPABLY DANGEROUS

Ky. St. § 331a, subsec. 11, provides that no child under 16 shall be employed in sewing belts, or shall adjust any belt to any machinery; and subsection 12 (section 3248) makes it the duty of the owner of any manufactory, where any person under 16 is employed, to furnish some safe mechanical device for throwing belts on or off pulleys, and that all cogs, set screws, and palpably dangerous machinery shall be properly guarded. Plaintiff's intestate was a boy under 16, who worked at a nut-drilling machine, operated by a belt from shafting which stood more than his height from the floor, and while standing on a barrel to place the belt on the shafting he was caught by an unguarded set screw, and killed. It was part of his duty to place the belt on the shafting, and the defendant had furnished no belt shifter, or any device for throwing the belt on and off, and failed to exercise ordinary care to guard the set screw. Held, that the set screw was "palpably dangerous," that it was practicable to guard it, and that the defendant was liable. Higgins Mfg. Co. v. Griesinger's Adm'r, 126 S. W. 1059, 145 Ky. 1.

PANNE VELVET

So-called "panne velvet" is dutiable as "plush," and not as "velvets," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 386, 30 Stat. 186. United States v. Passavant & Co., 164 Fed. 912; United States v. Silberstein, Castell & Co., 153 Fed. 965.

PANORAMA

See Theatrical Performance, Panoramas, etc.

A "panorama" is a picture which, representing scenes too extended to be seen at once, is exhibited a part at a time by being unrolled continuously before the spectators; and while a city ordinance imposing a license fee on and prescribing the location of museums, panoramas, cycloramas, kinoscope, or phonograph parlors, does not specifically refer to the motion picture business, it is sufficiently covered by the words "panorama" and "kinoscope," and must be held to be within the contemplation of the ordinance. Laurelle v. Bush, 119 Pac. 953, 955, 17 Cal. App. 409.

A paper exhibited to a person authorized to examine the condition of trust companies, as the unrecorded minutes of a meeting of directors, and containing a resolution for the purchase of shares of stock which the examiner had found among the assets of the company, is a "paper" within the meaning of Trust Companies Act 1899 (P. L. 1899, p. 461) § 17, and if false and exhibited to the examiner with intent to deceive him, the officers exhibiting it were guilty of a crime under that section. State v. Twining, 62 Atl. 402, 64 Atl. 1073, 1076, 1135, 73 N. J. Law, 683.

Election Laws 1896, p. 925, c. 909, § 57, provides that a certificate of nomination for each separate "paper" thereof, if there be more than one paper, shall contain a declaration of intent of the subscribers to support at the poles the persons nominated therein. Held, that the word "paper" is not used in the sense of sheet, and a certificate of independent nomination composed of several sheets firmly bound together was but one paper, and the declaration provided for by the statute need not necessarily appear on each sheet, but was sufficient if the last sheet attached contained the notary's certificate. In re Bulger, 97 N. Y. Supp. 232, 233, 48 Misc. Rep. 584.

Plain paper was stamped by a single operation into shapes with lacelike effects, which are known as tops or dollies, and are used for placing on the tops of packages of candy, fruit, etc., or under finger bowls. Plain paper might have been used for the same purpose, except that it would not have been so pleasing. Held that, as the improvement of the original material had not interfered with its distinguishing characteristics, it was dutiable as "paper," rather than as "manufactures of paper," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, pars. 403, 407, 30 Stat. 189. Hamilton v. United States, 167 Fed. 796, 797, 93 C. C. A. 186.

So-called duplex lithographic transfer paper, which is used in transferring decalcomania designs to pottery, and is produced by pasting together two sheets of paper, one coated with a gummy substance and the other uncoated, is "paper," rather than "manufactures of paper," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, pars. 403, 407, 30 Stat. 189. B. F. Drakenfeld & Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 798, 799, 93 C. C. A. 188.

PAPER ENVELOPES

Pieces of paper which have been cut into shapes and sizes adapting them to be folded so as to constitute envelopes, but which are not shown to have been commercially known as envelopes at and prior to the time of the passage of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, c.

11, 30 Stat. 151, are not dutiable as "paper envelopes," under paragraph 399, Schedule M, § 1, of said act, 30 Stat. 188, but as manufactures of paper, under paragraph 407, 30 Stat. 189. Hunter v. United States, 134 Fed. 361, 67 C. C. A. 843.

Paper cut into particular shapes and sizes, ready to be folded and gummed, so as to constitute envelopes, and found to have been commercially known as "flat envelopes" at the time of the passage of the act, held dutiable as "paper envelopes, plain," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 399, 30 Stat. 188. Hunter v. United States, 143 Fed. 914, 915.

PAPER STREET

A street appearing on the recorded plat, but which has never been opened, nor prepared for use, nor used as a street, is known as a "paper street." Raiolo v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 122 N. W. 489, 108 Minn. 431.

PAPERS

See Slight Draft Against Papers; Valuable Papers.

The word "papers," in Rev. St. 1899, § 292 (laws of administration), declaring it to be the duty of a public administrator to take into his charge and custody the estates of all deceased persons "in the following cases: * * * When money, property, papers or other estate are left in a situation exposed to loss or damage, and no other person administers on the same," refers to papers constituting the assets or a part of the assets of the estate; that is, papers in which there is a property value. Richardson v. Busch, 95 S. W. 894, 896, 198 Mo. 174, 115 Am. St. Rep. 472; De La Vergne v. Richardson, 95 S. W. 898, 198 Mo. 189.

Bal. Ann. Codes & St. § 4269 (Pierce's Code, § 7070), provides that any stockholder or creditor of the company shall have the right to demand from an officer a certified copy of any paper placed on file in the office of the company. Section 4270 (section 7071) provides that if the officer having charge of any papers of the company shall refuse or neglect to exhibit them or allow them to be inspected, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor or punishable by imprisonment in the county jail, or by fine, or by both. Held, that the papers referred to in section 4270 (section 7071) are the papers placed on file, within the meaning of the preceding section, meaning some paper lodged with and kept by the corporation, and pertaining to its corporate business, and, to subject an officer to the payment of the statutory penalty, there must be a demand for inspection of a designated paper or papers lodged with and kept by the corporation and pertaining to its corporate business by a person having an interest in inspecting the paper, and there must be a refusal to comply with the demand, and a simple demand to inspect the papers is not sufficient to subject the officer refusing it to the penalty. Brown v. Kildea, 108 Pac. 452, 58 Wash. 184.

PAPERS AND DOCUMENTS

See Private Papers and Documents.

The common-law rule that a sheriff who begins service of an execution during his term of office shall finish it, although his term expires before he can do so, is not abrogated by Pub. St. R. I. c. 201, § 29, providing for the delivery by the sheriff to his successor of the "papers and documents" pertaining to his office. The term "papers and documents" as used in this section does not include writs or precepts delivered for service, and if a sheriff retains goods, levied on before the expiration of his term, for some time after such expiration, and then hands them over to his successor, who sells them on the execution, such retention of possession is legal. Dolliver v. Collingwood, 8 Atl. 711, 712, 15 R. I. 510.

PAPERS OR EVIDENCE

The primary election law (20 Laws 1897, p. 375, c. 393) provides that every election officer or person having the custody of any document or evidence of any description directed by the act to be made, filed, or preserved, who is guilty of stealing, willfully destroying, mutilating, or defacing, falsifying, or fraudulently removing or secreting the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that ballots cast at a primary election were "papers or evidence" required to be preserved and delivered to the sheriff by section 29, p. 391, so that the destruction, mutilation, etc., thereof would constitute an offense. State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 203, 6 Pennewill, 343.

PAPERS READ IN EVIDENCE

3 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 3054, c. 110, par. 58, authorizing the jury to take to the jury room "papers read in evidence," other than depositions, empowers a jury to take to the jury room an X-ray photograph received in evidence. Chicago & J. Electric R. Co. v. Spence, 72 N. E. 796, 798, 213 Ill. 220, 104 Am. St. Rep. 213.

PAR

The word "par," as used in a contract for a sale of town bonds at par, would seem to include accrued interest; nothing to the contrary appearing. Diefenderfer v. State ex rel. First Nat. Bank, 80 Pac. 667, 671, 13 Wyo. 387 (citing Simonton, Mun. Bonds, 145; Illinois v. Delafield [N. Y.] 8 Paige, 536; Village of Ft. Edward v. Fish, 50 N. E. 973, 156 N. Y. 363).

"The word 'par' is not to be confounded with the word 'similes'; it is used in opposition to it, as the expression, 'Magis pares sunt quam similes,' implying not likeness merely, but identity." State v. Wirt County Court, 59 S. E. 884, 888, 63 W. Va. 230.

PAR VALUE

While it may be conceded that the words "par value" ordinarily are to be given the same meaning as face value when applied to bonds and stocks having a face value, yet when used as applied to surplus and undivided earnings, and not limited to bonds and stocks, the meaning may be very different. People v. Miller, 69 N. E. 1103, 1104, 177 N. Y. 461.

"Par value" means face value, and according to Bouvier's Law Dict. the term is commonly used to indicate the face value of bonds or stock. Security Trust Co. v. Ford, 79 N. E. 474, 475, 75 Ohio St. 322, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263.

Within Acts 1910, c. 99, authorizing the sale of interest-bearing state bonds at not less than "par," the "par value" is the amount of the principal, if the sale is at date of issuance of the bonds, and such amount, plus the value of the then accrued interest, if the sale is at a later date. Smith v. State ex rel. McNeill, 56 South. 179, 180, 99 Miss. 859, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 789.

The words "amount of capital stock represented by said additional stock," in Act March 4, 1850 (P. L. 130), providing for a preference as to additional stock of the company, and that the holders of other stock of the company should not be entitled to participate in any future dividend of the profits of the company until the holders of the additional stock should have been paid from the funds applicable to such dividend, 10 per cent. per annum on the amount of the capital stock of the company represented by the said additional shares is merely a clumsy paraphrase of the expression "par value," which the draftsman of the act probably regarded as too colloquial a term for use by the Legislature. Sternbergh v. Brock, 74 Atl. 166, 168, 225 Pa. 279, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877.

PARAFFIN

In construing paragraphs 626, 633, § 2, Free List, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 199, 200, providing, respectively, for a countervailing duty on "products of crude petroleum" and for the free entry of "paraffin," held, that the latter is the more specific, and governs the classification of paraffin, even though it be a product of crude petroleum. Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 58.

PARAGRAPH

Act June 30, 1902, c. 1323, 32 Stat. 500, ratifying a supplemental agreement with the Creek Indians, etc., by section 16 provides that lands shall not be alienated by allottees before the expiration of five years, except with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. At the close of the section is the following provision: "Any agreement or conveyance of any kind or character violative of any of the provisions of this paragraph shall be absolutely void and not susceptible of ratification in any manner, and no rule of estoppel shall ever prevent the assertion of its invalidity." By Act April 21, 1904, c. 1402, 33 Stat. 189, 204, all restrictions upon alienation of lands, except homesteads, were removed as to members of the Five Civilized Tribes "who were of full age and not of Indian blood." The above provisions of the earlier act are in separate paragraphs, grammatically considered. Held that, in view of the evident intent of Congress, the word "paragraph," as used in the second provision, must be construed to include the entire section, and that a conveyance made by an allottee, although not of Indian blood, while a minor and without the approval of the Secretary, was void, and could not be ratified after he reached majority. Alfrey v. Colbert, 188 Fed. 231, 234, 93 C. C. A. 517.

Webster defines "paragraph" as a distinct part of a discourse or writing; any portion of a section of writing or chapter which relates to a particular point, whether consisting of one sentence or many sentences. As used in Act Cong. June 30, 1902, c. 1323, § 16, providing that land allotted to a citizen of the Creek Nation shall not be alienated within five years, and that each citizen shall select from his allotment 40 acres as a homestead inalienable for 21 years, and providing the manner of selecting homesteads for certain classes of persons, and that the homesteads of citizens shall descend to their children, etc., and concluding by declaring any agreement or conveyance violative of any provision of this "paragraph" shall be void, etc., it means section. Alfrey v. Colbert, 104 S. W. 638, 646, 7 Ind. T. 338.

The term "paragraph," as used in code pleading, means an entire or integral statement of a cause of action. It is the equivalent of count at common law. It may embrace one sentence or many sentences; but, whether one or many, it constitutes a statement of a single cause of action. Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, 105 N. W. 287, 290, 74 Neb. 734.

The word "paragraph," as used in section 16 of the Supplemental Agreement (Act June 30, 1902, c. 1323, 32 Stat. 503), which provides that "any agreement or conveyance of any kind or character, violative of the provisions of this paragraph shall be absolutely void," etc., is synonymous with the word "section." Barnes v. Stonebraker, 113 Pac. 903, 905, 28 Okl. 75.

PARALDEHYDE

As medicinal preparation, see Medicinal Preparation.

PARALLEL

The word "parallel," in an ordinance prohibiting any person to place or keep any sign projecting over any street or sidewalk unless it be attached and parallel to the building, was not uncertain or ambiguous, but the ordinance meant that no person should place any sign projecting over any sidewalk unless it should be attached to the building and parallel to the side of the building along which the sidewalk runs. State v. Wightman, 61 Atl. 56, 57, 78 Conn. 86.

Parallel or nearly so

A recital that a street runs "parallel or nearly so" with another street intimates that the streets are not absolutely parallel with one another. Rehfuss v. Hill, 90 N. E. 187, 191, 243 Ill. 140.

Parallel railroads

Where a foreign railroad reached the termini of a local road, but its line between such termini was longer and more indirect, requiring a change of cars and ferrying and ran no through trains between such termini, solicited no through business, and provided no terminal facilities at one terminus and did not make any freight or passenger rates to compete with the local road, the two roads were not "parallel" or competing lines. Illinois State Trust Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 75 N. E. 562, 566, 217 Ill. 504.

Parallel street

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 14, provides that an assessment district for street improvements shall be made by drawing a line midway between the street to be improved and the next parallel or converging street on either side of the street to be improved, which line shall be the boundary of the district, except as otherwise provided. Held, that a parallel street within such section is not required to be one which parallels the street being improved for the whole distance of the improvement, but that the district line must deflect according as the street is paralleled, either in whole or in part by one street and partly by another. Fruin-Bambrick Const. Co. v. St. Louis Shovel Co., 111 S. W. 86, 89, 211 Mo. 524.

PARAMOUNT

PARAMOUNT NECESSITY

The law of "paramount necessity" is the right of municipalities to secure an abundant supply of pure and wholesome water for daily use in domestic life, the flooding of sewers in preserving the public health, and the extinguishment of fires. Penrhyn Slate

Co. v. Granville Electric Light & P. Co., 73 N. E. 566, 569, 181 N. Y. 80, 2 Ann. Cas. 782.

PARANOIA

"Paranoia" is a term used by medical experts, alienists, and authors on medical jurisprudence to designate the form of insanity characterized by systematized delusions; the term taking the place of "monomania" or "partial insanity." Taylor v. McClintock, 112 S. W. 405, 412, 87 Ark. 243.

PARAPH

The "paraph" of a notary is his official signature, and where he paraphs a forged note he acts as a notary, and not as an individual, and one deceived by this paraph has a cause of action against the surety on his bond. While the paraph of a notary does not guarantee either the value of the property or the rank of the mortgage, it does guarantee the genuineness of the note and of the mortgage with which it is identified, and, where a notary fraudulently issues a note, the fraud gives rise to an action against him and his surety regardless of an absence of value, or of an act of mortgage. Harz v. Gowland, 52 South. 986-988, 126 La. 674.

PARAPHERNAL

The word "paraphernal" is derived from the Greek "para," near or besides, and "pherna," meaning dowry or extra, and are words essentially related to marriage. Le Boeuf v. Melancon, 59 South. 102, 103, 131 La. 148.

PARAPHERNAL PROPERTY

"Paraphernal property" is property brought to the marriage by one of the spouses, and as the word "paraphernal" connotes the idea of marriage, there can be no such thing as paraphernal property prior to marriage. Le Boeuf v. Melancon, 59 South. 102, 103, 131 La. 148.

PARCEL

The term in "bulk" has long been understood in commercial circles as contradistinguished from "parcel," as where wheat, lard, and the like are sold in bulk. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 1020, 1022, 119 Ky. 75.

As a tract of land

See Lots, Blocks, Tracts, and Parcels of Land.

The words "lot," "piece," and "parcel" apply peculiarly to the land itself, and are never employed to describe improvements. Canty v. Staley, 123 Pac. 252, 254, 162 Cal. 379.

Laws 1890, p. 376, c. 132, § 32, provides that the assessor shall actually view when practicable and determine the true and full value of each lot of real property listed for taxation and shall enter the value thereof in one column, etc., and the statutes further provide that the term "tract" or "lot" and "piece" or "parcel of real property," and "piece" or "parcel of land," whenever used in the act relating to revenue and taxation, shall be held to mean any contiguous quantity of land in the possession, owned by, or recorded as the property of, the same claimant, person, or company. Held, that under the statutes smaller tracts or subdivisions composing a larger tract could not be assessed as one tract where the land was owned by different persons under recorded titles or in joint ownership, and assessments in one tract of different ownerships or estates in different tracts seem to be inhibited where the different titles are of record. State Finance Co. v. Myers, 112 N. W. 76, 78, 16 N. D. 193.

Code, §§ 792, 816, 817, 818, 820, 821, 822, deal with the subject of street improvements, authorizing and providing the methods of assessments of special taxes therefor against "abutting" "lots" or "parcels" of ground. A portion of a lot sought to be assessed for paving improvements was separated from the street by another portion of the same original lot, but owned by a different person and used as a railroad right of way. Held only an assessment against the "parcel" or part of a lot which actually abuts on the street will be considered to be authorized. Kneeb v. Sioux City (Iowa) 137 N. W. 944, 945.

That the fee of the street where a railroad bridge is built across it, together with the fee thereof between that point and a distant block abutting on the street, is owned by the owner of such block, and not by the owners of the lots abutting at the point of the bridge and between it and such block, does not make the land under the bridge and such block one parcel, within the rule as to damages to the residue where part of a tract is taken. Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley Ry. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 300, 301, 73 Misc. Rep. 645.

Under the provisions of section 5238 Rev. Codes, it is not necessary that the jury find the value of each legal subdivision of the tract sought to be condemned. If, however, there is more than one parcel of land, or several separate parcels or tracts, each separated from the other, then it is necessary for the jury to determine the value of each separate tract or parcel. But where the tract is a single or consolidated tract, the value may be fixed as a single parcel or tract. "Parcel" or tract of land, as used in this section, does not mean legal subdivision, but does mean a consolidated or single tract. Big Lost River Irr. Co. v. Davidson, 121 Pac. 88, 92, 21 Idaho, 160.

orded as the property of the same claimant, person, or company." In this connection the word "contiguous" means land which touches on the sides. Hence two quarters of the same section, which only touch at the corner, do not constitute, for the purpose of taxation, one tract or parcel of land. Griffin v. Peniston Land Co., 119 N. W. 1041, 1043, 18 L. D. 246 (quoting from Rev. Codes 1905, § 480 [Rev. Codes 1899, § 1176]).

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to opening and widening of streets, provides by section 3 that the superintendent of streets upon receiving a diagram shall assess the cost of an improvement upon the land in the district, including the property of any railroad. Held, in view of Civ. Code, § 3541, declaring that an interpretation which gives effect is preferred to one which makes void, that as all railroad land other than rights of way was subject to assessment under the general language used, it was intended to assess its rights of way, whether consisting of an easement, or title in fee, and that the use of the street or the purposes specified in its franchise constituted a piece or parcel of land within the meaning of the act subject to assessment or resulting benefits. Los Angeles Pac. Co. v. Hubbard, 121 Pac. 308, 309, 17 Cal. App. 46.

Where, on partition among cotenants of a tract of land to which pertained riparian rights to water for irrigation, the land was classified, each cotenant receiving a proportionate share of each class, and the prior right to all the water needed for irrigation was attached to the first class land though some of the allotments of such land did not abut on the stream, the water right belonging to such land, like other riparian rights, was in strict technical language "parcel of the land," and not a right appurtenant. Rose v. Mesmer, 75 Pac. 905, 907, 142 Cal. 322.

Flood waters which are of no substantial benefit to the riparian owner or to his land, and are not used by him, may be taken at will by any person who can lawfully gain access to the stream, and conducted to lands not riparian, and even beyond the watershed, without the consent of the riparian owner and without compensation to him. They are not a part of the flow of the stream which constitutes "parcel" of his land within the meaning of the law of riparian rights. Gallatin v. Corning Irr. Co., 126 Pac. 864, 867, 163 Cal. 405.

Rev. St. 1909, § 349, declares, that, when a husband or wife dies leaving a child or children or other descendants, the widow or widower shall be entitled absolutely to a share in the personal estate belonging to the husband or wife at the time of his or her death, equal to the share of a child. Section 337 provides that where any of the children of an intestate who shall have received in his lifetime any real or personal estate by way of advancement shall choose to come into partition with the other parceners, such advancement shall be brought into hotchpot with the estate descended. Held that, while a widow is entitled to a child's share in her deceased husband's estate she is not a "parcener" within section 337, so as to entitle her to compel children to whom advancements have been made to bring such advancements into hotchpot in determining the amount to which she was entitled as a child's share, under section 349. Schaper's Ex'r v. Schaper, 138 S. W. 896, 897, 158 Mo. App. 605.

PARCHESI

The word "Parchesi" cannot be monopolized in the United States as a trade-mark for a game introduced from India, where it had long been known by a name similar in sound. Selchow v. Chaffee & Selchow Mfg. Co., 182 Fed. 996, 997.

A "pardon" is a remission of guilt. State ex rel. Collins v. Lewis, 35 South. 816, 817, 111 La. 693 (citing Territory v. Richardson, 60 Pac. 244, 9 Okl. 579, 49 L. R. A. 440).

A "pardon" is an act of grace, and is regarded as a deed, which must be accepted by the convict to be valid. People ex rel. Patrick v. Frost, 117 N. Y. Supp. 524, 528, 133 App. Div. 179 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150 [32 U. S.] 8 L. Ed. 640).

The word "pardon" includes a remission of the offense, or of the penalties, forfeitures, or sentences growing out of it. Nelson v. Commonwealth, 109 S. W. 337, 338, 128 Ky. 779, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272 (citing Matter of —, an Attorney, 86 N. Y. 563).

A "pardon" is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. Ex parte Campion, 112 N. W. 585, 588, 79 Neb. 364, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865, 126 Am. St. Rep. 667, 16 Ann. Cas. 319 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. [32 U. S.] 150, 8 L. Ed. 640).

A "pardon" is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for the crime he has committed. It is the private, though official, act of the executive magistrate, delivered to the individual for whose benefit it is intended. Ex parte Ridley, 106 Pac. 549, 551, 3 Okl. Cr. 350, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. [32 U. S.] 150, 8 L. Ed. 640).

"A 'pardon' is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. * * * It releases the offense and obliterates it in legal contemplation." Fite v. State ex rel. Snider, 88 S. W. 941, 943, 114 Tenn. 646, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 4 Ann. Cas. 1108 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. [32 U. S.] 150, 8 L. Ed. 640).

Under Const. p. 2, c. 2, § 1, art. 8, vesting the power to pardon offenses, except after conviction by impeachment, in the Governor, by and with the advice of Council, conditional pardons or commutations or respites of sentence can be granted only in conformity to the advice of Council; the words "power of pardoning offenses" including not only absolute pardons, but also lesser exercises of clemency. In re Opinion of the Justices, 98 N. E. 101, 210 Mass. 609.

A "pardon" or "amnesty" secures against the consequences of one's acts, and not against the acts themselves. It involves forgiveness; not forgetfulness. United States v. Swift, 186 Fed. 1002, 1017.

The power to pardon having been vested in the Legislature by the Constitution of Pennsylvania, as well as in the executive, the grant of power to the executive was no limitation on the right of the Legislature also to exercise the power; and hence the failure of the Legislature to exercise such power until the passage of Act March 31, 1860 (Purd. Dig. p. 469, par. 357), did not affect the validity of such act or pardons granted pursuant thereto. United States v. Hughes, 175 Fed. 238, 241, 242.

Pub. Acts 1907, p. 182, No. 144, making one abandoning his wife or children guilty of a felony, authorizing the court to suspend sentence on one convicted giving a bond conditioned that he will furnish his wife and children with necessary care, etc., is not invalid as invading the pardoning power of the executive, and confers no new power on courts possessing at common law inherent power to suspend sentence, which is a judicial function and distinct and different from the power to grant reprieves and pardons, since the suspension of the sentence postpones the judgment, while the conviction and liability following it together with disabilities remain to become operative on sentence being given, while a pardon reaches both the punishment and the guilt, for it relieves the punishment and blots out the existence of the guilt. People v. Stickle, 121 N. W. 497, 499, 156 Mich. 557.

Const. art. 4, § 11, provides that, in all criminal cases except treason and impeachment, the Governor shall have power after conviction to grant reprieves, commutations of punishment, and pardons, etc. Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, provides that the district court judges may in prosecutions for certain offenses at defendant's request submit to the jury the issue as to whether or not the defendant has ever been charged with or convicted of crime, and, if the jury finds that he has not been, the judge may suspend the sentence on conviction. Such suspension is for an indefinite time with the power in the court to revoke on a violation of a requirement of good behavior, and compel the convict to undergo the penalty of the original sentence, or on good behavior for a time equal to double that of the sentence to bring the party into court and set aside and annul the former judgment. Held, that a pardon is an act of grace which exempts an individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicted for a crime which he has committed, and, although the word "pardon" is not used in the statute, as that is the effect of the statute, it is void within the constitutional provision prohibiting the exercise of powers delegated to one of the departments of government by either of the other two departments. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 162, 165, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144.

"Pardon" is granted to an individual criminal by name, while "amnesty" is granted to classes of offenders or communities. They differ, not in kind, but solely in the number they severally affect. United States v. Hughes, 175 Fed. 238, 242.

"Amnesty," as defined by Black's Law Dictionary, is a sovereign act of pardon and forgetfulness for past acts of a criminal nature. It is at least coextensive in its meaning with the word "pardon" so far as its effect is concerned, because it effaces or wipes out the offense which has been committed; the difference between the two being that a pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before, but usually after, conviction, and the court takes no notice of it unless pleaded or in some way claimed by the person pardoned, and it is usually granted by the crown or by the executive; but amnesty is extended to those who may be guilty, and is usually granted by Parliament or the Legislature, and to whole classes before trial. Amnesty is an abolition or oblivion of the offense. Pardon is its forgiveness. In re

Briggs, 47 S. E. 403, 411, 135 N. C. 118 (citing State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. 242).

PARENT

The word "parent" means father or mother. Snyder v. Greendale Land Co., 91 N. E. 819, 822, 48 Ind. App. 178.

The word "parent," as used in a will, may have a bearing on the sense in which testator employed the phrase "living issue"; the word being confined in its original sense to a father or mother, but being sometimes used in construing wills to denote any lineal ancestor in furtherance of testator's intention. Rasquin v. Hamersley, 137 N. Y. Supp. 578, 583, 152 App. Div. 522.

"Parents," as used in a statute providing that every action for death shall be for the exclusive benefit of the wife, or husband and children, and, if there be neither of them, then of the "parents and next of kin of the person whose death shall be so caused," refers to the parents of the deceased person, and not the parents of his widow. Doyle v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 90 N. E. 165, 167, 81 Ohio St. 184, 135 Am. St. Rep. 775.

The benefits under the certificate of a fraternal life insurance company, as designated in its constitution, were, in case the deceased left no widow or descendants, payable to his parents. The marriage of the insured's father to his own niece by the half blood was absolutely null and void without a divorce under the laws of Wisconsin, where the marriage was contracted; but by the laws of that state and of Minnesota, where the insured was born, the issue of such marriage was legitimate. Held, in view of the statute providing that all words, unless intended to be used in their technical sense, should be understood and construed according to the approved and common usage of the language, that the word "parent" was a common word, and meant "he that begets," "she that bears young," "a father or a mother"; and hence that the father was entitled as the designated beneficiary. Mund v. Rehaume, 117 Pac. 159, 161, 51 Colo. 129, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1243.

Adoptive parent

Ky. St. § 2071, provides that an adopted child shall be capable of inheriting as though he were the child of the petitioner. Section 1393, subsec. 1, provides that when a person dies intestate his real estate descends, first, to his "children" and their descendants. Section 1401 of the same chapter, limiting section 1393, provides that if an infant having title to real estate derived by gift, devise, or descent from one of its parents dies without issue such estate shall descend to that "parent" and his or her "kindred," and, if none, then to the other parent and his or her kindred. And section 460 declares that the common-law rule that statutes in derogation thereof should be strictly construed does not apply to such revision, but that its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to promote its object. Held, that the purpose of the limitation was to prevent the estate of the parent from being distributed to strangers to his blood; that the word "kindred" in section 1393 was not necessarily confined to blood relations, but might include a relation in law, as an adopted child, and that the word "children" in subsection 1 was not necessarily confined to children born in lawful wedlock, but might include children by adoption; that within section 1401 the foster parent of an adopted child was a "parent"; and hence that an adopted child inheriting from his parent was on the same footing as a natural child, so that where he inherited from his foster father, and then died in infancy without issue, the estate went back to the father's kindred, to the exclusion of his natural mother. Lanferman v. Vanzile, 150 S. W. 1008, 1011, 150 Ky. 751.

PARENTAL RELATION

Compulsory Education Law, § 2, defines the phrase "persons in parental relation to a child" as including the parent, guardians, or other persons, whether one or more, lawfully having the care, custody, or control of such child. PARISH

A "parish" precinct is not one of the subdivisions mentioned in Const. art. 232, authorizing special election to be held in any parish, municipal corporation, ward, or school district. Regard v. Police Jury of Avoyelles, 42 South. 438, 117 La. 952.

"The term 'religious society' had in the English ecclesiastical law and has in our law a well-defined meaning, and, as commonly used in our law, it is synonymous with 'parish,' 'precinct,' and designates an incorporated society created and maintained for the support of public worship." Riffle v. Proctor, 74 S. W. 409, 410, 99 Mo. App. 601.

Territorial areas, described in the nomenclature of Roman Catholic Church as "parishes," are not recognized by the law as corporate or political entities, and, if they were such, the church could not legislate concerning them. McEntee v. Bonacum,

PARK

A "park" is a place for the resort of the public for recreation, air, and light. Village of Riverside v. MacLain, 71 N. E. 408, 414, 210 Ill. 308, 66 L. R. A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164.

A "park" may be defined as a piece of ground set apart to be used by the public as a place for rest, recreation, exercise, pleasure, amusement, and enjoyment. Northport Wesleyan Grove Campmeeting Ass'n v. Andrews, 71 Atl. 1027, 1030, 104 Me. 342, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

A "park" is defined in the Century Dictionary as a piece of ground set apart and maintained for public use, and laid out in such a way as to afford pleasure to the eye, as well as opportunity for open-air recreation. The term "park" is not applicable to private inclosures enjoyed by a few, nor to a game and fish preserve. Commonwealth v. Hazen, 56 Atl. 263, 265, 207 Pa. 52.

In the common understanding, a "park" is a piece of ground in or near a city or town for ornament and as a place for the resort of the public for recreation and amusement, and it is usually laid off in walks, drives, and recreation grounds. South Park Com'rs v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 93 N. E. 910, 912, 248 Ill. 299, 21 Ann. Cas. 127.

The word "park" written on a parcel of land designated on a plat implies that such parcel is dedicated to the public for park purposes, and the sale of lots with reference to such plat, especially where such lots abut the park or are separated from it by a street only, carries with it the right on the part of the grantees to have the parcel used for public park purposes. Florida E. C. R. Co. v. Worley, 38 South. 618, 621, 49 Fla. 297.

"The word 'park' means to the sense of every person a place open to every one. It carries no idea of restriction to any part of the public or to any specific number of persons. Restrictions as to time of entrance or behavior of those entering are conceivable, but the idea that any class of the community is to be excluded would not be entertained primarily by any person in connection with the idea of a park within the limits of a city. The impression which any person would receive by looking at a map delineating a tract of 60 acres with streets and a square or block marked 'park' would be that of a place of public resort. The popular and natural meaning of the term as so used is a place set apart for the enjoyment, comfort, and recreation of the inhabitants of the city or town in which it is located, and the legal effect of such platting, filing, and selling with reference thereto is not varied by the fact that the word 'park' is preceded by some qualifying word." Where a block on a plat of an addition to a city was marked "Ellwood Park," and the plat was filed in the deed records of the county, and lots were sold describing the property by lot and block number as shown by the plat, there was a dedication of a public park. Sanborn v. City of Amarillo, 93 S. W. 473, 474, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 115.

A tract of land designated on the plat of a village as a common extended about 18 rods to a new street. The owner divided the land surrounding the common into lots and sold the same by deeds, conveying to the grantees easements over the common, and later conveyed the fee in the common to a church. Dwelling houses were erected on lots on the north side of the common which afforded the only means of access to two of such lots. The common was accepted by the village as a street, and trees were permitted to grow thereon; but there was no ornamentation of the land on either side of the roadway. Held that the common did not constitute a park so as to be exempt from condemnation by a railroad company under Railroad Law (Laws 1899, c. 710) § 108; the term "park" being understood to signify an extensive area of land devoted exclusively to the use of the public, to be ornamented and embellished, and within the exclusive dominion of the public authorities, without easement or privilege on the part of individuals to occupy or use the same to the exclusion of the public. Buffalo, L. & R. Ry. Co. v. Hoyer, 132 N. Y. Supp. 31, 34, 147 App. Div. 205.

"A 'park' is a piece of ground set apart and maintained for public use, and laid out in such a way as to afford pleasure to the eye as well as opportunity for open air recreation." A plan showing an open square marked "Alliquippa grove," colored in green with paths through it, and an announcement that the grove had been set apart as a public park, is sufficient to establish a dedication as a park; the fact that the word "grove" was used instead of "park" being immaterial. Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co., 60 Atl. 41, 43, 219 Pa. 619, 123 Am. St. Rep. 677 (quoting and adopting Commonwealth v. Hazen, 56 Atl. 263, 207 Pa. 52).

men's Park." In an action in a state court, it was held by the state Supreme Court that the term "park," as used in the plat, meant a tract of ground set apart for purposes of public ornament or recreation, and that the annexation of the name in the plat in question did not prevent the plat from operating as a statutory dedication of the block to public use. Held, that such decision, even though not conclusive on the federal courts, being based on persuasive reasoning, would be followed under the doctrine of comity. Ehmen v. City of Gothenburg, Neb., 200 Fed. 564, 566, 119 O. C. A. 44.

Square distinguished

The word "park," written upon a block upon a map of city property, indicates a public use; and conveyances made by the owners of the platted land, by reference to such map, operate conclusively as a dedication of the block. There is little, if any, distinction between the words "park" and "square," and when used in this way they mean substantially the same thing. Frauenthal v. Slaten, 121 S. W. 395, 397, 398, 91 Ark. 350.

PARKING

Included in street, see Street.

The term "parking," as used in Code, § 792, providing that cities shall have power to improve any street by parking the same or any part thereof, is incapable of any plausible definition which does not involve the idea of beautifying those portions of the street not necessarily occupied by walks and roadways. Hence the parking need not be confined to that part of a street between the lot line and the driveway, but the driveway may be divided by a strip of parking along the center line. Downing v. City of Des Moines, 99 N. W. 1066, 1067, 124 Iowa, 289.

The parking of cars on private property does not constitute a nuisance, and there is no reason why the owner should not store them on his property, and an ordinance prohibiting the same is invalid. "Parking," literally speaking, is the assembling of things or animals within a park, as the parking of artillery, or the parking of deer; and, as applied to an ordinance forbidding the parking of cars at a certain place, it means the assembling of cars, few or many. City of New Orleans v. Lenfant, 52 South. 575, 578, 126 La. 455, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642.

PAROL CONTRACT

If a written contract is relied on, the entire contract must be in writing, since, if only part of it be in writing, it will be deemed in law a parol contract. Miller v. Sharp (Ind.) 100 N. E. 108, 109.

PAROL DEDICATION

See Dedication.

PAROL DEMURRER

At common law, when the heir was sued at law upon a specialty obligation of the ancestor chargeable upon the inheritance, he might pray that "the parol demurrer"—that is to say, that the pleadings or proceedings be stayed till he should attain his majority. This privilege was based on feudal reasons, and was confined to heirs. It did not extend to devisees. Plasket v. Beeby, 4 East, 490. The privilege was not merely on account of the inability of the infant heir to defend himself by reason of his infancy, but from an absolute deficiency of funds, arising out of the nature of the feudal tenures. For during the subsistence of wardships the estate of the heir in chivalry was during his minority in the hands of the guardian in chivalry, who had the whole profits. How the privilege came to be extended at common law to other heirs is lost in antiquity. The rule remained in England and the older states, greatly modified by statutory provision, however, long after the policy on which it was founded became obsolete, and now the parol demurrer has been abolished by statute in England, New York, and probably other states. Joyce v. McAvoy, 31 Cal. 273, 280, 89 Am. Dec. 172 (citing Whart. Law Dict. 558; 2 Kent, Comm. 245, note "b").

PAROLE

A "parole" is a release of a convict from imprisonment, on specified conditions to be observed by him, and a suspension of his sentence during the liberty thus granted. Ex parte Ridley, 106 Pac. 549, 551, 3 Okl. Cr. 350, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110.

The "parole" of a prisoner as the term is used in the Ohio statutes is a method of discipline and treatment. He remains, while on "parole," in the custody of the workhouse officials. Under Rev. St. §§ 5539, 5544, providing that persons convicted of offenses against the United States, and who are imprisoned in a jail or penitentiary of any state or territory, shall in all respects be subject to the same discipline and treatment as convicts sentenced by the courts of the state or territory, a federal prisoner sentenced to imprisonment in a workhouse in Ohio may be paroled by the prison authorities. In re Naples, 142 Fed. 781.

Part of congregation

Under the statute inhibiting the disturbance of a congregation, or a "part of a congregation," any member of the congregation is a part of the congregation; and hence, where accused, before a large part of a Sunday school audience had left, unhitched an old shabby horse and buggy belonging to prosecuting witness, and, with the intent to mortify her, drove it up in front of the Sunday school, accused violated the statute. Wyatt v. State, 119 S. W. 1147, 1148, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 50.

Part of criminal proceedings

It is a rule established by federal decision that the submission of an indictment to a grand jury, and the examination of witnesses before them in relation to the same, are no part of criminal proceedings against the accused within the meaning of the fifth constitutional amendment, but are merely to assist the grand jury in determining whether such proceedings shall be commenced, and where the accused, afterward indicted by the same grand jury, are brought before them as witnesses by subpoena, they are not parties to any proceeding then and there in progress, and must rest their claim of privilege or immunity upon the rights of a witness, and not those of a party. United States v. Price, 163 F. 904, 906.

Part of franchise

A "franchise" is "a privilege or exemption from ordinary jurisdiction as for a corporation to hold pleas to such a value, etc., and sometimes it is an immunity from tribute, whether it is either personal or real" (quoting from Jacob's Law Dictionary). Though there are cases which seem to question this definition to its fullest extent and which do not extend it to exemptions from taxation, still it is held by the highest authority that such an exemption is "part of the franchise" and often a valuable or essential part of it. Columbia Water Power Co. v. Campbell, 54 S. E. 833, 837, 75 S. C. 34 (citing Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Reid, 13 Wall. 264, 20 L. Ed. 568; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 29, 183 U. S. 67, 74, 46 L. Ed. 86).

Part of goods sold

The phrase "part of the goods sold," within the statute of frauds declaring that the acceptance and receipt of part of the goods sold shall take the contract of sale out of the operation of the statute, does not mean a sample which is merely used for the purpose of showing the quality, etc., of the goods offered for sale, but which is not itself to be sold; and where, during negotiations for a sale of cases of canned tomatoes, the seller took from his store shelves three cans, one of which was sampled by the buyer, and after an agreement was reached the buyer took the other two cans, the samples do not constitute a "part of the goods sold," and the delivery thereof did not satisfy the statute, since the bulk sold was not diminished by the samples delivered. Richardson v. Smith, 60 Atl. 612, 615, 101 Md. 15, 70 L. R. A. 321, 109 Am. St. Rep. 552, 4 Ann. Cas. 184.

Part of property

The word "part," used in Rev. Laws 1905, § 3590, providing upon divorce that the court may decree to the wife such part of the personal and real estate of the husband not exceeding one-third thereof as it deems just and reasonable, is equivalent to a share or portion, and authorizes the court to award to the wife as permanent alimony a gross sum or specific part of the husband's property. Longbotham v. Longbotham, 137 N. W. 387, 389, 119 Minn. 139.

Parts of rifles

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 157, 30 Stat. 164 for "parts of rifles," is not limited to those in a finished condition, but embraces parts, such as rough-bored rifle barrels, advanced to a condition unfitting them for any other use than in connection with rifles. United States v. Riga, 171 Fed. 783.

Part of railroad

A railroad owned, controlled, or operated by another, but not connecting therewith, is not a "part" thereof. Coal & Coke Ry. Co. v. Conley, 67 S. E. 613, 634, 67 W. Va. 129.

Parts of watches

Certain incomplete watch movements, adjusted so as to run, the only parts lacking being the dial, or the dial, the various hands, and the minute wheel, are dutiable as "watch movements," and not as "parts of watches," not otherwise provided for, under paragraph 191, Schedule C, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 167. Hipp, Didsheim & Bro. v. United States, 123 Fed. 998, 999.

Parts or fittings of guns

Rubber recoil pads, intended for reducing the shock from the discharge of a gun, but which are not a necessary attachment, are not dutiable as "parts or fittings of guns" under the Tariff Act. Schoverling, Daly & Gales v. United States, 142 Fed. 302, 303.

Parts thereof

Possession of an untagged head of a moose which was lawfully killed is lawful; the words "parts thereof," in Laws 1905, c. 344, § 37 (Rev. Laws Supp. 1909, § 2249-40), providing for the tagging of game, and that, while the tags remain on such game and parts thereof, they may be kept in possession until consumed, referring to such parts of the game as are suitable for human food. Hanson v. Storey, 131 N. W. 481, 482, 114 Minn. 463.

PART PAYMENT

As part performance, see Part Performance.

The "part payment" required by the statute of frauds is the usual payment whereby the buyer unconditionally transfers money or property to the seller, which the latter unconditionally accepts in discharge pro tanto of the purchase price. Leonard v. Roth, 130 N. W. 208, 211, 164 Mich. 646.

During negotiations for the sale of certain logs, the seller, who was unable to talk English, refused to agree to load the logs at his own expense, and the buyer's agent would not agree to pay such expense, whereupon the seller was referred to the buyer himself; the agent inclosing an order on the buyer directing payment of $230 to the seller on account of the logs. The letter and order having been delivered to the seller, he had them translated to him, and when he ascertained their contents returned them and sold the logs to another. Held, that the delivery of such order did not constitute "payment" of a part of the price, and that there was therefore no valid contract for the sale of the logs within the statute of frauds; there being neither delivery nor memorandum signed by the party to be charged. Johnson v. Morrison, 128 N. W. 243, 245, 163 Mich. 322.

"Part payment" of a debt does not of itself take the case out of the statute of limitations, but to have that effect it must appear that the payment was made on account of a debt for which action is brought, and that the payment was made as a part of a larger indebtedness and under such considerations as will warrant a finding of an implied promise to pay the balance. When a bank employed plaintiff to conduct business for its own benefit, but in his name, and money for use in the business was procured on plaintiff's notes indorsed by his brother, and plaintiff received a certain sum per month, which the bank understood was his compensation, but after the business was wound up, the bank, understanding that plaintiff was dissatisfied with the amount he had received, paid a further sum to plaintiff and his brother, and the minutes of the directors' meeting stated that such sum was paid for services, and three days after the receipt of the check plaintiff sent a receipt for "part payment" for services, such payment was a gratuity, and did not affect the running of limitation against an action for further compensation. Ryan v. Canton Nat. Bank, 63 Atl. 1062, 1066, 103 Md. 428 (quoting and adopting definition in Wood, Lim. § 97).

PART PERFORMANCE

Payment of a part, or even of the whole, of the purchase money, under an oral agreement for the sale of land, is not an act of "part performance" to take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Cooper v. Colson, 58 Atl. 337, 338, 66 N. J. Eq. 328, 105 Am. St. Rep. 660, 1 Ann. Cas. 997.

The most important acts which constitute a sufficient "part performance" to authorize specific performance of an oral contract to convey land are actual possession, permanent and valuable improvements, and the two combined. The possession constituting "part performance" within the rule as to enforcement of oral contracts for the sale of land must be taken with the consent of the vendor. Steensland v. Noel, 134 N. W. 207, 211, 28 S. D. 522.

A "part performance" to take an oral agreement to convey real estate out of the statute of frauds must be substantial, and of such a nature that the refusal to enforce the agreement would result, not merely in the denial of the right which the agreement was intended to confer, but in an "unjust and unconscientious" injury. In re Bennett, 132 N. W. 309, 311, 115 Minn. 342.

Payment of the purchase money by a purchaser under a parol contract of purchase is not alone such "part performance" of an agreement to sell real estate as to authorize a court to enforce its specific performance; but part payment and taking possession in good faith, or taking possession with the knowledge of the vendor and making valuable improvements, constitute such "part performance" as will ordinarily warrant a court in decreeing specific performance of the contract. Sutherland v. Taintor, 87 Pac. 900, 17 Okl. 427.

The doctrine as to "part performance" taking a transaction out of the statute of frauds, so that the relations between the parties may be dealt with judicially to prevent injustice, is grounded on the idea that the opposite party, by the statute and such "part performance," has obtained title to something of value, for which, independently of the statute, he should render an equivalent. Rowell v. Smith, 102 N. W. 1, 2, 123 Wis. 510, 3 Ann. Cas. 773.

Acts done under a parol contract for the sale of an interest in land most frequently held as such "part performance" as to take the same out of the statute of frauds, are:

(a) The delivery of possession to, or the assumption of exclusive and notorious possession by, the vendee under the verbal contract of sale, and with the knowledge of the vendor, accompanied by part payment of the consideration; (b) or the expenditure of money by the vendee in making improvements, permanently beneficial to the estate, with the knowledge of the vendor, and in pursuance of such parol agreement of sale; (c) or where the parties have so acted under the parol agreement as to alter their position so that a restoration to the former position is impractical or impossible; (d) or where the parties have so acted under the agreement that to allow the defendant to take shelter under the statute, would be to inflict an unjust and unconscientious injury or loss upon the other party. Harris v. Arthur, 127 Pac. 695, 697, 36 Okl. 33.

Payment by a purchaser of the purchase money, accompanied by his entry into possession of the premises in good faith, under the parol contract of sale, with the consent of the vendor, followed by the making of valuable improvements on the premises, is such a "part performance" as will support an action for specific performance. Halsell v. Renfrow, 78 Pac. 118, 123, 14 Okl. 674, 2 Ann. Cas. 286.

Payment of the purchase price, in whole or in part, does not constitute a sufficient "part performance" of an oral agreement to convey lands to take the same out of the statute of frauds. Chamberlain v. Abrams, 79 Pac. 204, 206, 36 Wash. 587.

While the phrase "part performance" is commonly used as a short and convenient statement of the general ground upon which verbal agreements regarding real estate are enforced, yet the whole doctrine rests upon the principle of fraud, and proceeds upon the idea that the party has so changed his situation on the faith of the oral agreement that it would be a fraud upon him to permit the other party to defeat the agreement by setting up the statute. Hence the term "part performance" falls far short of expressing the whole doctrine and theory of courts of equity in this matter. The change of situation necessary to create this equitable estoppel must, of course, have been made in reliance upon and in pursuance of the oral agreement, and so connected with the performance of the contract that from the nature of the case the defendant should understand it was done in reliance upon his agreement. Borrow v. Borrow, 76 Pac. 305, 307, 34 Wash. 684.

Acts which do not unmistakably point to a contract existing between the parties, or which can be reasonably accounted for in some other manner than as having been done in pursuance of a contract, do not constitute a "part performance" sufficient in any case to take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Prof. Pomeroy says a plaintiff cannot, in the face of the statute, prove a verbal contract and then show that it has been performed. He must first prove acts done by himself, or on his behalf, which point unmistakably to a contract between himself and defendant, which cannot in the ordinary course of human conduct be accounted for in any other manner than as having been done in pursuance of a contract, and which would not have been done without an existing contract, and although these acts of part performance cannot of themselves indicate all the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced, they must be consistent with it and in conformity with its provisions, when these shall have been shown by the subsequent parol evidence. Lozier v. Hill, 59 Atl. 234, 238, 68 N. J. Eq. 300.

The phrase "part performance," although commonly used as a short statement of a general ground on which verbal agreements regarding real estate are enforced, rests on the principle of fraud, and proceeds on the idea that the party has so changed his situation on the faith of the oral agreement that it would be a fraud on him to permit the other party to defeat the agreement by setting up the statute. The change of situation necessary to create this equitable estoppel must have been in reliance on and in pursuance of the oral agreement, and so connected with the performance of the contract that from the nature of the case the other party to the contract should understand it was done in reliance on his agreement, and the acts done must be related to and connected with the contract and the other party's performance of it. Veum v. Sheeran, 104 N. W. 135, 136, 95 Minn. 315 (citing Brown v. Hoag, 29 N. W. 135, 35 Minn. 37); Jorgenson v. Jorgenson, 84 N. W. 221, 81 Minn. 428; Browne, St. Frauds, §§ 457, 459.

PARTLY

Ordinarily the words "not wholly within" refer to a situation where a part is within. "Not wholly" is synonymous with "partly." People ex rel. Donegan v. Dooling, 125 N. Y. Supp. 783, 785, 141 App. Div. 31.

PARTIAL

PARTIAL ACCEPTANCE

A "partial acceptance" is a qualified acceptance, and such acceptances consist in a change of amount, of place, or date of payment. For one to change anything in the sense of offering to contract for its change presupposes that he knows of its original condition. A bank in Missouri, in response to an inquiry from a bank in Wisconsin, telegraphed that it would honor a person's draft for $800. The draft had been drawn for that sum with exchange. The bank in Missouri did not know that the draft differed from the one it was asked to accept. Held, that there was no "partial acceptance," so as to make the bank liable for $800. State Bank of Fox Lake v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of King City, 90 S. W. 123, 124, 114 Mo. App. 663.

PARTIAL EVICTION

A total eviction exists where the tenant is deprived of the whole of the premises leased, and it is "partial" when the tenant is deprived of a substantial part of the premises. Jackson v. Paterno, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1073, 1076, 58 Misc. Rep. 201.

PARTIAL INSANITY

If the trial court see fit, it may recognize monomania, or so-called "partial insanity," as distinguished from "general insanity," when instructing the jury in a criminal case involving that form of mental derangement as a defense; but it is not imperative that it should do so, and, if the proper tests of criminal responsibility for the act in question be stated in the instructions, the substantial rights of the defendant are sufficiently protected. State v. Moore, 102 Pac. 475, 477, 80 Kan. 232.

PARTIAL LIQUIDATIONS

The term "partial liquidations," when used in connection with corporations, means proceedings involving the surrender by a corporation of portions of its capital. Smith v. Dana, 60 Atl. 117, 123, 77 Conn. 543, 69 L. R. A. 76, 107 Am. St. Rep. 51.

PARTIAL LOSS

In the case of insurance on goods from one port to another and until safely landed, where, after a part of the goods are landed, the residue on board are lost, this is frequently denominated a "total loss," though it is really a "partial loss," because the goods landed were not, until all the goods were landed, withdrawn from all the risks against which they were insured, although they were withdrawn from the particular risk by which the loss occurred. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold (N. Y.) 14 Wend. 399, 488.

PARTIAL RESTRAINT

Te terms "general restraint of trade" and "partial restraint of trade" have no longer a territorial meaning. In respect of time and territory, and in the absence of any affirmative showing that the public welfare is put in jeopardy, or that a monopoly is created, or the like, the validity of all contracts in restraint of trade must be made to depend upon the question as presented by each case, whether the restraint goes so far as to reasonably insure to the purchaser the full enjoyment of the right purchased by him in good faith and for a good and valuable consideration. Swigert & Howard v. Tilden, 97 N. W. 82, 86, 121 Iowa, 650, 63 L. R. A. 608, 100 Am. St. Rep. 374.

PARTIAL VERDICT

A "partial verdict" is one of conviction as to a part of the charge and acquittal or silence as to the residue. Blackshare v. State, 128 S. W. 549, 551, 94 Ark. 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 144 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 1009).

PARTIALITY

The word "partiality," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5511, 5512, providing for a penalty recoverable against a telegraph company for "discrimination" and "partiality" in the transmission and delivery of messages, does not imply willfulness and positive wrongdoing on the part of a telegraph company as grounds for the penalty. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. McClelland, 78 N. E. 672, 673, 38 Ind. App. 578 (adopting definition in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Braxtan, 74 N. E. 985, 165 Ind. 165).

It is the rule of law that, independently of any statute, a railroad company must treat its patrons impartially and avoid unjust discrimination. "Partiality" is a term appropriately used to describe a distinction made between shippers in charges made for essentially similar services under essentially similar conditions. If the circumstances make the services or conditions different, a variation in the charge does not constitute "partiality." Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. New Era Milling Co., 100 Pac. 273, 276, 79 Kan. 435.

Act April 8, 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 151, c. 48), provides that every telegraph company shall transmit messages impartially in good faith and in the order of time in which they are received, and shall in no manner discriminate in rates charged between any of its patrons, but shall serve individuals, corporations, and other telegraph companies with impartiality, and provides a penalty for violation. Held, that the terms "discrimination" and "partiality" as used in such act do not imply willfulness and positive wrongdoing, as distinguished from negligence. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Braxtan, 74 N. E. 985, 987, 165 Ind. 165.

"Bias," as applied to the competency of jurors, is synonymous with "partiality." Macon Ry. & Light Co. v. Barnes, 49 S. E. 282, 284, 121 Ga. 443.

When a tubular belt is struck a blow by a hammer, the fundamental sound is followed by nascent, undulatory, longitudinal vibrations, extending the entire length of the tube. These vibrations are styled "over tones," or "partials." Durfee v. Bawo, 118 Fed. 853, 855.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS

"Mere presence at the scene of the perpetration of the crime does not render a person 'particeps criminis.' To constitute him a party to the criminal act, there must be not only presence upon the scene, but an actual participation and aiding and abetting in the crime committed." The failure of a spectator to interfere does not make him a participant in the crime. It is a circumstance to be considered with the other evidence in determining whether he was present as an aider and abettor. State v. Fox, 57 Atl. 270, 70 N. J. Law, 353.

PARTICIPATE

Officers of a corporation "participate" in its conversion of state funds specially deposited with it for safe-keeping, so as to be guilty of larceny under B. & C. Comp. § 1807, where the disposition of funds by the corporation is with their knowledge, consent, and acquiescence. State v. Ross, 104 Pac. 596, 604, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601.

PARTICIPANTS IN THE FORBIDDEN ACTS

Bankr. Act, July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 19, 30 Stat. 544, provides that "persons," when used with reference to the commission of acts which are forbidden, shall include persons who are "participants in the forbidden acts," and the agents, officers, and members of the board of directors, or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies of corporations. Held, that the term "participants in the forbidden acts" includes all persons who join with the bankrupt in the commission of the offenses created by chapter 4, § 29. United States v. Young & Holland Co., 170 Fed. 110, 113.

PARTICIPATING AND ASSENTING

Under Rev. St. 5239 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3515), providing for the forfeiture of a franchise of a national banking association, if the directors knowingly violate or knowingly permit any of its officers, agents, or servants to "violate any of the provisions of this title," and further providing that every director who participated in or assented to such violation shall be held liable in his personal or individual capacity for all damages sustained, "participating and assenting" both imply affirmative action of some sort, as distinguished from mere silence and inaction. The statute does not preclude a liability at common law. Mason v. Moore, 76 N. E. 932, 936, 73 Ohio St. 275, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 4 Ann. Cas. 240.

PARTICIPATING POLICY

A "participating policy" is one that is entitled to dividends, whether such dividends be paid yearly or at stated distribution periods. National Protective Legion v. O'Brien, 112 N. W. 1050, 1052, 102 Minn. 15 (quoting and adopting Johnson's Definitions of Life Insurance).

See Final Participation.

PARTICULAR

See Material Particular.

Where a workman employed to assist in constructing a building was directed, in company with another laborer, to take down some joists, no special part of the work being assigned to either man, the order was not a "particular" one, within Act March 4, 1893 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083), authorizing a recovery by a servant injured by obedience to a particular instruction. McElwaine-Richards Co. v. Wall, 76 N. E. 408, 411, 166 Ind. 287.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE

See, also, General Average.

A marine policy contained a clause, "Warranted free from particular average, unless the vessel or craft or the interest insured be stranded, sunk or on fire." The libel alleged that on November 18th, while the ship was lying in port and before discharge, a fire broke out in the after 'tween-decks of the ship and burned the bulkhead forward of the lazarette, the door thereof, and a considerable portion of dunnage and other parts of the ship. An exhibit, quoting from the ship's protest, recited that the master, on the alarm being given, went below through the lazarette and saw the reflection of the fire over the top of the bulkhead between the after 'tween-decks and the lazarette, which were then full of cargo, and that after considerable trouble the fire was extinguished, with considerable damage. Held, that the words "on fire," as used in the particular average clause, were not synonymous with the word "burnt," contained in former policies, but were indicative of a happening whereby the ship was endangered by actual fire burning some part of it, necessitating extraordinary efforts to prevent serious damage, and that under such definition the libel was not subject to exception as stating a loss from which the insurer was exempted by the "particular average" clause as matter of law. Pacific Creosoting Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co., 184 Fed. 947, 948.

PARTICULAR ESTATE

Where A, the owner of land, gives it by deed or will to B, for life, and after his death to C. in fee, the estate of B. is called a "particular estate," because it is but a part of the general estate, which is finally to pass to C. Archer v. Jacobs, 101 N. W. 195, 197, 125 Iowa, 467.

PARTICULAR STATE

The phrase "particular state," in Rev. St. § 5339, providing that every person committing murder on the high seas, or on any arm of the sea, or in any river, haven, creek, basin, or bay, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any "particular state," etc., is used in contradistinction to the United States, and a murder committed on board a ship lying in the harbor of Honolulu is cognizable in the District Court of the United States for the territory of Hawaii. Wynne v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 447, 448, 217 U. S. 234, 54 L. Ed. 748.

PARTICULAR STRIKE

A "particular strike" is a strike by an individual workman or by a particular body of workmen working for a particular master, as distinguished from a general strike, which has reference to a strike by all of those workmen engaged in a particular trade. The Toronto, 168 Fed. 386, 393.

PARTICULARLY

"The word 'particularly' is frequently used as meaning especially." A release, executed by plaintiff to defendant city after he had notified it of his claim for damages suffered during a period of six years from maintenance of an improper sewer, which in the first part is broad enough to cover the whole claim, is not limited by the words, "Being particularly a release and discharge of all my claims of every nature, character, and kind * * * by reason of damages suffered by the overflowing of the sewer * * * on the 5th day of July, 1901"—the word "particularly" being used in the sense of "especially." Murphy v. City of New York, 83 N. E. 39, 190 N. Y. 413.

A contract to convey a farm "consisting of two hundred (200) acres, more or less, * * * more particularly described," in a deed specified. Held that, as "particularly" is defined as "in a particular manner; expressly with a specific reference or interest; in particular; distinctly," the term "more particularly described" must mean exactly described. Sweet v. Marsh, 117 N. Y. Supp. 930, 934, 133 App. Div. 315.

The phrase "particularly described," as used in St. 1897, pp. 254, 272, c. 189, providing that an irrigation district, after adopting a plan, shall give notice calling for bids for the construction of the work or any portion thereof, and that, if less than the whole of the work is advertised, the portion so advertised must be "particularly described" in such notice, which shall set forth that plans and specifications can be seen at the office of the board, and that the board will receive sealed proposals therefor, is not complied with by a notice for bids for a portion of the work, which does not refer to flumes, trestles, and chutes included in the plans and specifications, and calls for railroad crossings not shown by the plans, and containing various other discrepancies between the plans and the notice. Healy v. Anglo-Californian Bank, 90 Pac. 54, 55, 5 Cal. App. 278.

"An action for 'partition' is where an owner of an individual interest in real estate comes before the court praying that the whole of such real estate be taken over by the court and parceled out among the respective owners, according to the extent of their several interests; or if that cannot be equitably done, that the whole be sold for the best obtainable price and the proceeds distributed. In this state, the right on the part of one or more co-owners to demand partition is regarded as an equitable one." Where plaintiff in partition did not ask that the real estate be divided, or, in the alternative, that it be sold and the proceeds be divided, but pleaded a contract between himself and his co-owner, by which the latter agreed to transfer her interest in the land and other property for $14,000, and demanded that such undivided tract be sold to him for that sum in fulfillment of the contract, the suit should be considered as one for specific performance, and not for "partition." Noecker v. Wallingford, 111 N. W. 37, 39, 133 Iowa, 605 (citing and adopting Wright v. Marsh [Iowa] 2 Greene, 94; Code, c. 6, tit. 21; Hornish v. Ringen Stove Co., 89 N. W. 95, 116 Iowa, 1).

"Partition" is not a suit on a contract, within Civ. Code, § 3701, providing that, where a contract is declared on, a plea of non est factum must be verified, and filed at the first term after service is perfected, but is a proceeding to have land in which the petitioner claims an undivided interest divided. Webb v. Till, 67 S. E. 1034, 1035, 134 Ga. 388.

"Partition" is a matter of right, and is authorized by the statute, among joint owners or tenants in common holding lands, without reference to the duration of the estate. It may be compelled as well against a life tenant as obtained at his suit. The statute confers on the chancery court concurrent jurisdiction with the probate court to divide or 'partition,' or to sell for division or 'partition,' any property, real, personal, or mixed, held by joint owners or tenants in common." Flitts v. Craddock, 89 South. 506, 144 Ala. 437, 113 Am. St. Rep. 53 (quoting and adopting definition in McQueen v. Turner, 8 South. 863, 91 Ala. 273).

"Partition" is the division between two or more persons of lands which they jointly own as coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, and before land purchased by one of them can be brought into a partition suit along with lands jointly owned, pursuant to a verbal agreement, a state of facts must be established which will authorize a specific performance of the verbal agreement. Martin v. Martin, 72 S. E. 680, 681, 112 Va. 731.

As screen separating races

In Laws 1904, p. 140, c. 99, requiring the separation of white and colored races on the street cars, but permitting the use for that purpose of adjustable "screens" or "partitions," the words "partitions" and "screens" ex vi termini import complete separation between the races, so that passengers in one compartment would be shut out from passengers in the other. The word "screens," as well as the word "partitions," imports that one race is to be shut out from any contact with the other. Signs 8 by 12 inches in size, having painted thereon the words "white" and "colored," respectively, and supported on the backs of seats in street cars, were not adjustable screens within the meaning of the law. Southern Light & Traction Co. v. Compton, 38 South. 629, 630, 86 Miss. 269.

Partition at law and in equity

"At the common law partition was both a legal and equitable remedy. * * * In cases without complication of any sort the jurisdiction was concurrent. Depending upon variant circumstances, one court could grant the relief, where the other could not." An action for partition under Rev. St. 1899, § 4080, authorizing a compulsory partition, and prescribing the procedure therefor and forming a part of the Civil Code, section 3443 of which abolishes the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of such actions and suits, is a civil action. Field v. Leiter, 90 Pac. 378, 387, 16 Wyo. 1, 125 Am. St. Rep. 997.

PARTITION FENCE

A "gate" in a partition fence comes within the phrase "partition fence," within Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 4573, forbidding under penalty the throwing down of "partition fences." Robinson v. Schlitz, 115 S. W. 472, 473, 135 Mo. App. 32.

PARTITION IN KIND

A "partition in kind" is but a transfer of the interest of the co-owners to one of the co-owners. It is but a sale of such interest to a co-owner, and this the law permits. If a co-owner can sell to a perfect stranger his interest in the property, subject to the usufruct, or may mortgage it, and thus have such interest sold for him at judicial sale, how much greater reason is there that co-owners may partition the property among themselves! The result obtained in either instance is the same—a transfer of the interest of the co-owner to another. Maguire v. Fluker, 36 South. 231, 238, 112 La. 76.

PARTITION SALE

A "partition sale" is unlike an ordinary sheriff's sale under execution, being a judicial sale which must be reported to the court for confirmation, prior to which it is of no effect. Thomas v. Elliott, 114 S. W. 987, 988, 215 Mo. 598.

A "partition sale" as the result of an action brought for that purpose is not a sale in invitum like an ordinary sheriff's sale under execution, but is a sale by the act of the parties themselves. Thompson v. McClernon, 127 S. W. 384, 386, 142 Mo. App. 429.

PARTITION WALL

A "partition wall" means, through usage, a solid wall. Coggins & Owens v. Carey, 66 Atl. 673, 678, 106 Md. 204, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191, 124 Am. St. Rep. 463.

PARTNER'S INTEREST

"A 'partner's interest' in firm property is only his proportion in the surplus after the payment of partnership debts and the settlement of the partnership accounts, and until that occurs it is impossible to determine the extent of his interest." Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2808, making it necessary for each member of a partnership to execute and acknowledge any instrument intended as a chattel mortgage for the partnership, it is a prerequisite to a valid chattel mortgage of firm property that every member of the firm should sign it. Lellman v. Mills, 87 Pac. 985, 989, 15 Wyo. 149.

PARTNER'S LIEN

"On a dissolution, every partner is entitled, as against the other partners and all persons claiming through them in respect of their interests as partners, to have the property of the partnership applied in payment of the debts and liabilities of the firm, and to have the surplus assets, after such payment, applied in payment of what may be due to the partners respectively, after deducting what may be due to the firm from them as partners. His right constitutes what is known as the partner's lien." "The 'partner's lien' attaches to all the partnership assets at the time of dissolution or the ascertainment of a partner's share, whether really or personally, and to such assets only." Fouse v. Shelton, 63 S. E. 208, 212, 64 W. Va. 425.

The phrase "partners," etc., following the names of the defendants to an action, is simply descriptive, and does not make the firm, as such, a party to the action. Bastian v. Adams, 97 N. W. 231, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 32.

Before there can be a "partnership," the parties must have joined to carry on a trade or adventure for their common benefit, each contributing property or services, and have a community of interest in the profits as such. Boach v. Rector, 128 S. W. 399, 401, 93 Ark. 21.

The essential requisite of a "partnership" is a community of interest between the parties for the purpose of profit, and though ordinarily the profits are expected to arise from the purchase and sale of some form of property, they may be produced by the skill and industry of the parties. Morgan v. Smouse, 77 Atl. 137, 138, 112 Md. 615.

An agreement between two persons that one will furnish a certain quantity of pine timber and the other the labor necessary to manufacture and market the turpentine and resin to be extracted therefrom, and that each will share equally in the profits or losses accruing from the enterprise, constitutes such persons "partners." Dawson v. Blitch, 76 S. E. 596, 11 Ga. App. 840.

The community of a husband and wife is not a "partnership." Well v. Jacobs' Estate, 35 South. 599, 604, 111 La. 857.

In describing the relation of husband and wife as to property acquired after marriage as a "partnership," the word is used by analogy, "since the marital relation, viewed in its business aspect differs very evidently from the commercial 'partnership.'" Reade v. Lea, 95 Pac. 131, 133, 14 N. M. 442.

An association of farmers somewhat removed from the main highway, organized to construct and operate a telephone line to connect their various houses, each bearing their proportion of costs and expenses, is not a "partnership" as defined by Partnership Law (Consol. Laws, c. 39) § 2, since it was not organized for the purpose of engaging in trade or in business, and there were no profits contemplated from the business. Branagan v. Buckman, 122 N. Y. Supp. 610, 613, 67 Misc. Rep. 242.

"The requisites of a 'partnership' are that the parties must have joined together to carry on a trade or venture for their common benefit, each contributing property or services, and having a community of interest in the profits." The Virginia Pilot Association is an unincorporated association of pilots, formed for the purpose of controlling and regulating the business of its members, and through them, in effect, act by joint co-operation in performing their duties as pilots. The association elects officers, leases offices, owns property, including the pilot boats used, assigns its members to service in turn, and collects all pilotage fees earned by them, which are paid into bank to its credit, and divided between the members after payment of the expenses of the association. The members of the association were partners, and jointly liable for the negligent performance by one of its members of his duties as a pilot. Donald v. Guy, 127 Fed. 228, 232 (quoting Meehan v. Valentine, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 145 U. S. 611, 36 L. Ed. 835).

The Associated Branch Pilots of the Port of New Orleans, an association created to pilot and assist in the salvage of vessels, the members sharing in the expenses and the profits equally, the association collecting the fees and being governed by a president and board of directors, is an ordinary "partnership" under the law of Louisiana and may select, control, and discharge any of its members. The Joseph Vaccaro, 180 Fed. 272, 276.

Where parties agree for the purchase and sale of land, and regard this agreement as a contract of partnership, there is an ordinary "partnership," whose nature is not changed by the incidental purchase or sale of timber cut on the partnership lands. Drew v. Bank of Monroe, 51 South. 683, 684, 125 La. 673.

In an action to recover money and property claimed to have been paid for patent rights, sold plaintiff by several defendants conspiring together to defraud him and induce him to purchase by fraudulent representations, allegations that defendant R. was a "partner" in the unlawful scheme did not allege such a partnership as the statute requires to be denied under oath; the word "partner" as used being synonymous with "co-conspirator." Rushing v. Spreen (Tex.) 142 S. W. 49, 57.

Under Civ. Code S. D. § 1723, which provides that a "partnership" is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits between them, a business conducted in the name of a bankrupt and his brother as partners was not a partnership business, but the individual business of the bankrupt, where his brother had no capital invested and worked for a salary, and there was no agreement between them that he should share in either profits or losses. In re Gibson, 191 Fed. 665, 668.

A contract for loan of money, in consideration of an obligation to pay a fixed sum for its use, involving no agreement for the sharing of profits of the business, is not a contract of "partnership." Turregano v. Barnett, 53 South. 884, 887, 127 La. 620.

A "partnership" was not established by a contract whereby a street railroad company leased its property to another company, divesting itself of the possession and use of its property in consideration of a specified rent; the contract not providing that the latter should conduct the business in the name or for the benefit of the former, except in so far as the former was benefited by the consideration to be paid by the latter. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co., 100 S. W. 611, 612, 203 Mo. 121.

To constitute a "partnership" there undoubtedly must be an association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business or adventure together and dividing the profits, and the presence or absence of certain other incidents of a partnership by special arrangement between the parties would not seem to be of the essence of the matter. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co., 133 Fed. 462, 467, 66 C. C. A. 336 (citing Fleming v. Lay, 109 Fed. 952, 955, 48 C. C. A. 748).

"Those persons are 'partners' who contribute either property or money to carry on a joint business for their common benefit, and who own and share the profits thereof in certain proportions." Price v. Middleton & Ravenel, 55 S. E. 156, 157, 75 S. C. 105 (quoting and adopting definition in Meehan v. Valentine, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 975, 145 U. S. 611, 620, 36 L. Ed. 835, and citing Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning, 46 S. E. 550, 68 S. C. 9; Id., 52 S. E. 117, 72 S. C. 427; Spool Cotton Co. v. King & Tiller, 46 S. E. 1005, 68 S. C. 198).

A mere agreement by two persons to buy an article together does not amount to an agreement to form a "partnership," when there is no agreement for a joint sale of the property and a sharing of the profits. Harris v. Umsted, 96 S. W. 146, 147, 79 Ark. 499.

"'Grubstake' contracts have sometimes been called prospecting 'partnerships,' and are said to partake of the character of 'qualified partnerships.' Yet, unless the agreement goes beyond the mere furnishing of supplies in consideration of a participation in the discoveries, the word 'partnership' is improperly used and is misleading. It is simply a common venture, wherein one, called the 'outfitter,' supplies the 'grub,' and the other, called the 'prospector,' performs the labor, and all discoveries inure to the benefit of the parties in the proportion fixed by the agreement. The prospector has the right to insist on the outfitter performing his part of the agreement as a condition precedent to participation in such discoveries. Should he fail to do so, the prospector may discover and locate for his own advantage, free from any obligation to the outfitter. * * * Is it essential to a right in property under a grubstake contract that such property be acquired by means of the grubstake furnished, and pursuant to such contract? * * * The 'grubstake' contract, properly speaking, applies to the search for and location of mines on the public domain. * * * We frequently encounter cases where the object of the venture is not only to search for and discover mines, but also to work and develop them and conduct a general mining business. This is something more than a 'grubstake' contract. Such an agreement constitutes a 'partnership.'" Costello v. Scott, 93 Pac. 1, 7, 30 Nev. 43 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Lindley on Mines [2d Ed.] § 858, p. 1565 et seq.).

"'Partnership' is the relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business in common with a view of profit. It is necessary to note the significance of the words 'carrying on a business,' which implies a relation entirely different from the enforced relation of tenants in common, as the owners of a ship or of a house, who must either let the property lie idle or keep it in some way occupied or used, deriving a return from such occupation or use." Where a petition in involuntary bankruptcy alleged that the two defendants owned a stock of goods as partners, and that therefore a partnership existed, which it was prayed might be adjudged a bankrupt, and such adjudication was made, it was a conclusive determination of the ownership of the stock of goods as between the parties to the proceeding, but could not bind the trustees in bankruptcy of one of the alleged partners, who had taken possession of and sold the goods as assets of his individual estate, and who were not permitted to become parties to the partnership proceeding. Manson v. Williams, 153 Fed. 525, 530, 82 C. C. A. 475 (quoting and adopting definition found in the partnership act of

An executory agreement to form a partnership does not create a "firm" until the contingency has happened and the partnership is actually launched, nor does it make the prospective members "partners"; the test of partnership being to ascertain from the agreement whether any time has to elapse or any act remains to be done before the parties have the right to share in the profits: Dow v. State Bank of Sleepy Eye, 93 N. W. 121, 123, 88 Minn. 355.

"A 'partnership' is a creature of the law merchant, and its origin is founded in that law which is the custom of merchants, recognized and enforced by the courts. One essential feature which must be always present to constitute a partnership is that it is formed for business purposes. It is a voluntary association, arising out of contract, for the purpose of carrying on a joint undertaking, with the object of making a profit to be shared among the partners. Every definition of a partnership includes the purpose of business and profit. It is a combination of two or more persons of capital, or labor, or skill, or some or all of these, for the purpose of business, for the common benefit. Para. Partn. 6. Each partner is an agent of the firm in the scope of its business, and the law relating to it is closely allied to the doctrines of agency. Plaintiff testified that the Koreshan Unity is an organization for religious and social purposes, the members putting in their property, living as one family, and having everything in common. According to her testimony, there is no profit sharing and no business, and the Unity is more in the nature of a tenancy in common, or of a club, than any thing else. A mere tenancy in common does not constitute a partnership. While they both have the element of joint ownership, a partnership is a business enterprise for the common benefit and profit. To such an association as this the doctrines of partnership will not apply." Teed v. Parsons, 66 N. E. 1044, 1046, 202 Ill. 455.

The subscribers to the stock of a proposed corporation before the incorporation is accomplished are "partners" in the business which they have in hand. Mt. Carmel Tel. Co. v. Mt. Carmel & F. Tel. Co., 84 S. W. 515, 119 Ky. 461 (citing Cincinnati Cooperage Company v. Bate, 26 S. W. 538, 96 Ky. 356, 49 Am. St. Rep. 300; Warring v. Arthur, 32 S. W. 221, 98 Ky. 34).

Cotenants are not "partners," neither does the relation of principal and agent exist between them, except upon an express agreement or one necessarily implied. Wright v. Kayner, 113 N. W. 779, 782, 150 Mich. 7.

Where F. and L. agreed to engage in the plumbing business, F. agreeing to furnish the capital, and L. to furnish his tools and material and devote his time to the business, and to draw $18 per week, and the profits in excess of such amount to be shared equally, and the business was carried on under the name of F. & L., under which name their place of business was leased, their bank account opened, their books and accounts kept, their checks drawn, and all contracts executed, there was a "partnership" between them, though no term was agreed on for the continuance of the business, for the situation created was one in which the parties became the common owners of the profits of the business, with a proprietary interest therein before any separation from the undivided stock. Fruin v. Chotzianoff, 63 Atl. 782, 783, 79 Conn. 65.

Where a horse is purchased as the joint property of three persons as equal owners, each to be liable for a third of the purchase price, and each to own a third interest in the horse after it is paid for, and one of them makes a cash payment on the horse, and with another executes a note for the balance of the purchase price, and the third person deposits collateral to cover his liability for his share of the purchase price, and as part of the agreement it is provided that the earnings from racing the horse, after payment of the expenses of the business, shall be applied to payment of the purchase-money note, and then to repaying the one who makes the cash payment, the residue to be divided among the three, a half to the one of them managing the horse, and a quarter to each of the others, there is a "partnership." A "partnership" is a contract of some kind involving mutual consent of the parties, and when entered into for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business, with the right of the parties thereto to participate in the profits, such a contract constitutes a "partnership," unless other facts and circumstances show that some relation exists. Bryant v. Fitzsimmons, 67 Atl. 356, 357, 106 Md. 421 (citing Kerr v. Potter [Md.] 6 Gill, 423; Bull v. Schuberth, 2 Md. 55; Heise v. Barth, 40 Md. 259; Waring v. National Marine Bank of Baltimore, 22 Atl. 140, 74 Md. 278).

An agreement whereby a husband puts certain property into a business and his wife turns over certain other property, and a third party transfers to the firm a lease and options on certain lands, and the profits to be drawn by each of the three parties to the agreement is stated, constitutes an express contract of "partnership." Butler v. Frank, 67 S. E. 884, 885, 7 Ga. App. 655.

The elements of a "partnership" are community of loss, of title, of expenses, and common right to dispose of property for purposes of a partnership. An agreement whereby a third person bound himself to advance funds necessary to carry out a contract of sale, to manage the property, dispose of the same, and pay to the buyer a half of the net proceeds, does not create a partnership between the third person and the buyer. L. Baldwin & Co. v. Patrick, 91 Pac. 828, 829, 39 Colo. 347.

Seven persons associated themselves together to manufacture cheese at a factory owned by three of them, who received a certain sum for the use of the factory. The association adopted no name, and was known by several different names. All expenses of manufacture and sale were to be deducted from the proceeds of the sale of the product, and the balance divided in proportion to the amount of milk furnished by the parties. The association constituted a "partnership." Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 N. W. 1022, 1025, 122 Wis. 326 (citing Ellsworth v. Tartt, 26 Ala. 733, 62 Am. Dec. 749).

An instruction in substance that, if the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant furnished the financial credit on which the business was founded, stored the liquors in a place kept by him which was charged with being a nuisance, assisted in caring for the liquors, and received a share of the profits of the business, he was a partner and might be convicted the same as though he had personally made the sales is held to state sufficiently the law of "partnership" as applied to the evidence, in view of the failure of defendant to request a more definite instruction upon the question. State v. Tracy, 127 Pac. 610, 88 Kan. 153.

Agency

While a business carried on by two or more persons for profit, with a community of interest, and a share of profits and losses, is essentially a "partnership," these requirements may exist without creating a partnership, and there can be no partnership unless the agreement contemplates an agency whereby each is the agent for the other or others. Jackson v. Hooper, 74 Atl. 130, 134, 76 N. J. Eq. 185.

The test of "partnership" is whether the parties are jointly interested as principals and may bind each other by their acts or engagements within the scope of the enterprise. Keith v. Kellermann, 169 Fed. 196, 199.

The incidents of a "partnership" are contribution to the common property, sharing in profits, and the existence between the parties of mutual agency in the conduct of the business. Murray Drug Co. v. Harris, 57 S. E. 1109, 1110, 77 S. C. 410 (citing Price v. Middleton & Ravenel, 75 S. C. 105, 55 S. E. 156).

A "partnership" is, in one sense, a species of agency; and where the parties to a contract do not themselves intend a partnership, it would seem, on principle, that the one who is unknown to those who deal with the others should be held only on the same ground that an undisclosed principal would be bound. Russell v. Herrick, 111 N. Y. Supp. 974, 977, 127 App. Div. 503.

That connecting carriers agreed to associate themselves together, and form what to a shipper was a continuous line between the point of shipment and final destination on the line of the terminal carrier, and the contracts of carriage made with the initial carrier provided for carriage over both lines for an agreed sum for the entire trip which was prorated between them, did not make such carriers "partners" in transporting the freight; each company not having the right to manage the entire business of both between the points of shipment, and there being no division of profits and expenses. Crockett v. St. Louis & H. Ry. Co., 126 S. W. 243, 245, 147 Mo. App. 347.

A "partnership" does not exist regarding animals and crops as to which the interest of the parties is in shares, and there is no common property which either has the right to manage or sell. Beatty v. Clarkson, 83 S. W. 1033, 1034, 110 Mo. App. 1 (citing Par. Partn. § 61, and note; Donnell v. Harshe, 67 Mo. 170; Ashby v. Shaw, 82 Mo. 76).

The agreement of defendants, manufacturers of boxes and box materials, in terms creating an agency, placed in charge of a board of principals, on which each party had a single representative, giving such board authority to appoint a general agent with authority, subject to the supervision of the board, to act as the agent of each of the principals, "severally and respectively" for the sale of all manufactured products "covered by the agreement" and to collect "all proceeds of sales" passing through the agency, he to have only such powers as were "expressly conferred on him" by the agreement or "may be conferred on him by resolution of the board, passed at a regular meeting and entered on its minutes; declaring the purpose of the agency to limit the production and fix the prices of the output of the mills of the parties"; expressly providing that the board was the agent of each of the principals "severally," and that it should not have power to "represent or act for the principals jointly or any number of them jointly," or to bind any principal "jointly with any other principal" or other than separately and severally, and that it should not "create any joint obligation as to the said principals or any number of them," does not create a "partnership," but only an agency. National Lumber & Box Co. v. Grays Harbor Commercial Co., 127 Pac. 577, 579, 71 Wash. 31.

As an artificial person

A "partnership" is an entity distinct from that of its members, and is recognized in law as a person. Clay, Robinson & Co. v.

Douglas County, 129 N. W. 548, 549, 88 Neb. 363, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 756.

A "partnership" is a distinct entity, and a judgment against it is not a judgment against the individuals who compose it. Lansing v. Bever Land Co. (Iowa) 138 N. W. 833, 835.

The common law does not recognize a "partnership" as an entity existing and having rights and liabilities apart from its members, yet a judgment may be rendered against a "partnership" in a case where citation has been served on one of the partners, as well as against the partner cited. State v. Cloudt (Tex.) 84 S. W. 415, 416 (citing Rev. St. 1895, art. 1347).

A "partnership," unlike a corporation, is not an entity. A firm, as such, is not regarded as having any legal existence apart from the members composing it. When copartners are libeled under their firm name, the wrong is done to individuals composing the copartnership, and as individuals they are entitled to redress and may maintain a joint or several action. Bergstrom v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 1094, 53 Misc. Rep. 95.

"There are two conceptions of a 'partnership' one springing from the agreement on which it is founded, that it is an aggregation of persons associated together to share its profits and losses, owning its property and liable for its debts; the other that it is an artificial being, a distinct entity, separate in estate, in rights, and in obligation from the partners who compose it. In most of its relations to persons and things the latter conception is the more accurate." Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, a partnership is a distinct entity, a person separate from the partners who compose it. It owns its property and owes its debts apart from the individual property of its members, which it does not own, and apart from the individual debts of its members, which it does not owe. It may be adjudged bankrupt although the partners who compose it are not so adjudicated. The trustee of the estate of a bankrupt partnership is not the trustee of the individual property of the unadjudicated partners, and has no more right to administer that property than he has to administer the property of indorsers of the commercial paper of the firm or the property of sureties for its debts. He is not the trustee or the assignee of the claims of the partnership creditors, nor their agent nor attorney to collect those claims out of other than the partnership property, and where no partner is adjudged bankrupt, he has no powers to enforce such claims against any property except the partnership property, or against any unadjudicated partner or other person who has none of the partnership property. Under Act March 2, 1867, c. 176, 14 Stat. 517, and the Massachusetts Insolvency

Law of 1888 (Laws 1837-88, p. 449, c. 163), a partnership was an aggregation of partners, and the insolvency or bankruptcy of the partners conditioned the bankruptcy of the partnership. It is not so under the act of 1898, and therefore many of the rules of law applicable under the former acts do not obtain under the latter. In re Bertenshaw, 157 Fed. 363, 365, 85 C. C. A. 61, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 13 Ann. Cas. 986 (citing Walker v. Wait, 50 Vt. 668, 676; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 784; Cross v. Burlington Nat. Bank, 17 Kan. 340).

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 6. 30 Stat. 544, declares that "corporations" shall mean all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, and shall include limited or other partnership associations organized under laws making the capital subscribed alone responsible for the debts of the association. Section 4 declares that private bankers, but not national banks or banks incorporated under state or territorial laws, may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts; and section 5 (30 Stat. 547) provides that a partnership during the continuance of its business or after its dissolution and before settlement may be adjudged a bankrupt. Held, that where an association of individuals was formed to carry on the business of a private bank, as authorized by Laning's Rev. Laws Ohio, § 4891 et seq. (Bates' Ann. St. § 3170-1 et seq.) but was not incorporated, it was a "partnership," and as such subject to be adjudged a bankrupt, though it was entitled to exercise some of the attributes of a corporation. Burkhart v. German-American Bank, 137 Fed. 953, 959.

Though a "partnership" may be regarded as a legal entity for the consideration of the rights of partners inter se, it has no legal existence apart from the members composing it, with reference to the rights of third persons. State v. Krasher, 83 N. E. 498, 500, 170 Ind. 43.

A partnership is a legal entity, as well as a corporation, except in a more limited sense. Though partners are not jointly liable, and cannot be sued as a firm for slanderous words spoken by one of them, unless by the direction or authority or approval of the others, they are liable as a firm for slander committed by a servant, whom they have directed or authorized to speak the words for them, or where, with knowledge of what their servant has done, they ratify it. Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 121 S. W. 1026, 1028, 135 Ky. 182, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955, 21 Ann. Cas. 481.

A "partnership," under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, is a distinct entity, and as such it may be adjudged to be a bankrupt, irrespective of any adjudication against the individual members; but when there is no adjudication against the firm, the partnership assets cannot be administered, where there is one partner not adjudicated a bankrupt, unless he consents, and it is not an act of bankruptcy for which a firm may be adjudged a bankrupt that one of its members out of his individual estate prefers one of his own or one of the firm creditors. Mills v. J. H. Fisher & Co., 159 Fed. 897, 899, 87 C. C. A. 77, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656 (citing In re Meyer, 98 Fed. 976, 39 C. C. A. 368; In re Mercur, 122 Fed. 384, 58 C. C. A. 472; Loveland, Bankr. [3d Ed.] §§ 96-98).

A "partnership" is really not a legal entity. It is not a person, and the use of the partnership name is of no value, except as it represents natural persons. In re Levin Bros.' Estate, 73 Pac. 159, 162, 139 Cal. 350.

A "partnership" is a legal, but not a social entity. It can own property, it can buy and sell, it can sue and be sued, and it can plead and be impleaded in the courts of the land; but it can neither marry or be given in marriage, nor perform any other social function essential to its being elevated to the dignity of becoming the head of a family. A member of a partnership firm, although the head of a family, cannot claim as exempt from a forced sale upon execution any portion of the partnership property which has been levied upon to satisfy the claims of the creditors of the firm. Lynch v. Englehardt-Winning-Davison Mercantile Co., 96 N. W. 524, 525, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 528.

An unincorporated association is not a "partnership," and, to render a member liable as a principal on contracts made by persons or committees who manage and assume to act for it, it must be shown that they are expressly or impliedly authorized to represent him. *Brower v. As determined by intent of parties

While neither a writing, nor any other particular form of contract, is needed to create a trading or laboring partnership, a "partnership" is not created by implication or operation of law, as between the partners, apart from an express or implied agreement to constitute the relation; mutual consent of two or more competent minds being required to establish the same. Watson v. Hamilton (Ala.) 60 South. 63.

Except in cases in which parties have held themselves out as copartners and credit has been extended to them as such, when in fact they were not partners between themselves, a "partnership" is a relation between two or more competent persons, resulting from a contract, and accordingly only exists where the parties intend to enter into a contract of partnership; for this, like other contracts, must be construed according to the manifest intention of the parties, and must be determined by the contract itself and the surrounding circumstances. Mackie v. Mott, 47 S. W. 897, 146 Mo. 230; McDonald v. Matney, 82 Mo. 365; Priest v. Chouteau, 85 Mo. 398, 55 Am. Rep. 375.

A "partnership" is a contractual relation created by agreement of the parties; but a person may be held liable as a partner even in the absence of a contract. Butler v. Frank, 67 S. E. 884, 885, 7 Ga. App. 655.

"Joint ownership" does not necessarily mean "partnership," and several persons who agree to buy property to hold jointly or in common are not partners, unless it was their intention to become partners. Logan v. Oklahoma Mill Co., 79 Pac. 103, 104, 14 Okl. 402.

A "partnership" is a contract between two or more persons to combine their capital, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in a business in which they are to have a community interest, as principals, for the purpose of joint profits; the question of the existence of the relation between one of intent and the sharing of profits not being a conclusive test. T. E. Foley Co. v. McKinley, 131 N. W. 316, 318, 114 Minn. 271.

"A person not a 'partner' in fact may be liable as such to third persons on the ground that he has held himself out to the world as such, or has permitted others to do so, and is estopped from denying that he is a 'partner,' as against those who have in good faith dealt with the firm, or with him as a member of it; and the holding out must have been by the authority or with the knowledge of the party sought to be charged. This is so self-evident and just a principle that it does not need to be supported by further reference to adjudged cases. It is obvious no one can be charged as a partner where the acts relied on for that purpose are neither his own acts, nor acts of others authorized by or made known to him. Even though it were generally supposed, believed, and understood that a person is a 'partner' in a concern, this would be insufficient evidence to prove that he was a partner." Lighthiser v. Allison, 59 Atl. 182, 183, 100 Md. 103 (citing Fletcher v. Pullen, 16 Atl. 887, 70 Md. 205, 14 Am. St. Rep. 355).

"Partnership" is a contractual relation existing between persons who have combined their property, labor, and skill in an enterprise or business as principals for the purpose of joint profit. It exists when there is community of interest in the whole property, business, and responsibility of the concern. The question of partnership depends on the consent and intention of the parties ascertained from the circumstances of the case, and where a partnership is the legal result of an agreement actually made, the parties thereto are partners, though they may have stipulated they are not to be partners. McDonald Bros. v. Campbell & Bergeson, 104 N. W. 760, 761, 96 Minn. 87, (citing Baldwin v. Eddy, 67 N. W. 349, 64 Minn. 425; Meehan v. Valentine, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 145 U. S. 611, 36 L. Ed. 835; 1 Bates, Partn. § 15 et seq.; Shumaker, Partn. § 31).

A "partnership" is a relation arising out of a contract to do certain things, and exists only where parties intend to enter into a contract of partnership, and unless they have estopped themselves by holding themselves out to the world as partners, their intention as derived from the contract is decisive of the question. A partnership exists as a result of a voluntary contract between the parties, and never solely by operation of law. M. and C. entering into a contract, by which each is to have a one-half interest, one to perform certain duties relative thereto, and the other certain other duties, there being a joint ownership and a joint bearing of the burdens and expenses, whatever they may be, as well as sharing jointly in the profits, constitutes a "partnership." Citizens' Nat. Bank of Chickasha v. Mitchell, 103 Pac. 720, 726, 24 Okl. 488, 20 Ann. Cas. 371.

"There is no arbitrary test by which to determine when a 'partnership' exists. It depends upon the intention of the parties, and this intention must be ascertained from the evidence and all the circumstances of the case. If the evidence shows that the parties intended to combine their property, labor, and skill in an enterprise as principals for the purpose of enjoying the profits, it establishes a partnership. The question always is: Was there a joint business, or were the parties carrying on the business as principals and agents? If there is a joint business, it naturally follows that the parties were to share the profits in some proportion, and hence an agreement to share profit is strong evidence that the enterprise was to be conducted as a joint undertaking. As said by Lindley: 'An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the grand characteristic of every partnership.' Lindl., Partn. § 1. Of course, this inference may be overthrown by evidence showing that the profits were to be shared on some other basis than as joint owners. It was at one time thought that an agreement to bear losses, as well as to share profits, was essential to the existence of the partnership relation, and this idea finds expression in many of the definitions which have been collected by Lindley from statutes and civil and common law writers. But the modern conception of a partnership as a joint enterprise with a view to gain leaves the question of losses to be determined from the evidence, and in the absence of any contract to the contrary infers an agreement to share losses from an agreement to share profits. The management of the business and the extent to which the business shall be conducted, and be under the control of any particular partner is also left to be arranged by the members of the partnership. The sole management may by agreement be vested in one partner." McAlpine v. Millen, 116 N. W. 583, 586, 104 Minn. 289.

Civ. Code, § 2395, defines a "partnership" as the association of two or more for carrying on business together and dividing the profits, and section 2397 declares that a partnership can be formed only by the consent of all the parties thereto. Held, that a partnership may be shown by acts and declarations of the parties; an express agreement to form a partnership not being necessary. Niroad v. Farnell, 106 Pac. 252, 253, 11 Cal. App. 767.

*H. made a contract of purchase of plaintiff of mining lands and personal property thereon. H. and defendant made a contract reciting that H. contemplated the purchase of the mining property, and was desirous of borrowing $25,000, and that defendant had agreed to loan it to him on the note of himself and others; that it should be paid to H. in certain amounts, at certain times; that, if H. did not make the purchase, he should at once return the money; that, if he did make it, he should take the title in his own name, and should execute a declaration of trust conveying to defendant a fourth interest in the land, as a bonus for making the loan; that, if H. should make the purchase, he should have the exclusive control and management of the land and the working thereof; and that the liability of the makers of the note did not in any wise depend on the contract or the success of the mining operations, but was fixed by the terms of the note. Held, that no "partnership" was created between H. and defendant by this contract, so as to make defendant liable to plaintiff for the breach by H. of his contract of purchase. Diamond Creek Consol. Gold & Silver Mining Co. v. Swope, 102 S. W. 561, 564, 204 Mo. 48 (quoting and adopting the definition in Pars. Part. p. 58).*

A division of the profits of a business is not alone sufficient to constitute a "partnership." The essential test is whether the parties asserted to be in partnership intended to establish that relation. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co., 96 S. W. 261, 266, 203 Mo. 121.

Foreign corporation doing business without authority

Where officers and members of a mercantile corporation, created by the law of another state with a capacity to exist and do business only in certain named counties in that state, attempt to establish the corporation under another name in the state of

Louisiana, the effect, so far at least as third persons are concerned, is the establishment of a mercantile partnership composed of the parties to such attempt, and where it appears that such partnership, in its own name, has acquired property and contracted debts, such property will be devoted to the payment, by preference, of the debts so contracted. Campbell v. J. I. Campbell Co., 41 South. 696, 699, 117 La. 402 (citing Cincinnati Cooperage Co. v. Bate, 26 S. W. 538, 96 Ky. 356, 49 Am. St. Rep. 300; Baldev v. Brackenridge, 2 South. 410, 39 La. Sharing profits

While there may be a sharing of profits without a "partnership," there can be no partnership without a sharing of profits. A sharing of the gross returns, with or without a common interest in the property from which the returns come, does not amount to a sharing of profits, and does not of itself create a partnership. Tyson v. Bryan, 120 N. W. 940, 942, 84 Neb. 202.

"Partnership" is the relation subsisting between two or more persons who have contracted together to share, as common owners, the proceeds of a business carried on by all or any of them for the benefit of all. Meinhart v. Draper, 112 S. W. 709, 133 Mo. App. 50.

A "partnership" is a status resulting from contract, its essential elements being a contract to share, as common owners, the profits of the business. Baum v. Stephenson, 113 S. W. 225, 229, 133 Mo. App. 187.

A "partnership" is a contract relation, subsisting between two or more persons, by which they have combined their property, labor, or skill, in an enterprise or business as principals, for the purpose of joint profit. Norton v. Brink, 110 N. W. 669, 670, 75 Neb. 566, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 121 Am. St. Rep. 822 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bates, Partn. § 1).

One is not necessarily a "partner" because of an agreement that he shall share in the profits; and while this may be one of the tests, it may be controlled by other considerations. Beard v. Rowland, 81 Pac. 188, 189, 71 Kan. 873.

The specific interest in the profits necessary to constitute a "partnership" is a proprietary one, existing before the division into shares. Moscowitz v. Sassulsky, 126 N. Y. Supp. 513, 514, 141 App. Div. 763.

"Partnership" is defined as the relation subsisting between two or more persons who have contracted together to share as common owners the profits of the business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them. Breinig v. Sparrow, 80 N. E. 37, 38, 39 Ind. App. 455.

While a community of interest in the profits is not of itself conclusive of the existence of a "partnership," it is of the very essence of the contract, and a partnership cannot exist without it. Bentley v. Brossard, 94 Pac. 736, 742, 33 Utah, 396.

A "partnership" may be defined as the relation existing between two or more persons who have agreed to carry on a business together and to share the profits thereof as joint owners of the business. Herman Kahn Co. v. A. T. Bowden & Co., 96 S. W. 127, 128, 80 Ark. 23, 10 Ann. Cas. 132 (citing Meehan v. Valentine, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 145 U. S. 611, 38 L. Ed. 835).

To constitute a "partnership," the partners must share something by virtue of the partnership agreement, and that which they are to share must consist of profit to arise from the predetermined business, which is to be engaged in for the common benefit. An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the chief characteristic of every partnership, and is the leading feature of nearly every definition of the term (citing Lindley, Partn. p. 1). A partnership, as said by Collyer, results from "a voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or any or all of them, under an understanding that there shall be a communion of profits between them and for the purpose of carrying on a legal trade, business, or adventure." Coons v. Coons, 56 S. E. 576, 578, 579, 106 Va. 572.

The agreement between two parties, that all the commissions received by them for selling certain insurance stock should be equally divided between them, constituted a "partnership." Pratt v. Frazer, 129 S. W. 1088, 1089, 95 Ark. 405.

Under Rev. Codes, §§ 5486, 5489, 5482, defining a "partnership" as the association of two or more persons to carry on a business together and divide the profits, and providing that the interest of each member of a firm extends to every portion of its property, and that every general partner is agent for the firm in the transaction of its business, etc., it is essential to a partnership that there is community of ownership in the profits; but the sharing of profits is not a conclusive test of a partnership. Weiss v. Hamilton, 105 Pac. 74, 76, 40 Mont. 90.

A "partnership," as a general rule, exists where persons share in the profits of an enterprise as profits, and not as a measure of compensation for services, property, or opportunity in aid of the business. A purchaser in an option contract to purchase real estate agreed to turn the option over to a third person, and to obtain from the vendor an extension thereof, and the third person agreed to look over the premises, and, if he could purchase them for a satisfactory price, he would do so, and resell within a reasonable time, and divide with the purchaser the net profits. Both parties considered the option of value, and the vendor proposed to comply therewith. It was understood that the purchaser should have the taxes and the expenses of examining the land and estimating the timber, and should pay interest on the price paid by the third person, though it was expected that these sums would be paid out of the purchaser's half of the profits. Held to show that the purchaser and the third person agreed to become partners to deal in real estate. Langley v. Sanborn, 114 N. W. 787, 788, 135 Wis. 178.

Where two or more parties are engaged in a joint business enterprise, in which they contribute either capital, skill, or labor upon an understanding, tacit or otherwise, that they will share in common the profits accruing from the venture, they are partners in fact and in law. Complainant and defendants entered into a written memorandum contract, which recited that they were "offering for sale a tract of land [about 17,000 acres]," and providing that in case of sale they should share equally in the net profits. The evidence showed that the land was timber land, and that it was the intention to acquire it by purchase from separate owners of small tracts; the expected profit being in aggregating such tracts and selling together to some large lumbering concern. A number of options had previously been secured, and others were subsequently secured, aggregating in all some 25,000 acres. Some of these options expired, and one of the defendants renewed the same in his own name, as he was authorized to do for convenience. Nothing had been done toward terminating the agreement, and all parties were performing the agreed services in furtherance of the scheme, when such defendant contracted to sell all of the land for his own benefit, claiming that the agreement expired with the options which were held when it was made. Held, that the agreement created a "partnership," that such defendant could not renew the expiring options for his own benefit, but such renewals inured to the benefit of all the partners, and all were entitled to share in the profits of the sale. Gaddie v. Mann, 147 Fed. 960, 963 (citing In re C. F. Beckwith & Co., 130 Fed. 476; George, Partn. 30).

"A 'partnership' may as well be predicated of an agreement to share net profits as of an agreement to share the profits and losses and the same rule applies. Hence participation in the profits of the business raises a presumption of the existence of a partnership." Tamblyn v. Scott, 85 S. W. 918, 111 Mo. App. 46 (quoting and adopting definition in Torbert v. Jeffrey, 61 S. W. 823, 161 Mo. 645, 656).

In order to constitute a "partnership," it is necessary that there should be something more than the joint ownership of property. A mere community of interest by ownership is not sufficient. This creates a tenancy in common, but not a partnership. The test of a partnership between the parties themselves is largely a question of intention; but, before there can be a partnership between the parties themselves, there must be an agreement from which a community of profit and loss arises. There is no presumption of a partnership from a mere joint ownership of the property. It is ordinarily considered that an agreement to share in the profits is an essential element of every partnership, and yet because one shares in the profits this does not necessarily constitute him a partner; but if there is an absence of a sharing in the profits, then there is no agreement by which it can be said a partnership exists. La Cotts v. Pike, 120 S. W. 144, 145, 146, 91 Ark. 26, 134 Am. St. Rep. 48.

An agreement between corporations operating distinct lines of steamers plying between the same points to pool their earnings, and, after paying the ordinary running expenses of all the steamers and certain extraordinary expenses, to divide the net earnings in certain proportions, does not and cannot create a "partnership." White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 105 N. W. 135, 137, 141 Mich. 604, 113 Am. St. Rep. 551.

Where plaintiff and another agreed to put up an equal amount of margin for the purpose of conducting certain speculative transactions in cotton and divide the profits equally, and plaintiff contributed a certain sum on account of margin, which he later received on account of profits, the parties were "partners." Jones v. Walker, 101 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 51 Misc. Rep. 624.

An instrument by which plaintiff was to contribute to the business the use of his hotel, with its furnishings, make certain specified outside repairs, and pay taxes and insurance, and defendant was to manage the business, pay for the water, ice, and electric lights, and put in certain furnishings, and make certain inside repairs, the net profits of the business to be divided between them, was, although it recited that plaintiff "leased" the premises to defendant, a "partnership" agreement, as respects an accounting between the parties. Mason v. Gibson, 60 Atl. 96, 97, 73 N. H. 190.

Same—As compensation for services

Where one is employed by the owner of a mill to take charge of it as miller, he to have a third of the profits for his services, he is not a "partner," liable for losses. Jackson v. Haynie's Adm'r, 56 S. E. 148, 106 Va. 365 (citing Chapline v. Conant, 8 W. Va. 507, 100 Am. Dec. 766; Sodiker v. Applegate, 24 W. Va. 411, 49 Am. Rep. 252).

The ultimate and conclusive test of a partnership is the co-ownership of the profits of a business. If there is community of profits, a "partnership" follows. When it appears that the parties are not joint owners in the business, or that one alone is principal and the other receives his share as compensation, it is not a "partnership." Altgelt v. Alamo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 79 S. W. 582, 586 (citing Ruzard v. Bank of Greenville, 2 S. W. 54, 67 Tex. 83, 84, 60 Am. Rep. 7; Bates, Partn. § 36; George, Partn. § 9).

Where several parties associated themselves together to prosecute a certain business, some of them contributing property and others services, with the understanding that there should be a community of interest in the profits in fixed proportions, there was a "partnership"; but a party who did not contribute property or services towards the capital of the firm, but was merely employed to perform services, for which he was to recover as compensation a certain portion of the profits, was not a partner. Recton v. Robins, 86 S. W. 667, 669, 74 Ark. 437.

It is not essential to constitute a "partnership" that the parties are by agreement to share in the losses of the business; but it is sufficient if they are to have a community of interest in the profits as such. It is, however, requisite that they shall share something by virtue of an agreement to that effect, and that that which they have agreed to share shall be the benefit arising from some predetermined business engaged in for their common benefit. An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the grand characteristic of every partnership, and it is the leading feature of nearly every definition of the term. An agreement by which one party is to furnish the capital and the other his services, the profits to be divided between them, without any special agreement as to losses, constitutes a partnership. Miller v. Simpson, 59 S. E. 378, 380, 107 Va. 476, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962.

"If one person advances funds, and another furnishes his personal services and skill in carrying on the business, and is to share in the profits, it amounts to a 'partnership.' It would be a valid partnership, notwithstanding the whole capital was in the first instance advanced by one partner, if the other contributed his time and skill to the business, and although his proportion of gain and loss was to be very unequal. It is sufficient that his interest in the profits be not intended as a mere substitute for a commission, or in lieu of brokerage, and that he be received into the association as a merchant, and not an agent." Kelley Island Lime & Transport Co. v. Masterson, 93 S. W. 427, 430, 100 Tex. 38.

Where plaintiff's testator, having purchased certain lands, placed them in the hands of B. for sale, agreeing that, if no sales were made within five years, the arrangement should be terminated; if sufficient sales were not made to enable testator to get his money back, with interest, B. should receive 5 per cent. commissions on sales made; and if testator was reimbursed within that time B. should receive one-half of the profits—the arrangement did not constitute a contract of "partnership" between them. Cortin v. Holmes, 154 Fed. 593, 600, 83 C. C. A. 367 (citing Shaeffer v. Blair, 13 Sup. Ct. 856, 149 U. S. 248, 37 L. Ed. 721).

A "partnership" is "an association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits between them" (quoting Civ. Code, § 3180). Consequently one merely employed by another to buy and handle sheep, to rent ranches to winter them on, and to buy food for them, in consideration of which he is to receive a fixed compensation and one-third of the profits, is not a partner, and the relation between the parties is not that of a partnership. Beasley v. Berry, 84 Pac. 791, 792, 33 Mont. 477.

If the party's interest is that of owner, if he has a right to dispose of and control the profits of the enterprise as profits, then there is a "partnership." Where, however, a party makes no contribution to the capital stock of the concern, nor has any right to control the profits, but only is to receive a certain proportion of the net profits in compensation for his labor, the "partnership relation" does not exist. Hand Trading Co. v. Jones, 60 S. E. 154, 155, 129 Ga. 853 (quoting and adopting the definition in Dawson Nat. Bank v. Ward, 48 S. E. 313, 120 Ga. 861).

Wherever a community of interest exists in the profits of a business, as profits, there is a "copartnership"; a share in the profits of an enterprise, not as profits, but as compensation for service, property, or opportunity furnished in aid of the business, does not constitute a "partnership." Wagner v. Butties, 139 N. W. 425, 428, 151 Wis. 668.

Same—As compensation for use of property

Snyder's St. § 4959, defines "partnership" as the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits. Bates on Partnership defines it as the contract relation subsisting between persons who have combined their property, labor, or skill in an enterprise or business as principals for the purpose of joint profit. It is defined in Citizens' Nat. Bank of Chickasha v. Mitchell, 103 Pac. 720, 726, 24 Okl. 488, 501, 20 Ann. Cas. 371, as existing as a result of a voluntary contract between the parties, and never solely by operation of law. It is a relation arising out of a contract to do certain things, and exists only where the parties intend to enter into the contract of partnership, and unless they have estopped themselves by holding themselves out to the world as partners, their intention, as derived from the contract, is decisive. The court in this case refuses to undertake the difficult task of giving any general definition of partnership, but holds that a contract by which one person leases to another machinery and tools for drilling an oil well, who agrees to pay the lessor 90 per cent. of the net profits derived from the well, and gives as security for his rent an order on the person for whom the well is being drilled for all moneys that are to be paid the lessee, and directs the lessor to pay the operating expenses out of such moneys, does not create a partnership. McKallip v. Geese, 118 Pac. 586, 587, 30 Okl. 33.

Sharing losses

"It is not necessary, in order to constitute a 'partnership,' that there be an express agreement that each party shall bear a share of any losses which may occur in the business. This may be inferred from the other provisions of the contract, and the nature of the business, and the relation of parties to the business to be transacted." Jones v. Patrick, 140 Fed. 403, 406 (quoting and adopting definition in Richards v. Grinnell, 18 N. W. 668, 63 Iowa, 44, 51, 50 Am. Rep. 727).

Sharing both profits and losses

Profit-sharing is not always a conclusive test of "partnership," but an agreement to share both profits and losses always creates a partnership, and it is immaterial if the person furnishing the capital calls the other party to the agreement an agent, as his opinion of their relations will not control as against the fact that they were to share the profits and losses of the business. Bowman & Cockrel v. Ed Blanton & Co., 132 S. W. 1041, 1042, 141 Ky. 407.

A mere participation in the profits and losses of a business does not necessarily create a "partnership." There must be such a community of interest as empowers each party to make contracts, incur liabilities, manage the whole business, and dispose of the whole property; a right which, on the dissolution of the partnership by death of one, passes to the survivor, and not to the representatives of the deceased. The fact that one agreed to divide with another a commission for selling land was insufficient to constitute them partners; no losses or expenses being contemplated or involved. Sain v. Rooney, 101 S. W. 1127, 1130, 125 Mo. App. 176 (quoting and adopting the definition in Newberger v. Friede, 23 Mo. App. 631).

A "partnership" can only be formed by voluntary agreement, express or implied, by two or more competent persons, joining together their property, labor, skill, and experience with one or more of them, in the transaction of business for their common benefit and profit, and it is this community of interest in sharing the profits and losses of the business which constitute a complete partnership, as well between the parties as in respect to strangers. Jones v. Purnell (Del.) 62 Atl. 149, 150, 5 Pennewill, 444.

An agreement to share in the losses and profits is not necessary to constitute a "partnership," but it is sufficient if there is an agreement to share in the profits only. Leeds v. Townsend, 81 N. E. 1069, 1070, 228 Ill. 451, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191 (citing Fougner v. First Nat. Bank, 30 N. E. 442, 141 Ill. 124).

A "partnership contract" is a contract of two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in a lawful business, and to divide the profits and bear the losses in certain proportions. Chapin v. Cherry, 147 S. W. 1084, 1092, 243 Mo. 375.

The mere sharing of profits will not be construed as establishing a "partnership relation," but is a circumstance to be taken in consideration. An agreement to share profits, nothing being said about losses, amounts prima facie to an agreement to share losses also, and accordingly persons engaged in any business or venture, sharing the profits, are "partners," unless an intention to the contrary can be shown. Johnson Bros. v. Carter & Co., 94 N. W. 850, 852, 120 Iowa, 355 (citing Ruddick v. Otis, 33 Iowa, 402; Winter v. Pipher, 64 N. W. 663, 96 Iowa, 17; 1 Lindl. Partn. [Ewell] 30; Richards v. Grinnell, 18 N. W. 668, 63 Iowa, 44, 50 Am. Rep. 727).

"A 'partnership' is a status dependent on the contract between two or more persons. Its distinguishing, essential elements are the contract or agreement to become partners and the sharing of profits or loss proportionately. Its members may contribute money, property, or labor, or any of them; but, unless there is an express agreement to share profits (and impliedly, if not expressly, to bear losses) in a given proportion among the parties to the agreement, it is not a 'partnership,' whatever rights the parties have." Where an owner sold his stock of merchandise under an agreement that the business should be continued in his name, and that he was to hold the assets to indemnify him against loss and to secure the sum owing him, and where the buyer conducted the business in the owner's name, and bought goods in his name, the owner and buyer were not partners, either in fact or law. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. McClain (Ky.) 85 S. W. 699, 700 (citing Miller v. Hughes, 1 A. K. Marsh. [8 Ky.] 182, 10 Am. Dec. 719).

In an action against defendants, as partners, on an account for purchases made by one of them, an instruction that, if defendants were jointly engaged in extracting ore from the ground on the lots mentioned in the written contract introduced in evidence, and that each defendant was to share in the profit and loss according to their respective interests therein, then they were "partners," though there was no express agreement to become partners, or to share in profits and losses, was proper. Dale & Bennett v. Goldenrod Min. Co., 85 S. W. 929, 110 Mo. App. 817.

It is not essential to a "partnership agreement" that it shall contemplate that the profits shall be liquidated in the form of money or property for division in the ratio of the interests of the respective members; but it is sufficient if the ultimate result of the business operations of the association contemplates a community of profits or of losses. Where cranberry producers agreed in forming an association for the sale of their product to bear the current running expenses in a ratio corresponding to their respective interests in the association regardless of the extent to which they might actually use the union in selling their berries, and to share profits in the agreed ratio of their respective interests, there was such a community of interest in profits and losses as to constitute the association a "partnership." Briere v. Searls, 105 N. W. 817, 818, 820, 126 Wis. 847.

PARTNERSHIP DEBTS

"Partnership debts" are the debts of each partner in solido and at law both separate and joint creditors may attach either separate or joint property and sell it on execution in satisfaction of their judgments, without regard to equities existing between their debtors. But in equity partnership effects must be applied in satisfaction of partnership debts, in preference to debts due creditors of the individual partners, and to the extent that partnership debts are not fully paid by the joint property, they stand the same as other debts against each partner's separate estate. F. R. Patch Mfg. Co. v. Capeless, 63 Atl. 938, 939, 79 Vt. 1 (citing Cutler v. Thomas' Estate, 25 Vt. 73; Bardwell v. Perry, 19 Vt. 292, 47 Am. Dec. 687; Washburn v. Bank of Bellows Falls, 19 Vt. 278; Barton Nat. Bank v. Atkins, 47 Atl. 176, 72 Vt. 33; 3 Kent's Com. 32).

A judgment on a note for a debt of a partnership, though signed by the partners individually, is a "partnership debt," within the discharge in bankruptcy of the partners from debts provable against the estate of the partnership. Young v. Stevenson, 84 S. W. 623, 624, 73 Ark. 480 (citing Bates, Partn. §§ 452, 453; In re Mosler, 112 Fed. 138; Farwell v. Huston, 37 N. E. 864, 151 Ill. 239, 42 Am. St. Rep. 237; Trowbridge v. Cushman, 24 Pick. [41 Mass.] 310; Kendrick v.

Tarbell, 27 Vt. 512; Mix v. Shattuck, 50 Vt. 421, 28 Am. Rep. 511; Spalding v. Wilson, 80 Ky. 589; Clanton v. Price, 90 N. C. 36; Carson v. Byers, 25 N. W. 826, 67 Iowa, 606; McKee v. Hamilton, 33 Ohio St. 7).

PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY

The fact that land belonging to a partner is made use of by the firm does not render it "partnership property." Humes v. Higman, 40 South. 128, 131, 145 Ala. 215.

Real estate not purchased with partnership funds does not become "partnership property," though used for partnership purposes, unless there is some agreement that it shall so be considered. Clark v. Lyster, 156 Fed. 513, 517, 84 C. C. A. 27 (citing Story, Partn. [7th Ed.] §§ 94, 95, note B; 1 Lind. Partn. [2d Am. Ed.] p. 332 et seq.; Appeal of Shafer, 106 Pa. 49; Alexander v. Kimbro, 49 Miss. 529; Ware v. Owens, 42 Ala. 212, 94 Am. Dec. 672).

PARTRIDGE

Grouse including, see Grouse.

"Partridges" are considered game birds within the law making it a misdemeanor to hunt any game on the Sabbath Day. Gunn v. State, 15 S. E. 458, 459, 89 Ga. 341.

PARTY

See Guilty Party; Minority Party; Political Party; Private Party; Third Party.

Charter party, see Charter Party.
Other party, see Other.

The word "party" means as naturally a body composed of several individuals as a body sole and individually, and, though everywhere implying unity, it is properly used to signify a unit composed of many, as well as an individual. State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 476, 96 Miss. 720.

In an action against a married woman as a note, an instruction that the material question to be decided was, "Did the parties at the time the note in suit was executed contract with reference to and upon the faith and credit of the separate estate of the defendant?" is not erroneous in the use of the word "parties," since that word referred to the parties to the contract and suit, including all. Union Stockyards Nat. Bank of South Omaha v. Lamb, 139 N. W. 216, 218, 92 Neb. 608.

In an action against principals and their agent to recover money lost at gaming, where the court instructed that, if defendant M. was agent for defendants A. and G. in the transaction of business in which plaintiff bought and sold stock, grain, etc., on a margin, and at the time of any such sale or purchase the delivery of the articles was not contemplated by the parties thereto, or their agent, the jury should find for plaintiff, the words "parties thereto," so used, required the jury to believe that no delivery was contemplated by all the parties to the purchases or sales previously referred to in the instructions. Paducah Commission Co. v. Boswell (Ky.) 83 S. W. 144, 145.

Contract of sale

The word "party," contained in Gen. St. 1894, § 4191, providing that, to entitle any instrument affecting real estate to be recorded, it must be executed and acknowledged by the party executing the same, does not refer to a vendee who signs a contract, but to the party required to sign such an instrument, in order to constitute a valid conveyance under Gen. St. 1894, § 4213. McPheeters v. Ronning, 103 N. W. 889, 890, 95 Minn. 164.

Deed

The words "party" or "parties" are commonly employed interchangeably in deeds, regardless of whether their antecedents are singular or plural. Lawson v. Todd, 110 S. W. 412, 413, 129 Ky. 132.

Insurance policy

Code 1906, § 2563, defines an "insurance contract" as "an agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money, or its equivalent, or do some act of value to the assured, upon the destruction, loss or injury of something in which the other party has an interest." Held, that a fire policy in favor of a lumber company for $3,000 on property aggregating in value $8,000, made by a manufacturing lumbermen's underwriters' association, composed of a number of persons, firms, etc., was an insurance contract falling literally within such definition; such organization being a "party" within the meaning of the statute. State v. Alley, 51 South. 467, 475, 476, 96 Miss. 720.

Mortgage

The trustee is not a "party" to the mortgage by the law of Massachusetts. In re McDonald, 173 Fed. 99, 102 (citing Haskell v. Merrill, 60 N. E. 485, 179 Mass. 120, 125).

The mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy is not a "party" to the mortgage, within Rev. Laws Mass. c. 198, § 1, providing that, unless property mortgaged has been delivered to and retained by the mortgagee, the mortgage shall not be valid against a person, other than the parties thereto, until it has been recorded as required, etc. In re Jules & Frederic Co., 193 Fed. 533, 536.

Where a chattel mortgage covering after-acquired property was invalid as to such property under the local law except between the parties, the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy could not be regarded as taking the place of the mortgagor in such a sense as to become a "party" to the mortgage, and hence, the mortgagee not having taken possession of the property prior to the mortgagor's adjudication as a bankrupt, the trustee, though taking the property in the same plight and condition in which the bankrupt held it at the time of adjudication, did not take subject to any lien or equity in favor of the mortgagee as against such after-acquired property, it being property which might have been levied on and sold under judicial proceedings against the bankrupt at that time, as provided by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 30 Stat. 565. In re Hurley, 185 Fed. 851, 853, 854.

Allowance of costs

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 2949, providing that costs shall be allowed in the Supreme Court, irrespective of any costs taxed in the case below to the prevailing party, the word "party" is used in the plural or singular sense, according to the person or persons standing for the particular interest involved. Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 99 N. W. 909, 1012, 121 Wis. 127.

Attorney included

If a rigid construction is to be given to the word "party" as used in subdivision 1 of section 5676, Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St., providing that, if judgment be given against a public corporation, on the presentation of a certified transcript to the officers authorized to draw orders on the treasurer, he shall draw an order in favor of the party for whom the judgment was given, the word would have to be construed to mean the minor, instead of his attorneys, who would have to present a certified transcript; but such construction is not a practical one, and the proper construction is that the word "party" has reference to the party to the action or to his attorneys. State ex rel. Lane v. Ballinger, 82 Pac. 1018, 1021, 41 Wash. 23, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 72.

Challenge of jurors

Under a statute providing that "either 'party' in a civil action or in any criminal proceeding may, at or before the time when the jury is called for the trial of the cause, challenge in writing addressed to the clerk of the court any jurors, not exceeding one in six, without alleging or showing any cause therefor," where there are one or more defendants in any indictment or other criminal proceeding, all of the defendants taken collectively and not individually are entitled to challenge peremptorily one juror out of every six that are called for the trial of the cause. State v. Sutton, 10 R. I. 159, 161.

Where principal and agent are joined in an action for fraud, and the principal may be found liable only for the wrongful acts of the agent so that the interests of defendants may be adverse to each other, each defendant is a "party," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1176, entitling each party to six peremptory challenges. Lane v. Fenn, 120 N. Y. Supp. 237, 243, 65 Misc. Rep. 336.

In Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1406, § 48, providing that in all civil actions each party shall be entitled to a challenge of three jurors without showing cause for such challenge, the word "party" includes all persons, plaintiff or defendant, however numerous they may be, and all persons, plaintiff or defendant, are entitled in the aggregate to but three peremptory challenges. Illinois, I. & M. R. Co. v. Freeman, 71 N. E. 444, 446, 210 Ill. 270.

Code, art. 51, § 13, provides that in civil cases the lists of jurors furnished the parties must contain 20 names, and that the "parties" may each strike out 4 names from the lists, and the remaining 12 shall constitute the jury. Held that, where there are two defendants, they are not each entitled to strike four names. Diamond State Telephone Co. v. Blake, 66 Atl. 631, 632, 106 Md. 570.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 2258, giving each party litigant the right to peremptorily challenge three jurors, "parties litigant" means the antagonistic sides of the controversy; and hence, where there were two defendants, they were entitled to only three peremptory challenges, and not to three each. Pendly v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. (Ky.) 92 S. W. 1 (citing and adopting Sodousky v. McGee, 4 J. J. Marsh. [27 Ky.] 267).

Change of venue

Excluding merely nominal parties, all who have appeared in an action and are interested on the same side, though not necessarily on the same side of the record, constitute one "party" as to making application for a change of venue, and must join to satisfy section 2625, St. Crowie v. Strohmeyer, 136 N. W. 956, 977, 150 Wis. 401.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 416, providing that venue shall be changed for certain named causes upon application of "either party," a change of venue may be granted on motion of but one of several defendants. Dill v. Frazee, 79 N. E. 971, 974, 169 Ind. 53 (citing Krutz v. Howard, 70 Ind. 174).

The term "party," as employed in Const. art. 4, § 8, and Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 75, § 102, providing that in all suits or actions at law, on suggestion in writing under oath of either of the parties to the proceedings that such party cannot have a fair and impartial trial, the court shall direct the record to be transmitted to some other court when applied to civil actions, must be taken in a collective and representative sense, and joint defendants cannot remove a cause without the consent of all their codefendants. Baltimore County Com'rs v. United Ry. & Electric Co., 57 Atl. 675, 676, 99 Md. 82.

Conclusiveness of judgment or decree

The term "party," in the sense of one who is concluded by a judgment, includes all those directly interested in the subject-matter, and who had the right to control or defend the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and appeal from the judgment. Allen v. McMannes, 156 Fed. 615, 624.

The term "parties," as used in the statement of the rule that a judgment operates as an estoppel between the parties, includes those who are directly interested in the suit, know of its pendency, and have a right to control and direct or defend it. Courtney v. William Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co., 55 Atl. 614, 616, 97 Md. 499, 99 Am. St. Rep. 456.

"Parties," within the rule making a prior judgment conclusive upon those who sustain that character, are not restricted to those who are parties upon the record; the term including all those having a direct interest in the subject-matter and a right to defend or control the proceedings. Hendrick v. Biggar, 122 N. Y. Supp. 162, 165, 66 Misc. Rep. 576.

"The term 'parties,' as used in connection with the doctrine of res judicata, includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter of the suit and have a right and are given an opportunity to make a defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine the witnesses, and appeal from the judgment or decree in case an appeal lies. Persons not having these rights, substantially, are regarded as strangers to the cause. A mere nominal party, having no control of or interest in the suit, is not bound by the judgment." Perkins v. Goddin, 85 S. W. 936, 940, 111 Mo. App. 429.

"It is a most obvious principle of justice that no man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was a stranger; but the converse of this rule is equally true, that by proceedings to which he was not a stranger he may well be held bound. Under the term 'parties,' in this connection, the law includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and had a right to make defense, or to control the proceedings, and to appeal from the judgment. The right also involves the right to adduce testimony, and to cross-examine the witnesses adduced on the other side. Persons not having these rights are regarded as strangers to the cause." Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 445, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenl. Ev. [16th Ed.] § 523).

While as a general rule judgments and decrees are conclusive only as between the parties and privies to the litigation, the term "parties" includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter and who have a right to make defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and appeal from the judgment. Where a person buying land, relying on an abstract which failed to show a certain lien, upon such lien being asserted, notified the abstract company and the sureties on its bond, and at their request instituted an injunction suit to test the validity of the lien, and gave them every opportunity, and requested them to take charge of the litigation, the judgment was conclusive against them as to the validity of the lien. Goldberg v. Sisseton Loan & Title Co., 123 N. W. 266, 267, 24 S. D. 49, 140 Am. St. Rep. 775.

The term "parties," as understood in the rule that no man ought to be bound by proceedings to which he was a stranger, includes all who are directly interested in the subject-matter and had a right to make a defense or to control the proceedings and to appeal from the judgment. Persons not having these rights are regarded as strangers to the cause, but to give full effect to the principle by which parties are held bound by a judgment, all persons who are represented by the "parties" and claiming under them, or in privity with them, are equally concluded. "Parties" in the larger sense are all persons having right to control proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision if an appeal lies. Only those, therefore, who have enjoyed all these privileges collectively, should be concluded by decision, judgment, or decree. Ottensoser v. Scott, 37 South. 161, 163, 47 Fla. 276, 66 L. R. A. 346, 110 Am. St. Rep. 137, 4 Ann. Cas. 1076 (quoting and adopting Greenl. Ev. [16th Ed.] § 523).

Under Sess. Laws 1881, p. 154, § 22 (Mills' Ann. St. § 2421), providing that no claim of priority to water rights of any person who has failed or refused to offer evidence under any adjudication shall be regarded by any water commissioner in distributing water in times of scarcity until such "party," by application to the court having jurisdiction, shall have obtained leave, and made proof, and secured a decree of the priority of right to which his ditch is entitled, which leave shall be granted in all cases on terms as to notice to other parties and payment of costs, and on affidavits or petitions sworn to showing the right claimed, and section 28, p. 156 (Mills' Ann. St. § 2425), authorizing a review or reargument of a decree entered in statutory proceedings to adjudicate water rights under the act within two years thereafter, at the instance of a "party" thereto one who appears in such proceedings and filed his verified statement of claim, but refuses to offer proof, must apply for a reargument or review within two years, or the decree will become res judicata as to him, notwithstanding section 22. Crippen v. X. Y. Irrigating Ditch Co., 76 Pac. 704, 797, 32 Colo. 447.

"Parties" in the larger legal sense are all persons having a right to control the proceedings, to make defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision if an appeal lies." A manufacturer of an alleged infringing article, who voluntarily assists a purchaser from him in defending a suit for infringement of the patent by the use of such article, but who is not a party to the record, and is not shown to have assumed control of the defense, is not directly interested in the case, and is not concluded as to the validity of the patent by a decree in favor of the complainant, so as to be estopped thereby from setting up new defenses in a subsequent suit against him for its infringement by making and vending the same article. Australian Knitting Co. v. Gormly, 138 Fed. 92, 97 (quoting and adopting definition in Green v. Bogue, 15 Sup. Ct. 975, 985, 158 U. S. 503, 39 L. Ed. 1061).

Enforcement of judgment

The words "the party recovering a judgment," as used in Rev. St. § 916, providing that "the party recovering a judgment in any common-law cause in any Circuit or District Court shall be entitled to similar remedies" on the same as are provided in like causes by the laws of the state in which such court is held, include the government. Allen v. Clark, 126 Fed. 738, 740, 62 C. C. A. 58 (citing Green v. United States, 9 Wall. [78 U. S.] 655, 19 L. Ed. 806; Fink v. O'Neill, 1 Sup. Ct. 325, 106 U. S. 272, 27 L. Ed. 196).

Exception

The right of exception in an action at law is limited by Rev. St. c. 79, § 65, to a party aggrieved, and a subsequent grantee of property attached who appears only to oppose a motion for an order of notice is not a "party" having a right to except if the motion is overruled. Abbott v. Abbott, 75 Atl. 323, 106 Me. 113.

Examination as witness and production of evidence

The relatrix in bastardy is not a party to the action, within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 533, providing that a "party" to an action may be examined before trial. Walker v. State ex rel. Laboyteaux, 86 N. E. 502, 503, 43 Ind. App. 605.

Where an action was brought against a railroad company for alleged violation of the interstate commerce act, the corporation's officers and agents were not "parties," within Rev. St. § 724, authorizing federal courts on notice to require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or papers containing evidence pertinent to the issue. Cassatt v. Mitchell Coal & Coke Co., 150 Fed. 32, 36, 81 C. C. A. 80, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99.

Code 1906, § 1938, providing that, where the testimony of a nonresident "party" shall be desired by the adverse party, interrogatories may be filed and a copy thereof given to the party, and where he fails to answer the interrogatories his plea shall be dismissed, includes corporations; and a foreign corporation, prosecuted by the state for a violation of the anti-trust laws, must answer interrogatories filed by the state. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. State, 53 South. 489, 98 Miss. 159.

Intervener

"Parties" in the larger legal sense are all persons having a right to control proceedings, to make a defense, to adduce and cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal from the decision, if an appeal lies, and does not include mere interveners joining at the foot of the judgment as creditors. Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Tarrytown, W. P. & M. Ry. Co., 123 N. Y. Supp. 954, 956, 139 App. Div. 305.

One by intervening in opposition to the application of a receiver appointed in an action, to make a certain expenditure, and by consenting to the order settling the receiver's account, does not become a "party" to the action, or any other special and collateral proceeding therein other than that in which he intervenes. In re Elliott, 77 Pac. 1109, 1112, 144 Cal. 501, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102.

Code Civ. Proc. § 452, requiring the court to direct "parties" whose presence is necessary for a complete determination of the controversy to be brought in, and to permit persons who have an interest in the subject of the action to intervene on their application, applies to interested persons who are not made parties at the time the action is brought and who ask to intervene, and does not apply where a party dies after suing and his estate seeks to intervene in his place. The section refers to parties who, after their interests were known, were either proper or necessary parties when suit was brought. Callanan v. Keeseville, 95 N. Y. Supp. 513, 515, 48 Misc. 476.

Next friend

While a next friend is not technically speaking a "party" to the suit, he is a party within the contemplation of the statutes, and the practice of courts as to the conduct of the suit. Swoope v. Swoope, 55 South. 418, 420, 173 Ala. 157.

Officer of municipality

B. & C. Comp. § 843, providing that if either "party" request it the judge may exclude from the courtroom any witness of the adverse party not at the time under examination does not authorize the exclusion of a party; but in an action against a municipality its recorder is not a party and may be excluded, especially where no showing is made that he possessed any special information or knowledge concerning the case on trial which would render it necessary that he should remain in the courtroom to protect the interests of the defendant. Trotter v. Town of Stayton, 77 Pac. 395, 396, 45 Or. 301.

Qualification of judge

Const. art. 5, § 11, and statute, providing that no judge shall sit in any cause where either of the parties may be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within the third degree, does not disqualify a judge from trying an action merely because he is the father-in-law of the attorney of plaintiff, who is, under the contract with plaintiff, to receive for his services a specified part of the amount recovered; the word "party" being applied only to the parties to the suit. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Mitcham, 121 S. W. 871, 875, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 134.

Under Const. Ark. 1874, art. 7, § 20, providing that no judge shall try a case in which he may be interested, or where either of the "parties" is related to him, by consanguinity or affinity, within such degree as may be prescribed by law, a judge is disqualified where he is related within the fourth degree, the line fixed by statute, to one peculiarly interested directly in the result of the suit, though not a party to the record, and not necessarily bound by the judgment, and a judge related within such degree to an attorney, whose fee depends substantially, if not wholly upon the determination of a cause, is disqualified. Johnson v. State, 112 S. W. 143, 145, 87 Ark. 45, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 15 Ann. Cas. 531 (Roberts v. Roberts, 41 S. E. 616, 115 Ga. 259, 90 Am. St. Rep. 108; Crook v. Newborg, 27 South. 432, 124 Ala. 479, 82 Am. St. Rep. 190; Howell v. Budd, 27 Pac. 747, 91 Cal. 342; Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 114).

The word "party," as used in the constitutional provision forbidding a judge from sitting in any case where either party was connected with him by affinity or consanguinity, was not used in its technical sense. "The word 'party' there is unquestionably a technical word, and has a precise meaning in legal parlance. By it is understood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether in law or in equity, the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons. They are parties in the writ, and parties on the record; and all others who may be affected by the writ indirectly or consequentially, are persons interested, but not parties." A judge who is the father-in-law of a daughter of an intestate is disqualified from hearing an action by the widow, suing in her capacity as survivor and representative of the community estate on a note executed to the intestate. Duncan v. Herder, 122 S. W. 904, 905, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 542.

Gen. St. 1902, § 496, provides that when there shall be so near a relationship between any judge and any party in any proceeding before him, as between father and son, brothers, uncle or nephew by nature or marriage, etc., he shall be disqualified. Held, that the word "party" does not mean any one who has a pecuniary interest in the result of the suit, and did not include an attorney for one of the parties to the record, and especially was a judge not disqualified by the fact that his brother was one of the entered attorneys for the plaintiffs, where he withdrew his appearance on the day the case was called for trial and took no part therein. Casmento v. Barlow Bros. Co., 76 Atl. 361, 362, 83 Conn. 180.

Where a sheriff is sued in conversion for property levied on, and the plaintiff in the original action has indemnified the sheriff, such plaintiff, without intervention, became a party to the action for conversion, within Rev. Codes, § 6315, authorizing a "party" to disqualify the judge by filing an affidavit of prejudice. Gehlert v. Quinn, 98 Pac. 369, 370, 38 Mont. 1.

Const. art. 5, § 11, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 1129, provide that no judge is qualified to try a case in which any party to the suit is related to him within the third degree. Held, that the word "party" was not limited to those named as parties in the pleadings, but included all persons directly interested in the subject-matter and result of the suit, including a purchaser of property sold at a guardian's sale pursuant to an order of the court. Jirou v. Jirou (Tex.) 136 S. W. 493, 496.

Taking of deposition

B. & C. Comp. § 826, authorizing the taking of the deposition of a "party" to an action before trial, does not authorize the taking of the deposition of the secretary of the defendant corporation where such secretary was not individually a party. Armstrong v. Portland Ry. Co., 97 Pac. 715, 52 Or. 437.

Testimony by or for party

Rev. St. 1898, § 4069, providing that no "party" shall testify to any transaction or communication with a deceased person, where the adverse party claims under deceased, does not preclude an officer of a litigant corporation from testifying. In re Bruendl's Will, 78 N. W. 169, 170, 102 Wis. 45 (citing New Jersey Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Camden Safe-Deposit & Trust Co., 33 Atl. 475, 58 N. J. Law, 196; Ullman v. Brunswick Title Guaranty & Loan Co., 24 S. E. 409, 96 Ga. 625; Bopple v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1096, 18 App. Div. 488).

As used in Laws 1893, p. 1375, permitting testimony of a witness who had died or become insane after a former trial to be read by any "party," the term "party" included a privy, such as a lessee would be to his lessor. Shaw v. New York Elevated R. Co., 79 N. E. 984, 987, 187 N. Y. 186.

Under a statute providing that a party shall not testify where the adverse party is the guardian or trustee of either a deaf mute or an insane person, or of a child of a deceased person, or is an executor or administrator, or claims or defends as heir, grantee, or legatee of a deceased person, the term "party" refers to one who is a party to an action, and not one who may be interested in the result of the litigation, for a party may be also a witness within the statute, but a witness is not a party. Powell v. Powell, 85 N. E. 541, 548, 78 Ohio St. 381.

A person named as executor in a will is not really legally such until the will is proved and he has given bond in a contest as to its execution. He is not within the exception provided by Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, § 83, relating to competency of witnesses, and providing that the provisions of preceding sections shall not apply to cases where at the time of taking the testimony or the time of trial the "party" prosecuting or defending is an executor. McKeen v. Frost, 46 Me. 239, 249.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 6354, providing that "in actions where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue, and on trial, is dead, or is shown to the court to be insane, the other party to such contract or cause of action" shall not testify in his own favor, where a party sued on a contract is insane, another party thereto cannot testify in his own favor, though he be not a party to the action, his incompetency arising from defendant's insanity and not from his own interest, so that in a real estate broker's action for commissions for exchanging land against an insane owner, another broker who acted for the other party to the exchange under an agreement with plaintiff to divide the commissions received from their respective principals, could not testify for plaintiff, though not himself a party to the action; such other broker being a "party" to the contract sued on within the statute. McClure v. Clements, 143 S. W. 82, 83, 161 Mo. App. 23.

The word "party," within Code Civ. Proc. § 320 (Gen. St. § 5914), prohibiting a party from testifying concerning personal transactions and communications with a person since deceased, does not include one not technically a party to the action, however much he may be interested in the result thereof. Hess v. Hartwig, 112 Pac. 99, 100, 83 Kan. 592.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520], provides that, when one of the original parties to a contract or cause of action is dead, the other party to such contract or cause of action shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor, or in favor of any party to the action claiming under him, and that, when an executor or administrator is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor. Held, that the word "party" in the latter clause means "party to such contract or cause of action," as written in the first clause; and hence, where plaintiffs' parents executed a note secured by deed of trust on their homestead to plaintiffs' grandfather, who on the death of plaintiffs' father agreed that, if their mother would convey to plaintiffs her interest in the land, he would transfer the note to plaintiffs, and the mother conveyed the land to plaintiffs, testimony of plaintiffs as to what the grandfather said to them, and as to what he said in their presence concerning the contract, was inadmissible in an action against his administrator to recover the note, since, though the contract was not made with plaintiffs, it was for their benefit, and was accepted by them. Howard v. Hardy, 107 S. W. 466, 467, 128 Mo. App. 349.

Code Civ. Proc. § 322, which prohibits a "party" from testifying in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally with a deceased person, applies only to a party to the suit, and does not exclude the officers of a corporation, which may be a party, or other interested persons not parties to the action. Mendenhall v. School Dist. No. 83 of Jewell County, 90 Pac. 773, 774, 76 Kan. 173.

In an action against an estate for services rendered a decedent in his lifetime, where it appears that plaintiff paid no consideration for the assignment of the claim in suit, and that the assignor is the real party in interest, the court should stay further proceedings until the declaration is amended by the insertion of an averment that the suit is brought for the use and benefit of the assignor, and the assignor is thereby made a "party," within the meaning of P. L. 1900, p. 363, § 4, providing that a party to an action on a claim against the estate of a decedent shall not be permitted to give testimony regarding transactions with or statements by the deceased, so that the assignor will be disqualified as a witness, as intended by the law. Platner v. Ryan, 69 Atl. 1007, 1008, 76 N. J. Law, 239.

Under section 4069, St. 1898, originally, an officer or stockholder of a corporation was not included in the designation "party" nor to be considered as such by reason of the corporation being a party, and therefore not incompetent to testify in an action in which the corporation was a party. Johnson v. Fraternal Reserve Ass'n, 117 N. W. 1019, 1020, 136 Wis. 528.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520), excluding the surviving party to a contract from testifying after the other party's death to transactions had with him, in an action by a corporation on notes, it was improper to allow defendants to testify as to an agreement by the deceased agent of the corporation to cancel the notes; the term "party to a contract," as applied to a contract by a corporation, meaning the person who negotiated the contract, rather than the corporation. Columbia Brewery Co. v. Rohling & Menke, 112 S. W. 767, 768, 133 Mo. App. 65.

A "party or a person interested in an event," within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to competency of witnesses, is one who will gain or lose by the event, because the record might be used as evidence for or against him, and, being interested in the question, is not being interested in the event, and he is not interested within the statute, though he might be liable in an action against him for contribution, unless the judgment itself would be evidence against him in such action. In re Herrington's Estate, 132 N. Y. Supp. 486, 488, 73 Misc. Rep. 182.

Where, in probate of a will revoking former wills, beneficiaries in a prior will became parties on their own application and contested the probate, they were incompetent to testify to personal transactions with decedent; they being interested in the event and "parties to the proceeding" within Code Civ. Proc. § 829. In re Jeffrey's Will, 114 N. Y. Supp. 667, 672, 129 App. Div. 791.

Under a statute providing that no person shall be excluded from being a witness in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as "party" or otherwise the respondent in a bastardy proceeding is a competent witness. Murray v. Joyce, 44 Me. 342, 348.

Verification of pleading

An officer of a domestic corporation is a "party" for the purpose of verifying a pleading, within Code Civ. Proc. § 525, subd. 1, providing for verification by a party, by an officer of a domestic corporation, or by an agent or attorney of a foreign corporation having knowledge of the facts. Henry v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 526, 43 Misc. Rep. 589.

PARTY ACCOUNTING

On a reference for an accounting by defendant under a decree finding infringement of a patent, the defendant is the only "party accounting" within the meaning of equity rule 79, and complainant cannot be required to bring in an account as therein provided. Goss Printing Press Co. v. Scott, 148 Fed. 393, 394.

PARTY COMMITTEE

A "party committee," like other committees, is an individual, or a body, to whom others have committed or delegated a particular duty, or who have taken upon themselves to perform it in the expectation of their act being confirmed by the body they profess to represent or act for. No one is bound by the act of the committee. It depends for its authority wholly upon the ratification or adoption of the body for which it has acted. In re Daniel, 134 N. Y. Supp. 254, 257, 149 App. Div. 777 (concurring opinion).

PARTY FAILING

Where a subcontractor for the construction of a school building sued to enforce a mechanic's lien on the balance of the fund due the contractor and he was induced by both the contractor and the school directors to accept a settlement for a substantial sum, though less than the face of his claim, and on such stipulation dismissed his case, he was not the "party failing," within Code, § 3103, authorizing the court in such an action to assess a reasonable attorney's fee against the party failing in favor of such corporation. Fisher v. Independent School Dist. of Keota, 134 N. W. 545, 546, 154 Iowa, 125.

PARTY IN POSSESSION

Where the bill of lading provided that any water carrier or "party in possession" shall not be liable for any loss or damage resulting from fire, a carrier is not liable for loss of goods by fire, not occurring from its negligence, while on its wharf, before notice to the consignee, even if it were not then a common carrier as to the goods; it being still a "party in possession." Jennings v. Clyde S. S. Co., 133 N. Y. Supp. 298, 302, 148 App. Div. 615; Seacoast Lumber Co. v. Same, 133 N. Y. Supp. 303, 148 App. Div. 622.

PARTY LIABLE

Code Civ. Proc. § 1627, subd. 1, providing that any "party liable" to the plaintiff for a payment of a debt secured by mortgage may be made a defendant, applies to an assignor of a bond and mortgage guaranteeing the collection thereof. Robert v. Kidansky, 97 N. Y. Supp. 913, 916, 111 App. Div. 475.

PARTY NOMINATION

"Party nominations" are made by large masses of people organized as parties, holding caucuses and conventions. In re Smith, 85 N. Y. Supp. 14, 41 Misc. Rep. 501.

Evidence Act March 23, 1900 (P. L. p. 378) § 53, and Act April 11, 1908, amendatory thereof (P. L. p. 277), relating to taxation on the taking of depositions and providing the "party requiring such examination" shall be at expense thereof, apply as well to testimony taken by consent under the fifty-seventh section of the evidence act as to depositions taken under order of court. Hite v. Dell, 73 Atl. 72, 73, 78 N. J. Law, 239.

PARTY TO SUIT OR PROCEEDING

The word "party" may mean "person" or "party to the proceeding." In re Nathanson, 155 Fed. 645, 649.

The term "parties" includes all persons who are directly interested in the subject-matter in issue and who have a right to make a defense, to control the proceedings, or to appeal from the judgment. Strangers to the suit are persons not possessing these rights. Burrell v. United States, 147 Fed. 44, 46, 77 C. C. A. 308.

A "party to an action or suit" is one who is directly interested in the subject-matter in issue, who has a right to make a defense, control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment. Raper v. Dunn, 99 Pac. 889, 890, 53 Or. 203 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5203).

"Parties and privies" include all who are directly interested in the subject-matter, and who have the right to make defense, control the proceedings, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and appeal from the judgment. Rumford Chemical Works v. Hygienic Chemical Co., 148 Fed. 862, 864 (citing Theller v. Hershey, 89 Fed. 575).

The term "party," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1949, providing that, in a suit to try title to an office, judgment may be given on the right of the "party alleged to be entitled to the office," should be construed to mean the "party to the action" alleged to be so entitled. People v. McClellan, 104 N. Y. Supp. 447, 451, 119 App. Div. 416.

The word "party," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4318, providing when affidavit is made by agent or attorney it must set forth why it is not made by the party himself, means party to the suit, whether a natural person or a corporation. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 101 Pac. 850, 852, 19 Okl. 579.

A third party, examined under Code Civ. Proc. § 2241, in proceedings supplementary to execution, is a "party to the proceedings," and entitled to costs under sections 2432 and 2456. Howe v. Stuart, 123 N. Y. Supp. 971, 972, 68 Misc. Rep. 352.

A daughter petitioned for her appointment as guardian for her mother, an alleged incompetent. On the hearing the daughter consented to the denial of the petition so far as it asked that she be appointed guardian. The court appointed a third person. The daughter was not a "party to the action," under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1763, 1764, providing for the appointment of guardians for incompetent persons on the petition of relative or friend, nor an "adverse party," within section 940, requiring notice of appeal to be served on the adverse party, so that on appeal by the incompetent she was not entitled to notice. In re Sullivan, 77 Pac. 153, 154, 143 Cal. 462.

A motion to quash an execution or set aside a sheriff's sale thereunder is in the nature of a new suit or legal controversy, calling for the judgment on rights that have arisen since the final judgment, and it is between a person who files the motion and the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, and each, as to that controversy or new suit, may well be called a "party to a suit," within the meaning of Acts 1891, p. 70, giving an appeal to parties from interlocutory orders, etc. Thomas v. Elliott, 114 S. W. 987, 989, 215 Mo. 598.

Under Rev. St. § 3162, postponing sale of mortgaged premises on judgments of foreclosure to one year from the date of the judgment of sale, but providing that the "parties" may, by stipulation in writing, consent to an earlier sale, the word "parties" must mean "parties to the action." Hiles v. Milwaukee Power & Lighting Co., 55 N. W. 175, 176, 85 Wis. 90.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 14a, providing that judicial sales shall, "unless otherwise agreed upon by the 'parties,'" be advertised in a newspaper, an infant party to proceedings for the sale of real estate of which such infant is part owner may, with the chancellor's approval, consent, through his statutory guardian, to a sale without newspaper advertisement. Heatt v. Schmidt, 84 S. W. 740, 741, 119 Ky. 612.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 333, declares that all applications for certiorari to the county court shall be made to the district court or a judge thereof, and shall state the names and residences of the "parties adversely interested," and set forth the error in the proceedings sought to be reviewed. Held that, where testator's heirs sought certiorari to review an order admitting his will to probate, the executor was the person adversely interested, and a petition stating his name and residence was sufficient. Heaton v. Buhler (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1078.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4211, relating to mechanic's lien, and providing that "the parties to the contract" may be made parties, the expression "parties to the contract" has been held to signify the parties to the particular contract which is the subject of inquiry in the action, and as between whom a personal judgment may be rendered. The original contractor is a necessary party defendant in a suit by a subcontractor to enforce a mechanic's lien; but one acquiring title to premises after a mechanic's lien has attached is not a necessary "party to an action" on the lien, nor is one conveying all his title to the premises after a mechanic's lien has attached a necessary party, but the suit may be brought against the purchaser alone. McLundie & Co. v. Mount, 123 S. W. 966, 968, 145 Mo. App. 660.

The executor or administrator, in actions affecting decedent's personal property in due course of administration, is the proper "party to prosecute or defend," but an exception to that rule permits an heir or legatee to appear in a suit to protect his own rights where there is collusion between parties asserting adverse interests and the legal representative of decedent. Rine v. Rine, 135 N. W. 1051, 1053, 91 Neb. 248.

Where fees of a referee were taxed under a stipulation of the parties before judgment, an order directing payment thereof by defendant pursuant to such stipulation, without any pleadings framed between defendant and the referee, was not a judgment for costs enforceable by execution, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1573, providing that, in a case where costs shall be awarded before or on final disposition of the case, execution shall be issued forthwith, unless otherwise ordered by the "party in whose favor the costs shall be awarded," since such provision applies only to a party litigant. Manewal v. Proctor, 87 S. W. 30, 32, 112 Mo. App. 315.

Rev. St. 1906, § 1230, provides that poundage shall be paid the sheriff on all moneys actually made and paid to him on execution, decree, or sale of real estate (except on writs for the sale of real estate in partition); but when such real estate is bid off and purchased by a "party" entitled to a part of the proceeds, the sheriff shall not be entitled to poundage, except on the amount over and above the claims of such party. Held, that the word "party" is not used in that section in a strictly legal and technical sense, and does not deprive the sheriff of poundage where the purchaser was a party to the action and proceedings in which the decree was taken and the order of sale made. Major v. International Coal Co., 81 N. E. 240, 242, 76 Ohio St. 200.

PARTY WALL

As incumbrance, see Incumber—Incumbrance (On Title).

"The words 'party wall' may mean a wall of which the adjoining owners are tenants in common, and the words 'wall in common' may mean a wall possessed in severalty by such owners. Primarily either term means a wall for the common benefit and convenience of both the tenements which it separates." Lederer & Strauss v. Colonial Inv. Co., 106 N. W. 357, 358, 130 Iowa, 157, 8 Ann. Cas. 317.

A "party wall" is a dividing wall between two houses, to be used as an exterior wall for each house. The term may designate a wall divided longitudinally in two moieties; each moiety being subject to a cross-easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety. Every wall of separation between two buildings is presumed to be a common or party wall, if the contrary be not shown; and this is not only a rule of positive ordinance, but a principle of ancient law. Bellenot v. Laube's Ex'r, 52 S. E. 698, 699, 700, 104 Va. 842.

"The term 'party wall' is said to express a meaning rather popular than legal. It has been defined broadly as a wall between adjoining estates which is used for the common benefit of both, chiefly in supporting the timbers used in the construction of contiguous buildings on such estates. It has been said that, strictly speaking, a party wall is one built or supposed to have been built at the joint expense and upon grounds owned in common, so that each adjoining proprietor has an undivided interest in every part of the wall and in the ground on which it stands." Scott v. Baird, 108 N. W. 737, 739, 145 Mich. 116.

Solid structure

"The term 'party wall' is usually applied to such walls as are built on the land of another for the common benefit of both, in supporting timbers used in the construction of contiguous buildings. And a division wall may become a 'party wall' by agreement, either actual or presumed" (quoting and adopting in the definition in Barry v. Edlavitch, 35 Atl. 171, 84 Md. 111, 33 L. R. A. 294; and Dorsey v. Habersack, 35 Atl. 97, 84 Md. 126). "By usage the words 'party wall' and 'partition wall' have come to mean a solid wall." "A 'party wall' is intended to serve the purpose of a complete division between adjoining houses" and "must ordinarily be construed to mean a solid wall without windows or openings." Coggins & Owens v. Carey, 66 Atl. 673, 678, 106 Md. 204, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191, 124 Am. St. Rep. 468.

Wall entirely on land of one owner

A wall need not necessarily rest equally on adjoining lots to constitute it a "party wall." It may even be wholly on one of the lots, and still be a party wall if so intended by the builder, or subsequently recognized and treated by the owners as a party wall. Mercantile Library Co. v. University of Pennsylvania, 69 Atl. 861, 862, 220 Pa. 328.

A wall erected as a dividing line between two buildings built at the same time for the common benefit and convenience of the adjacent owners, and erected under a contract between the owners, with flues to be used by both, and openings left for the insertion of joists and rafters on both sides, is a "party wall"; but a wall built entirely on the land of one of the owners, and never used by the adjacent owner for any purpose, or a wall not built at joint expense, nor under a contract between the parties, and containing windows in it without openings for joists or rafters, is not a party wall. Kiefer v. Dickson, 84 N. E. 523, 525, 41 Ind. App. 543.

PASS

See Duly Passed; Free Pass; Wagon Pass.

Shipper's pass, see Shipper's Pass—Shipper's Ticket.

Body of water

A defined channel, extending between Padre and Mustang Islands, through which the tide flows and ebbs, leading from the interior end of a strait to Corpus Christi Bay, one of the coast waters of Texas on the Gulf of Mexico, through which channel the Gulf waters flow, is a part of the Corpus Christi "pass," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 529g, as amended by Acts 31st Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 23, prohibiting the taking of fish, except by hook and line, from all waters within one mile on either side of all passes leading from the Texas coast waters into the Gulf of Mexico. Gibson v. Sterrett (Tex.) 144 S. W. 1189, 1191.

Coin or bank note

The plain or ordinary or usual sense of the word "pass," as applied to coin or bank notes, is to deliver in exchange for something else, and is equally expressed by the words "sell," "exchange," or "deliver." State v. Standifer, 108 S. W. 17, 20, 209 Mo. 264 (quoting State v. Watson 65 Mo. 115).

The word "pass," as applied to coin or bank notes, is to deliver in exchange for something else, and is equally expressed by the words "sell," "exchange," or "deliver." Therefore selling, exchanging, or delivering a bank bill or a piece of money is, in common parlance, passing the bill or money. State v. Harroun, 98 S. W. 467, 470, 199 Mo. 519.

Forged instrument

The gravamen of the offense of forgery is not the act of "passing or uttering an alleged forged instrument," but the knowledge that such instrument was forged at the time it was passed. Gaut v. State, 94 S. W. 1034, 1036, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 493.

Loan

A representation by a vendor that a third person had accepted a loan on the premises for a specified amount, while the third person had as a fact declined to "pass" a loan for that amount because of the construction of a wall on the premises, is a material representation as to value and the facility with which the purchaser may complete the purchase by mortgaging the property; the word "pass" being equivalent to "accept." Kreshover v. Berger, 119 N. Y. Supp. 737, 738, 135 App. Div. 27.

Property

As revert, see Revert.

The estate of a wife, a resident, dying intestate, leaving a husband and no descendants, does not "pass" to the husband under the intestate laws, within Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 220, imposing a tax on the transfer of property "passing under intestate laws," but the estate devolves on the husband by operation of law. In re Green's Estate, 129 N. Y. Supp. 54, 144 App. Div. 232; 124 N. Y. Supp. 863, 68 Misc. Rep. 1.

The term "pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state," in the collateral inheritance tax law (Acts 1896, p. 38, No. 46), imposing a tax on all property which shall "pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state," means to pass by virtue of the law governing intestate or testate succession, and, as the succession of debts due to a decedent domiciled within the state from non-residents of the state is governed by the state of the residence of the debtors, the act does not impose a tax on such debts. Miller v. Wilbur, 56 Atl. 280, 281, 76 Vt. 73.

The title, "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to tax intestates' estates, gifts, legacies, devises and collateral inheritance in certain cases," is sufficiently comprehensive to include the subject-matter of section 1, subd. 2, providing that a tax may be imposed when the transfer is by will of property within the state and decedent was a nonresident at death; the word "transfer" being used as synonymous with "passing," "change of title," or "change of possession." Dixon v. Russell, 73 Atl. 51, 53, 78, 78 N. J. Law, 296.

Laws 1909, c. 490, pt. 4, § 1, provides that a succession tax shall be imposed upon all property which shall "pass by will." A will leaving practically all of the property of the testator to her two nephews was contested by a sister of the testator and an heir at law, and the parties therein made an agreement by which the sister was to have one-half of the estate and each of the two nephews was to have one-quarter, which agreement was confirmed by the probate court and a decree entered thereon under Rev. Laws, c. 148, §§ 15-17. Held, that the phrase "pass by will" describes only property that passes by the terms of the will as written, and not as changed by an agreement for compromise, and the amount of the tax was to be determined in accordance with the terms of the will. Baxter v. Stevens, 95 N. E. 854, 856, 209 Mass. 459.

St. 1905, c. 314, authorizing an inheritance tax, provides in sections 1, 2, 7, 9 and 28 that all property which shall pass by will shall be subject to a tax, and provides for the rate of tax and method of collection, and also by section 12 provides that, when any debt shall be proven against the estate after the tax has been paid, etc., a refund of a proportion of the tax shall be made. Code Civ. Proc. § 1465, provides that during the administration the probate court may set apart a homestead for the surviving spouse and minor children. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1466, 1467, provides that the probate court may make a reasonable allowance for maintenance of the family, which shall be paid in preference to all debts, except funeral charges and expenses of administration. Held, that the homestead set apart by the probate court and the allowance as well did not pass under the will, but by the order of the probate court, especially in view of section 12, and hence the words in the taxing act, shall "pass by will," did not cover such property, and a tax on their value was erroneous. In re Kennedy's Estate, 108 Pac. 280, 282, 157 Cal. 517. 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 428.

PASSABLE HIGHWAY

Where a part of a consideration of a deed was an agreement by the grantee to open a "passable highway" for public utility, the width of the highway not being specified, the parties contemplated that the way should be suitable to the particular locality. Vannatta v. Waterhouse, 71 N. E. 159, 160, 33 Ind. App. 516.

PASSAGE

See Continuous Passage; Final Passage; Prior to the Passage.

PASSAGE OF ACT

The word "passed," in the constitutional provision that an act, when passed, shall be presented to the Governor, who may approve or withhold his approval, means passed in the manner prescribed by the Constitution; and, if the Governor does approve, his approval is not conclusive of the validity of the statute. Rash v. Allen (Del.) 76 Atl. 370, 381, 1 Boyce, 444.

As time of becoming a law

Act approved March 26, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 283), changing the time for holding terms of circuit court in the Eleventh judicial district, and requiring the terms in Desha county to be held on the third Monday in January and the fourth Monday in August, and providing that it shall "take effect and be in force ninety days from and after its passage," became effective August 24, 1911, the word "passage" meaning approval of the Governor. Jackson v. State, 142 S. W. 1153, 1154, 101 Ark. 473.

The term "passage of this act," in Act March 15, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 398, c. 173), requiring an action to cancel a tax deed to be brought within three years from the issuance of the deed, provided that the act shall not apply to actions on deeds heretofore issued is they be commenced within one year after the "passage of this act," means the time the act was actually passed by the Legislature and approved by the Governor, and not the time, 90 days after the adjournment of the Legislature, when the act went into effect, there being nothing in the act requiring a resort to technical or secondary meanings of the words to give the act meaning and effect. Cordiner v. Dear, 104 Pac. 780, 55 Wash. 479.

The word "passage," as used in Colorado Act March 14, 1902 (Laws 1902, p. 23, c. 1) § 2, providing that every railroad company shall, within six months after the passage of the act, build and maintain fences on the sides of its roads, etc., means six months after the approval of the act, so that fences built six months after the approval of the act were built within the time required by the act. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Brennaman, 100 Pac. 414, 415, 45 Colo. 264.

As time of taking effect

While an act of the Legislature is passed when it is approved by the Governor, the decisions are uniform in holding that the language "at the time of the passage of the act" means when the act takes effect. Mills v. State Board of Osteopathic Registration and Examination, 98 N. W. 19, 135 Mich. 525, 3 Ann. Cas. 735.

In view of the constitutional provision that no act shall take effect until 90 days after its passage, the expression "after the passage of the act," used in a law not containing an emergency clause, means after the act goes into force. Harding v. People, 15 Pac. 727, 10 Colo. 387, 392.

"The word 'passage' is used in connection with legislation in several senses. The adoption of a measure by either House is spoken of as its 'passage' through that House. The final adoption of a bill by both the House and the Senate is commonly spoken of as its 'passage.' Again, after such adoption by the Legislature, the approval of a bill by a Governor is properly called its 'passage.' Where acts take effect from their 'passage,' the time of approval by the Governor or of final adoption over his veto or of their becoming laws without his signature is in law called the time of their 'passage'; but, where the word is employed in an act which is finally passed at one time to take effect at a later time, it may by reason of a somewhat common usage be taken as referring to the latter date, unless such a construction is contrary to the intention appearing from the whole statute." Scales v. Marshall, 70 S. W. 945, 946, 96 Tex. 140. Article 3201, Rev. St. 1879 (art. 3352, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897), as amended, and approved by the Governor April 1, 1895, removed the disabilities of married women entitled to commence suit for the recovery of real property under the article, but postponed its operation as to them until one year "after the passage of this act." Acts of the Legislature take effect 90 days after the adjournment of the Legislature. Held, that the words "after the passage of this act" meant after the act took effect, and hence a married woman bringing suit March 29, 1901, was not barred by the five-year statute of limitation. Shook v. Laufer (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1042, 1045 (quoting and adopting definition in Scales v. Marshall, 70 S. W. 945, 96 Tex. 140, and citing Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. State, 17 S. W. 72, 81 Tex. 598).

Under Laws 1903, p. 684, c. 445, directing Gove county commissioners at their first regular meeting after the passage of the act to publish a notice for six weeks that they would consider a petition for the establishment of a county high school, the words "passage of the act" must be construed as meaning the time of its taking effect, and a notice published for seven weeks, only five of which were after the date when the act took effect, is insufficient. State v. Bentley, 101 Pac. 1073, 1075, 80 Kan. 227.

"The word 'passageway' cannot be any broader in its signification than 'way' or 'highway,' and can have essentially no different meaning." Hence the reservation of the privilege of a passway, reading "passway" as "passageway," was merely the reservation of a way or right of passage over the ground. Chandler v. Goodridge, 23 Me. 78, 82.

Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 378) § 762, makes the manager of a theater subject to penalty for causing or permitting any person to stand or sit in the aisles and passageways during performances, or for neglecting or refusing to cause such persons to forthwith vacate such aisles or passageways on being notified of their occupancy thereof. Held that, where the only entrance to the main floor of a theater is through a center door, and persons entering such door are compelled to pass behind the rows of seats to gain the aisle on either side of such floor, the space in the rear of the seats between the said aisles is embraced within the term "aisles and passageways" of the charter; and, where the gallery is so arranged that the only way a person can pass from one side to the other, without going down the stairs, crossing on the main floor and ascending the stairs is by passing back of the seats, the space back of the seats is a "passageway" within the charter. Waldo v. Seelig, 126 N. Y. Supp. 798, 800, 70 Misc. Rep. 254.

"A 'passageway,' within the meaning of the statute (Charter, § 762), is that portion of the building through which persons going to or from their seats are accustomed to, and must of necessity, pass." Where a theater has a front and a side entrance, both of which are permitted to be used, and people are permitted to stand in a space necessary for a passageway in the use of the side entrance alone, the manager is liable to the penalty imposed by Laws 1897, pp. 263, 272, c. 378 (Charter, §§ 762, 773), forbidding the manager to cause or permit any person to occupy a "passageway" during a performance. Sturgis v. Hayman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 126, 127 (quoting and adopting definition in Sturgis v. Grau, 79 N. Y. Supp. 843, 39 Misc. Rep. 330).

As structure

See Structure.

PASSBOOK

A "passbook" issued by a savings bank, even when construed in the light of the statute pertaining thereto, is an evidence of the contract between the bank and the depositor, though the statement in the book may be conclusive as between them. Therefore a depositor may assign or transfer his interest in his deposit without the delivery of the "passbook" representing the deposit, and the bank is bound to recognize such an assignment, though the transferee may not have possession of the "passbook." Augsbury v. Shurtliff, 99 N. Y. Supp. 989, 993, 114 App. Div. 626.

PASSED UPON

Under P. S. 1986, which prohibits review of questions of variance not raised and passed upon in the trial court, unless the variance is material and substantially affects the "right of the matter," a question of variance raised in the county court cannot be deemed to have been passed upon within the meaning of the section where the variance did not affect the right of the matter and the proceedings below were pro forma, since in dealing with a variance not affecting the right of the matter the court has a discretionary power which cannot be exercised pro forma. Fitzsimons v. Richardson, Twigg & Co., 84 Atl. 811, 814, 86 Vt. 229.

PASSWAY

See Private Passway.

PASSWAY FOR ALL PURPOSES

The natural and ordinary import of a grant of a passway for all purposes is that a general right of passage for whatever purpose and between whatever termini might best suit the convenience of or be deemed most beneficial to grantee was intended to be created, and there is nothing in it intimating that the way was created for the special purpose of providing a means of ingress and egress to or from grantee's land and from or to the street. Sweeney v. Landers, Frary & Clark, 69 Atl. 566, 567, 80 Conn. 575.

PASSENGER

See Actually Riding as a Passenger; Common Carrier of Passengers; Foot Passenger.

Engaged in becoming a passenger, see Engaged.

The relation of carrier and passenger may exist independent of any contract between the parties for transportation. The test in determining who are "passengers" is whether the person desiring passage in good faith offered himself for the purpose of being carried as a passenger, and that he was as such accepted and received by the carrier, who undertook to transport him. Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., 109 Pac. 458, 470, 37 Utah, 581.

The relation of passenger and carrier begins when one puts himself in the care of the carrier, or directly within its control, with the bona fide intention of becoming a passenger, and is accepted as such by the carrier, and of necessity the existence of the relation is commonly to be implied from the attending circumstances. Strong v. North Chicago St. R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 246, 250.

The fact that a plaintiff claiming that he was a passenger made statements upon cross-examination which tended to show that he was not a passenger does not establish his nonstatus as a passenger where there was ample evidence in the case without such statement to establish that he was in fact a "passenger." Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Lowenrosen, 78 N. E. 813, 222 Ill. 506.

The relation of passenger and carrier begins when one intending to become a passenger enters on the carrier's premises, and continues until the passenger knows of his arrival at the place of destination, and has a reasonable time to alight and leave the premises. Powell v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 70 Atl. 268, 270, 220 Pa. 638, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1019.

Where plaintiff, with certain other excursionists, engaged an ordinary passenger car for transportation to another city and return, with the right to use the car while on the switch, awaiting return, plaintiff was not a passenger in going to the car, for her own accommodation, as it was standing on the switch sometime before it was due to leave on its return trip. Archer v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 85 S. W. 934, 935, 110 Mo. App. 349.

Where a carrier leased motive power, the use of its tracks, and train operatives to a circus company, under a contract exempting the carrier from liability for all injuries, the relation of "passenger and carrier" did not exist between the railroad company and an employé of the circus company, traveling solely by virtue of his employment, who was not a party to such transportation contract, so as to entitle such employé to recover against the railroad company for injuries sustained in a collision between two sections of the circus train. Clough v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., 155 Fed. 81, 84, 85 C. C. A. 1, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

Where a "passenger" on a street car was refused change by the conductor, and, after voluntarily dismounting from the car and awaiting the conductor on his return trip, spoke to him in an office of the street railway company to which he had gone, and was there assaulted by him, the company was not liable for the assault, inasmuch as the relation of passenger and carrier had ceased, and the conductor was not at the time in performance of his duty. Reilly v. New York City Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 319, 321, 46 Misc. Rep. 72.

Where defendant and another street railway company operated cars over two parallel tracks in common, and plaintiff, a passenger on a car of the other company, was injured by alighting on one of the tracks in front of one of defendant's cars, the companies being distinct, defendant was not liable as a common carrier, plaintiff being a traveler upon the street as far as defendant was concerned, and hence it was immaterial whether the other company was negligent in leaving open the gate on its platform next the parallel track, as the negligence of that company could not be imputed to defendant. Foreman v. Norfolk, Portsmouth & Newport News Co., 56 S. E. 805, 806, 106 Va. 770.

One becomes a passenger on a railroad when he puts himself into the care of the company to be transported under a contract, and is received and accepted as such by the company; and, while the relation is commonly to be implied from circumstances, these must be such as to warrant an implication that the one has offered himself to be carried and the other has accepted his offer and received him; and, where the existence of the relation is in controversy, the question is whether the person has presented himself in readiness to be carried under such circumstances in reference to time, place, manner, and condition that the company must be deemed to have accepted him as a passenger. Hogner v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 84 N. E. 464, 465, 198 Mass. 260, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960.

An employé of an express company employed to load and unload express matter into and from railroad cars at a station was not a passenger. Pipér v. Boston & M. R. R., 72 Atl. 1024, 1030, 75 N. H. 228.

One who has not presented himself at the passenger station of a railway company or other place provided for the reception of passengers, and who has done nothing to indicate to the company's agents or employes that he intends becoming a passenger, and has in no way committed himself to the care or control of the company or placed himself in its custody, has not established the reciprocal relation of carrier and "passenger," and cannot be regarded as a passenger being transported, and under protection of the statute of the state. Hicks v. Union Pac. R. Co., 107 N. W. 798, 799, 76 Neb. 496.

Person about to take passage

One who, for the purpose of waiting for a train on which he is to take passage, enters the waiting room, is a passenger. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. v. Green, 71 Atl. 986, 988, 110 Md. 32.

The relation of passenger and carrier begins as soon as one, intending in good faith to become a "passenger," enters the carrier's premises for that purpose, and the carrier's responsibility dates from that time. Riley v. Vallejo Ferry Co., 173 Fed. 331, 333.

"To give rise to the relation of passenger and carrier, there must be not only an intent on the part of the former to avail himself of the facilities of the latter for transportation, but also an express or implied acceptance by the latter of the former as a 'passenger.'" One intending to board a street car, who approached it from the rear, and was in a position where the conductor, in looking out for intending passengers, would not ordinarily have seen her, and who was not seen by the conductor, who did look out towards the rear before giving the signal to start, was not a "passenger." Foster v. Seattle Electric Co., 76 Pac. 995, 998, 35 Wash. 177 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Cyc. p. 538).

"So long as a person merely intends to be carried but has not reached any place provided for passengers or used for their accommodation, he is not a 'passenger.'" Where one intending to become a passenger had not, within a reasonable time prior to the arrival of the train which he intended to take, placed himself on the platform provided for the use of passengers, and where he attempted to cross a track with a view to reaching the platform and was struck by a train, he was not a "passenger." Gregg v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 94 Pac. 913, 915, 49 Wash. 183.

It is not necessary to constitute one a "passenger" that he should have had a ticket, or that he should have been actually upon the train of the defendant. If the jury believe that it was the bona fide intention of plaintiff's intestate, at the time of the accident, to board defendant's train, and that defendant had knowledge of that fact, or that the acts and conduct of deceased and the other facts and circumstances were such as to reasonably inform or notify defendant that he intended to board the train, he was entitled to such care and protection on the part of defendant as is required under the law, where the relation of passenger and carrier exists. MacFeat v. Philadelphia, W. &

B. R. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 898, 906, 5 Pennewill, 52.

Under a rule of the Railroad Commission that at junction points railroad companies shall open their depot waiting room for the accommodation of the traveling public at least 30 minutes before the schedule time of the arrival of all passenger trains, and that at local or nonjunction points such waiting rooms shall likewise be open, provided they shall not be required to be opened nor kept open after 10 o'clock p. m., except after delayed trains due before that hour, in which case the rooms shall be kept open until the actual arrival of the delayed trains, one whose coming to the depot to take a train is not within the limitations of the rule is not a passenger. Smith v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 73 S. E. 523, 526, 10 Ga. App. 227.

One having a mileage book good on a railroad and undertaking to board a train by passing along the platform of a freight house, where he had been to check his trunks by the invitation of the railroad, was a "passenger." Pineus v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 53 S. E. 297, 140 N. C. 450, 111 Am. St. Rep. 856.

One holding a permit to ride on a freight train while on his way to the yards of a company to board a caboose which does not carry passengers except by special permission is not a passenger being transported over the road within Cobbe's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,039, and the duty which the company owes to him is only that of ordinary care. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mann, 111 N. W. 379, 381, 78 Neb. 541.

Ordinarily, when one goes to a railroad's station to take the next train, he becomes in contemplation of law a passenger, whether he has actually bought a ticket or not, provided he goes within a reasonable time before the schedule time for the departure of the train, and, where his arrival is not within such reasonable time, the carrier owes him no duty, save such as it owes to a licensee. Texas Midland R. R. v. Griggs (Tex.) 106 S. W. 411, 412.

Where plaintiff entered the ferry house of a railroad company in Philadelphia, intending to purchase a ferry ticket, having a ticket of defendant, another railroad company, which entitled her to transportation including the ferriage, and was injured in the ferry house while on her way to the ticket office, and used the ferry ticket to pay her fare, and the railroad ticket was afterwards used by her husband, she was not a passenger of defendant railroad company at the time of the injury. Vandegrift v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 60 Atl. 184, 186, 71 N. J. Law, 637.

Same—Going to train with ticket

A person who has purchased a ticket for his transportation and is at the station awaiting arrival of the train is a "passenger," and entitled to protection as such. Keifner v. Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 72 Atl. 253, 254, 223 Pa. 50.

Same—Signaling car to stop

One who in good faith signals, in the recognized manner, an interurban car with a view to board it, which signal is responded to by the motorman by whistling or setting his brake, is a "passenger." Karr v. Milwaukee Light, Heat & Traction Co., 113 N. W. 62, 64, 132 Wis. 662, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1017.

Same—Boarding car

A person in the act of getting upon a street car is a "passenger." Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 151 S. W. 91, 94, 245 Mo. 598.

The law deems the relation of carrier and passenger to exist and treats one as a "passenger" who is properly on the steps, entering the car. Devoy v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 140, 143, 192 Mo. 197 (citing Clark, Street Rys. [2d Ed.] § 3; Schepers v. Union Depot R. Co., 29 S. W. 712, 126 Mo. 665; Barth v. Kansas City El. Ry. Co., 44 S. W. 778, 142 Mo. 535; Booth, Street Ry. Law, § 326).

One who attempts to board a rapidly moving train does not become a passenger, though he may have a ticket for it. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cotter, 103 S. W. 279, 280.

A person becomes a "passenger" on a street car by contract, express or implied. He may become one in attempting to get on a car at a place provided for that purpose, and where people are expected to take passage, though his attempt fails. But a man does not become a passenger by making such an attempt at a place where he is not expected, and when the carmen are ignorant of his presence. The case differs from that of a man who, by license of a defendant, was at a place so usually occupied by persons that the defendant was under the duty of looking out for his welfare. McCarty v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 80 S. W. 7, 8, 105 Mo. App. 596 (citing Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co., 37 N. E. 165, 161 Mass. 298, 24 L. R. A. 521; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 60 N. E. 818, 190 Ill. 478, 54 L. R. A. 827).

The phrase "as a passenger," as used in Pen. Code, § 426, subd. 2, prohibiting persons from getting on any car while in motion for the purpose of obtaining transportation as a passenger, limits the application of the section to obtaining transportation on passenger trains, as those are the only trains on which a person can obtain transportation "as a passenger." East v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 101 N. Y. Supp. 364, 366, 115 App. Div. 683.

Where plaintiff approached an electric car standing at a station, and the motorman, being asked by plaintiff's companion which car would leave first, replied "this one," and plaintiff walked around the front of the car toward the rear of the same and attempted to board it, the relation of carrier and "passenger" arose, though he had no ticket, and the car was not going directly towards his direction. Snipes v. Norfolk & S. R. Co., 56 S. E. 477, 478, 144 N. C. 18 (citing Clark v. Durham Traction Co., 50 S. E. 518, 138 N. C. 77, 107 Am. St. Rep. 526).

There is some conflict in the authorities as to when the relation of carrier and passenger begins with reference to railway depots and grounds; but it cannot be doubted that when a person is on the steps or platform of the car which is open for the reception of passengers, in the act of entering for the purpose of becoming a "passenger," this relation exists. A person occupies the position of a railroad passenger, as respects the railroad company, who, having approached the railroad for that object, undertakes, with its express or implied consent, to travel in the car provided by it for the purpose; and the relation of passenger may thus arise, although the conveyance has not started on its journey. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Cole, 57 S. E. 1026, 1027, 1 Ga. App. 33 (citing Baldwin, American Railroad Law, 300; Hutch. Car. § 565; Chattanooga, R. & O. R. Co. v. Huggins, 15 S. E. 848, 89 Ga. 494).

Where a street car company stops a car equipped for carrying passengers at a place selected by it to receive passengers, a person who, desiring to be transported, boards or attempts to board the car for such purpose, becomes a "passenger," as the stopping of the car at the customary place is an implied invitation to those waiting to take passage. Hall v. Terre Haute Electric Co., 76 N. E. 334, 336, 38 Ind. App. 43.

Same—Transferring from one car to another

"Plaintiff, with his transfer in his pocket, approached the car with two other passengers, and at the time of the injury had one foot upon the steps of the car and his right hand hold of the rod. These facts plainly make him a 'passenger.' * * * The person in transferring from one car to another is still a 'passenger'; the transfer being but a part of the trip for the whole of which the company agrees to convey in safety." Clark v. Durham Traction Co., 50 S. E. 518, 519, 138 N. C. 77, 107 Am. St. Rep. 526 (citing Joyce, Electric Law, § 528; Washington & G. Ry. Co. v. Patterson, 9 App. D. C. 423; North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Kaspers, 85 Ill. App. 316; Keator v. Scranton Traction Co., 43 Atl. 86, 191 Pa. 102, 44 L. R. A. 546, 71 Am. St. Rep. 758).

Person on conveyance

The relation of carrier and passenger arises only from a contract, express or implied. One who gets on the train of one railway company, mistaking it for that of another road, and, discovering his mistake after the cars are in motion, attempts to alight, but, finding while he is on the bottom step that the train is running too fast, changes his mind, and decides to pay his fare to the next station, is not, while thus on the car steps, a "passenger." De Vane v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 60 S. E. 1079, 1080, 4 Ga. App. 136.

A "passenger" is one who enters the vehicle of the carrier with the intention of paying, in money, the usual fare for his transportation, or who is supplied with a ticket or pass entitling him to ride to a given point. Powell v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 129 S. W. 963, 970, 229 Mo. 246.

A "passenger" who purchased a ticket to a certain point, but who on reaching such point decides to go further, need not, in order to preserve his protection as a passenger, alight from the train and then re-enter, nor expressly notify the conductor of his purpose to continue his journey. Anderson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 93 S. W. 394, 399, 196 Mo. 442, 113 Am. St. Rep. 748.

An allegation that plaintiff took passage on a street car at a designated point to be carried to another designated point shows the relation of carrier and "passenger." Indiana Union Traction Co. v. McKinney, 78 N. E. 203, 205, 39 Ind. App. 86.

An arrangement made by a conductor in charge of a train, with respect to the carriage of a person on the train, is binding on the carrier, and confers on such person the rights of a "passenger." St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Fowler (Tex.) 93 S. W. 484, 487.

Same—Employé of carrier

A servant, employed in the power house of a railway company, and furnished with a free pass entitling him to ride upon the cars at any time, and about his own business, is a passenger when riding to and from his place of labor, and not a fellow servant of the motorman in charge of the car. Harris v. City & E. G. R. Co., 70 S. E. 859, 69 W. Va. 65, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 59.

Libellant was employed by the owners of a steamer to go with her from Mobile to Cuba, and there operate a gasoline launch under directions of the master, his pay to start at once, but he was to perform no service until he reached the Cuban port. Held, that he was not a passenger entitled to accommodations as such. The Vueltabajo, 163 Fed. 594, 596.

A railroad flagman, who received as compensation for his services a weekly sum of money and transportation tickets on the railroad to convey him to and from his work, was a passenger while riding home on one of the tickets after his day's work had been fully completed. As a general rule every one on a passenger train of a railroad company, who is there for the purpose of carriage with the consent of the company, is presumptively a "passenger." An employé being carried to and from his working place is not a passenger, but, if he is carried for his own convenience or business, he is a passenger, and if an employé pays a consideration for passage, no matter in what form, he is generally regarded as a passenger. Enos v. Rhode Island Suburban Ry. Co., 67 Atl. 5, 6, 28 R. I. 291, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244 (citing Elliot, Railroads, § 1578; McNulty v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 38 Atl. 524, 525, 182 Pa. 479, 483, 38 L. R. A. 376, 61 Am. St. Rep. 721; O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co., 59 Pa. 239, 98 Am. Dec. 336; Vick v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 267, 47 Am. Rep. 36; 2 Labatt, Master & Servant, § 642e, pp. 1833, 1834; Dickinson v. West End St. Ry. Co., 59 N. E. 60, 177 Mass. 365, 368, 52 L. R. A. 326, 83 Am. St. Rep. 284; Chattanooga Rapid Transit Co. v. Venable, 58 S. W. 861, 105 Tenn. 460, 469, 51 L. R. A. 886; and distinguishing Ionnone v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 44 Atl. 592, 21 R. I. 452, 46 L. R. A. 730, 79 Am. St. Rep. 812; Shannon v. Union R. Co., 68 Atl. 488, 27 R. I. 475).

A ship carpenter employed on a steamer, being taken by a tug to New York after the completion of his work on the steamer, is not a "passenger." The Downer, 171 Fed. 571, 573.

An employé of a stone quarry company who has no connection with the operation of the train while being transported to and from work is a "passenger" of the railroad company over whose track the train is operated by the quarry company with the railroad company's consent. Gregory v. Georgia Granite R. Co., 64 S. E. 686, 688, 132 Ga. 587.

An employé of a street railroad company while riding on a car to his place of work is a "passenger," if he so rides of his own volition and pays his fare in coupons issued to him by the company as a part of his wages. Hebert v. Portland R. Co., 69 Atl. 266, 269, 103 Me. 315, 125 Am. St. Rep. 297, 13 Ann. Cas. 886.

A section hand, riding to work on a freight train, is not a "passenger" within the common meaning of the term, but the railroad owes him the duty of exercising ordinary care for his protection. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Harmon, 109 S. W. 295, 297, 85 Ark. 503.

Plaintiff, having been sent a pass by one of defendant's officers that he might begin a contemplated employment as a bridge carpenter for defendant, boarded one of defendant's trains. After the conductor had first accepted the pass, he asked plaintiff to see it again, and then in the presence of others refused to return it, saying he had orders to take it up, and after demanding that plaintiff pay his fare said: "You s—— of a b——, this pass does not belong to you." Held, that plaintiff was a "passenger" at the time, and that, if he was injured by the conductor's misconduct, the carrier was liable therefor. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hill (Tex.) 103 S. W. 227, 228.

A laborer employed to work on the tracks of a street car company, who travels on the company's car on a laborer's free pass to the place where he is ordered to work, is a "passenger," entitled to the protection of a passenger. Haas v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 90 S. W. 1155, 111 Mo. App. 706.

An employé of a terminal company, killed while riding home on a car operated by the company, after finishing his day's work on a ticket given him for that purpose by the company's foreman in accordance with a custom of the company, was a "passenger," and not a "fellow servant," of employés operating the car, though he did not pay for the ticket, and the ticket was not furnished as a part of the contract of employment. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Romans, 79 N. E. 1068, 1078, 40 Ind. App. 184 (citing Dickinson v. West End St. R. Co., 59 N. E. 60, 177 Mass. 365, 52 L. R. A. 326, 83 Am. St. Rep. 284; Peterson v. Seattle Traction Co., 63 Pac. 539, 65 Pac. 543, 23 Wash. 615, 53 L. R. A. 588; Chattanooga Rapid Trans. Co. v. Venable, 58 S. W. 861, 105 Tenn. 460, 51 L. R. A. 886; Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co., 37 N. E. 770, 162 Mass. 66, 25 L. R. A. 157, 44 Am. St. Rep. 335; Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co., 44 N. E. 611, 166 Mass. 492, 33 L. R. A. 844, 55 Am. St. Rep. 417; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver, 56 S. W. 674, 108 Ky. 392, 50 L. R. A. 381; Williams v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Pac. 991, 18 Utah, 210, 72 Am. St. Rep. 777, and distinguishing McDaniel v. Highland Ave. & B. R. Co., 8 South. 41, 90 Ala. 64).

Men engaged in constructing railroad tracks were taken to and from the place of work in a special car furnished by the company for the mutual accommodation of the men and the company. The men paid no fare. Held, that the men were not "passengers." Kilduff v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 81 N. E. 191, 195 Mass. 307, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873.

An employé of a railroad company traveling on a train pursuant to a direction of the company was entitled to protection as a "passenger." Johnson v. Texas Cent. R. Co., 93 S. W. 433, 434, 42 Tex. 604.

Same—Express messenger

An express messenger, carried in a special car under a contract of the carrier with the express company for transportation of express matter, is a "passenger" for hire. Davis v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 92 S. W. 339, 340, 122 Ky. 528, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458, 121 Am. St. Rep. 481, 12 Ann. Cas. 723.

An express messenger, while riding in a railway car in the performance of the de-ties of his employment, is not a "passenger," nor does the railroad company occupy the relation of common carrier toward him, but of a private carrier only, and there is no public policy which forbids the parties from contracting for its exemption from liability for negligence in the carrying of such messenger; and a contract with the express company by which the messenger, as a condition of his employment, assumes all risk of injury while so riding, and one between the express and railroad companies by which the former agrees to hold the latter indemnified against claims for injuries to its employes, whether arising from negligence or otherwise, are valid and effective to prevent a messenger injured in collision due to the negligence of railroad employes from recovering therefor against the railroad company. Long v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 130 Fed. 870, 873, 65 C. C. A. 354 (citing Blair v. Erie Ry. Co., 66 N. Y. 313, 23 Am. Rep. 55).

The definitions that have been given of the word "passenger" are nearly as numerous as the different occasions that have arisen to state its meaning. There is abundance of authority that an express messenger is a passenger; and, as he is present upon the train in pursuance of an agreement from which the railway company receives a financial benefit, he is essentially a passenger for hire. He is a passenger in the sense that he is neither a mere licensee, a trespasser, nor an employe of the railroad company, but one who, through his employer, the express company, has bargained for the privilege of riding upon the train. He is not a passenger in the sense that his primary object in so doing was to be conveyed from one point to another. Sewell v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 96 Pac. 1007, 1008, 78 Kan. 1 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5218).

Same—Leaving car temporarily

A passenger during his journey may alight from the car without losing his status as a "passenger." Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co., 83 N. E. 31, 32, 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 770.

A "passenger" who alights at an intermediate station on his trip for any purpose consistent with the character of a passenger, with the express or implied consent of the carrier and the knowledge by it that he expects to return and continue his passage on the same train, does not lose his character as a passenger. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Price, 106 S. W. 700, 701, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 210.

A "passenger" on a freight train does not lose his character as a passenger by leaving the train to talk with an acquaintance during the time cars are being switched at a station. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. v. Bennett, 102 S. W. 198, 201, 82 Ark. 393.

A "passenger" on a railway train may alight at an intermediate station from motives of business or curiosity, and does not thereby forfeit his right to that care and precaution required to be exercised by the railway company for his safety as such, and one does not cease to be a "passenger" by so doing. Texas Midland R. R. v. Ellison, 87 S. W. 213, 216, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 172.

Where plaintiff paid his fare from T. to S., which also entitled him to a transfer to B., which the conductor promised him at a certain point, but at the point named, plaintiff did not see the conductor, and at S., where it was necessary for him to change cars, he asked for the transfer, and the conductor requested him to get out of the way of the other passengers, and he got off the car, whereupon a dispute arose over the transfer, and plaintiff was assaulted by the conductor, held, that the relation of passenger and carrier had not terminated. Blomness v. Puget Sound Electric Ry., 92 Pac. 414, 417, 47 Wash. 620, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 763.

Where a passenger on a crowded street car alighted from the front platform at a transfer point to go to the rear platform, where the conductor was standing, to procure a transfer, he did not lose his status as a passenger, defeating recovery from the company for an assault by the motorman and the conductor. Miller v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 960, 961, 124 App. Div. 537 (citing Parsons v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 21 N. E. 145, 113 N. Y. 355, 362, 3 L. R. A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450; Zeccardi v. Yonkers R. Co., 83 N. E. 31, 190 N. Y. 389, 17 L. R. A. [N. S.] 770).

Same—News agent

A news company's agent, who is permitted to ride on trains under a contract between the railroad company and his employer, is not a "passenger." Smallwood v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 64 Atl. 732, 733, 215 Pa. 540, 7 Ann. Cas. 525.

Same—Newsboy

A newsboy, entering a street car for the purpose of selling papers, and without paying fare, is not a "passenger" but a mere licensee or trespasser, and the company owes him no duty, except to use ordinary care for his preservation after discovering his peril, and to refrain from inflicting willful, reckless, and wanton injury. Rosenkovitz v. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore City, 70 Atl. 108, 111, 108 Md. 306.

Where a boy boards a railroad train for the purpose of selling newspapers under a custom which permitted such sale, but did not contemplate continuance on such train while in motion, he does not become a "passenger," in the absence of his declaration of an intention so to do, notwithstanding he may have in his pocket sufficient money with which to pay his fare. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moran, 117 Ill. App. 42, 45.

Same—Palace car employé

One not in the employment of a railroad company, but using its facilities under a contract between the railroad company and his employer, the Pullman Car Company, which simply permits his carriage for and in connection with the business of his employer conducted on the railroad, is not a "passenger," but a fellow servant, under Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), of the trainmen. Lewis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Atl. 821, 822, 220 Pa. 317, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279, 13 Ann. Cas. 1142.

Same—Payment of fare

Where one boards a railroad train without any intention to pay fare for his transportation, he does not become a "passenger." Gates v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co., 102 S. W. 50, 53, 125 Mo. App. 334.

It is not essential to establish the status of a "passenger" to show that fare was either paid or intended to be paid. Wabash R. Co. v. Jellison, 124 Ill. App. 652, 662.

A "passenger" is one who goes upon the train of a railway in good faith, intending to pay fare, and who is able, ready, and willing to do so. Trinity & B. V. R. Co. v. Bradshaw (Tex.) 107 S. W. 618 (citing Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Williams, 42 S. W. 855, 91 Tex. 255).

One who fails to provide himself with a ticket before entering a car, or who fails to tender enough money to pay fare when requested, is not a "passenger" but a trespasser. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cottengim (Ky.) 104 S. W. 280, 281, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 620.

The word "passenger" means one who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with a carrier on the payment of fare or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Adams, 40 South. 385, 386, 146 Ala. 267, 119 Am. St. Rep. 27 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5218, 5219).

The fact that no fare was paid for a child by the person in charge of him upon the train did not deprive him of the character of a "passenger," where he was riding with the knowledge of and without objection by the conductor. Southern Ry. Co. in Kentucky v. Lee (Ky.) 101 S. W. 307, 308, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837.

A small child, riding on a street car in company with his mother, who pays a fare for herself, is a "passenger," although no fare is paid for such child, where there is a general custom on the part of the street railway not to charge fare for the carriage of small children. Ball v. Mobile Light & R.

Co., 39 South. 584, 585, 146 Ala. 309, 119 Am. St. Rep. 82, 9 Ann. Cas. 962.

One who pays a brakeman on a passenger train a sum of money to be carried to a certain point, and is told to ride upon the platform of the baggage car, and get off the train at all stops, and keep out of sight, and who follows such instructions, is not a "passenger." Mendenhall v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 71 Pac. 846, 66 Kan. 438, 61 L. R. A. 120, 97 Am. St. Rep. 380.

One who, under a plea that he had no money, was permitted by the engineer to ride on the back of the engine from which he was jerked off was not a lawful "passenger" without reward, within Civ. Code Cal. § 2096, providing that a carrier of persons without reward must use ordinary diligence for their safety, but was a trespasser, so that defendant's only liability was to prevent injuring him after his peril was discovered. Roberts v. Southern Pac. Co., 150 S. W. 717, 718, 166 Mo. App. 639.

One does not need to have paid his fare, or even to have entered a carrier's car, to become entitled to the rights of a "passenger," but if he has entered the carrier's station with the good faith intent to take passage and ability to pay his fare, he becomes a passenger, and, if he has boarded a car prepared and willing to pay his fare in case he could not obtain a free ride, the fact that he asks for a free ride does not deprive him of his character as a passenger; it being the refusal to pay fare on proper demand or the entry upon a car, with intent not to pay which has such effect. Lugner v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 131 N. W. 342, 344, 146 Wis. 175.

A special contract with a street car company, based on the payment of fare, is not essential to make a person boarding a car stopping at the customary place a "passenger." Hall v. Terre Haute Electric Co., 76 N. E. 334, 336, 38 Ind. App. 43.

A person carried gratuitously by a common carrier is as much a passenger as if he were paying full fare, and, if he is injured by the negligence of the carrier, is entitled to recover therefor. A street railroad company offered the free use of three of its cars to take members of a women's convention for a ride about the city. The offer was accepted, and during the progress of the ride a collision occurred between two of the cars, by which one of the women was injured. The cars were operated by regular employes of the company. Held, that the women were "passengers," and the one injured was entitled to recover on showing that the collision was occasioned by the negligence of the employes in charge of the car; there being no contract relieving the company of risk of personal injury from the negligence of its employes. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal

Co. v. Klentschy, 79 N. E. 908, 909, 167 Ind. 598, 10 Ann. Cas. 869 (citing Russell v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 61 N. E. 678, 157 Ind. 305, 312, 313, 55 L. R. A. 253, 87 Am. St. Rep. 214, and cases cited; 2 Hutch. Carr. [3d Ed.] §§ 1021, 1022; 6 Cyc. 544).

The relation of carrier and passenger is one of contract. There must be an agreement by the carrier and generally a consideration paid by or for the passenger to bring the relation into being. Where plaintiff, upon the invitation of his brother, a switch brakeman, attempted to ride upon a portion of a freight train being switched in railroad yards and was injured, he was neither a "passenger" nor a licensee. Skirvin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 308.

It is competent to show the possession of sufficient money to pay fare as tending to establish the status of the plaintiff as a "passenger." Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Lundahl, 117 Ill. App. 220, 224; Id., 74 N. E. 155, 215 Ill. 289.

A person who obtains free passage on a passenger train from the conductor by means of fraud or misrepresentation, or with knowledge of the want of authority on the part of the conductor to allow such free passage, is not a lawful "passenger" without reward within Civ. Code, § 2096, requiring ordinary care and diligence for his safe carriage, but is a mere trespasser, entitled only to demand that he be not wilfully or recklessly injured. Sessions v. Southern Pac. Co., 114 Pac. 982, 983, 159 Cal. 599.

A "passenger" on an electric car, although carried free, is still a passenger, and the carrier owes him the duty of exercising such skill as is consistent with the situation and the service undertaken and the greatest possible care for his safety, and any negligence by which the passenger is injured is actionable. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Lawson, 143 Fed. 834, 836, 74 C. C. A. 630, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 721, 6 Ann. Cas. 666.

A person riding on a train under an arrangement made by the conductor is a "passenger." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Fowler (Tex.) 93 S. W. 484, 487.

Same—Person carried beyond destination

A "passenger" who fails to alight from the train at the destination to which he purchased a ticket is not a trespasser, and if he remain on the train, which is one on which passengers are entitled to ride, it must be presumed that he intends to pay the proper fare, and, until this presumption is overcome by evidence that he intends to be carried without payment of fare, he is entitled to the protection of a passenger. Forbes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 113 N. W. 477, 478, 135 Iowa, 679.

Same—Person in charge of stock

A person traveling on a freight train on a stock shipper's pass to attend to the live stock being shipped thereon sustains the relation of "passenger" in a restricted sense. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Troyer, 103 N. W. 680, 681, 70 Neb. 293.

A caretaker in charge of a shipment of live stock and riding free according to an established custom was a "passenger." St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Loyd, 150 S. W. 864, 866, 105 Ark. 340.

A "passenger" is one who travels in some public conveyance by virtue of a contract, express or implied, with the carrier, as payment of fare, or that which is accepted as an equivalent therefor. Where an employé accompanies live stock in transit, and his transportation has been included in the price paid by the owner, he is a "passenger" within Act April 4, 1868 (P. L. 58), which relieves a railroad company from liability for injuries received by any person not a passenger, and, being a passenger, he cannot at the same time be an employé or a quasi employé within the provisions of the act. Rowdin v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 57 Atl. 1125, 1126, 208 Pa. 623 (quoting Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256).

One who under contract with a railroad company accompanies a shipment of live stock is not a "passenger," within Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,039, and, in an action for injuries received, the common law, and not the statutory rule of liability, applies. Riley v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 111 N. W. 847, 78 Neb. 748.

A shipper of stock, who by his contract of shipment is entitled to free transportation, but is required to ride in the caboose when the train is in motion, is a "passenger," but must ride in the caboose. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jennings, 75 N. E. 457, 458, 217 Ill. 140.

A person in charge of a car load of cattle and riding under a contract in which it is stipulated that in consideration of a free pass and other valuable considerations the company is exempt from any liability for any injury which such person may sustain while in charge of the cattle is a "passenger for hire." Weaver v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 102 N. W. 1037, 1042, 139 Mich. 590, 5 Ann. Cas. 764.

A person transported on a freight train for the purpose of caring for certain stock while en route, the carrier being thereby relieved from such care, is a "passenger for hire." Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Teeters, 74 N. E. 1014; Id., 77 N. E. 599, 602, 166 Ind. 335, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 425.

A caretaker accompanying a shipment of cattle under a contract with a railroad, based on the same consideration as a contract of shipment, is a "passenger for hire." Sprigg's

Adm'r v. Rutland R. Co., 60 Atl. 143-146, 77 Vt. 847.

A person traveling on a freight train on a shipper's pass, in charge of a car of live stock, is a "passenger." Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mills, 77 N. E. 608, 609, 37 Ind. App. 598; Southern R. Co. v. Roach (Ind.) 77 N. E. 606, 607.

One who, being the agent of the owner of horses, rode on the freight train on which they were shipped, was a "passenger," and did not assume the risk of injury from negligence of the carrier. Southern Ry. Co. v. Roach, 78 N. E. 201, 202, 38 Ind. App. 211.

Same—Policeman

A street railroad carrying a police officer free of charge as required by a municipal ordinance is liable for injuries sustained by him through the negligence of its motorman in charge of the car, though the ordinance is in conflict with Const. art. 2, § 39, and article 12, § 20, prohibiting the granting of passes to officers. Bradburn v. Whatcom County Ry. & Light Co., 88 Pac. 1020, 1022, 45 Wash. 582, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526 (citing Buffalo, etc., R. R. Co. v. O'Hara, 9 Am. & Eng. R. Cases, 317).

Same—Postal clerk

"Whether or not, in a strict sense, the relation of carrier and 'passenger' exists between the railroad company and the postal clerk, courts hold with substantial unanimity that a postal clerk upon a railway train is entitled to the same measure of care as an ordinary passenger for hire. He has as good a right to be upon the train as the ordinary passenger, and his life is just as valuable." Barker v. Chicago, 90 N. E. 1057, 1059, 243 Ill. 482, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058, 134 Am. St. Rep. 382.

A postal clerk, while riding in a mail car in the performance of his duties, is not a "passenger," within an accident policy insuring him against bodily injuries while riding as a passenger in or on any railway passenger car propelled by mechanical power, provided by a common carrier for passenger service, etc. Bogart v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 187 Fed. 851, 852.

Where a beneficiary in an accident policy was a United States railway mail clerk, and was killed while riding in a mail car in the performance of his duties, he was not "actually riding as a passenger in or on any regular passenger conveyance provided by a common carrier," within an accident policy insuring the person named as beneficiary under certain circumstances against loss by accident while actually riding as a passenger in or on any regular passenger conveyance. Wood v. General Acc. Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 160 Fed. 926, 927, 88 C. C. A. 108.

A mail clerk in the employ of the United States government is a "passenger" of the defendant carrier as well while in transit as during the ensuing period, when he, pursuant to a long-continued custom, remained in the yards of the defendant at work in his car. Wabash R. Co. v. Jellison, 124 Ill. App. 662, 660.

A United States railway mail clerk is a "passenger," when on a train in the performance of his duties. Southern Pac. Co. v. Carvin, 144 Fed. 348, 352, 75 C. C. A. 350; Yarrington v. Delaware & H. Co., 143 Fed. 565, 567 (citing Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 15 N. Y. 444, 69 Am. Dec. 623; Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 562, 41 Am. Rep. 75; Gleeson v. Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Porter (Tenn.) 94 S. W. 666, 667; Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., 109 Pac. 458, 467, 37 Utah. 581.

Same—Riding on elevator

Employees using a freight elevator in the employer's building in going to and from their work, instead of the ample stairways provided, are not "passengers." Kappes v. Brown Shoe Co., 90 S. W. 1158, 1160, 116 Mo. App. 154.

Where one engaged in moving the effects of a tenant from a building was, according to custom, riding on a freight elevator, the relation of "passenger and carrier" existed between him and the owner of the building, who was liable for injuries sustained by such person through the negligence of the operatives of the elevator. Orcutt v. Century

Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1064, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929.

A person riding in a passenger elevator in a building on his way to the office of a tenant of the building to ascertain if the tenant required his services was not a "passenger," so as to entitle him to recover for injuries resulting from the falling of the elevator, where prior thereto he had been permanently prohibited from riding in the elevator in consequence of misconduct furnishing reasonable ground for such prohibition. In order to make effectual defendant's prohibition against plaintiff's riding in the former's passenger elevator, it was not necessary to repeat it every time plaintiff came about the building. Ferguson v. Truax, 112 N. W. 513, 514, 132 Wis. 473, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 1092.

Same—Riding on engine

The mere silent acquiescence of the conductor in a person's riding on an engine did not make him a "passenger," and he did not become a passenger on the train merely because he went to the station for that purpose. But where one goes to a railway station at a reasonable time before the departure of a train, for the purpose of travelling thereon, he may be regarded as a passenger in so far as it may relate to an injury received through the negligence or carelessness of the company while in or about the station or attempting to board the train. Radley v. Columbia R. Co., 75 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 332, 1 Ann. Cas. 447.

Where a carrier contracted to carry a cattle shipper's agent upon the train, and the cars, after being loaded by the shipper, were met by a switching crew with a locomotive, which was to take the cars to yards where they were to be put into a train being made up, but there was no caboose attached to the cars during the run to the yards, a servant of the shipper, who had been instructed to accompany the cars, and who rode upon the locomotive, was a "passenger." Southern Ry. Co. v. Cullen, 77 N. E. 470, 471, 221 Ill. 392; Id., 122 Ill. App. 293.

Same—Riding on freight car or train

The fact that one had a private arrangement between a railroad company and himself whereby he could ride on freight trains did not render the road's relation to him other than that of a common carrier. Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 93 S. W. 917, 919, 117 Mo. App. 138.

A contract by a brakeman of a freight train to allow a person to ride on the train in consideration of his rendering assistance in the loading and unloading of freight was outside the scope of the brakeman's authority, not binding the railroad company, and the person so riding was a trespasser. O'Donnell v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 95

S. W. 196, 198, 197 Mo. 110, 114 Am. St. Rep. 753.

Plaintiff was the servant of one who had contracted with a railroad company to erect fences along the right of way; the contract requiring the railroad to transport the contractor's servants. When the road was sufficiently completed, the railroad put on a train, consisting of a water tank car, some freight cars, and a "passenger" coach. When the conductor and crew of such train were preparing to take the locomotive and tank car to a certain place, the contractor requested the conductor to carry plaintiff there on the tank car, and, while riding thereon, plaintiff was injured, owing to the derailment of the train. There was a rule of the company forbidding freight conductors to allow "passengers" on freight cars. Held that under the facts, a contention that the relation of passenger and carrier did not exist between plaintiff and the railroad because of the rule forbidding the carrying of passengers on freight cars was of no merit. Gray v. Columbia Cent. R. Co., 88 Pac. 297, 298, 49 Or. 18.

Same—Riding on hand car

No person can become a "passenger" without the consent, express or implied, of the carrier. To entitle an administratrix to recover for an injury to her intestate, caused by being negligently run over by defendants' train, while he was riding between stations on a hand car at the invitation of the foreman of a section, it must appear that the company was a common carrier of passengers by hand cars. Hoar v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 70 Me. 65, 35 Am. Rep. 299.

Same—Void ticket or pass

One who pays his fare on a street car, and receives a transfer punched as of an earlier hour than it should be and boards another car within the life of the transfer if properly punched, though after it has on its face become void, is a "passenger." Little Rock Ry. & Electric Co. v. Goerner, 95 S. W. 1007, 1009, 80 Ark. 158, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 10 Ann. Cas. 273.

One riding on a ticket procured at a reduced rate by false representations to the effect that she was a student at a certain school is not a "passenger." Fitzmaurice v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 78 N. E. 418, 419, 192 Mass. 159, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1146, 116 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 586.

A "passenger" may become such without a contract, even against the will of the carrier. The carrier has no right to refuse a passenger without sufficient reasons, and such reasons so rarely occur, and are so exceptional, as to vary the general rule too slightly for practical consideration. A person riding on a pass void under a statute, is a passenger. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co., 47 S. E. 765, 767, 135 N. C. 682, 67 L. R. A. 227.

One who entered a train, having a ticket which he believed to be good and to entitle him to ride on the train, was not a trespasser, and was entitled to be treated as a "passenger," until he was notified that his ticket was not good and he refused to pay his fare. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Bunn, 95 S. W. 640, 641, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 503.

Person leaving car or grounds

The law deems the relation of carrier and passenger to exist, and treats one as a "passenger" who is properly on the steps, leaving the car. Devoe v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 140, 143, 192 Mo. 197 (citing Clark, Street Rys. [2d Ed.] § 8; Schepers v. Union Depot R. Co., 29 S. W. 712, 126 Mo. 665; Barth v. Kansas City El. Ry. Co., 44 S. W. 778, 142 Mo. 535; Booth, Street Ry. Law, § 326).

Where a "passenger" has safely alighted from a car at his destination, he ceases to be a passenger. Columbus R. Co. v. Asbell, 66 S. E. 902, 903, 133 Ga. 573.

The relation of passenger and carrier ceases at the end of the journey when the passenger has had a reasonable time and opportunity to leave the premises of the carrier. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McMillion, 129 Ill. App. 27, 37.

The relation of a street car passenger does not end when he leaves the car, but continues until he has reasonable opportunity to leave the carrier's roadway, after the car reaches the place to which he is entitled to be carried. Melton v. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co., 45 South. 151, 153 Ala. 95, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 467.

Where a woman, who had been a "passenger," left the train, and in passing through the depot fell over a cuspidor on the floor and was injured, she had ceased to be a passenger, and the burden was on her to show affirmatively negligence on the part of defendant. Green v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 63 Atl. 603, 214 Pa. 240.

A person injured while attempting to alight from a moving street car was a "passenger" thereon, within the meaning of an accident insurance policy providing for the payment of double insurance if insured was injured while riding as a passenger in any passenger conveyance. King v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 28 S. E. 661, 662, 101 Ga. 64, 65 Am. St. Rep. 288.

Where a person becomes a "passenger," he continues one until he is safely deposited at his point of destination, and until he has left or had reasonable time within which to leave the premises of the carrier, unless the relation of carrier and passenger be sooner terminated by the voluntary act of the passenger. McBride v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 54 S. E. 674, 676, 125 Ga. 515.

Where a carrier has made proper arrangements for the exit by passengers from its station grounds, a passenger must use the ways provided, and where he knowingly fails to do so, and without invitation makes his exit in some other way, he ceases to be a passenger, and becomes at most a mere licensee; and it makes no difference that he goes where others, with the knowledge of the carrier, have gone before him, unless there is some invitation on the part of the carrier, and knowledge of such use does not of itself amount to such invitation. Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 83 N. E. 367, 368, 197 Mass. 88, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633.

A passenger on a railroad train alighted in the night at the town where he resided. The station, the town, and his home were all on the west side of the track, and the doors of the cars, which were vestibuled, were opened on that side. After his train had departed, he was killed by another train on a track to the eastward. Held, that he had ceased to be a "passenger" prior to his death, and the company at that time owed no duty to him as such. Payne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 155 Fed. 73, 76, 83 C. C. A. 589.

Whether a person who has alighted from a standing train at a station, and who is crossing the railway tracks, by a plankway provided by the company for that purpose, after the train from which he has alighted has moved out, is still a "passenger," entitled to so cross without looking or listening, is a question of fact for the jury, where, under the proof, reasonable men may differ as to whether he was proceeding from the station platform to a place of safety within a reasonable time after he had alighted from the train. The relation of "passenger" and carrier, when established, does not terminate until the "passenger" has reached his destination, alighted from the train, and has had reasonable time in which to leave the place where "passengers" are discharged. Atlantic City R. Co. v. Kiefer, 66 Atl. 930, 931, 932, 75 N. J. Law, 54.

When a person on a coach of a railway company pays his fare to a point of destination on its line, he becomes a "passenger," and remains such till the journey for which he has paid has ended, and until a reasonable time, to be determined from all the attendant circumstances, within which he should have left the carrier's premises, has elapsed; and this is true without regard to the object of the passenger's journey or his reason for stopping at the station which is the end of the journey. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Batchler, 83 S. W. 902, 904, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 116.

Where defendant's street car conductor committed an unprovoked assault on plaintiff, an old man, as he was endeavoring to alight, and pushed or threw him from the r, but plaintiff attempted to get his umbrella, which remained on the platform, and the conductor kicked him, plaintiff had not entirely ceased to be a "passenger" at the time he was kicked, and the company was liable therefor. Flynn v. St. Louis Transit Co., 87 S. W. 560, 562, 113 Mo. App. 185.

The rule is that the relation of passenger and carrier, when established, does not terminate until the passenger has reached his destination, alighted from the train, and had a reasonable time in which to leave the place where passengers are discharged. A traveler on a railroad train ceases to be a "passenger" when, after alighting from his train upon the railroad platform, he has passed from that platform and off the railroad property to a public highway on which he intends to cross the tracks. Garrett v. Atlantic City & S. R. Co., 74 Atl. 273, 274, 79 N. Law, 127.

PASSENGER BEING TRANSPORTED

From the time a passenger places himself under the charge of the carrier as he begins his journey until he is afforded the opportunity to leave the premises of the carrier at its termination, he is a "passenger being transported," unless by some act not attributable to the carrier the relation ceases. remont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Hagblad, 101 S. W. 1033, 1037, 106 N. W. 1041, 1042, 72 Neb. 773, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 9 Ann. Cas. 986.

One who has not presented himself at any place provided by a railway company for the reception of passengers, and who has not indicated to the company's employés that he intends to become a passenger, and has not committed himself to the care or control of the company, cannot be regarded as a "passenger being transported" and under protection of the statutes of the state. Hicks v. Union Pac. R. Co., 107 N. W. 798, 799, 76 Neb. 496.

PASSENGER CAR

PASSENGER DEPOT

See, also, Depot.

In Act March 9, 1889, § 1, providing that every corporation, company, or person operating a railroad within the state shall place at each passenger depot of such company, located at any station in this state at which there is a telegraph office, a blackboard on which such company or person shall post the act whether each scheduled passenger train is on time or not, by the words "passenger depot" was not meant merely a station house built for the accommodation of passengers, but the grounds prepared and used as depot grounds for the benefit of persons traveling on the particular railroad, and used by the company at such point in operating it as a common carrier of passengers. State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co., 32 N. E. 817, 818, 133 Ind. 69, 18 L. R. A. 502.

Under Code Miss. 1892, § 3549, providing that it shall be unlawful to back a train of cars into or along a "passenger depot" at a greater rate of speed than three miles an hour, and that a train backed along such depot within 50 feet thereof shall, for 300 feet before it comes opposite such depot, be preceded by a servant of the railroad company on foot, not exceeding 40 or under 20 feet in advance, to give warning, and that, for every injury inflicted by a railroad company while violating such section, full damages may be recovered without regard to contributory negligence, the term "passenger depot" must be limited so as to include only the whole of the building, a part of which is used in connection with the passenger service. King v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 114 Fed. 855, 862, 52 C. C. A. 489.

PASSENGER FROM A FOREIGN PORT

An unmarried woman, a native of Porto Rico, who was an inhabitant of that island at the time of its cession to the United States by the treaty with Spain, is not, on her arrival at the port of New York from Porto Rico, a "passenger from a foreign port," but is a passenger from territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. Gonzales v. Williams, 24 Sup. Ct. 177, 181, 192 U. S. 1, 48 L. Ed. 317.

PASSENGER OR FREIGHT AGENT

In a statute providing that summons may be served on a railroad company's "passenger or freight agent" stationed at or nearest to the county seat of the county where suit is brought, the term "passenger or freight agent" refers to a person in the service of defendant and stationed by it at some point. Hence, in an action against the last of several connecting carriers by a shipper for negligence in transporting goods, service on the agent of the first carrier is insufficient. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. S. D. Chestnut & Bro., 72 S. W. 351, 353, 115 Ky. 43.

PASSENGER PAYING FARE

A person is a "passenger paying one single fare," within Laws 1892, p. 1406, c. 676, § 104, requiring street railways to give a transfer to each passenger paying one single fare, though his fare was paid not by himself but by another for him. McLaughlin v. New York City Ry. Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 653, 658, 106 App. Div. 1.

A wife, whose husband had paid her fare on defendant's street car, was a "passenger paying one single fare," as used in Laws 1892, p. 1406, c. 676, requiring street car companies on demand and without extra charge to give to each "passenger paying one single fare" a transfer, and making the refusal thereof grounds for the recovery of a forfeiture of $50. Carpenter v. New York City Ry. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 600, 601.

PASSENGER TICKET

As contract, see Contract.

As property, see Property.

PASSENGER TRAIN

See Regular Passenger Train.

The expressions "passenger train" and "freight train" have a well-defined meaning, and the carrying of passengers in a caboose, attached to a freight train does not change the freight train into a "passenger train." Southern Ry. in Kentucky v. Commonwealth, 110 S. W. 372, 373, 129 Ky. 87.

A railroad train composed of an engine and tender, two or more freight cars, combined baggage, mail and passenger car, and a passenger coach, is a "passenger train" within Laws 1907, p. 180, requiring railroad carriers to run at least one passenger train over its road each way every day. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 1175, 219 Mo. 156.

PASSENGERS AND FREIGHT

PASSION

See Heat of Passion; Sudden Heat and Passion; Sudden Passion.

"In common use among the people in the everyday affairs of life, the words 'anger' and 'passion' are interchangeable and mean practically the same thing." Morris v. Territory, 99 Pac. 760, 768, 1 Okl. Cr. 617.

The word "passion," as applied to a jury's action, means anger, resentment, heat, absence of reflection, disregard of the rights of others, and kindred motives. Murphy v. Southern Pac. Co., 101 Pac. 322, 327, 31 Nev. 120, 21 Ann. Cas. 502.

Passion is the state of mind when it is powerfully acted on and influenced by something external to itself; the state of any particular faculty, which, under such conditions, becomes extremely sensitive or uncontrollably excited. The term "passion," as used to describe an essential element of the defense of manslaughter, includes both anger and terror. Hocker v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 676, 681.

PASSION OR PREJUDICE

The words "passion or prejudice," within Comp. Laws, § 3290, authorizing a new trial for excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice, mean anger, resentment, heat, absence of reflection, disregard of the rights of others, and kindred motives. Murphy v. Southern Pac. Co., 101 Pac. 322, 324, 327, 31 Nev. 120, 21 Ann. Cas. 502.

A finding that a verdict for $28,750 for personal injuries was excessive by $28,750 is a finding as a matter of law that the verdict was the result of "passion or prejudice," within Code, § 217, subd. 5, authorizing a new trial for excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice, and defendant has the absolute right to a new trial and the court may not enter judgment for $10,000 on the mere consent of plaintiff to accept it. Tunnel Mining & Leasing Co. v. Cooper, 115 Pac. 901, 903, 50 Colo. 390, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 504.

PASSIVE TRUST

See, also, Active Trust.

A will leaving property in trust to the widow, to be used by her until the testator's youngest child should become 21 years old, when it should be divided between the widow and the children equally, created a "passive trust," which transmitted no title to the trustee, but devolved it directly upon those entitled to the ultimate beneficial estate, under Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 570, c. 547, § 73), providing that disposition of land shall be made directly to the person in whom the right to possession and profits is intended to be vested, and that, if made to a person in trust for another, no interest, legal or equitable, vests in the trustee. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 80 N. E. 676, 677, 188 N. Y. 124.

An "active," and not a "passive," trust is created by a deed of trust to sell and re-invest, and to pay to the grantor the income and such part of the principal as the trustee may deem proper, and after her death the principal over to her issue or such persons as she may designate by her will. Newton v. Jay, 95 N. Y. Supp. 413, 418, 107 App. Div. 457.

A grantee in a quitclaim deed who executed an instrument that in the purchase of an undivided part of the real estate he had used the means of and had acted for the benefit of persons named, and that he held an undivided one-sixth of the premises in trust for one of such persons, thereby created a "passive trust" within Comp. Laws, §§ 8829, 8831, abolishing passive trusts, and the title passed at once to the beneficiary, who could compel the execution of a quitclaim deed of his interest. Rothschild v. Dickinson, 134 N. W. 1035, 1037, 169 Mich. 200.

PASSPORT

A "passport" from a foreign government to its citizen is merely written permission from the government to travel, and does not affect his status in the United States, in the absence of treaty provision, and hence is no defense to proceedings to deport him. United States v. Redfern, 180 Fed. 506, 508.

"It [a 'passport'] is a document which from its nature and object, is addressed to foreign powers, purporting only to be a request that the bearer of it may pass safely and freely, and is to be considered rather in the character of a political document, by which the bearer is recognized, in foreign countries, as an American citizen, and which, by usage and the law of nations, is received as evidence of the fact. But this is a very different light from that in which it is to be viewed in a court of justice, where the inquiry is as to the fact of citizenship. It is a mere ex parte certificate; and if founded upon any evidence produced to the secretary of state, establishing the fact of citizenship, that evidence, if of a character admissible in a court of justice, ought to be produced upon the trial as higher and better evidence of the act." Urtetiqui v. D'Arcy, 9 Pet. 692, 699, 9 A. Ed. 276.

PAST AND CLEAR.

Where a schooner, which had left Norfolk and was beating down the channel against a head wind, when she was overtaken and passed by a tug and tows, which left Norfolk later, was on the starboard tack, moving toward Old Point Comfort and away from the tug and tows, the latter were "finally past and clear," within the meaning of article 24, of the Inland Navigation Rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 Stat. 101, and when the schooner came about on the port tack, heading toward the tug and tows, and being more than two points abaft their beam, an entirely new risk of collision arose, as to which she was the overtaking vessel, and bound under such rule to keep out of the way, while the tug and tows were required by article 21 to keep their course and speed. The Mary E. Morse, 179 Fed. 945, 947.

PAST CONSIDERATION

A "past consideration" is one which has served its purpose in a former transaction, and it is not sufficient to support a contract of guaranty; and, where such a contract is created subsequently to the main contract, it must be supported by a new consideration. Musgrove v. D. E. Luther Pub. Co., 63 S. E. 52, 54, 5 Ga. App. 279 (citing Hargroves v. Cook, 15 Ga. 321; Green v. Thornton, 49 N. C. 230; 20 Cyc. p. 1417).

PASTE

Manufactures of, see Manufactures—Manufactured Articles.

Congress in its tariff legislation having distinguished between glass and the form of glass known as paste, articles in chief value of paste, cut, are not within the provision of Schedule B, par. 100, § 1, in Tariff Act, for goods in chief value of cut "glass," but are dutiable as manufacturers of "paste," under paragraph 112. United States v. New York Merchandise Co., 167 Fed. 684.

So-called rhinestones, articles composed of metal and paste, the latter being the more valuable component, which are merely used to decorate and ornament women's outer apparel, are dutiable as manufactures of "paste," not specially provided for, under the Tariff Act. B. Blumenthal & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 254; Id., 144 Fed. 384, 385, 75 C. C. A. 322.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 112, 30 Stat. 158, for manufactures of "paste," includes only the form of paste which is a variety of glass, and does not embrace articles made from rice paste. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 160 Fed. 279, 280, 94 C. C. A. 555.

"Paste cameos," in imitation of shell cameos, which imitate certain descriptions of precious stones, are dutiable as imitation precious stones, under paragraph 485, Schedule N, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 192. United States v. Goldberg, 139 Fed. 706, 707.

It is now a well-settled rule of law in this state that, if the defects in the appliances are "patent" (that is to say, such as the servants would have discovered if ordinarily observant in using them), he becomes chargeable with knowledge of their defective condition; and, if injured thereby, cannot recover of the master. Pohlmann v. American Car & Foundry Co., 100 S. W. 544, 546, 123 Mo. App. 219 (quoting and adopting definition in Marshall v. Kansas City Hay Press Co., 69 Mo. App. 260).

Where complainant sold pills that were not patented under the name "Beecham's Patent Pills," the word "patent" was employed in a mere proprietary sense, to indicate that the pills were made according to Beecham's secret formula, and not necessarily that they were manufactured under letters patent, and hence did not constitute such a misrepresentation as to preclude plaintiff from relief in equity against the infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, "Beecham's Pills." Beecham v. Jacobs, 159 Fed. 129, 130, 86 C. C. A. 623.

"Patents" granted under the laws of the United States pursuant to Const. art. 1, § 8, are grants made in consideration of discoveries which "promote the progress of science and useful arts," and are to be construed liberally so as to effect their real intent. Bossert Electric Const. Co. v. Pratt Chuck Co., 179 Fed. 385, 387, 108 C. C. A. 45.

A "patent" has been defined as that which brings out from the realm of mind something which never existed before, and gives it to the country. In this sense patented articles cannot be the subject of monopoly, since monopoly restrains trade or commerce in articles, which before were the subjects of trade or commerce. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 142 Fed. 531, 537.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 4886, providing that any person who has invented any new and useful art, machine, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, etc., may obtain a patent therefor, books and the right to sell books are not "patents" or patent rights, and a note given for books and for the right to sell the same need not comply with Kirby's Dig. §§ 513, 514, requiring the note given for a patent or patent right to be in certain form, with certain statements to be shown on the face thereof. Hogg v. Thurman, 117 S. W. 1070, 1072, 90 Ark. 93, 17 Ann. Cas. 383.

The word "patents," as used in a conveyance by a corporation of all its property, including its good will, "patents," trademarks, etc., including every patent which was assignable by the assignor, and such conveyance was effective as an assignment of a patent then owned by the corporation, although not described there. Delaware Seamless Tube Co. v. Shelby Steel Tube Co., 160 Fed. 928, 929, 88 C. C. A. 110.

As a contract

A "patent" is a contract, and it must be interpreted by the same rules of construction as other contracts. Century Electric Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 350, 354, 112 C. C. A. 8.

A "patent" is a contract made by the acceptance by the government of the proposition made by the inventor in his application. O. H. Jewell Filter Co. v. Jackson, 140 Fed. 340, 343, 72 C. C. A. 304.

A "patent" is a contract, and the rules for the construction of contracts generally control in its interpretation; and when its terms are plain, and the intention of the parties clearly manifest therefrom, they must prevail; but if its expressions are ambiguous, or its validity or any claim is doubtful, that construction will be given which will sustain rather than destroy the patent. Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey, 160 Fed. 793, 799, 95 C. C. A. 259.

As a monopoly

A "patent" secures the exclusive right to make, the exclusive right to use, and the exclusive right to vend the invention it protects. Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594, 596, 64 C. C. A. 162.

A "patent" is a grant of a right to exclude all others from making, using, or selling the invention covered by it. United States v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 172, 190.

A "patent" is a monopoly created by law, and gives the right to exclude all others from making, using, and selling the invention or articles made in accordance therewith. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Bakewell, 123 S. W. 561, 566, 224 Mo. 203.

The monopoly authorized by a "patent" is a substantial property right conferred by law as an inducement or stimulus to useful invention and discovery, and it rests with the owner what part of this property he will transfer to others and upon what terms he will make the transfer. National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 128 Fed. 733, 735, 64 C. C. A. 594.

See, also, Royal Title.

The expression "patent," used in Act of March 3, 1891, § 8, requiring suits to annul patents to be brought within six years after issuance, means a grant of land from the government. United States v. La Roque, 198 Fed. 645, 648, 117 C. C. A. 349.

The patent of a lode claim confirms the original location, with the right of exclusive possession, and conveys title to the tract covered by the location, together with all veins, lodes, and ledges which have their apex therein; whereas the patent to a placer claim, while confirming the original location and conveying title to the placer ground, does not necessarily convey the title to all veins, lodes, and ledges within its area. A patent of a placer claim will not convey the title to a known vein or lode within its area, unless that vein or lode is specifically applied and paid for. Clipper Min. Co. v. El Min. & Land Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 632, 635, 191 U. S. 220, 48 L. Ed. 944.

Indian Treaty June 9, 1855, 12 Stat. 945 constituted a cession of the Umatilla Indian reservation to the United States, and authorized the President to provide a permanent home for such Indians in his discretion. Act March 3, 1885, c. 319, 23 Stat. 340, provided or the allotment of lands in such reservation to Indians in severalty according to the size of the families, etc. The act provided for the issuance of patents for the allotments, but that the legal title should be held in trust by the United States for the allottee and his heirs for 25 years in fee, provided that the law of alienation and descent in force in the state of Oregon should apply after the issuance of patents. Held, that the word "allot" is not a term of sale or grant, but of apportionment of that to which the parties are entitled as of right, and the word "patents" is merely designed to denote a paper or writing improperly called a "patent," showing that at a particular time in the future, unless it was extended by the President, he (the Indian) would be entitled to a regular patent conveying the fee. Parr v. United States, 153 Fed. 462, 468.

The word "patents," in General Allotment Act (Act Feb. 8, 1887), as amended, authorizing the issuance of "patents" for lands allotted to Indians, conditioned that the United States will hold the land for 25 years in trust for the use of the allottee or his heirs, provided that the law of descent and partition in force in the state or territory where the land is situated shall apply thereunto after patents have been executed and delivered, etc., imports only instruments in writing designed to show that for 25 years the United States will hold the land allotted in trust for the use of the allottee, or, in case of his death, of his heirs, and subsequently, at the expiration of that period, convey the fee in discharge of the trust, and the United States retains the legal title, giving the Indian allottee a writing showing that at a particular time in the future he will be entitled to a regular patent conveying the fee, and the proviso adopting the laws of descent of the state is merely to provide a rule by which the heirs shall be determined. United States v. Belin, 182 Fed. 161, 165 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Rickert, 23 Sup. Ct. 478, 188 U. S. 432, 47 L. Ed. 532).

As a deed, grant, or conveyance

A "patent" for public land is the government deed for the premises. Jordan v. Smith, 73 Pac. 308, 310, 12 Okl. 703.

A "patent" is only another name for a land grant. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 830, 57 W. Va. 447.

A "patent" is a conveyance by which the government, state or federal, conveys its lands. Williams v. White Castle Lumber & Shingle Co., 38 South. 414, 415, 114 La. 448.

A "patent" is the instrument by which the fee-simple title to a mining claim is granted. Creede & C. C. Min. & Mill. Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Min. & Transp. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 266, 271, 186 U. S. 337, 49 L. Ed. 501.

A "patent" is a government deed for premises, and a homesteader is not entitled to his deed on mere final proof. A homestead claimant may make final and, on the face of it, satisfactory proof of occupancy and compliance with the land laws, and still not be entitled to the government deed, since he may abandon the claim, or fail to pay for it, or sell his right. Hamilton v. Foster, 82 Pac. 821, 822, 16 Okl. 220.

As evidence of title

In the legislation of Congress, a "patent" has a double operation. It is a conveyance by the government when the government has any interest to convey, but, where it is issued upon the confirmation of a claim of a pre-existing title, it is documentary evidence having the dignity of a record of the existence of that title, or of such equities representing the claim as justify its recognition and confirmation. The instrument is not the less efficacious as evidence of a previously existing right because it also embodies words of release or transfer from the government. In such a case, while the courts cannot go back to the original grant for the purpose of passing upon its validity, yet they may do so merely to ascertain whether it purported to convey absolute title to the land, as a means of ascertaining the full scope of the adjudication by Congress. Catron v. Laughlin, 72 Pac. 26, 31, 11 N. M. 604 (quoting and adopting definition in Langdeau v. Hanes, 21 Wall. 521, 22 L. Ed. 606, and citing Glasgow v. Baker, 9 Sup. Ct. 154, 125 U. S. 560, 32 L. Ed. 513).

As a judgment

A "patent" to land is the judgment of the Land Department and the conveyance of the title in execution of it to the party adjudged entitled, and, when the land described was within the jurisdiction and subject to the disposition of the Land Department, it is impervious to collateral attack. Neff v. United States, 165 Fed. 273, 277, 91 C. C. A. 241.

A "patent" to land, of the disposition of which the department has jurisdiction, is both the judgment of that tribunal and a conveyance of the legal title to the land. Le Marchel v. Teegarden, 133 Fed. 828, 827; Id., 152 Fed. 662, 665 (citing James v. Germania Iron Co., 107 Fed. 597, 46 C. C. A. 476; United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 67 Fed. 948, 955, 15 C. C. A. 96, 103).

PATENT AMBIGUITY

A "patent ambiguity" in an instrument is an uncertainty that arises at once on a reading of it. Wolff Truck Frame Co. v. American Steel Foundries, 195 Fed. 940, 944, 115 C. C. A. 628 (citing definition in Strong v. Waters, 50 N. Y. Supp. 257, 27 App. Div. 299).

A "patent ambiguity" is one produced by the uncertainty, contradictoriness, or deficiency of the language of an instrument, so that no discovery of facts or proof of declarations can restore the doubtful sense without adding ideas which the words used do not sustain. Teague v. Sowder, 114 S. W. 484, 488, 121 Tenn. 132.

The "patent ambiguity" of a written contract which cannot be explained by parol is that which remains uncertain after the court has received evidence of the surrounding circumstances throwing light on the intent of the parties, and where the court, after placing itself in the situation of the parties at the time of executing the instrument, and with full understanding of the words, cannot ascertain the intent of the parties from the language of the instrument, it cannot be sustained by the introduction of evidence adding new terms. Shannon Copper Co. v. Potter, 108 Pac. 486, 488, 18 Ariz. 245.

Ambiguities in a will are "patent," where the uncertainty arises upon the words of the will, and before any attempt is made to apply them to the object which they describe. Jennings v. Talbert, 58 S. E. 420, 421, 77 S. C. 454.

The phrase "for value received," as used in a note, is a "patent ambiguity," and the actual consideration of the note may be shown by parol. J. P. Byrd & Co. v. Marietta Fertilizer Co., 56 S. E. 86, 87, 127 Ga. 30 (citing Brewer v. Grogan, 42 S. E. 525, 116 Ga. 60; Boynton v. Twitty, 53 Ga. 214; Pitts v. Allen, 72 Ga. 69).

Testator gave his residuary estate to his sister J. and to his nephew S. "and his sister, my niece, all residing in" L., Germany. By codicil he recited that his sister J. was dead, and gave her share to "the other two residuary legatees therein named, S., and to his sister, my niece, whose name is K. and whose residence is S., Germany, share and share alike." S. had an only sister, who, at the time of the making of the will and codicil, was a resident of L., and the testator had a niece, the married daughter of another sister, whose name was K., and whose residence was S. Held, that the will presented a latent ambiguity within Civ. Code, § 1340, permitting extrinsic evidence to correct imperfect descriptions in wills, etc., and not a "patent ambiguity" within section 1318, requiring the court to ascertain the intention of a testator from the words of his will and the circumstances under which it was made. In re Dominici's Estate, 90 Pac. 448, 450, 151 Cal. 181.

PATENT CERTIFICATE

The term "patent certificate" seems to have been intended to refer solely to certificates issued after confirmation of the grant to the state by the general government. Hibben v. Malone, 109 S. W. 1008, 1009, 85 Ark. 584 (citing Hempstead v. Underhill, 20 Ark. 337; Act Jan. 20, 1855 [Laws 1855, p. 202]).

PATENT DANGER

The fact that an employé of a mine knows that water percolated through the roof of a chamber does not necessarily show the condition of the mine was a "patent danger," or that he knew the place was unsafe. Bird v. Utica Gold Min. Co., 84 Pac. 256, 257, 2 Cal. App. 674.

PATENT MEDICINES

"Patent medicines," within a statute making it an offense to practice medicine without having secured a certificate from the state board of medical examiners, but providing that it shall not prevent the advertising and sale of patent and proprietary medicine, means medicines which some person or company, other than a person indicted for prescribing certain medicines without a license, manufactured, advertised, and sold. State v. Kendig, 110 N. W. 463, 465, 133 Iowa. 164.

"A conveyance of an interest in the right to sell a patented article in a given territory is as much a sale of a 'patent right' as a conveyance of the entire right to sell in the territory. No distinction can be made between the transactions in this regard." John Woods & Sons v. Carl, 87 S. W. 621, 622, 73 Ark. 328.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 4886, providing that any person who has invented any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, etc., may obtain a patent therefor, books and the right to sell books are not patents or "patent rights," and a note given for books and for the right to sell the same need not comply with Kirby's Dig. §§ 513, 514, requiring the note given for a patent or "patent right" to be in certain form, with certain statements to be shown on the face thereof. Hogg v. Thurman, 117 S. W. 1070, 1072, 90 Ark. 93, 17 Ann. Cas. 383.

A bankrupt's incorporeal interest in an alleged invention pending application for a patent does not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541. § 70a, cl. 2, 30 Stat. 566, declaring that the bankrupt's interest in patents, "patent rights," etc., shall be vested in the trustee by operation by law as of the date he was adjudged a bankrupt, since the words "interest in patents, patent rights," etc., should be construed as referring to rights acquired under a patent to a third party. In re Dann, 129 Fed. 495, 496.

Literally the "sale of a patent right" is the sale of the interest of the patentee, or one of the letters patent, and is consummated generally by a transfer of the letters patent. It is universally recognized, however, that a sale of the rights conferred by letters patent within a certain territory is a sale of the patent right, and, where the owner sells the right to use and to manufacture for sale and use during only a portion of the life of the patent and for a prescribed territory, it is a sale of a patent right. Nyhart v. Kumbach, 90 Pac. 796, 797, 76 Kan. 154.

PATENTED

Approval of an application for a patent is not the equivalent of a patent granted and issued within a contract for the sale of an interest in a patent granted and issued; the term "patented" meaning the actual issuance of a patent by the government. Spicer v. Hurley, 118 Pac. 249, 251, 161 Cal. 1.

PATENTED ARTICLE

An unpatented lock-bar joint pipe, made in this country only by patented machinery, is not a "patented article," within Greater New York Charter, Laws 1901, p. 642, c. 466, § 1554, prohibiting the purchase of patented articles without opportunity for competition. Holly v. City of New York, 112 N. Y. Supp. 797, 798, 128 App. Div. 499.

PATENTING

The word "patenting," as used in Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887 (24 Stat. 389) § 6, providing that on the completion of allotments to lands to Indians, "and the patenting of the lands to said allottees," each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state or territory in which they may reside, means the preliminary patent that is issued as soon as the allotment is made. United States v. Kiya, 126 Fed. 879, 881.

PATHS AND ROADS, THE USE OF

Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, provides that the right of eminent domain may be exercised to obtain land for toll roads, by-roads, plank and turnpike roads, paths and roads, either on the surface, elevated, or depressed, for the use of bicycles, tricycles, vehicles, steam, electric, and horse railroads, etc. Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 7, gives to a railway company power to purchase lands, etc., to be used in the construction and maintenance of its road, and other necessary appendages and adjuncts, or acquire them by condemnation. Held, that the words "paths and roads for the use of" merely qualified the words "bicycles, tricycles, motor cycles and other horseless vehicles," and not the phrase "steam, electric and horse railroads," so that a railroad's power to condemn land was not limited to its right of way, but extended to land adjacent to its station grounds required for a freight house, under the rule that, while a statute conferring the power of eminent domain should be strictly construed and not extended by implication, it must be applied to effectuate the legislative intent. Central Pac. Ry. Co. v. Feldman, 92 Pac. 849, 850, 152 Cal. 303.

PATIENT

Where a physician is called to treat a patient against his will, the latter becomes a patient by operation of law, and any information which is acquired by the physician in order to enable him to act is acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, and is privileged. Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 70 N. E. 111, 112, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

A statute giving the superintendent of an insane asylum authority to discharge a "patient" refers only to one who has been committed to the asylum and has remained there (except in case of a temporary absence, as on parole) for care and treatment. Aldrich v. Barton, 95 Pac. 900, 904, 153 Cal. 488.

PATRIARCHAL MARRIAGE

The term "patriarchal marriage," as used in the provision of the Constitution prohibiting any one from voting or holding office "who is a bigamist or polygamist, or is living in what is known as 'patriarchal or celestial marriage,'" is used in the sense of bigamous or polygamous marriage, while the term as used by the Mormon church signifies a marriage solemnized by the church and binding throughout the life to come. Under the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, marriages celebrated and solemnized by mere civil authority and with only the sanction of the law are regarded as marriages for time only, while a marriage solemnized by a duly constituted church authority or "by the holy and eternal priesthood of the Saints" is designated a "celestial or patriarchal marriage," binding not only during this life but throughout the life to come. As used in Const. Idaho, art. 6, § 3, disqualifying as voters, jurors, or officers, among others, one who is a bigamist, polygamist, or living in what is known as patriarchal or celestial marriage, the words "bigamous," "polygamous," "plural," "celestial," and "patriarchal" marriages were meant, and it was intended to prohibit and forbid any man having more than one wife at one time under whatever name or designation he might choose to style his marriage; and the use of each of these words was directed against bigamous and polygamous marriages. The "celestial" or "patriarchal" marriage, in order to come within the prohibition of the Constitution, must be "bigamous" or "polygamous." One who teaches or practices having more than one wife at any one time or belonging to an organization teaching such doctrine is disqualified for the duties of an elector, and consequently for holding any civil office within the laws of the state, but it is not intended by the Constitution to interfere with the religious beliefs and opinions of any one. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 26, 35, 38, 14 Idaho, 621.

PATROL

PATROL LIMITS

"The term 'patrol limits' does not appear in the Minneapolis charter, but it is there provided that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold within certain limits. It was assumed during the argument, and by the trial court, that in Minneapolis 'patrol limits' meant that territory within which saloons are licensed, and which for that reason requires special patrol by the police. Not being defined by any law, its meaning depends upon usage, and, so far as we are informed, the meaning above suggested is limited to the city of Minneapolis. In the city of St. Paul the charter confers upon the city council authority to establish "patrol limits" within the city, and to prevent, suppress, and prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within such limits, and prescribes certain territory within which no liquors shall be sold, and also provides that no liquors shall be sold within 200 feet of the boundary limit so established, while the charter of the city of Duluth is silent upon the subject of 'patrol limits.' It follows that, at the time of the passage of this act, 'patrol limits' meant one thing in Minneapolis, as generally understood by its citizens, viz., that district within which liquors were sold and which required special alertness on behalf of the police, whereas in St. Paul it meant directly the opposite and referred to that district within which no licenses were permitted, and as to Duluth it had, and could have, no application whatever." State v. Schrapa, 106 N. W. 106, 107, 97 Minn. 62.

PATROLMAN

Sess. Laws 1907, c. 186 (Rev. Codes, §§ 3304-3317), providing for the organizing of the police departments of cities upon a civil service basis, refers to persons serving on the police force as "members" or "officers" of the police force or department. An ordinance enacted thereunder creating the police department of a city mentioned certain officers by a special title, and classified all other members as "policemen" or "patrolmen." and provided that the number of "policemen or patrolmen" should be reduced, etc. Held, that as a "patrolman" is defined as a member of the police force of a town or city who patrols a certain beat, and a "policeman" as one of the ordinary police force, whose duty it is to patrol a certain beat for the protection of property, lives, etc., and also, in its generic sense, was applicable to any member of the police force whatever his rank. The terms as used in the ordinance were synonymous, so that one appointed under the ordinance under the designation of "patrolman" was a policeman, and hence not a purely municipal officer. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 106 Pac. 695, 697, 40 Mont. 287, 50 Ann. Cas. 239.

PATRONS

In any year the "patrons" of a school within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 6417, providing for relocation of schoolhouses on petition by the patrons, are the legal patrons living in the district who were enumerated in that year, or who have made satisfactory proof that they were actually the parents or guardians or custodians of children of school age living in the district, though not enumerated. Persons who were living in a school district in July and August, and had children of school age whom they intended to send to school in the district the following winter, were "patrons" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 6417, which provides for relocation of schoolhouses on petition by patrons. Willan v. Richardson (Ind.) 98 N. E. 1094, 1095.

PATTERN

PATTERNS FOR MACHINERY

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 616, 30 Stat. 199, for "models of inventions and of other improvements in the arts, including 'patterns' for machinery," is not limited to the class of patterns known as "model patterns," intended to show the working of the thing illustrated, but includes also molders' patterns, which are used as models about which to form sand molds in which castings may be made and which may be made and which are fitted for successive use in that way. R. Hoe & Co. v. United States, 141 Fed. 488, 489; United States v. R. Hoe & Co., 147 Fed. 201, 203, 77 C. C. A. 427. The Standard Dictionary, while giving a general definition of the word "patterns" to be "an original or model proposed for imitation, something used or worthy to be used as a copy," specially describes the word so as to expressly include what are known as "iron moulders' patterns," namely, as a "model," usually of wood or iron, and often in several parts to facilitate removal, about which to form a sand mould, in which a casting may be made. United States v. R. Hoe & Co., 147 Fed. 201, 203, 77 C. C. A. 427.

PAUPER

See Support as Pauper.

See, also, Poor; Poor Person; Public Charge.

Indigent pensioner

Confederate soldiers, referred to in the expression "indigent pensioners," as used in Acts 1909, p. 173, § 2, providing for the payment of fees to, ordinaries for services to indigent pensioners from the county treasury, cannot be classed as paupers, within the meaning of that term as employed in statutes relating to the county poor. Clark v. Walton, 73 S. E. 392, 393, 137 Ga. 277.

Insane person

The statute with reference to the support of insane persons at an insane asylum provides that: "An insane person shall be held to be a 'pauper' if unable to pay six months board in advance or if married, but unable to pay said board besides providing for others naturally dependent, or if a minor the parent of said persons are unable to pay board besides supporting others naturally dependent on them." Holburn v. Pfannmiller's Adm'r, 71 S. W. 940, 941, 114 Ky. 831.

Person receiving public aid

The word "pauper" is used to designate those persons whose support imposes a burden on the public treasury. One may be ever so destitute of estate or ability to earn a livelihood, and yet not be a pauper. He may be cared for by the voluntary action of friends or relatives. The duty to care for him may be, by law, cast on relatives, and he becomes a member of the pauper class only when, the other means of support failing, he becomes a public charge. Weeks v. Mansfield, 80 Atl. 784, 786, 84 Conn. 544.

Construction of gutters, curbing, catch-basins, and sewer connections

"Pave" is a word, the meaning of which, like most any other, will depend on where, and the connection in which, it may be used. In a resolution of intention to pave certain streets, it would include the construction of gutters, catch-basins, and sewer connections, so that an ordinance enacted pursuant to the resolution would include such work. Muff v. Cameron, 114 S. W. 1125, 1126, 134 Mo. App. 607.

Rev. St. 1889, § 1592, as amended by Laws 1893, p. 107, authorizing cities of the fourth class to cause streets "to be graded, constructed, reconstructed, paved," etc., authorizes a city of the class to issue special tax bills to pay for the cost of curbing, especially in view of the provision in the section authorizing the issuance of tax bills for special assessments for "paving, macadamizing and curbing," for the terms "constructed" and "paved" refer to the entire pavement of the street and include curbing, which is a necessary part thereof. City of Excelsior Springs v. Ettenson, 96 S. W. 701, 705, 120 Mo. App. 215; Same v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co. (Mo.) 96 S. W. 707.

The charter of Mobile, providing that a street railway company should pay the cost of "paving" between the rails of its tracks and 18 inches on either side, could not include underground drainage or sewerage. After citing cases holding that the words "pave" or "pavement" included curbs and gutters, cross streets and crosswalks, such cases are distinguished because the issue was between respective cities and property owners over paving the entire street. The court says: "We do not pretend to hold in this case that paving does not include curbing and certain kinds of drainage, or that the railroad would not be liable for the preparation of the foundation for the reception of the pavement, or for such curbing as might be deemed necessary for drainage, and which has been placed within that territory between its rails of within 18 inches on either side thereof. But we cannot conceive of any liability on the part of this company, under the terms of the statute, for any cost that may have been incurred by the city of Mobile for curbing or drainage beyond the confines of the railroad's territory." City of Mobile v. Mobile Light & R. Co., 38 South. 127, 129, 141 Ala. 442 (citing Williams v. Mayor, etc., of City of Detroit, 2 Mich. 577; Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa, 31; Booth, Street Railways, 240).

An improvement district known as a paving district was organized under a petition and ordinance to pave a street from curb to curb. Kirby's Dig. § 5667, relating to the formation of municipal districts, provides that the petition of the property owners shall designate the nature of the improvement to be undertaken; and section 5672 provides for an improvement board to be appointed by the municipal council which shall form plans for the improvements within their district as prayed by the petition. Held, that the improvement board has a discretionary power as to the construction of the improvement, although the nature of the undertaking is fixed by the petition, and, where it did not appear that the cost was excessive or that surface drainage was practical, the improvement board could provide for storm sewers to carry off the surface waters; the word to "pave" being generally understood to include the power to macadamize streets or cover them with a hard surface, so as to make them convenient for travel, and to provide for their proper drainage. Board of Improvement of Paving Dist. No. 7 of City of Ft. Smith v. Brun, 150 S. W. 154, 156, 105 Ark. 65.

The word "paving," in Code, § 792, giving to cities power to improve any street by grading, parking, curbing, paving, and guttering, and to assess the cost on abutting property, subject to the limitation of a maximum assessment, includes both curbing and guttering when a city undertakes to pave a street not already curbed and guttered; and, where a city curbs, gutters, and paves a street as a part of one improvement, it may not treat the work as independent items, and make them the subject of separate contracts and assessments, though in the outlying parts of a city it may curb or gutter unpaved streets, and thereafter pave the streets when demanded by the growth of the city and increase of traffic. Bailey v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 138 N. W. 853, 856.

Macadamizing

The term "pave," in its generic sense, means to place some substance on the street so as to form an artificial roadway or wearing surface, which shall change the natural condition of the street. The word is much more comprehensive than the term "macadamize," but it embraces all that the term "macadamize" covers. Ross v. Gates, 81 S. W. 1107, 1109, 183 Mo. 338.

Repaving

Under Milwaukee City Charter, c. 7, § 6, authorizing the board of public works, in conjunction with the council to pave a street without a petition of property owners, the word "paving" applies to a second pavement as well as to a first, and hence ordering of a repavement without a petition was authorized. Loewenbach v. City of Milwaukee, 119 N. W. 888, 889, 139 Wis. 49.

PAVING FUND

Code, § 894, authorizes any city to levy an "improvement fund tax" to pay for street improvements. Section 830 provides for payment of street improvements out of the "city improvement fund." Held, that both statutes refer to the same fund, and contracts for paving which provide for payment of difference between amount due for paving and amount raised by special assessments out of the "paving fund" and "general paving fund" refer to the fund specified in the statutes. Corey v. City of Ft. Dodge, 111 N. W. 6, 7, 133 Iowa, 666.

PAWN

A "pawn" is a pledge to a pawnbroker or person who keeps a shop for the purchase or sale of goods and takes goods by way of security for money advanced thereon. Levison v. Boas, 88 Pac. 825, 150 Cal. 185, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661.

PAWNBROKER

The word "pawnbroker" has been variously defined as any person whose business or occupation is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, ware, or merchandise or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for payment of money loaned thereon. One who makes a business of loaning money for interest and receives personal property in security for the payment of the same. Or, again, a pawn is a pledge to a pawnbroker or person who keeps a shop for the purchase or sale of goods and takes goods by way of security for money advanced thereon. Under Pen. Code, § 338, declaring that every person who carries on the business of a pawnbroker, by receiving goods in pledge for loans at a greater rate of interest than 10 per cent per annum, except by authority of a license, is guilty of a misdemeanor, one is a pawnbroker who carries on the business of receiving goods in pledge for loans, exacting interest for the loans. One is no less a pawnbroker because making loans on pledges of no other kinds of goods than jewelry and diamonds. Levison v. Boas, 88 Pac. 825, 150 Cal. 185, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661 (citing And. Law Dict. p. 759; Rapalje & Lawrence Dict. p. 940).

Under a statute providing for the licensing of persons "to carry on the business" of "pawnbroking," there may be one or more acts of receiving articles on pawn without engaging in the business, or there may be the occupation of pawnbroking without the completion of an actual contract of pawnbroking. Commonwealth v. Schwartz, 83 N. E. 326, 327, 197 Mass. 107.

PAY

See Absolute Refusal to Pay; Covenant to Pay; Current Yearly Pay; Day's Pay; Personally Pay; Promise to Pay.

"The word 'pay' is defined as meaning 'to satisfy'; to discharge one's obligation to; to make due return to; to compensate; to remunerate; to deliver the amount or value to the person to whom it is owing." Starr v. Board of Com'rs of Delaware County, 78 N. E. 1025, 1026, 79 N. E. 390, 40 Ind. App. 7.

"To 'pay' is defined by lexicographers, to discharge a debt; to deliver a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods to his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged." La Montagne v. Bank of New York, 88 N. Y. Supp. 21, 31, 94 App. Div. 219 (citing Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 86 N. Y. 523).

"To pay" is defined as: "To deliver that which is or is regarded as the equivalent or compensation to, as to an employe or a creditor for services or goods; to remunerate; to recompense; to give as pay;" "to requite; remunerate; reward, as to pay workmen or servants." So where it is shown that six members of a fire department of a city were paid annual or monthly salaries, and all other members of the department were paid in accordance with the ordinance of the city, $1 for the first hour and 50 cents per hour for all subsequent time in the daytime and 75 cents in the nighttime, for the time spent in actual attendance at fires, such department was a paid department, within the meaning of a statute relating to distribution of certain funds. Continental Hose Co. No. 1 v. City of Fargo, 114 N. W. 834, 836, 17 N. D. 5 (citing Century and Standard Dictionaries).

To "pay" means primarily to transfer or deliver money or other agreed medium from the debtor to the creditor, and while the word "payment" is often used merely to signify satisfaction or discharge of an obligation by any means, as by setting off some other or the like, that is a secondary and somewhat loose use of the term; "payment" of course, works satisfaction of an obligation; but the two are not equivalents, for satisfaction and discharge may be accomplished without payment. Onelda County v. Tibbetts, 102 N. W. 897, 899, 125 Wis. 9.

The way to discharge a tax being to "pay" it, the property owner, who once pays taxes on his property in good faith, is thereby discharged from further liability for taxes thereon for the year for which the taxes paid were assessed. Nyce v. Schmoll, 82 N. E. 539, 540, 40 Ind. App. 555.

The various expressions that the payor must "pay," or "furnish," or "advance" the consideration, used interchangeably in defining a resulting trust, all imply that the payor does something, and that he has the intention, in so doing, to acquire at least an equitable interest in the land. Merrill v. Hussey, 64 Atl. 819, 821, 101 Me. 439.

Where a charterer of a vessel was to "pay for lighterage" between Astoria and Portland, the port of discharge, it was not his duty to furnish or provide the lighterage, but only to pay for it. A bill of lading for a cargo of coal, providing for its carriage to a port of delivery, and there delivered, consignee "to tow vessel in and out of Back Bay free," did not bind the consignee to pay for the towage, but only to provide the same, so that after the vessel arrived in port, and notified the consignee, the duty and risk of the towage was upon him. Thompson v. Winslow, 128 Fed. 73, 77 (citing and adopting Barrett v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., 22 Fed. 452; Smith v. Lee, 66 Fed. 344, 13 C. C. A. 506; The Somers N. Smith, 120 Fed. 570).

The difference between a contract of indemnity and a contract to pay a legal liability of another is that on the contract of indemnity an action cannot be brought and a recovery had until the liability is discharged; while upon the other the cause of action is complete when the liability attaches. Poe v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 84 Atl. 476, 479, 118 Md. 347.

Conversion into personalty implied

The term "pay over" is used generally with reference to money, and not as equivalent to a conveyance or transfer of real property; thus, where a will required trustees to "pay over" a portion of the trust fund to certain grandchildren, it contemplated a sale of the property contained in the fund and a delivery of the proceeds in money to the beneficiaries. Burnham v. White, 102 N. Y. Supp. 717, 719, 117 App. Div. 515.

The phrase "pay over," as used in a will providing that, on the death of the life tenant, the executors should "pay over" his portion of the estate to the children of said life tenant, does not necessitate the conversion of the estate into money by the trustees, but is equivalent to the expression "should go to such children." Bascom v. Weed, 105 N. Y. Supp. 459, 464, 465, 53 Misc. Rep. 496.

Payment in money

The word "pay," as used in the provision of the interstate commerce act, which authorizes the interstate commerce commission to order a carrier to pay damages on account of an unreasonable freight rate collected, should not be interpreted in the narrow sense of a money transaction. It is equally a payment, within the contemplation of this provision, to be relieved from an obligation which the law imposes; and an order to remit the excess above a reasonable charge which the commission has fixed is in substance and effect an order for the recovery of damages. Arkansas Fertilizer Co. v. United States, 193 Fed. 667, 673.

PAY ALL MY JUST DEBTS

"In any case, the testator may direct that the mortgage debt be paid, or use such words as clearly show such intent. Some stress is laid upon the direction in the first clause of the will to 'pay all my just debts'; but in this case we attach little importance to the words used in the formal manner in which they are used. They are much like the formal, meaningless terms of endearment and pious phrases printed in the formal part of blanks for making wills." In re Porter's Estates, 72 Pac. 173, 174, 138 Cal. 618.

PAY CHECK

The terms "pay check" and "money order" mean practically the same thing. Barnes v. State, 35 South. 227, 228, 46 Fla. 96.

PAY DIRT

The term "pay dirt," as used in a placer mining lease, requiring the lessees to remove all "pay dirt as low as 2 cents per pan," held properly construed by the court in the light of all the surrounding circumstances and conditions pertaining to the working of the claim as not meaning all dirt in the mine averaging two cents per pan, but all such that it would pay to mine by the use of minerlike methods. Belsea v. Tindall, 190 Fed. 440, 449, 111 C. C. A. 244.

PAY PROPER

"Pay proper," as used in Acts Cong. May 26, 1900, c. 586, and March 2, 1901, c. 803, mean the regular, ordinary pay which an army officer may be entitled to under the facts in his case, and if, by virtue of length of service, he is entitled to receive the compensation provided for in Rev. St. § 1262, that compensation is his "pay" or his "pay proper," as distinguished from other probable compensation by any allowance or commutations, or otherwise. The "pay proper" on which the percentage of increased pay to an officer serving in the Philippine Islands is to be computed, under acts of May 26, 1900, and March 2, 1901, includes the longevity pay to which he is entitled, under Rev. St. § 1262, as well as the minimum pay prescribed by section 1261, for his grade. Irwin v. United States, 38 Ct. Cl. 87; United States v. Mills, 25 Sup. Ct. 434, 436, 197 U. S. 223, 49 L. Ed. 732.

PAY THE PURCHASE MONEY INTO COURT

The phrase "pay the purchase money into court," in an order requiring the purchaser to pay into court either the whole amount of his purchase money or such sum as would indemnify the mortgagee for the failure to complete the purchase, is synonymous with the phrase "complete his purchase." State Bank v. Wilchinsky, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1005, 128 App. Div. 485.

PAY ROLL

PAYABLE

See Demand Payable; Not Be Payable; Now Due and Payable.
Otherwise payable, see Otherwise.

Ordinarily, the words "due," "owing," and "payable" are conclusions of law, denial of which raises no issue. Irwin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 116 Pac. 294, 295, 16 Cal. App. 143.

The word "payable" is defined as that which may, can, or should be paid; suitable to be paid; that may be discharged or settled by delivery of value; matured; now due. A direction in a check to the drawee bank that it is payable through another named bank means that it is to be paid in that way. Farmers' Bank of Nashville v. Johnson, King & Co., 68 S. E. 85, 88, 134 Ga. 486, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 697, 137 Am. St. Rep. 242.

By the terms of a mortgage, the mortgagor covenanted to pay the taxes within 40 days after they became due. If he made default, the mortgagee might pay the same, and in that case the sum so paid became a further lien on the premises and payable forthwith with interest. If the principal, interest or taxes were not paid "when the same become payable," and remained unpaid for 30 days, then the option was given the mortgagee to declare the whole sum due. Held, that the expression "when the same become payable," as it related to taxes, meant when payable to the mortgagee as provided in the mortgage; that is, forthwith, after payment by the mortgagee as authorized by the mortgage, and not when payable to the tax collector. Union Trust Co. v. Grant, 111 N. W. 1039, 1040, 148 Mich. 501.

PAYABLE AS IT ACCRUES

In an action on eight notes, due on or before the 5th day of March of eight successive years, said notes being due in monthly installments, and each note and installment thereof bearing interest at 8 per cent per annum, "said interest payable as it accrues" the words "payable as it accrues," mean "annually"; that is 8 per cent. interest per annum. O'Shields v. Poff (Tex.) 144 S. W. 1044, 1045.

PAYABLE AT BANK

The words "payable at bank," in a note bearing date at Providence, mean that the note is to be payable at Providence, though the holder may know that the maker resided elsewhere. Hazard v. Spencer, 23 Atl. 729, 731, 17 R. I. 561.

PAYABLE AT A DETERMINABLE FUTURE TIME

A note, containing a stipulation whereby the sureties, guarantors, indorsers, and makers waive notice of the granting of any extension of time for payment and waive the right of defense on the ground that extension has been made without notice to them or either of them, is not a negotiable promissory note, within the Negotiable Instrument Law (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 380) § 1, subd. 3, requiring that an instrument, to be negotiable, must be payable on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, and section 4 declaring that an instrument is "payable at a determinable future time" which is payable at a fixed rate period after date or sight, or on or before a fixed or determinable future time specified therein, or on or at a fixed period after the occurrence of a specified event certain to happen, and that an instrument payable upon a contingency is not negotiable. Union Stockyards Nat. Bank of South Omaha v. Bolan, 93 Pac. 508, 510, 14 Idaho, 87, 125 Am. St. Rep. 146.

PAYABLE AT THE RATE OF $50 A MONTH

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1864, providing that, when different constructions of a provision of a contract are otherwise equally proper, that is to be taken which is most favorable to the party in whose favor the provision is made, the concluding clause of a note for $1,000 in form a one-day note, providing for interest on the full amount thereof at 1 per cent. per annum till paid, that it was "payable at the rate of $50 a month," is to be construed, in favor of the payee, as not controlling the entire instrument, and so not limiting the payments to $50 a month, without payment at the same time of interest. San Francisco Credit Clearing House v. McDonald, 122 Pac. 964, 966, 18 Cal. App. 212.

PAYABLE IN EQUAL ANNUAL INSTALLMENTS

The power to issue bonds "payable in equal annual installments" means "that an equal amount of each bond or of the whole debt shall become due each year; that the payment thereof shall become legally enforceable against the city; that it is the right of the city to make annual payments of the principal, and the duty of the holders of the bonds to accept such payment;" and not that the city issuing the bonds may place annually in its sinking fund an amount to meet the obligations at maturity. City and County of Denver v. Hallett, 83 Pac. 1066, 1067, 34 Colo. 393.

"A mere reserving of a discount or the including of usurious interest in a renewal note, while it may be the 'reserving or charging' of usury, is not the 'paying' of same." McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank of Rapid City, 121 N. W. 853, 856, 23 S. D. 269, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 437.

PAYING OUT

A delivery by an executor to his successor in a trust is not a "paying out" of moneys, within the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 2730, relating to commissions of executors and administrators on moneys paid out by them. In re Ingraham, 112 N. Y. Supp. 763, 767, 60 Misc. Rep. 44 (citing Matter of Hurst, 97 N. Y. Supp. 697, 111 App. Div. 460).

PAYING QUANTITIES

Where an oil and gas lease provided for a term of two years and as much longer as oil and gas are found in "paying quantities," as a matter of law, the lessor had no right to forfeit the lease at the end of two years because during that time no oil or gas had been marketed, where the evidence showed that a well on the land produced 1,000,000 feet per day, worth, when conveyed to a market, from 3 to 5 cents per 1,000 feet. Summerville v. Apollo Gas Co., 56 Atl. 876, 877, 207 Pa. 334.

A provision in an oil lease that, after the completion of the first well, the lessee should drill a specified number of wells, in case oil should be found in "paying quantities," did not mean that, if oil was found in the test or first well in a sufficient quantity to pay a profit, however small, in excess of the cost of producing it, excluding the cost of drilling the well and of equipment, then oil was found in "paying quantities," within the meaning of the contract, but meant that additional wells were to be drilled only in case oil was found in such quantities as would, taken in connection with other conditions, induce ordinarily prudent persons in a like business to expect a reasonable profit on the whole sum required to be expended; and whether oil was found in "paying quantities" was to be exclusively determined by the operator, acting in good faith. Manhattan Oil Co. v. Carrell, 73 N. E. 1084, 1086, 164 Ind. 526.

"Payment" is the discharge of an obligation by the delivery and acceptance of money or of something equivalent to money which is regarded as such at the time by the party to whom the payment is due. Cranston v. West Coast Life Ins. Co., 128 Pac. 427, 430, 63 Or. 427 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5247).

"Payment," in its broadest signification, is a satisfaction of an obligation. There must be an intent upon the part of the obligor or debtor to discharge the obligation or extinguish the debt." Town of Manitou v. First Nat. Bank of Colorado Springs, 86 Pac. 75, 78, 37 Colo. 344.

"Payment" is not a contract, but is the discharge of a debt. Porter v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 106 Pac. 299, 302, 17 Idaho, 364, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 111.

The word "payment" in its legal sense has a well-defined meaning, and to constitute payment there must be a delivery by the debtor or his representative, to the creditor or his representative, of money or something accepted by the creditor as the equivalent thereof, with the intention on the part of the debtor to pay the debt in whole or in part, and accepted as payment by the creditor. Union Biscuit Co. v. Springfield Grocer Co., 128 S. W. 996, 998, 143 Mo. App. 300 (citing 30 Cyc. p. 1181); Smith v. Pitts, 52 South. 402, 404, 167 Ala. 461.

To "pay" means primarily to transfer or deliver money or other agreed medium from the debtor to the creditor, and while the word "payment" is often used merely to signify satisfaction or discharge of an obligation by any means, as by setting off some other or the like, that is a secondary and somewhat loose use of the term; "payment," of course, works satisfaction of an obligation, but the two are not equivalents, for satisfaction and discharge may be accomplished without payment. Oneida County v. Tibbetts, 102 N. W. 897, 899, 125 Wis. 9.

"Payment" involves more than the passing of money, or its accepted equivalent, from one to another. The acceptance of money or other thing of value, in satisfaction of a debt, or in exchange for labor, goods, or other commodity, will be a payment, where it was so intended by the payor. Generally, there must be something shown in addition to the mere passing of money from one to the other. Galbraith v. Starks, 79 S. W. 1191, 1192, 117 Ky. 915.

The term "payment," as used in Civ. Code, art. 2131, means, not only the delivery of a sum of money when such is the obligation of the contract, but the performance of that which the parties respectively undertook, either expressly or impliedly or by law, to give or to do. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Stewart, 44 South. 138, 143, 119 La. 392.

"Payment" of a bill is a discharge of the indebtedness represented by such bill, and is also an admission that the person making payment has funds in his hands to pay the bill. Bank of Indian Territory v. First Nat. Bank, 83 S. W. 537, 538, 109 Mo. App. 665.

"Payment," as used in Comp. Laws, § 9725, precluding suit on a mortgage after 15 years from the last payment thereon, implies that the payer has parted with money or other valuable thing, and that the payee has received it in part liquidation of the debt. The statute is not satisfied with indorsement without an actual payment, and an agreement to forbear a part or whole of the debt without any consideration therefor is not a "payment." Rogers v. Robson, 111 N. W. 193, 147 Mich. 656 (citing Blanchard v. Blanchard, 122 Mass. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 397; Erpelding v. Ludwig, 40 N. W. 829, 39 Minn. 518; Young v. Alford, 18 S. E. 84, 113 N. C. 130; Areaux v. Mayeux, 23 La. Ann. 172).

"Money paid by an indorser to an indorsee is not for the benefit of the maker, but rather to protect the indorser's contract with the indorsee; and it operates as a purchase, and not as a 'payment,' so far as concerns the maker, and cannot be taken advantage of by him." On payment of a note by the indorser on the failure of the maker so to do, the indorser can recover the amount from the maker, though the note was not protested. McGowan v. Hover, 91 N. Y. Supp. 892, 893, 45 Misc. Rep. 138 (quoting and adopting the definition in 7 Cyc. p. 1021).

Under the rule that payment by a joint maker extinguishes the obligation, "payment" means payment in full for everything due on the obligation. Under Civ. Code § 1543, providing that a release of one or more joint debtors does not extinguish the obligation of any of the others, a decree of distribution of the estate of the payee of a joint note, awarding the note to one of the joint makers, does not constitute a payment of the note, nor an extinguishment of the obligation of the other debtor for his proportion of the same. Enscoe v. Fletcher, 82 Pac. 1075, 1077, 1 Cal. App. 659.

Ordinarily the "payment" of a note by the maker "terminates the liability of the indorser, but the receipt of a preferential payment, contrary to the statute, of an indorsed note is in the contemplation of law no payment at all and does not release the indorser." The receipt by a creditor from an insolvent corporation of a preferential payment, contrary to the statute, of an indorsed note is in contemplation of law no payment and does not release the indorser. Perry v. Van Norden Trust Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 543, 545, 118 App. Div. 288 (citing Swarts v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 117 Fed. 1, 54 C. C. A. 387; Brandt, Sur. [3d Ed.] § 368; Williams v. Gilchrist, 11 N. H. 585; Watson v. Poague, 42 Iowa, 582).

In Laws 1899, p. 1593, c. 712, § 46, providing that if, when a street railway franchise tax is due, the company has paid to a ity for its use, under any agreement there-or or under any statute requiring the same ny sum based on a percentage of gross earn-ngs or any other income, or any license tax, r any sum on account of the special fran-hise, "which payment was in the nature of tax," all amounts so paid shall be deducted rom the franchise tax, the term "payment" ncludes all the sums designated, so that he right to the deduction in each case de-ends on whether it is in the nature of a tax.

feerwagen v. Crosstown St. Ry. Co., 86 N.
S. Supp. 218, 224, 90 App. Div. 275.

Accord distinguished "Payment" means full satisfaction, as ontrasted with an "accord," which involves he acceptance of something as satisfaction, nd "release," which is a conclusive acknowldgment of satisfaction. Robinson v. St.

ohnsbury & L. O. R. Co., 66 Atl. 814, 818,
0 Vt. 129, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1249, 12 Ann.
Cas. 1060.

Medium of payment

The term "payment" means a payment n money. Where it is by a promissory note or anything else but cash, it must be accepted by the payee as payment. Sjolli v.
Hogenson, 122 N. W. 1008, 1012, 19 N. D. 82.

In order to constitute a "payment," the debtor must give something, either in money, property, or right, or must perform some service. White v. Black, 90 S. W. 1153, 1154, 115 Mo. App. 28.

"Payment" is made by the debtor delivering to the creditor money or some other valuable thing to extinguish the debt, which is received by the creditor for the same purpose. Persons v. Gardner, 106 N. Y. Supp.
610, 616, 619, 122 App. Div. 167.

Where "payment" is pleaded, the plea is held to mean payment in money, and, if payment is other than by money or if it rests on an independent agreement, the substantive facts of the agreement must be pleaded, and cannot be shown under a general denial or a simple plea of payment. People's Bank v. Stewart, 117 S. W. 99, 102, 136
Mo. App. 24.

"In its restricted sense, 'payment' has been defined to be the discharge in money of a sum due. In more liberal and general terms, it may be defined as anything which the creditor accepts, or in law should accept, in satisfaction and discharge of the debt due him. The performance of services, if accepted, or agreed to be accepted, in payment, is sufficient. A transfer of credit by consent of parties is equivalent to payment." Bouton v. Hill, 88 N. Y. Supp. 498, 501, 4 App.
Div. 251.

"Payment," in its broadest sense includes payment in other things than money, although by commercial usage it may be restricted to payment in money. Payment can result only from the mutual agreement of the parties that the transaction shall have that effect. It is the intention of the parties derivable from their contract which gives the transaction its legal effect. National Banking Act, § 30, giving a remedy to a debtor of a national bank who has paid to the bank a greater rate of interest than that allowed by law, to recover back twice the amount of the interest paid, comprehends payment of the usurious interest by transfer of property as well as in money, but to constitute a "payment" by transfer of property the parties must intend that the property be accepted as such. Rev. St. U. S. § 5198, contemplates an actual payment of the usury, and, where property is accepted as payment, its market value at the time must exceed the principal and lawful interest, to amount to payment and receipt of illegal interest. First Nat.

Bank of Blakely v. Davis, 70 S. E. 246, 247, 135 Ga. 687, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134 (citing
Claffin v. Continental Jersey Works, 11 S. E.
721, 85 Ga. 27; Hicks v. Marshall, 67 Ga.
713; Harris v. Hull, 70 Ga. 831; Heath v.

Same—Bills or notes

While the mere taking of the note of the debtor or of a third person for an antecedent debt is not payment of the latter, yet where that is the intention of the parties, and their agreement, such effect is given to it. Lomax v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 104 Pac.
85, 88, 46 Colo. 230.

Where, in an action for assault, defendant pleaded that plaintiff accepted a note in satisfaction of the cause of action, it was not error to refuse to charge that a note given and received in payment for a personal injury resulting from a tort is "prima facie payment" therefor, as a note, given and received in payment, is "payment." Belknap
v. Billings, 62 Atl. 56, 78 Vt. 214.

The taking of a promissory note not governed by the law merchant, by the creditor from his debtor, for an existing debt, is not a payment of the debt, unless it is so agreed to be by the parties, and the onus of proving such agreement would lie upon the debtor; but the taking of a bill of exchange, or a promissory note governed by the law merchant, by the creditor, for an existing debt, is a payment of the debt, unless it is otherwise agreed by the parties, and the onus of proving such agreement would lie upon the creditor, and this rule is the same whether the negotiable paper be executed by the debtor or by some third person. Smith
v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254, 259, 34 Am. Rep. 256.

Where a pledgee accepted the note of one of the joint obligors for the amount of the debt, without any agreement that it should be taken in extinguishment of the debt, the other obligor was not thereby released, since the acceptance of a note is not payment, unless the creditor agrees to take it as payment. Chorn v. Zollinger, 128 S. W. 213, 214, 143 Mo. App. 191.

A guaranty provided that if the debtor should fail to pay any notes, when due, given in "payment" of the debt, the guarantors would make good the amounts which might be due the creditor in accordance with his contract with the debtor. Thereafter the creditor sent a letter acknowledging the receipt of two notes, and continuing, "Inclosed please find statement in settlement." The statement set forth the amount due and credited the debtor with receipt of two notes. To the statement was added, "Settled as above." Held, that it was incumbent on the guarantors to establish the fact that the words "in settlement" in the latter statement were used in a different sense than the word "payment" in the guaranty. Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning, 52 S. E. 117, 120, 72 S. C. 424.

The transfer by a debtor to a creditor of the note of a third person, accompanied by an agreement that it was transferred "for the purpose of making payment" for merchandise previously bought, that all sums collected thereon in excess of the indebtedness should be paid to the debtor, and that all costs and disbursements of litigation and attorney's fees should be paid by the debtor, did not constitute payment of the debt, but merely collateral security to which the creditor was first required to resort. Hutkoff v. Glazer, 138 N. Y. Supp. 328, 329, 78 Misc. Rep. 362.

An employer's liability policy provided that no action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under the policy, unless brought by the assured to reimburse himself for loss actually sustained and paid in money by him after the trial of the issue. Plaintiff employer executed its note in a sum sufficient to pay a judgment, with costs, rendered against it in an action for injuries to an employé, and the note was discounted at a bank and the proceeds paid to satisfy the judgment. Held, that the payment to satisfy the judgment for the employé's injuries was sufficient, though not in money, so that the employer could recover over against the insurance company on the policy. Herbo-Phosa Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 84 Atl. 1093, 1097, 34 R. I. 567.

Same—Checks

Accepting a check is not an agreement that it is itself a "payment" of the money named therein. Groomer v. McMillan, 128 S. W. 285, 286, 143 Mo. App. 612.

"Checks are expected to be paid on presentation. Reliance on that expectation, the receipt of the check, depositing it for collection or credit, and drawing against the account thus created or augmented, do not make the check 'payment,' unless it is itself actually paid." Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co.

v. Pope & Fleming, 50 S. E. 374, 376, 122 Ga. 577.

A bank holding a note for collection delivered it to an indorser on the day of maturity, in exchange for the indorser's check upon another bank, and after inquiring by telephone of the drawee bank about the check, and being told through a mistake as to what check was meant that it would be paid, entered the amount to the credit of the owner of the note. On the next day, payment of the check, which at no time was good, was refused for want of funds, and the collecting bank delivered it to the drawer and in return received the note of its principal. Held, that these transactions did not effect the "payment" of the note. Interstate Nat. Bank v. Ringo, 83 Pac. 119, 122, 72 Kan. 116, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 115 Am. St. Rep. 176.

A national bank went into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of merging itself with a trust company, to which all of the capital stock of the bank was transferred; the trust company taking over the various deposits, accounts, and certain of its discounts, which were considered good, not including certain notes of the C. Company. After the liquidation, the bank ceased to make new loans. On the notes of the C. Company becoming due, the president of the bank informed P., who had been cashier of the bank and was manager of the trust company, that he wished to renew them, whereupon the old notes were taken up and marked, "Paid," and for them checks were drawn by the C. Company on the trust company, and the C. Company's deposit account with the trust company was immediately credited with the proceeds of the new notes, and the trust company did not repudiate the acts of the manager. Held to constitute a "payment" of the old notes and the making of a new loan either by the trust company or by the bank, acting with the assent of the trust company as its sole stockholder. First Nat. Bank of Pawtucket v. Littlefield, 67 Atl. 594, 596, 28 R. I. 411.

Where, in response to a telegram from a bank, the indorsee of his note, B. telegraphs the bank to have P., the indorser, take it up and draw on him with note attached, and where the bank pursuant thereto sent said telegram to P., who, acting thereon, sends to the bank the check of G. drawn on funds in said bank, together with a sight draft drawn on B. in favor of said bank for the amount of said note and interest, directing the maker, on demand, to pay to said bank said amount, "note and telegram March 2d attached with exchange," and where said bank accepts said check, charges it to the account of G., credits its "bill receivable" with the amount, stamps on its "discount ledger" opposite the entry of the note "March 2, 1906," as the date "when paid," charges said draft on the remittance ledger to its correspondent bank and forwards same with note attached for collection, held that, by so accepting and charging said check, said note was paid by P. as indorser. Bierce v. State Nat. Bank of Memphis, Tenn., 127 Pac. 856, 857, 33 Okl. 776.

Same—Deposit

Where a bank, to which the bankrupt was largely indebted on the day the bankrupt became insolvent, closed its account and credited the balance, including a deposit just made, on the bankrupt's indebtedness to it, such deposit amounted to a payment pro tanto of the loan, and not a deposit to the bankrupt's account, since a bank account contemplates the right of the depositor to draw against it. Ernst v. Mechanics' & Metals Nat. Bank of New York, 200 Fed. 295, 298.

Same—Draft

As used in a statute requiring railroad corporations to transport property "on payment of tolls," the quoted words do not contemplate a prepayment. Hence there was a payment, when, on the making out of the bill of lading, a draft was given the carrier for the freight and was forwarded with the bill of lading and paid on presentation. Dorance & Co. v. International & G. B. R. Co., 125 S. W. 561, 563, 103 Tex. 200.

Mode of payment

"A credit given for the amount of a check by the bank upon which it is drawn is equivalent to, and will be treated as, a 'payment of a check.' It is the same as if the money had been paid over the counter on the check, and then immediately paid back again to the account." State v. Ross, 104 Pac. 596, 601, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601 (citing State v. Nelson, 73 Pac. 321, 43 Or. 168; quoting Morse, Banks & Banking, § 451).

The difference between "payment" of money by a debtor to his creditor, and "payment" of money by a debtor to a third person at the request of a creditor, technical though it may be, it is nevertheless substantial. In the first case, it is presumed to be a payment on the debt, while, in the second, it may be a payment of the debt if the parties so agree, or it may be a matter of set-off for which an action would lie. Copriviza v. Rillovich, 87 Pac. 398, 400, 4 Cal. App. 26.

Gen. St. 1909, § 5202, relating to the payment of mortgages, was intended to embrace whatever by agreement amounted to a settlement of the mortgage, and giving a mortgage on other real estate, in lieu of the mortgage, entitled the mortgagor to a satisfaction of record. Baker v. Central Nat. Bank of Ellsworth, 120 Pac. 549, 550, 86 Kan. 293.

The word "deposit," as used in an agreement by the consignee of a ring obligating him to "deposit" with the consignor a certain sum on the execution of the agreement and certain sums on certain days thereafter, means "payment," because of the agreement that the deposit should become the absolute property of the consignor. People v. Gluck, 80 N. E. 1022, 1024, 188 N. Y. 167.

Where a case is appealed from a justice's court, payment may be shown as a defense on trial of the appeal without being pleaded, and though not urged before the justice, but "payment" within such rule does not include the purchase of an outstanding claim by defendant against plaintiff of the assignment of which to defendant plaintiff had no notice prior to the appeal. Beekman Lumber Co. v. Glendale Lumber Co., 138 S. W. 90, 91, 158 Mo. App. 809.

Defendant insurance society appointed a bank as its depository and collecting agent, directing the bank to stamp the members' call "paid," and mail the addressed postal card to defendant; that, unless specially authorized, the bank should not receive any money after the month in which the call was payable. Decedent, a member of the association and a depositor at the bank, paid his assessments there quarterly, and on one occasion stated to the cashier, that, if decedent should ever forget to pay his assessments, the cashier should pay it for him and charge the amount to decedent's account, to which the cashier agreed. The assessment due on decedent's policy prior to April 30, 1907, was not paid until his death on May 14th following, though at all times decedent had had a greater balance in the bank than was necessary to pay such assessment. Held, that the agreement between decedent and the cashier did not constitute payment of the assessment, and the policy had lapsed. Griffith v. Merchants' Life Ass'n of Burlington, 119 N. W. 694, 695, 141 Iowa, 414, 133 Am. St. Rep. 177.

On a cigar manufacturer being adjudged a bankrupt, claimant was entitled to receive from him 40,750 cigars, for which claim was filed before the referee in bankruptcy. Thereafter a corporation was organized to continue the bankrupt's business, purchase his assets, etc., and, desiring claimant to continue to act as its sales agent, agreed to protect claimant in its claim, and suggested that, as the claim was a legal one against the bankrupt's estate, if claimant would assign the same to the corporation's attorney, he would prove the claim before the receiver, to which claimant replied that it would present its claim to the receiver, and, if the corporation so shipped the cigars, claimant would return to it any dividend received on its claim. Held, that such arrangement did not operate as a "payment" of the claim against the bankrupt, and that claimant was entitled to prove the same against his estate. Haas-Baruch & Co. v. Portuondo, 138 Fed. 949, 951 (citing Merryman v. State, to Use of Murray [Md.] 5 Har. & J. 423; Whiting v. Independent Mut. Ins. Co., 15 Md. 297; Smilie v. Walton, 41 Vt. 174; *Casco Nat. PAYMENT INTO COURT

The Constitution provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, and until the same shall be paid to the owner or into court for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed, or the proprietary rights of the owner therein vested. Kansas City Charter, art. 10, § 28, provides that the city shall not be entitled to possession of any parcel of property taken under the provisions of the article until full payment of the compensation therefor as determined be made or paid into court for the use of the persons in whose favor such judgment may have been rendered, or who may be lawfully entitled to the same. Kansas City brought proceedings to condemn land belonging to plaintiff and her husband by the entirety. Notice was given to the husband and others possibly interested, but no notice was given to the wife. Damages were assessed and approved by the court, but, before title was decreed in the city, it filed another suit in the nature of a bill of interpleader against the husband and others, to which the wife was not a party, in which the parties named were required to interplead and show their respective rights to the fund, and the damage assessed was paid into court in the interpleader suit. Held, that the term "into court," as used in the Constitution and charter, means in condemnation proceedings, and the payment in the interpleader suit was not a payment into court for the benefit of the wife, and, by failing to mention the wife in this bill of interpleader, the suit negatived the idea that any money had ever been paid into court for the use of the wife. Holmes v. Kansas City, 108 S. W. 2, 14, 209 Mo. 513, 123 Am. St. Rep. 495.

PAYMENT INTO TREASURY OF STATE

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 9247, requiring every person making payment into the treasury of the state to furnish to the auditor of state a description of the liability on account of which the payment is to be made, and the auditor shall certify to the treasurer the amount to be paid, and shall make his draft in favor of the treasurer on the person making the payment, etc., and section 10,216, requiring every foreign insurance company to pay taxes "into the treasury of the state," payment of taxes by a foreign insurance company is not accomplished by a payment to the auditor of state. Dailey v. State ex rel. Bigler, 87 N. E. 4, 6, 171 Ind. 646.

PAYMENT OF TAXES

Under the constitutional provision that no sale of property for taxes shall be set aside for any cause except on proof of dual assessment or payment of the taxes, "payment of the taxes" means payment, not of a part, but of the whole. Doullut v. Smith, 41 South. 913, 918, 117 La. 491.

Under a statute providing that in a suit or proceeding against a tax sale purchaser to recover land sold for taxes except in "cases where the taxes have been paid or the land redeemed as provided by law," shall be commenced within five years of the time of recording the tax deed, the purchase of land at a tax sale by the agent of the owner does not amount to a "payment of taxes" by the owner, so as to except the land so purchased from the bar of the statute. Morris v. Gregory, 103 Pac. 137, 139, 80 Kan. 626, 631.

Defendant, holding land under a quit-claim deed, when traveling for his health, directed an agent to pay the taxes on the land in question for the year 1897. By a mistake the agent, instead of paying the taxes, purchased the land at tax sale in the name of the defendant, who paid all subsequent taxes assessed and did not procure a tax deed under the certificate of sale. Held that, in the absence of bad faith, the purchase was void and operated as a payment, within Rev. Codes 1905, § 4928, establishing title in one in adverse possession of land for 10 years with payment of taxes. Stiles v. Granger, 117 N. W. 777, 779, 17 N. D. 502.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4268, provides that when real estate, the title to which shall have emanated from the government more than 10 years, is in the lawful possession of any person, and shall be claimed by another, and shall not have been in possession of the person claiming the same nor any one under whom he claims for 30 consecutive years and on which neither the person claiming the same nor those under which he claims have paid any taxes for all that period, the claimant shall, within one year from the date of his possession, sue to recover the same or be forever barred. Held, that the payment of costs and judgment for costs by a purchaser at a tax sale, by reason of his bid being equal to or in excess of the judgment and costs, is not a "payment of taxes" within the statute. Dunnington v. Hudson, 116 S. W. 1083, 217 Mo. 93.

PAYMENT STOPPED

The writing of the words "payment stopped" upon a note payable at a bank simply announces the intention of the maker that his funds in that bank shall not be applied to the payment of the note, and does not necessarily discredit it nor import that he will not provide for it at some other place, nor does it affect the liability of the maker or indorser. McKinley v. American Exch. Bank, 30 N. Y. Super. Ct. 663, 664.

PAYMENT UNDER PROTEST

PEA COAL

Under a coal lease defining "pea coal" to be coal which passes with the dirt through a screen of three-fourths of an inch mesh, a lessee cannot avoid payment of royalties on coal known as "buckwheat," "rice," and "barley" coal, all of which pass through a screen of three-fourths of an inch mesh, on the ground that such sizes are not known as "pea coal." Glick v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co., 70 Atl. 810, 811, 221 Pa. 428.

PEACE

See Bill of Peace; Breach of the Peace; Conservator of the Peace.

By "peace" is meant the tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. It is the natural right among all persons in a political society. Town of Neola v. Reichart, 109 N. W. 5, 6, 131 Iowa, 492.

PEACE OFFICER

A policeman is a "peace officer," and has the right without a warrant to arrest for an offense against a municipal ordinance, happening in his presence. Springer v. State, 48 S. E. 907, 908, 121 Ga. 155.

A chief of police of a city engaged in assisting a deputy sheriff to make an arrest is a "peace officer," within the meaning of the statutes defining the offense of attempting to bribe a peace officer. Lee v. State, 85 S. W. 804, 805, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 620.

By the express provisions of Cr. Code Prac. § 26, sheriffs, constables, coroners, jailers, marshals, and policemen are "peace officers," within section 36, authorizing a peace officer to make arrests under conditions specified. Commonwealth for Use of Barth v. McCann, 94 S. W. 645, 647, 123 Ky. 247 (citing Cr. Code Prac. § 26).

Laws 1891, p. 244, c. 106, relating to the Village of Mechanicville, in Saratoga county, provides in title 2 (page 246) for the appointment of police constables, and in title 7, § 7 (page 261), provides that such constables shall have the same power and authority in criminal cases as constables in any of the towns of Saratoga county, and, in addition, the powers conferred on them by the act, also providing that they shall be entitled to receive of the village, towns, and county the same fees and in the same manner that constables in towns are entitled to receive for similar services, etc. By Code Cr. Proc. § 117, a peace officer may arrest without a warrant a person for a crime committed in his presence. Section 154 defines a peace officer as the sheriff, etc., or a constable, marshal, police constable, or policeman of a city, town, or village. Section 960 provides that, unless when otherwise provided, the term "peace officer" signifies any one of the officers mentioned in section 154. By Liquor Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 79, c. 112, § 40, intoxication in a public place is made a misdemeanor, and the person so intoxicated may be arrested without a warrant. Held, that police constables of the village have the powers of town constables, and may arrest without a warrant one found intoxicated in the highways of any town in the county. People ex rel. Conway Bros. Brewing & Malt-ing Co. v. Board of Auditors of Town of Stillwater, 110 N. Y. Supp. 745, 746, 747, 126 App. Div. 487.

PEACEABLE AND ADVERSE POSSESSION

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3344, declaring that a "peaceable and adverse possession" shall be construed to embrace not more than 160 acres, including the improvements, or the number of acres actually inclosed should the same exceed 160 acres, though not requiring that all the land in the possession of one who seeks title by limitation should be actually enclosed or improved, calls for adverse possession thereof, which necessarily includes a claim to all of it; the statute never contemplating the conferring of rights where none were claimed, and adverse possession may extend to an entire tract of land not exceeding 160 acres, though all of it was not actually inclosed. Webb v. Lyster, 94 S. W. 1095, 1096, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 124.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3343, limits the bringing of actions for the recovery of land held by another under "peaceable and adverse possession" to 10 years. Article 4348 defines "peaceable possession" as "continuous and not interrupted by adverse suit." Article 3349 defines "adverse possession" as the visible appropriation of land held under a claim inconsistent and hostile to another's claim. Held, that where defendant claimed land by the limitation of the statute, it was error prejudicial to him to instruct the jury that to recover his possession must have been "peaceable, distinct, notorious, continued, and hos-title" and that his appropriation must have been "actual, open and peaceable under a claim inconsistent with the rights of the true owner, and must dispossess the owner." Logan v. Meade, 98 S. W. 210, 212, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 477.

In trespass to try title to land, even though a tract of land claimed by adverse possession was not within Act March 25, 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 76, c. 57), providing that land owned by one person entirely surrounded by tracts owned or fenced by another shall not be considered inclosed by the fence inclosing the circumscribing tract, and possession by the owner of the circumscribing tract of the interior tract is not peaceable and adverse possession within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3343, providing for the recovery of lands held by another peaceably and adversely, within 10 years after the accrual of the cause of action, unless the interior tract be separated by a fence, or one-tenth of it be cultivated, and also providing that possession of land belonging to another by a person owning 5,000 acres or more of land inclosed by a fence in connection therewith shall not be peaceable and adverse possession within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3343, unless the land so belonging to another be separated by a fence from the adjoining lands, or one-tenth thereof be cultivated, the land owned by defendant being less than 5,000 acres, and the land claimed by plaintiff not being entirely surrounded by the land owned by defendant, and there being evidence tending to show that defendant had been in possession of a part of the tract long enough to bring it within the 10-year statute of limitations, it was error to refuse to charge on the statute. Sellman v. Daniel (Tex.) 110 S. W. 81.

PEACEABLE ENTRY

In the amendment added in 1879, extending the remedy of forcible entry given by Code 1907, § 4262, to cases where there was a peaceable entry, the "peaceable entry" intended is an intrusion, though peaceable, upon plaintiff's prior actual possession. Self v. Comer, 52 South. 336, 337, 166 Ala. 68.

PEACEABLE POSSESSION

According to Rev. St. 1895, art. 3348, "peaceable possession" is such as is continuous and not interrupted by adverse suit to recover the estate. White v. Pingenot, 90 S. W. 672, 674, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 641.

Quiet occupation, under claim of title, is "peaceable possession," within P. L. 1870, p. 20, providing that a person in peaceable possession of lands may sue in chancery to settle a disputed title thereto. Powell v. Mayo, 24 N. J. Eq. 178, 181.

One in peaceable possession under a claim of ownership, as distinguished from possession which is disputed, is within the statute authorizing one in "peaceable possession," actual or constructive, to sue to quiet title, and the fact that the right to the possession is disputed does not defeat the right to sue; but where the possession, as distinguished from the right to it, is disputed, the suit will not lie. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Rouse (Ala.) 57 South. 706, 707.

The word "peaceable," as used in an answer in a suit to quiet title, in which answer defendant denies that complainant is in the peaceable possession of the land involved in the suit, is used to contradict distinguish peaceable possession from disputed or contested possession under claim of ownership. Southern R. Co. v. Hall, 41 South. 135, 136, 145 Ala. 224 (citing Adler v. Sullivan, 22 South. 87, 115 Ala. 587).

"If the possession has been uninterrupted, of necessity it has been 'peaceable.' If it has been interrupted, of necessity it has not been peaceable. The words are therefore interchangeable and synonymous in the pleading of prescriptive title." Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 77 Pac. 1113, 1119, 144 Cal. 578 (citing American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360; Chauvet v. Hill, 28 Pac. 1066, 93 Cal. 407; Smith v. Hawkins, 42 Pac. 453, 110 Cal. 122).

"Peaceable possession," in the statute authorizing the maintenance of a bill to quiet title to real property where complainant is in peaceable possession of the lands, is not a possession which is peaceable as to third persons, but only peaceable as to the defendant, and, as to the defendant, that it is a possession undisturbed by any act of the defendant in or upon the locus in quo for which the defendant would be suable in an action by which the title to the property could be determined. Bradley v. McPherson (N. J.) 58 Atl. 105, 106.

Under Code 1896, § 809, providing that any person in "peaceable possession" of land, etc., may maintain a suit to quiet title to the land, it was held, that a bill to quiet title to land is sustained where it is shown that complainants were in the "peaceable possession" of the land at the time of filing the bill, and such a showing makes out a prima facie case. George E. Wood Lumber Co. v. Williams, 47 South. 202, 203, 157 Ala. 73.

Peaceable and undisturbed possession means actual and immediate possession, such possession as a man has of the house in which he lives or the field he tills or the land whereon he pastures his cattle. The words "peaceable" and "undisturbed," when applied to such possession, convey a clear meaning. Chezum v. Campbell, 85 Pac. 48, 50, 42 Wash. 560, 7 Ann. Cas. 921.

PEACOCK FEATHERS

Dutiable as ornamental feathers, see Ornamental Feathers.

PEARL

Certain drilled pearls of exceptionally large size and fine quality were imported together, arranged in collections according to size, the largest in the center. It appeared that these collections had not been selected for a special piece of jewelry, but that the pearls were to be sold separately on their individual merits, and that they had not been advanced to a special value beyond the aggregate amount of their individual values by an assortment and selection that fitted them for immediate transformation into a necklace or string of pearls. Held that, under the similitude clause in the tariff act, they bear a closer resemblance to "pearls in their natural state not strung or set" than to "pearls set or strung." Neresheimer & Co. v. United States, 136 Fed. 86, 88, 68 C. C. A. 654.

Loose drilled pearls, unset and unstrung, however carefully matched or desirable for a necklace, are dutiable at 10 per cent. ad valorem under the tariff act, as "pearls in their natural state, not strung or set," and are not classifiable by similitude as jewelry, including "pearls set or strung," because at some time, or from time to time previous to importation, such pearls had been strung temporarily for purposes of display. United States v. Citroen, 32 Sup. Ct. 259, 260, 223 U. S. 407, 56 L. Ed. 486.

Half pearls, consisting of the better part of the true pearl, from which blemishes or flaws have been removed by sawing or splitting, and which are not adapted for stringing, but are chiefly used for jewelry settings, are dutiable by similitude, under the paragraph of the tariff act, covering "pearls in their natural state, not strung or set." United States v. Hahn, 135 Fed. 349, 68 C. C. A. 130.

Drilled pearls, which had been assembled and matched abroad and were ordered to be made into a necklace in New York, but had never been strung as a necklace, except temporarily, for purposes of display, are not "jewelry" under the tariff act, but are dutiable either directly or by similitude as "pearls in their natural state." United States v. Tiffany & Co., 172 Fed. 300, 301.

Pearls which, though they had been tentatively worn as a necklace abroad, were imported loose and were increased by the addition of others after importation for completion into a necklace, are not dutiable as "jewelry," under the tariff act, but as "pearls in their natural state," by similitude. Citroen v. United States, 166 Fed. 693, 697, 92 C. C. A. 365.

PEARL BEADS

The term "pearl beads," as understood in trade, does not include genuine pearls drilled, but refers to articles of glass made to imitate pearls. United States v. American Gem & Pearl Co., 142 Fed. 283, 284.

PECULIAR

Whilst the word "peculiar" sometimes has an offensive meaning, yet its natural and usual meaning is particular or special. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co., 96 S. W. 1011, 1015, 198 Mo. 698.

Special synonyms

An instruction, in an action for damages for change of grade of a street, that the jury should assess plaintiff's damage at the excess of the market value immediately before the grading was commenced, over the market value thereof immediately after the grading was finished, less the value "of any special benefits * * * which are peculiar" to the property, is not erroneous for the use of the word "peculiar," which is simply synonymous with the word "special." Powell v. City of Columbia, 134 S. W. 76, 77, 154 Mo. App. 239.

PECUNIARYPECUNIARY ABILITY

The term "pecuniarily able," used with reference to the financial condition of a proposed purchaser procured by an agent of the vendor, does not mean that such purchaser must necessarily have all the money in his pocketbook or to his credit at the bank, but that he is able to command the necessary money to close the deal on reasonable notice, or within the time limited by the vendor, if a time be limited. McCabe v. Jones, 124 N. W. 486, 487, 141 Wis. 540.

PECUNIARY AID

"Pecuniary aid" for which recovery may be had for wrongful death means everything that can be of value, and in the case of minor children includes the reasonable pecuniary value of the nurture, care, and education, if any, they would have received from decedent during their minority, had he lived. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Williams (Tex.) 117 S. W. 1043, 1047.

In an action for death, the court charged the jury to determine the probable amount and value of the "pecuniary aid," if any, which decedent would probably have "contributed" to plaintiffs after his death, if he had not been killed, and to allow the present pecuniary value thereof. The court also charged the jury to allow decedent's children in addition the pecuniary value of any counsel and advice which they would probably have received but for decedent's wrongful death. Held, that the word "contributed" indicates that the "pecuniary aid" referred to meant something more tangible than counsel and advice, and that the instruction was therefore not objectionable as permitting a double recovery as to the children. International & G. N. R. Co. v. White (Tex.) 120 S. W. 958, 960.

PECUNIARY BENEFIT

By "pecuniary benefits" is meant not only money, but everything that can be valued in money, and includes, in case of a minor child who is suing for the death of a parent, the reasonable value of such nurture, care, and education as the child would have received from the deceased parent had such parent lived. But neither sorrow for the death of the deceased relative nor the loss of his or her society are recoverable in such cases. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. McVey, 87 S. W. 328, 329, 99 Tex. 28.

In an action by the widow, children, and mother of one negligently killed, held, that an instruction that they could recover such sum as would represent the present worth of the pecuniary benefits plaintiffs could reasonably expect that decedent would have contributed in the future, had he lived, to be apportioned among plaintiffs as they were entitled to it, was not erroneous as authorizing the mother to recover beyond her life expectancy. Held, further, that instructions that plaintiffs could recover the present worth of the pecuniary benefits they could reasonably expect that decedent would have contributed; that "pecuniary benefits" meant, not only money, but everything that could be valued in money; that in the case of plaintiff children it included the reasonable pecuniary value of the nurture, care, and training they would have received during minority, had he lived; and that they could not recover for grief, sorrow, or loss of society, affection, or companionship—were not objectionable as allowing recovery for loss of care, nurture and training having no pecuniary value. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Wallace, 115 S. W. 302, 303, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 127.

PECUNIARY DAMAGE

"Pecuniary damages" are those which can be accurately estimated as loss of wages, cost of medical attendance, etc. L. W. Pomerene Co. v. White, 97 N. W. 232, 234, 70 Neb. 171.

The word "pecuniary," as used in a statute providing for the recovery of "pecuniary damages" resulting from the death of a relative, is used in distinction to those injuries to the affections and sentiments which arise from the death of relatives and which, though most painful and grievous to be borne, cannot be measured or recompensed by money. This term also excludes those losses which result from the deprivation of the society and companionship of relatives which are equally incapable of being defined by any recognized measure of value. But infant children, however, sustain a loss from the death of their parents, and especially their mother, of a different kind. She owes them the duty of nurture, and of an intellectual, moral, and physical training, and such instruction can only proceed from a mother. Carter v.

West Jersey & S. R. Co., 71 Atl. 253, 254, 7 N. J. Law, 602, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 16 Ann. Cas. 929 (citing Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co., 24 N. Y. 471, 475).

PECUNIARY INJURY

"Pecuniary injury," resulting from death of another, means a deprivation of reasonable expectation of a pecuniary advantage, which would have resulted by a continuance of the life of the deceased." Under a statute allowing recovery for "pecuniary injury" resulting from death of a relative, damages may be allowed in case of children for the deprivation of the care which "they could naturally expect from the continuance of their mother's life." Carter v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 71 Atl. 253, 76 N. J. Law, 602, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 16 Ann. Cas. 929 (quoting and adopting a definition in Paulmier v. Erie R. Co., 34 N. J. Law, 151, 158).

Loss of the attentions and kindness of children to parents might, under some circumstances, be a "pecuniary injury." Of course, loss of income or loss of estate would be pecuniary injuries. So would be the loss of a reasonable prospect of additional income and estate in the future. If a son had settled an annuity during his own life upon his parents, his death would be a pecuniary loss to them as well as to his wife and children. Generally, where there exists a reasonable probability of pecuniary benefit to one from the continuing life of another, whether arising from legal or family relations, the untimely extinction of that life is a "pecuniary injury." McKay v. New England Dredging Co., 43 Atl. 29, 30, 92 Me. 454.

The "pecuniary injury resulting from death" recoverable under the New Jersey statute is nothing more than the deprivation of a reasonable expectation of the pecuniary advantage which would have resulted by a continuance of the life of the deceased. The pecuniary injury resulting from the death of a minor child is the lost value of the child's prospective services to the parent during minority. Surgical expenses incurred by the parent in consequence of the injury causing death are not recoverable. Hutchinson v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 170 Fed. 615, 616.

The word "solatium," as used by the courts in stating that for a particular injury solatium will be allowed, means "a compensation as a soothing to the affections or wounded feelings, and for loss of the comfort and social pleasure there is in the association between members of a family. Solatium is sentiment, love, or affection, as distinguished from a property loss." The declaration in Rev. St. 1899, § 2866, that in an action for a death the jury may give such damages as they may deem fair and just with reference "to the necessary injuries resulting from" such death, is equivalent to limiting the recovery to "pecuniary injury," and therefore the statute by necessary implication excludes solatium. Marshall v. Consolidated Jack Mines Co., 95 S. W. 972, 973, 119 Mo. App. 270.

PECUNIARY LOSS

The word "pecuniary," as used in a statute authorizing recovery for pecuniary loss, is not restricted to loss of money, or of things purchasable by money. Carter v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 71 Atl. 253, 254, 76 N. J. Law, 602, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 16 Ann. Cas. 929.

In an action for death, brought by decedent's widow and minor children, plaintiffs may, under proper allegations and proof, recover for the loss of advice and counsel of decedent, though such loss is not a pecuniary loss within the statute restricting the right of recovery to the pecuniary injury sustained, since the only pecuniary loss within the statute is the loss of maintenance and support. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Davenport (Tex.) 110 S. W. 150, 154.

Plaintiff contracting for certain repairs upon a house owned by his wife procured a bond from a surety company to himself, to which the wife was not a party, conditioned to indemnify him for any pecuniary loss from breach of any of the terms of the contractor's agreement, and afterwards paid judgments obtained on subcontractors' liens. Held, that he had sustained "pecuniary loss" within the terms of the bond. Taylor v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., 142 S. W. 1096, 161 Mo. App. 293.

PECUNIARY OBLIGATION

A silver certificate issued by the United States is a "pecuniary obligation" or security of the government and an article of value within Rev. St. § 5467, subjecting to punishment any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall secrete any letter containing any note, bond, certificate of stock, or other pecuniary obligation or security of the government. Bromberger v. United States, 128 Fed. 346, 351, 63 C. C. A. 76.

A resolution of the borough council of the borough of Elmer, providing for the purchase of lands, tends to impose a "pecuniary obligation" on the borough, and must, under section 27 of the borough act of 1897, be submitted to the mayor for his approval. Sturr v. Borough of Elmer, 67 Atl. 1059, 1060, 75 N. J. Law, 443.

PECUNIARY PROFIT

A foreign corporation organized for benevolent, religious, or philanthropic purposes, required by its charter to set apart for such purposes its entire receipts, so that no member or employé shall receive any pecuniary profit except reasonable compensation for services in effecting the purposes of the corporation, etc., is not a corporation for "pecuniary profit" within Rev. St. 1895, arts. 745, 746, requiring foreign corporations for pecuniary profit to obtain a permit to transact business in the state, and need not obtain such a permit as a condition precedent to its right to sue. City of San Antonio v. Salvation Army (Tex.) 127 S. W. 860, 861.

Where an academy was farmed out by the trustees to the principal, who conducted it under their supervision, they reserving all of their powers under the charter, the rental which they received from the principal, and which was applied by them to erecting buildings and improving the grounds of the institution, without any personal gain to themselves, was not a "pecuniary profit," within the meaning of Laws 1896, p. 797, c. 908, § 4, subd. 7, which provides for the taxation of educational institutions if any officer thereof shall be entitled to receive pecuniary profit therefrom other than reasonable compensation for services rendered in effecting its educational purposes. People v. Mezger, 90 N. Y. Supp. 483, 490, 98 App. Div. 237.

A will contained bequests to "St. Vincent's Hospital" and "Old Men's Home." It was not questioned but that the testator by the term "Old Men's Home" meant St. Benedict's Home for the Aged. Neither the hospital nor the home was incorporated, but each was merely a charitable enterprise conducted by the Sisters of St. Benedict, a corporation organized not for pecuniary profit. Held, that since the bequest was in effect to the corporation, and merely specified the particular enterprises to which the testator wished it devoted, it was a bequest to a corporation organized under the chapter relating to corporations not for pecuniary profit, within the meaning of Code, § 3270, providing that no bequest to such corporations shall be valid in excess of one-fourth of testator's estate, if a spouse, child, or parent survive the testator. In re Ihmes' Estate, 134 N. W. 429, 430, 154 Iowa, 20.

PED

A "ped" in Norfolk, according to Wedgwood's Dictionary on Etymology, is "a pannier or wicker basket; a pedder or peddler; a packman; one who carries on his back goods for sale." Citizens' Bank v. Crittenden Record-Press, 150 S. W. 814, 815, 150 Ky. 634.

PEDDLER

See, also, Hawker; Itinerant Vendor.

A "peddler" is defined as one who travels about, retailing small wares. Eaton v. People, 104 Pac. 407, 408, 46 Colo. 361.

The word "peddler" in its ordinary sense means a traveling trader; one who travels about retailing small wares. In re Watson, 97 N. W. 463, 466, 17 S. D. 466, 2 Ann. Cas. 321 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

A "peddler" is understood to be one who goes around from house to house, or from customer to customer and sells goods. Ex parte Henson, 90 S. W. 874, 876, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 177 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5262).

Any person who peddles is a "peddler" within Act No. 295 of 1908, requiring a license for hawkers and peddlers, without reference to the kind of merchandise purchased and sold. Flournoy v. Walker, 52 South. 673, 674, 126 La. 489.

Rev. St. 1899, § 8861, defines a peddler as one who deals in selling goods, etc., excepting pianos, etc. State v. Webber, 113 S. W. 1054, 1055, 214 Mo. 272, 15 Ann. Cas. 983.

A "peddler," within Kirby's Dig. § 5438, authorizing licensing of peddlers, is one who goes from place to place and from house to house carrying for sale and exposing to sale the goods, wares, and merchandise he carries. City of Conway v. Waddell, 118 S. W. 398, 399, 90 Ark. 127 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5260).

Aside from statute, a "peddler" may be defined as any person who, by solicitation or outcry, takes anything from house to house in any manner, and offers to sell the same for money, or barter the thing for any other thing, or whoever goes from house to house for the purpose of taking orders for anything for future delivery to be sold or bartered. Fallis v. Gas City, 82 N. E. 1056, 1057, 169 Ind. 508.

The word "peddler" is a well-known common-law term covering itinerant vendors, and the statute provides a license for this class of retail vendors by name. Ky. St. 1903, § 4224, imposing a penalty for retailing oil without a license, provides for a different class of retailers from peddlers, and, where a petition in an action to recover a penalty for retailing oil without a license made no allusion to peddlers, it would be presumed that it was brought for the penalty imposed by section 4224. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 87 S. W. 1090, 120 Ky. 724.

"The primary idea of a 'hawker and peddler' is that of an itinerant or traveling trader who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a 'trader,' who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business." "In the absence of a definition by statute or municipal ordinance, a 'peddler or hawker,' within the generally accepted meaning of the words, is a small retail dealer who carries his merchandise with him, traveling from place to place, or from house to house, exposing his or his principal's goods for sale and selling them." As under the common law and by statutory recognition there has been a well-recognized use of highways and streets by hawkers and peddlers carrying their wares on their persons or otherwise, the presence in a street of a push-cart peddler, who was injured in a collision, was not contributory negligence per se precluding a recovery of damages. Collender v. Reardon, 123 N. Y. Supp. 587, 589, 138 App. Div. 738 (citing Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 493; 21 Cyc. p. 867).

Where oil is sold and delivered from a tank wagon, if such sales are to others than retail dealers, the transactions are "peddling," requiring a peddler's license, and payment of a fee of $50 per year for one person with a two-horse wagon. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 83 S. W. 557, 119 Ky. 1.

Sales of oil delivered from wagons to retail dealers for resale are within Ky. St. 1903, § 4224, requiring payment of an annual license fee of $5 for each wagon; but sales from wagons to others than retail dealers constitute "peddling" within section 4215, requiring peddlers to take out licenses. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 112 S. W. 902, 903, 129 Ky. 744.

That one sold liniment and lemon extract by going from place to place to sell the same, and sold one bottle to one person and two to another shows that he was a peddler within Rev. St. 1899, § 8861, defining a "peddler" to be one who deals in the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise, etc. State v. Webber, 113 S. W. 1054, 1055, 214 Mo. 272, 15 Ann. Cas. 983.

Since a theater ticket is a mere license, evidence of a right to enter a theater and occupy a definite seat during a performance, and not merchandise, the offering of such ticket for sale does not constitute "hawking" and "peddling," so as to require a license for the sale thereof; such terms referring to the manner in which the business is carried on, and not to the business itself. People v. Marks, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1106, 1109, 64 Misc. Rep. 679.

"Persons who travel from town to town, from one plantation to another, by land or by water, carrying to sell or exposing to sale any rum, sugar, or other goods, wares, or merchandises, are included in the general terms 'hawkers' and 'peddlers.'" "Hawkers and peddlers are persons who practice carrying merchandise about from place to place for sale, as opposed to traders who sell at established shops." State v. Ivey, 53 S. E. 428, 430, 73 S. C. 282 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Belcher [S. C.] 1 McMul. 42).

Delivery of goods

The term "peddler" generally includes any one who goes from place to place to peddle goods, and, as used in Ky. St. § 4223, making notes given to a peddler void if not so indorsed thereon, being one who has the thing he sells with him and delivers it at the time of sale. Citizens' Bank v. Orittenden Record-Press, 150 S. W. 814, 815, 150 Ky. 634.

Mere delivery of goods to a customer is not "peddling," within Ky. St. 1903, § 4215, requiring peddlers to take out licenses; "peddling" consisting in hawking goods about and offering and selling to any one who will buy. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 112 S. W. 902, 904, 129 Ky. 744.

A foreign manufacturer of ranges employed traveling salesmen to take orders in Arkansas. The orders were forwarded to a division superintendent in Arkansas, who investigated the credit of the buyers. The ranges were shipped by the manufacturer to Arkansas to fill the orders secured, and deliveries were made by employes called deliverymen. Held, that the traveling salesmen and the deliverymen were "peddlers," within the peddling statute of 1909, requiring a license of persons traveling through any county peddling or selling enumerated goods. Crenshaw v. State, 130 S. W. 569, 570, 95 Ark. 464.

An agent of a foreign corporation engaged in making portraits by photographic enlargement, who delivers such portraits to customers who have previously ordered the same made and collects therefor, is not a "peddler" or "hawker" within the meaning of an ordinance imposing a license tax on persons engaged in such occupations merely because, as an incident to delivery, he sells the customer a frame for the portraits if desired. "The leading primary idea of a 'hawker' or 'peddler' is that of an itinerant or traveling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place." Chicago Portrait Co. v. City of Macon, 147 Fed. 967, 969 (quoting and adopting definition in Emert v. State of Missouri, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. Ed. 430, which quotes with approval language of Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts, in Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 493).

Farmer retailing crops

The word "peddler," as used in a municipal ordinance providing that no person shall exercise the vocation of a peddler within the municipality without first paying an annual license, includes one peddling the produce of his own farm or garden, as well as one peddling farm or garden products which he has purchased from others. State v. Jensen, 100 N. W. 644, 645, 93 Minn. 88.

A farmer who takes his farm products to a city and sells them from place to place is not a hawker or peddler within the understood meaning of such terms. The terms "hawker" and "peddler," as used by the courts of this country are treated as equivalent in law. "Hawkers" and "peddlers" are persons who carry merchandise from place to place for sale, as opposed to "traders," who sell at an established shop. City of St. Louis v. Meyer, 84 S. W. 914, 918, 185 Mo. 583 (citing Hall v. State, 23 South. 121, 39 Fla. 668; Commonwealth v. Ober, 12 Cush. [66 Mass.] 493; Bish. St. Crimes, § 1074; Fisher v. Patterson, 13 Pa. 336; City of South Bend v. Martin, 41 N. E. 315, 142 Ind. 31, 29 L. R. A. 531; Emert v. Missouri, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. Ed. 430).

Permanent stand

The statute of 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 292), providing that before any person either as owner, manufacturer, or agent shall travel through any county and peddle or sell enumerated articles, he shall procure a license, does not reach one who simply brings his wares into a county and sells them, but there must be added the element of traveling from place to place through the county for the purpose of selling. Crenshaw v. State, 130 S. W. 569, 95 Ark. 464.

A person operating a lunch wagon at a fixed place in a street daily between certain fixed hours is not a "hawker" or "peddler" within a statute defining "hawkers" and "peddlers" as persons who travel about, either on foot or in wagons, carrying and exposing for sale goods. Commonwealth v. Morrison, 83 N. E. 415, 197 Mass. 190, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194, 125 Am. St. Rep. 338.

A hawker or peddler is an itinerant or traveling trader who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers by delivering the goods at the time of the sale, in contradistinction to the trader who has goods to sell and sells them in a fixed place of business. State v. Bayer, 97 Pac. 129, 131, 34 Utah, 257, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 297.

Sales to dealers

Sales of oil delivered from wagons to retail dealers for resale are within Ky. St. 1903, § 4224, requiring payment of an annual license fee of $5 for each wagon; but sales from wagons to others than retail dealers constitute "peddling," within section 4215, requiring peddlers to take out licenses. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 112 S. W. 902, 903, 129 Ky. 744.

Sales by order or sample

The license taxation of commercial salesmen or travelers selling by sample or taking orders for future delivery is not germane to the license taxation of "peddlers or hawkers" selling and delivering goods carried by them on foot or on horseback, or in vehicles, or in water craft. Beary v. Narrau, 87 South. 961, 113 La. 1034.

A hawker or peddler, as defined by Laws 1909, p. 293, c. 248, § 1, is one who has no fixed place of trade, but travels from place to place and from house to house, though he sells by sample and does not carry his wares with him, or even if he does not make an immediate sale, but enters into an executory contract for a future sale and future delivery. State ex rel. Mudeking v. Parr, 123 N. W. 408, 409, 109 Minn. 147, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759.

A traveling salesman, who carries samples and takes orders for brooms from merchants in lots of a dozen or more, and afterwards delivers the brooms, which are shipped to him from the factory, is not a "peddler" requiring a license, within Act April 16, 1903, § 50, as amended, defining as such all persons who carry goods from place to place for sale, and all persons who offer goods for sale without having a regular place of business. If he had gone from place to place in the state and taken orders for the brooms manufactured by his principal, and sent such orders to the latter at his place of business, to be filled by him, he could not be regarded as a peddler. Neither would he be a peddler if, instead of sending such orders to his principal to be filled, he had notified him of the amount of brooms necessary to fill the orders taken, and the brooms had been shipped to him from the factory, or he had gone to the factory and gotten the goods, and filled the orders theretofore taken by him. Kloss v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 655, 656, 103 Va. 864 (citing Village of Stamford v. Fisher, 35 N. E. 500, 140 N. Y. 187; Commonwealth v. Ober [Mass.] 12 Cush. 493; Commonwealth v. Elchenberg, 21 Atl. 258, 140 Pa. 158; State v. Frank, 41 S. E. 785, 130 N. C. 724, 89 Am. St. Rep. 885).

A foreign manufacturer of ranges employed traveling salesmen to take orders in Arkansas. The orders were forwarded to a division superintendent in Arkansas, who investigated the credit of the buyers. The ranges were shipped by the manufacturer to Arkansas to fill the orders secured, and deliveries were made by employes called deliverymen. Held, that the traveling salesmen and the deliverymen were "peddlers," within the peddling statute of 1909, requiring a license of persons traveling through any county peddling or selling enumerated goods. Crenshaw v. State, 130 S. W. 569, 570, 95 Ark. 464.

A merchant in Chicago employed an agent, who solicited orders for merchandise in a city in Missouri and reported the orders. The merchant put up each article ordered in a package, and all the packages were shipped to the agent, who took the goods from the depot and delivered them to the customers and collected the price. Held, that the agent was not a "peddler," within an ordinance of the city imposing a license for selling merchandise from wagons. Jewel Tea Co. v. Lee's Summit, Mo., 189 Fed. 280, 281.

"Peddling," as used in Rev. St. Wis. 1896, § 1570 et seq., as amended, prohibiting peddling without a license, included a resident of a state who traveled from house to house in a city with a single horse and wagon, taking orders for teas and coffees, etc., by means of samples carried by him, the orders being filled at a store and the parcels delivered by defendant on his next trip, such parcels being made up for each individual purchaser, no goods being delivered by him at the time of taking the orders. State v. Whitcom, 99 N. W. 468, 469, 122 Wis. 110.

"Peddling" is the occupation of an itinerant peddler of goods, who sells and delivers the identical goods he carries with him. It is not the business of selling by sample and taking the order for goods to be thereafter delivered, and to be paid for, wholly or in part, upon their subsequent delivery. Neither a person exhibiting a sample of a range, nor a person making delivery of such ranges, after their sale, in the original packages, are peddlers, within the meaning of a provision in the revenue law that any person carrying a wagon, cart, or buggy, or traveling on foot, for the purpose of exhibiting or delivering any wares or merchandise, shall be considered a peddler, and imposing a license tax. Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Campen, 47 S. E. 658, 664, 135 N. C. 506.

An agent of a corporation, having its place of business in another state, took orders for unframed crayon portraits to be made at the corporation's place of business, and left with each purchaser a memorandum of the agreement which recited that a certain price should be paid for the portrait on delivery, and that, while the purchaser was not obliged to take a frame, all portraits would be delivered in frames. Subsequently defendant delivered the portraits as agent of the corporation, and urged the purchasers to purchase the frames. The facts warranted a finding that defendant was within Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8861, 8862, 8868, making it a misdemeanor to deal as a peddler without a license and defining a peddler as one selling goods, wares or merchandise, by going from place to place to sell the same. State v. Looney, 97 S. W. 934, 936, 214 Mo. 216, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412.

A city ordinance made it an offense to pursue the occupation of a hawker or peddler, without a license, and defined a hawker or peddler as including any person who should travel from house to house for the purpose of selling, offering for sale, or soliciting orders for goods, wares, or merchandise, by sample. A New Jersey corporation engaged in the sale and distribution of teas and spices maintained a warehouse in another city in Michigan, from which its trade in Michigan was supplied. The corporation furnished defendant with a horse and wagon.

and he solicited orders from door to door, and at intervals ordered from the warehouse in Michigan sufficient goods to fill the orders, whereupon he delivered the goods, collected the price, retained a commission, and remitted the balance. Held, that not having had a license, he was properly convicted under the ordinance. City of Alma v. Clow, 109 N. W. 853, 146 Mich. 443.

A traveling soliciting agent who takes orders for goods similar to his samples subject to the approval of his employer who, upon approval of the orders, prepares the goods for delivery and turns them over to him for delivery which he makes, collecting and remitting the price, is not within the statute imposing a tax on peddlers and defining "peddlers" to include all transient merchants and itinerant venders, selling by sample, or by taking orders whether for immediate or future delivery. State v. Bristow, 109 N. W. 189, 200, 131 Iowa, 664.

Sales to regular customers

An oil company, which fills tanks of regular customers every week under a standing order, is not a "peddler," within Ky. St. 1903, § 4215, requiring "peddlers" to take out licenses. Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 112 S. W. 902, 903, 904, 129 Ky. 744.

Single sale

A single sale of merchandise by a person does not establish the fact that he is a "peddler." City of Kinsley v. Dyerly, 98 Pac. 228, 229, 79 Kan. 1, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 405 (quoting and adopting definition in City of Kansas v. Collins, 8 Pac. 865, 34 Kan. 434).

PEDDLER'S NOTES

Notes given for the exclusive right to sell articles in a certain territory are "peddler's notes," within a statute making void a note given for rights by a peddler, unless indorsed "peddler's note." McAfee v. Mercer Nat. Bank (Ky.) 104 S. W. 287.

Ky. St. § 4223, makes notes given to a peddler void if not so indorsed thereon. Section 4216 defines as peddlers itinerant persons vending goods, wares, and merchandise, jewelry, and other things not therein specifically exempt; and section 4218 exempts from the previous section tinware, agricultural implements, sewing machines, portable mills, books, meat, etc., and things sold by sample by merchants. Section 4224, fixing the amount of the license tax paid by peddlers, provides that one with a two-horse wagon should pay a certain sum, one on horseback another sum, and one on foot, carrying articles on his person, another sum. The notes sued on were given for an automobile, dinner sets, and other articles, sold to defendants by the traveling agent of plaintiff's indorser, a manufacturing company, under a contract which did not pass title until the order from the purchaser was accepted by the agent's principal; the articles not being delivered until after the order was accepted, and the agent's only duty being to take and forward the order and explain his scheme of contest therefor, to be conducted by the purchaser. Held, that the notes sued on were not "peddlers' notes," within the statute. Citizens' Bank v. Crittenden Record-Press, 150 S. W. 814, 815, 150 Ky. 634.

PEDERASTY

As cruelty within the divorce act, see Cruelty.

PEDIGREE

The word "pedigree" means "a line of ancestors, and a requirement to prove lineage of an animal back of the immediate progenitors only to the grandparents was a limitation of proof, rather than an extension. Borden v. United States, 132 Fed. 205, 206.

The term "pedigree" includes the facts of birth, marriage, and death and the times when such events happened. Rowan v. State, 124 S. W. 668, 670, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 625, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1005.

"The term 'pedigree' embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happen." Topper v. Perry, 95 S. W. 203, 205, 197 Mo. 531, 114 Am. St. Rep. 777 (citing Copes v. Pearce [Md.] 7 Gill, 247); Imboden v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 86 S. W. 263, 267, 111 Mo. App. 220 (quoting and adopting the definition in Copes v. Pearce [Md.] 7 Gill, 247).

"The term 'pedigree,' however, embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happened. These facts therefore may be proved in the manner above mentioned, in all cases where they occur incidentally and in relation to pedigree. Thus, an entry by a deceased parent or other relative, made in a Bible, family missal, or any other book, or in any document or paper, stating the fact and date of the birth, marriage, or death of a child or other relative, is regarded as a declaration of such parent or relative in a matter of pedigree." Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Henderson Cotton Mills, 85 S. W. 1090, 1091, 117 Am. St. Rep. 585, 9 Ann. Cas. 162 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104).

"'Pedigree' is the history of family descent, which is transmitted from one generation to another by both oral and written declarations, and, unless proved by hearsay evidence, not competent in general issues, it cannot in most instances be proved at all. Matters of 'pedigree' consist of descent and relationship evidence by declarations of particular facts, such as births, marriages, and deaths." Layton v. Kraft, 98 N. Y. Supp. 72, 74, 111 App. Div. 842.

"Pedigree" is the history of the family descent, which is transmitted from one generation to another both by oral and written declarations, and, unless proved by hearsay evidence, it cannot in most instances be proved at all. Hence declarations of deceased members of a family, made ante litem motam, are received to prove family relationship, including marriages, births, and deaths, and the facts necessarily resulting from those events. Before the declarations can be received as evidence of pedigree it must appear that the person making them was a member of the family, and that he is dead, incompetent, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court. An entry in a family record of the age of a child, made by, or at the instance of, her father, is not admissible in evidence where he is alive and is a witness in the case. State v. Miller, 80 Pac. 51, 52, 71 Kan. 200, 6 Ann. Cas. 58 (quoting Young v. Shullenberg, 59 N. E. 385, 165 N. Y. 385, 80 Am. St. Rep. 730).

PEDIS POSSESSIO

The phrase "pedis possessio" means actual possession. Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819, 6 So. 871, 876; Goldberg v. Bruschi, 81 Pac. 23, 25, 146 Cal. 708.

PEERS

See Judgment of His Peers.

PEN.

In a verdict fixing punishment at three years in the "pen.," the word "pen." is an abbreviation of the word "penitentiary." Denham v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 538, 539, 119 Ky. 508.

PEN

In an action against a railway company for damages for keeping plaintiff's cattle at a certain station in muddy "pens," without feed and water, etc., the proof showed that the cattle were kept in what was known as the "quarantine lane," which was from 100 to 300 yards wide and about one mile in length, through which cattle received might be driven from the pens in the Cherokee Nation to the Osage Nation and avoid the quarantine regulations. Held, that "a 'pen,' in the sense under consideration, is but an inclosure of greater or less dimensions, and with no requisite form," and, since the lane was inclosed and seems to have been but an extension of what was generally designated as the pens, the evidence was admissible under the allegation. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. A. S. Veale & Co., 87 S. W. 202, 203, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 87.

PENAL

An obligation is "penal" in substance when its amount is measured neither by the obligee's loss nor by the valuation placed by him upon what he has given in exchange. In re Caponigri, 193 Fed. 291, 292.

The words "penal" and "penalty" strictly and primarily denote punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws. Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 830, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 227, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 36 L. Ed. 1123, 1127).

In the municipal law of England and America, the words "penal" and "penalty" have been used in various senses. Strictly, and primarily, they denote punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws. But they are also commonly used as including any extraordinary liability to which the laws subject a wrongdoer in favor of the person wronged, not limited to the damage suffered. They are so elastic in meaning as even to be familiarly applied to cases of private contracts wholly independent of statutes, as when we speak of the "penal sum" or "penalty" of a bond. State ex rel. Rodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 964, 197 Mo. 650; Southern R. Co. v. Melton, 65 S. E. 665, 671, 133 Ga. 277 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 227, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

Criminal distinguished

"Penal" is a much broader term than "criminal" and includes many statutory enforcements of police regulations the violations of which are in no sense crimes. Marter v. Kepp, 77 Atl. 1030, 1031, 80 N. J. Law, 530.

PENAL ACTION

A civil action brought under Laws 1879, c. 47, against bank officers for the recovery of deposits received by them while the bank is insolvent or in a failing condition, is upon a liability created by statute, and is not a "penal action," and is governed by the three years' statute of limitations. Frame v. Ashley, 53 Pac. 474, 475, 59 Kan. 477.

"A 'penal action' is a civil suit brought for the recovery of a statutory forfeiture when inflicted as punishment for an offense against the public." Such actions are "civil actions," on the one hand closely related to criminal prosecutions and on the other to actions for private injuries in which the party aggrieved may, by statute, recover punitive damages. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stobie, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

A proceeding, authorized by Acts 31st Leg. c. 17, §§ 9a, 9b, 9c, 9f, 9g, for the revocation by the Comptroller of Public Accounts of liquor licenses for violations of the law by liquor dealers is not a suit by the state for a "forfeiture" or "penalty," within Const. art. 5, § 8, conferring on the district court exclusive jurisdiction of such suits; for, though an official act may be judicial as involving the exercise of discretion and judgment, yet, when discretion is conferred on an executive officer in the discharge of administrative or executive duties, the acts of the officer are not judicial. Baldacchi v. Goodlet (Tex.) 145 S. W. 325, 328.

An action under section 7 of the Anti-Trust Law, Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 210, providing that any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the act may sue therefor in any Circuit Court of the United States, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, is not a "penal action" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1047, prescribing a limitation of five years for a suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States. But the action is one for the enforcement of a civil remedy given by statute for a private injury, compensatory in its purpose and effect. City of Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works, 127 Fed. 23, 29, 61 C. C. A. 387, 64 L. R. A. 721.

PENAL BOND

At common law a "penal bond" conditioned for the payment of money was an obligation to pay a certain sum of money on a day certain under penalty of a larger sum, usually, but not necessarily, double the principal. A bond to pay a monthly allowance to the obligor's wife as alimony is a simplex obligation and not a penal bond. Burnside v. Wand, 71 S. W. 337, 342, 347, 170 Mo. 531, 62 L. R. A. 427.

PENAL LAWS

See Breach of Penal Laws.

A "penal law" "denotes punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its law." Cary v. Schmeltz, 125 S. W. 532, 533, 141 Mo. App. 570 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123; citing Black, Interp. Laws, 292; Whitman v. National Bank of Oxford, 20 Sup. Ct. 477, 176 U. S. 559, 44 L. Ed. 587).

A "penal statute" is one which inflicts a forfeiture for transgressing its provisions. It affords a remedy and supplies defects in the common or statutory law. It involves the idea of punishment, and its character is not changed by the mode in which it is inflicted, whether by civil or criminal procedure. Lagler v. Bye, 85 N. E. 36, 37, 42 Ind. App. 592.

A "penal statute" is one which enforces a forfeiture or penalty for transgressing its provisions or doing a thing prohibited. "Penal" is a much broader term than "criminal" and includes many statutory enforcements of police regulations the violations of which are in no sense crimes. Marter v. Repp, 77 Atl. 1030, 1031, 80 N. J. Law, 530.

Penal laws are those imposing a punishment for an offense against the state, and which are subject to the pardon power. Where statutes or valid rules give one person a private right against another, neither the liability nor the remedy is, in general, strictly or properly penal. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 47 South. 969, 980, 56 Fla. 617, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639.

"Penal statutes," strictly and properly, are those imposing punishment for an offense against the state. And the expression "penal statutes" does not ordinarily include statutes which give a private action against a wrongdoer. Davis v. Mills, 121 Fed. 703, 704, 58 C. C. A. 123 (citing Plumb v. Griffin, 50 Atl. 1, 74 Conn. 132).

"Penal statutes" are "such acts of Parliament whereby a forfeiture is inflicted for transgressing provisions therein enacted," otherwise defined as such statutes as inflict a forfeiture of money or goods by way of penalty for breach of their provisions and not by way of fine for a statutory crime or misdemeanor. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Black. Com. 160).

"Penal statutes" are those by which punishments are imposed for transgressions of the law. They are construed strictly and more or less so according to the severity of the penalty. But the provisions that enforce the wrong for which a penalty is provided, and those which define the punishment, are penal in their character and are construed accordingly. And the same statute may be remedial for certain purposes and liberally construed therefor and at the same time be of such a nature and operate with such harshness upon a class of offenders subject to it that they are entitled to invoke the rule of strict construction. Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 424, 116 Mo. App. 235 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Suth. St. Const. [2d Ed.] § 337).

"Penal laws" are those imposing punishment for an offense against the state, and which, by the American and English Constitutions, the executive of the state has the power to pardon. Smith v. Colson, 123 Pac. 149, 151, 31 Okl. 703 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5269); Southern Ry. Co. v. Melton, 65 S. E. 665, 779, 133 Ga. 277; Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 830, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 227, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 36 L. Ed. 1123, 1127; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. 66, 123, 6 L. Ed. 268, 282; citing United States v. Reisinger, 9 Sup. Ct. 99, 101, 128 U. S. 398, 402, 32 L. Ed. 480, 481).

"Penal laws," however strictly and properly, are those imposing punishment for an offense committed against the state. The test whether a law is penal is whether the wrong sought to be redressed is a wrong to the public or a wrong to the individual. Whitlow v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 84 S. W. 618, 114 Tenn. 344, 68 L. R. A. 503 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

"'Penal laws,' strictly and properly, are those imposing punishment for an offense committed against the state, and which, by the English and American Constitutions the executive of the state, has the power to pardon. Statutes giving a private action against the wrongdoer are sometimes spoken of as penal in their nature, but in such cases it has been pointed out that neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given is strictly penal." United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 156 Fed. 182, 185 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 227, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 36 L. Ed. 1123); State ex rel. Rhodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 964, 197 Mo. 650 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

"Penal laws," strictly and properly, are those imposing punishment for an offense committed against the state, and which by the English and American Constitutions the executive of the state has the power to pardon. "Statutes giving a private action against the wrongdoer are sometimes spoken of as penal in their nature, but in such cases it has been pointed out that neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given is strictly penal. * * * 'Penal statutes are acts by which a forfeiture is imposed for transgressing the provisions of the act. * * * A penal law may also be remedial, and a statute may be remedial in one part and penal in another.' * * * It is said: 'A penal statute is one which imposes a forfeiture or penalty for transgressing its provisions or for doing a thing prohibited.' It is the effect, not the form, of the statute that is to be considered; and, when its object is clearly to inflict a punishment on a party for violating it—I. e., doing what is prohibited or failing to do what is commanded to be done—it is penal in its character. In the decision the distinction between a penal and a contractual liability is made. In the one case the liability arises by a violation of the law. But, where the statute declares that the corporation may transact business and the stockholders shall be liable for debts contracted, then the liability is primary and based upon contract." Southern R. Co. v. Melton, 65 S. E. 665, 679, 680, 133 Ga. 277 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123, Sedgwick, on Stat. Potter's Dwarria, Stat., 74, and 10 Cyc. p. 853).

"A 'penal law' is one which prohibits an act and imposes a penalty for the commission of it; or one which requires the act to be done and imposes a penalty for the neglect or omission to do it." The provision of Immigration Act Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 15, 34 Stat. 903, that the master of any vessel bringing aliens into the United States who shall fail to deliver to the immigration officers at the port of arrival lists or manifests of all aliens on board as required by sections 12 and 13, and containing the information therein specified, "shall pay to the collector of customs at the port of arrival the sum of ten dollars for each alien concerning whom the above information is not contained in any list as aforesaid," is penal in its nature. United States v. Four Hundred and Twenty Dollars, 162 Fed. 803, 805 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

The meaning of the phrase "penal laws," as used in Const. art. 6 § 6, providing that the proceeds of fines for any breach of the penal laws shall be exclusively applied to the support of the common schools, must be ascertained according to the ordinary methods of interpretation. State v. Rose, 97 Pac. 788, 789, 78 Kan. 600.

The "Revenue Acts" are not properly speaking, penal statutes. Hence they are not to be construed with strictness in favor of a defendant. United States v. Three Tons Coal, 28 Fed. Cas. 149, 154 (United States v. Breed, 24 Fed. Cas. 1222).

Rev. Laws, c. 104, § 1, authorizing certain cities, for the prevention of fire, to regulate buildings and to prescribe penalties for violation of such regulations, is a penal statute and in derogation of common right. Commonwealth v. Hayden, 97 N. E. 783, 784, 211 Mass. 296.

A statute requiring corporations to file with a state officer a report of certain facts, and making the corporate officers and directors personally liable for corporate debts on failure to file such reports, is penal in character, and cannot be enforced by the courts of another state. Cary v. Schmeltz, 125 S. W. 532, 533, 141 Mo. App. 570.

Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2864, providing that a railroad shall forfeit $5,000 for death, occurring through the negligence of its officers, employees, etc., is a "penal statute" and in derogation of the common law, and is to be strictly construed. Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 423, 116 Mo. App. 235.

Section 3057, Ind. Ter. St. (section 4746, Mans. Dig.), making a mortgagee who fails, within 60 days after request, to acknowledge satisfaction of a mortgage that had been paid forfeit to the party aggrieved an amount not exceeding the amount of the mortgage money, is not a "penal statute," within the sense of that term as used in section 2949, Ind. Ter. St. (section 4482, Mans. Dig.), constituting a part of the statute of limitations in the Indian Territory, and requiring that all actions based upon penal statutes shall be commenced within two years after the offense shall have been committed or the cause of action shall have accrued. Smith v. Colson, 123 Pac. 149, 150, 31 Okl. 703.

Act No. 206, p. 316, Pub. Acts 1901, § 1, as amended, imposing a penalty on foreign corporations doing business in the state without filing its articles of incorporation, to be recovered by an action in the name of the people of the state, is a penal statute; it being within the definitions that a penal statute is one imposing a penalty for doing that which the statute prohibits, or for omitting to do that which a statute requires, or is one which enforces a forfeiture or penalty for transgressing its provisions or doing a thing prohibited. People v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 115 N. W. 705, 706, 151 Mich. 618.

A statute which subjects one person to the payment of money to another, without reference to any actual injury, and without requiring him either to allege or prove the actual injury, is a penal statute and hence Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4269 (Pierce's Code, § 7070), making it the duty of the trustees of a corporation to keep a book containing the names of stockholders showing the number of their shares, which book, during the usual business hours, shall be open for inspection of stockholders and creditors, and providing that any stockholder or creditor of the company shall have the right to make extracts from such book or demand from an officer a certified copy of any paper placed on file in the office of the company, and section 4270 (section 7071), providing that if the officer having charge of such book or of any papers of the company shall refuse or neglect to exhibit them or allow them to be inspected, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor or punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or by fine, or by both, under 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7435 (Pierce's Code, § 1548), and shall forfeit a penalty of not less than $100 or more than $1,000, such penalty being not as compensation, but as a part of the punishment is a penal statute, and should be strictly construed. Brown v. Kildea, 108 Pac. 452, 453, 58 Wash. 184.

PENAL SUM

Where the parties to a contract for an exchange of land each bound himself in a "penal sum" of $100 for the performance of the contract, on a breach by one of them the other was entitled to recover such sum as liquidated damages. Westbay v. Terry, 103 S. W. 160, 161, 83 Ark. 144.

"With reference to penal actions, the word 'penalty' means the forfeiture inflicted by a penal statute." State ex rel. McNamee v. Stobie, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

"The term 'penalty' denotes money recoverable by virtue of a statute imposing a payment by way of punishment." United States v. Four Hundred and Twenty Dollars, 162 Fed. 803, 805 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

A penalty is a sum of money which the law exacts the payment of by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or omitting to do some act which is required to be done. The imposition of a fine or imprisonment is not in any legal sense a penalty. People ex rel. Kane v. Sloan, 90 N. Y. Supp. 762, 763, 98 App. Div. 450 (citing Village of Lancaster v. Richardson [N. Y.] 4 Lans. 136).

The word "penalty," as used in V. S. § 2019 (P. S. 2381), includes the punishment by confinement as well as fines and forfeitures. Fay v. Barber, 47 Atl. 180, 181, 72 Vt. 55.

The "fines," "penalties," and "forfeitures" contemplated by Code Crim. Proc. § 332, providing that all fines and penalties imposed and all forfeitures incurred in any county shall be paid into the treasury to the support of common schools are all pecuniary—moneys which are paid into the treasury and placed in the school fund and altogether they make a single class, moneys recovered by some sort of punishment, and not as damages by way of compensation or reparation. State v. Rose, 97 Pac. 788, 789, 78 Kan. 600.

While by the word "penalty" may be understood punishment inflicted by law for its violation, it includes also an equivalent by way of damages for a civil wrong. The word "penalty" is used in the latter sense in Laws 1905, c. 232, giving a civil action for the recovery of money or the value of property wagered or deposited on any bet, or the purchase of a pool, and declaring that this penalty is exclusive of all other penalties. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 510, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689 (citing in support of definition, Bouv. Law Dict.).

In the municipal law of England and America, the words "penal" and "penalty" have been used in various senses. Strictly, and primarily, they denote punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws. But they are also commonly used as including any extraordinary liability to which the laws subject a wrongdoer in favor of the persons wronged, not limited to the damage suffered. They are so elastic in meaning as even to be familiarly applied to cases of private contracts wholly independent of statutes, as when we speak of the "penal sum" or "penalty" of a bond. State ex rel. Rodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 964, 197 Mo. 650 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

"The term 'penalty' has been variously defined by the courts of last resort in this country. It is applied in the sense of punishment for crime. It may mean, in a civil action, a sum of money payable as an equivalent for an injury, or a sum of money imposed by statute to be paid as a punishment for the commission or omission of a certain act. The term is also used to designate a gross sum of money to be paid for the non-performance of an agreement; and the legal operation of this is to cover the damages which the party in whose favor the consideration is made may have sustained from the breach of a contract by the opposite party. In several states the words 'penalty' and 'forfeiture' are used as synonymous and interchangeable. * * * In this state, however, statutory penalties whether affixed to violations of civil or of criminal statutes, convey the idea of punishment either for the breach of a public duty by omission or commission, or designate the punishment to be meted out to one who has committed a crime under the laws of the state. So far as those penalties, which are civil in their nature, are concerned, a prescribed sum is recoverable only by the state, and at its instance." Pennington & Evans v. Douglas, A. & G. Ry. Co., 60 S. E. 485, 489, 3 Ga. App. 665.

"Penalties," as used in Const. art. 14, § 7, declaring that the General Assembly in addition to all other "penalties" shall provide for the removal from office of county, city, town, or township officers on conviction of willful, corrupt, or fraudulent violation of official duties, means punishments, fines, forfeitures, deprivation of some office or right for some offense, misconduct, misdemeanor, or delinquency, and the entire section means that the Legislature must provide for the removal of an officer on conviction, but it leaves the question of other "penalties" solely within the realm of legislative enactment. State ex rel. Henson v. Sheppard, 91 S. W. 477, 490, 192 Mo. 497.

Seas. Acts 1907, p. 188, imposing a penalty on a telegraph company for its failure to transmit and deliver messages promptly, with impartiality, and in good faith, does not impose a penalty for the failure to deliver a message at a point where no office is maintained, and, where a contract for the transmission of a message to such point is breached, relief may be had only in an action therefor; the word "penalty" meaning a fine or punishment imposed for a violation of a duty which the wrongdoer is under obligation to perform. Cowan v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 129 S. W. 1066, 1067, 149 Mo. App. 407.

"Penalty" is a mere security for a performance of a contract, and not the price for doing that which the man has expressly agreed not to do. A court of equity fastens upon the real contract and compels the execution of the very thing covenanted to be done. Lanyon v. Garden City Sand Co., 79 N. E. 313, 317, 223 Ill. 616, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446 (quoting with approval from Ropes v. Upton, 125 Mass. 258).

Penalties imposed on a corporation for failure to return increase of capital stock, file reports, etc., are not taxes within the meaning of any law, and are not entitled to priority under the bankruptcy act, and under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57(j), 30 Stat. 560, cannot be allowed except for the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by the act or transaction out of which the penalty arose. A penalty is a fine or punishment or forfeiture, and does not become an obligation until imposed by lawful authority, and the penalties so imposed on the corporation are different from penalties for nonpayment of taxes, the latter being exacted in lieu of interest, while those on the corporation are by way of punishment. In re York Silk Mfg. Co., 188 Fed. 735, 739.

Witnesses examined under a commission issued by a court in Massachusetts, in an action to enjoin the infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, will not be excused from answering questions on the ground that their answers would tend to show a violation of an injunction theretofore granted, which would subject the offender to the consequences of a civil contempt; the fine or imprisonment that might follow not being a "penalty," within Code Civ. Proc. § 837, providing that a witness will not be required to give an answer tending to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Russle Cement Co. v. F. W. Woolworth & Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 82, 62 Misc. Rep. 454.

"In general, a sum of money in gross to be paid for the amount of nonperformance of an agreement, is considered as a 'penalty,' the legal operation of which is to cover the damages which the party in whose favor the stipulation is made may be sustained from the breach of contract from the opposite party." State ex rel. Rodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 964, 197 Mo. 650 (quoting and adopting the definition in Taylor v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. [20 U. S.] 13, 17, 5 L. Ed. 384; quoted in Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

A lease, reciting that it was made in consideration of the covenants of the lessee and of $1,500 paid to the lessor, and providing that the payment should be credited on the rent for the last two months of the term, on the lessee performing the contract, but otherwise the payment should belong to the lessor as a part of the consideration for the lease, merely stipulated that the $1,500 should be applied in payment of rent on a specified contingency, and the $1,500 was not a deposit in the nature of a penalty, but was a payment for which the lease was a full consideration, and, where the lessee voluntarily abandoned the premises, he could not recover the $1,500; a penalty being an agreement to pay a certain sum if the obligor shall fail to fulfill a contract. Dutton v. Christie, 115 Pac. 856, 857, 63 Wash. 372.

By the terms of two notes of $100 each, and the mortgage securing them—given as commission for procuring a loan of $1,000 each of the $100 notes being payable in five annual installments, the first installment of one of them being payable one year after the time for payment of the last installment of the other, which said notes were not to bear interest if the installments were paid when due, and which second note was to be void if the note for the $1,000 loan was paid within five years, and no default was made in payment of the interest on the $1,000 note, or in the payment of the other $100 note—all the installments on the two $100 notes were not only to become due, but were to bear 12 per cent. interest from such time, on any default in payment of an installment thereof or of interest on the $1,000 note. Held, that the default provision did not constitute a "penalty," within Rev. Civ. Code, § 1273, declaring void penalties imposed by contract for any nonperformance thereof. Russell v. Wright, 121 N. W. 842, 844, 23 S. D. 338.

Claim on forfeited recognizance

A claim of the United States on a forfeited recognizance for bail in a criminal case is a "penalty" or a "forfeiture," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57, 30 Stat. 560 which provides that debts due the United States as a penalty or forfeiture shall not be allowed in bankruptcy, except as to the pecuniary loss actually sustained. In re Caponigri, 193 Fed. 291, 292.

Damages synonymous

Fine synonymous

"Penalties" have been held to be fines and capable of collection by indictment or presentment as well as by civil suit." United States v. Tsokas, 163 Fed. 129, 130 (citing United States v. Moore, 11 Fed. 248).

The word "fine" in its ordinary acceptance has the distinct meaning of a pecuniary penalty, and has that restricted meaning in Const. art. 85, limiting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in cases where a fine is imposed, and hence the forfeiture of the right to conduct a barroom, pursuant to section 7 of the Gay-Shattuck law (Act No. 176, p. 239, of 1908), imposed in addition to the fine prescribed by section 6 for its violation, forms no part of such fine, the amount of which determines jurisdiction of an appeal in a prosecution thereunder. State v. Price, 50 South. 794, 795, 124 La. 917, 134 Am. St. Rep. 523, 18 Ann. Cas. 881.

The term "penalties" is synonymous with fines. So the word "penalties," as used in a statute imposing penalties for failure of a railroad to erect water closets at passenger stations, is synonymous with the word fines, and a judgment rendered for the penalty imposed for the violation of such statute does not bear interest. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. State (Tex.) 97 S. W. 724, 725 (citing State v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co., 97 S. W. 71, 100 Tex. 153).

As used in section 9, Immigration Act March 3, 1903, making it unlawful to bring into the United States any alien afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease, and providing that if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought was afflicted with such disease at the time of foreign embarkation and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time such transportation company shall pay to the collector of customs, $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section; and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such fine imposed upon it remains unpaid, the word "fine" means a penalty, and if suable at all, recoverable, in debt, and not through criminal proceedings, and therefore the statutory provision does not create a crime so as to render it unconstitutional because it does provide for a jury trial. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Stranahan, 155 Fed. 428, 431.

The word "fine," as used in Rev. St. 1898, c. 150, providing for the punishment of civil contempt, is not confined to mere indemnity to the injured party. The provisions of this chapter clearly warrant the imposition of a fine or imprisonment or both, in cases where no actual loss or injury is shown, and, in case of actual loss or injury resulting from the alleged misconduct, instead of imposing a fine, a sum is ordered paid to him to indemnify for such loss or injury, and when a fine is imposed it is in the nature of a "penalty" which is to be paid into the state treasury for the benefit of the school fund. Emerson v. Huss, 106 N. W. 518, 522, 127 Wis. 215.

Forfeiture synonymous

The words "penalty" and "forfeiture" are generally used synonymously, and a statute is penal when it inflicts a forfeiture by way of penalty for breach of its provisions. Southern Ry. Co. v. Inman, Akers & Inman, 75 S. E. 908, 910, 11 Ga. App. 564 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5272, 5273).

"Forfeiture" and "penalty" are sometimes used as synonymous and interchangeable terms. Pennington & Evans v. Douglas, A. & G. R. Co., 60 S. E. 485, 489, 3 Ga. App. 665; Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 423, 116 Mo. App. 235.

Provision in a contract that one party shall "forfeit" a certain amount if he breaches the contract does not necessarily imply that the sum specified is intended to be a "penalty." Ross v. Loescher, 116 N. W. 193, 194, 152 Mich. 386, 125 Am. St. Rep. 418 (citing Western Gas Const. Co. v. Dowagiac Gas & Fuel Co., 109 N. W. 29, 146 Mich. 119, 10 Ann. Cas. 224).

An action against a carrier to recover an overcharge brought under a statute which fixes maximum freight rates and provides that for a violation of the act the company should "forfeit" to the person injured five times the charges illegally taken, is one to recover a statutory "penalty"; the essential idea of "forfeiture" being a loss of property inflicted by way of punishment. Herрман v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 9 N. W. 378, 379, 10 N. W. 340, 57 Iowa, 187.

With reference to penal actions the word "penalty" means the forfeiture inflicted by a penal statute. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stoble, 92 S. W. 191, 212, 194 Mo. 14.

A contract provided that for a failure to complete in time the contractor would "forfeit" to the city as liquidated damages a certain sum. Held that though the word "forfeit" ordinarily means "penalty," in view of the fact that it was necessary to complete the contract in the summer months and damage might reasonably follow, a failure to so complete, the damages would be considered liquidated damages. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. City of Wabash, 86 N. E. 1034, 1036, 43 Ind. App. 167.

The term forfeiture in a contract does not necessarily exclude a purpose to make the sum named a "penalty" merely to which the parties may resort for the recovery of the actual damages resulting from breach of the contract. McMillan v. First Nat.

Bank of Bowie, 119 S. W. 709, 710, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 45.

Interest or usury distinguished

The "penalty" is the fine or forfeiture imposed for the offense of usury, usually amounting to a greater sum than the illegal interest contracted to be paid, while "usury" is the illegal interest itself. Sanford v. Kunz, 71 Pac. 612, 613, 9 Idaho, 29.

Legal interest is the measure of damages for failure to pay debts when they are due, and hence a contract to pay an amount in excess of such interest on account of a default in the payment of money when it is due is an agreement for a "penalty" which the courts will not enforce. United Shoe Machinery Co. v. Abbott, 158 Fed. 762, 763, 86 C. C. A. 118.

The statute providing for the collection of ten per cent. interest on special tax bills for the first 6 months excluding the first 30 days and for 15 per cent. per annum thereafter until paid, and allowing interest on a judgment thereafter from the date of its rendition at 15 per cent. per annum, imposed a "penalty." City of St. Joseph ex rel. Gibson v. Forsee, 84 S. W. 1138, 1139, 116 Mo. App. 237 (citing City of St. Louis v. Allen, 53 Mo. 57; Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten, 75 S. W. 464, 176 Mo. 60; Town of Tipton v. Norman, 72 Mo. 880; Eyeraman v. Blaksley, 78 Mo. 145).

The term "interest," when used to designate a rate per cent. to be paid for the use of money, has a distinct significance derived from commercial usage, meaning simply the market value of the use of money, which value may be limited by law; while the term "penalty" is used to designate a clause in an agreement by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money, if he shall fail to fulfill the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement. A "penalty" always includes two distinct agreements, so that when the first is fulfilled the second is void; and when a breach has taken place the obligee has the option to require the fulfillment of the first obligation or payment of the penalty, but not before. National Life Ins. Co. v. Hall, 125 Pac. 1108, 1109, 34 Okl. 395 (citing Words and Phrases).

Liquidated damages distinguished

See Liquidated Damages.

Personal punishment included

The words "penal" and "penalty" strictly and primarily denote punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws. Schick v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 830, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585 (quoting and adopting definition in Huntington v. Attrill, 18 Sup. Ct. 224, 227, 146 U. S. 657, 667, 36 L. Ed. 1123, 1127; The Antelope, 10 Wheat. 66, 128, 6 L. Ed. 268, 282, citing United States v. Reising er, 9 Sup. Ct. 99, 101, 128 U. S. 398, 402, 32 L. Ed. 480, 481).

In Gen. St. 1901, § 7342, providing that the repeal of a statute does not affect "any penalty incurred," the words "penalty incurred" are used in their ordinary meaning, which is a punishment brought upon one's self, and therein are especially, if not solely, applicable to criminal cases. In re Schneck, 96 Pac. 43, 44, 78 Kan. 207.

Punishment synonymous

In a prosecution for larceny, a verdict finding accused guilty as charged, and fixing his "penalty" at one year in the penitentiary, was not insufficient; the word "penalty" being synonymous with the word "punishment," and being evidently used with that meaning. Russell v. State, 133 S. W. 188, 191, 97 Ark. 92.

Liability for statutory damages

An action to recover for timber taken and converted by trespassers on land owned by the state for the enhanced damages above its value brought under Laws 1895, c. 163, § 7, is for a penalty within the limitation acts. State v. Buckman, 104 N. W. 240, 241, 95 Minn. 272.

The delayage charge fixed by demurrage and delayage rule No. 10 of the Railroad Commission, adopted June 8, 1904, for detention of cars in transit, is not a penalty, within Code 1906, § 3101, requiring suits for penalties to be brought within one year; the charge being intended as fixed compensation for the delay. Keystone Lumber Yard v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 53 South. 8, 10, 97 Miss. 433.

In the municipal law of England and America, the words "penal" and "penalty" have been used in various senses. Strictly and primarily, they denote punishment whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws. But they are also commonly used as including any extraordinary liability to which the law subjects a wrongdoer in favor of the person wronged, not limited to the damages suffered. They are so elastic in meaning as even to be familiarly applied to cases of private contracts, wholly independent of statutes, as when we speak of the "penal sum" or "penalty" of a bond. In Acts 1905, p. 120, § 2, providing that the railroad commission shall by rules provide the time in which cars shall be furnished after being ordered, and the "penalty" per day, per car, to be paid by the railroad company if the cars are not furnished as ordered, the word "penalty" was not employed in its strict sense, but as meaning reasonable amount to be fixed by the rule of the commission recoverable by the shipper on account of a failure to furnish to carry his freight within a reasonable time named in the rule. Southern R. Co. v. Melton, 65 S. E. 665, 671, 672, 133 Ga. 277 (citing Hunt-

Liability of corporate officer or stockholder

Where the charter of a corporation prohibited loans of corporate funds to its officers and employes, and declared that the parties consenting to any such loan should be liable for the amount so loaned and all losses or expenses that might result therefrom, "the losses and expenses" incurred should be recovered in equity, although not "the amount so loaned," independent of actual losses and expenses, as that would be a mere penalty. Murphy v. Penniman, 66 Atl. 282, 288, 105 Md. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 583.

Liability on liquor dealer's bond

Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3380, requires that a liquor dealer give a bond to the state, in the sum of $5,000, with two sureties, conditioned that the dealer will not sell or give liquor to minors, and provides that the bond may be sued on by a person aggrieved by its violation, and such person may recover the sum of $500 "as liquidated damages" for each infraction. Held, that the sum recoverable was a "penalty," and an action therefor did not survive, and on the death of the principal on the bond it should be abated as to the sureties. Johnson v. Rolls, 79 S. W. 513, 514, 97 Tex. 453.

PENCIL

So-called soap pencils, for cleaning spectacle and eyeglass lenses, in which soap is the material of chief value, are dutiable as non-enumerated manufactured articles under section 6 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 205, and not as pencils under paragraph 456 (chapter 11, § 1, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 194). United States v. American Express Co., 136 Fed. 594, 595, 69 C. C. A. 368.

PENDENCY OF ACTION

See During Pendency of Action.

PENDENTE LITE

See Injunction Pendente Lite.

"No decree bindeth any that cometh in bona fide by conveyance of the defendant before the bill exhibiteth, and is made no party, neither by bill or order; but when he comes in 'pendente lite,' and while the suit is in full prosecution, and without any order of allowance or privy by the court, then regularly the decree bindeth." This rule had its origin in the civil law, and was pungently stated in the legal maxim "Pendente lite, nihil innovetur." Jones v. Williams, 71 S. E. 222, 224, 155 N. C. 179, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426

See Freight Pending; Lately Pending.

The word "pending," legally speaking means a matter undecided. Smalley v. State (Tex.) 127 S. W. 225, 226.

A matter is deemed to be "pending" until it reaches a final determination in the appellate court. In re Egan, 123 N. W. 478, 488, 24 S. D. 301.

Appeal

An appeal is "pending" when undecided. A case would be pending as well after the appeal is perfected as required by law as if the transcript was on the docket and unsubmitted for review. Gordon v. Rhodes & Daniels (Tex.) 104 S. W. 786, 787 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5276).

Civil action or suit

Suit pending, see, also, Suit.

An action is deemed to be "pending" until the time for appeal has passed. Grannis v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 77 Pac. 647, 649, 143 Cal. 630.

Under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, an action is "pending" from the time of its commencement until its final termination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has expired. Anderson v. Schloesser, 94 Pac. 885, 153 Cal. 219; Di Nola v. Allison, 76 Pac. 976, 978, 143 Cal. 106, 65 L. R. A. 419, 101 Am. St. Rep. 84.

A suit is said to be "pending" in any court of the United States from the time it is commenced, and it cannot be pending until it is commenced. In re Connaway, 20 Sup. Ct. 951, 954, 178 U. S. 434, 44 L. Ed. 1134.

A judgment, abating an appeal rendered on a plea in abatement, disposes of what is as between the parties to the proceeding, a "pending cause" within Gen. St. 1902, § 4840, allowing costs to the prevailing party in causes pending in the Supreme Court of Errors. Sisk v. Meagher, 74 Atl. 880, 881, 82 Conn. 483.

Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 390a, relating to the limitation of actions brought on causes of action arising outside of the state, and providing that it shall not "affect any pending action or proceeding," applies to causes of action existing at the time of its enactment, but on which action had not then been brought. Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. Comar, 151 Fed. 559, 560, 81 C. C. A. 39.

Since the statute allows an application for suit money to be made at any time "pending suit," where plaintiff's petition in divorce contained a formal application for suit money, this was a sufficient foundation for an order allowing the same, though such order was made after final hearing; a suit being "pending" until a final judgment is rendered. Robbins v. Robbins, 119 S. W. 1075, 1076, 138 Mo. App. 211 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5277).

Under Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 2472, providing that while an action for divorce is "pending" the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself or her children, or to prosecute or defend the action, and section 4927, providing that an action is deemed to be "pending" from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, the court referred to in section 2472 is the district court in which such actions are originally commenced, so that the district court has jurisdiction in divorce cases, after appeal has been taken from the judgments of such courts, to make orders directing the payment of costs and expenses necessary in the preparation and perfection of the appeal, and for attorney's fees in prosecuting the same. Roby v. Roby, 74 Pac. 957, 9 Idaho, 871, 3 Ann. Cas. 50.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that an action is pending from the time of its commencement until its determination on appeal, and Civ. Code, § 137, empowering the court, where an action for divorce is pending, to require the husband to pay alimony for the support of his wife and children, or suit money, the court, granting to a wife an interlocutory decree of divorce and permanent alimony, may, on the motion of the wife, desiring to appeal from the judgment fixing the alimony, allow her temporary alimony pending the appeal, together with suit money, notwithstanding section 139, empowering the court, on granting a divorce for an offense of the husband, to compel him to provide for the maintenance of the wife and children, which is inapplicable to orders for payments "pending the action." Bruce v. Bruce, 116 Pac. 66, 67, 160 Cal. 28.

Rev. St. 1909, § 2375, authorizes the court in a divorce proceeding on application of either party to alter the decree as to alimony and maintenance, and provides that the court may decree alimony "pending the suit for divorce," where the same would be just. Held that, where a divorce decree gave the custody of the children to plaintiff until further order of the court, and also required defendant to pay plaintiff $75 a month alimony until otherwise ordered, and defendant thereafter applied for modification to obtain the custody of the children, and to be relieved from the payment of alimony, the suit for divorce would be regarded as "still pending" within such section, and the court was therefore authorized to grant plaintiff's application for temporary alimony to enable her to defend against such application. Smith v. Smith, 132 S. W. 312, 313, 151 Mo. App. 649.

St. 1907, c. 290, effective April 13, 1907, relating to the dissolution of certain corporations, provided (section 2) that nothing in the act should affect any suit pending by or against any corporation mentioned in the first section thereof. Held, that the word "suit," as used in such section, included every proceeding in a court of justice by which a person might pursue a remedy afforded by law, including an action at law, and that the word "pending" was descriptive of the action from the date of the writ, so that, the writ in a suit by a corporation having been dated April 9, 1907, the suit was pending, and was not abated by the dissolution of the corporation under such act, notwithstanding the reference in section 1, to St. 1903, c. 437, §§ 52, 53, continuing the corporate existence of dissolved corporations for three years only, to prosecute and defend suits. Worcester Col- or Co. v. Henry Wood's Sons Co., 95 N. E. 392, 395, 209 Mass. 105.

Under Code, § 3514, providing that an action in a court of record shall be commenced by serving defendants with a notice informing him of plaintiff's name, that a petition is or will be filed, etc., an action is begun by the actual serving of the notice upon defendant, and is "pending" from that time until its final disposition, within the rule that, where two or more suits are instituted between the same parties to determine the same rights, the suit first pending will be continued and the others abated. Boone v. Boone (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1069, 1061.

Criminal prosecution

A criminal case is "pending" in the sense that a court may correct its records until the judgment is fully satisfied. Ex parte Howland, 104 Pac. 927, 928, 3 Okl. Cr. 142, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 840.

Loc. Acts 1907, p. 289, abolishing the county court of Lee county, creating the Lee county law and equity court, and declaring that all cases "pending" in the county court of Lee county are transferred to such law and equity court, includes in the term "pending" proceedings in which a warrant for the arrest of a person had been issued, but not served, at the time of such transfer. Bryant v. State, 48 South. 543, 544, 158 Ala. 26.

Proceeding

The adoption of the preliminary resolution declaring the necessity of a street improvement, such as a pavement or sewer, is, in the absence of a petition by property owners for the improvement, the beginning of a proceeding, which is thereafter "pending" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 79, and unaffected in respect to limitation of rate of assessment by an amendatory act not expressly retroactive. City of Toledo v. Marlow, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 298, 308.

The levy of an execution and an advertisement of the property levied on for sale is not a "pending proceeding" within the meaning of a statute providing that a petition to stay a "pending proceeding" may be brought in the county where the proceeding is pending. Malsby v. Studstill, 56 S. E. 938, 989, 127 Ga. 726 (citing Rounsaville v. McGinnis, 21 S. E. 123, 93 Ga. 579; Macon Navigation Co. v. Stallings, 35 S. E. 647, 110 Ga. 352; Townsend v. Brinson, 43 S. E. 748, 117 Ga. 375).

Where an election at which local option was voted in the county was held to be illegal on an appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals in an election contest, on the judgment becoming final, the contest was no longer "pending" within Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) p. 447, providing that pending a contest of any local option election the enforcement of the local option law shall not be suspended. Savage v. State (Tex.) 138 S. W. 211, 213.

A forcible entry proceeding under Civ. Code 1895, § 4823, is, after service of notice, a "pending proceeding," within Civ. Code 1895, § 4950, which will authorize the judge of the superior court of a county in which it is instituted to entertain an application to enjoin the same at the instance of defendant, though plaintiff may be resident of another county. Ellis v. Stewart, 51 S. E. 321, 123 Ga. 242.

A statute providing that when any bill of exceptions, etc., on motion for new trial is lost or destroyed, and no other record of the trial can be obtained and the action or proceeding is subject to review by motion for new trial "pending" and it is "by the court in which such action or proceeding is pending" deemed impossible to restore the proceedings, etc., the court shall have power to grant a new trial, has reference to a trial court in which the action or proceeding is pending. After the superior court has denied a motion for a new trial in a criminal case and the defendant has appealed, the motion is no longer "pending" in that court. People v. Napoli, 93 Pac. 500, 7 Cal. App. 79 (citing and adopting Peycke v. Keefe, 46 Pac. 78, 114 Cal. 213; Vosburg v. Vosburg, 70 Pac. 473, 137 Cal. 493).

PENHOLDER

Fountain pens without the pen points are not "penholders," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 187, 30 Stat. 166. Schrader & Ehlers v. United States, 180 Fed. 953.

PENITENTIARY

See Jail; Prison.

PENKNIFE

Whether an article is a toy depends on whether it is a plaything; and small knives, with odd-shaped handles, which could not be effectively used for most of the ordinary purposes of a pocketknife, are not in fact used as playthings, are less properly classed as "toys," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 418, 30 Stat. 191, than as "penknives," under Schedule C, par. 153, 30 Stat. 163. A. Kastor & Bros. v. United States, 167 Fed. 993, 994.

PENNY ARCADE

A "penny arcade" is a place where a number of machines are kept for profit, each of which, by a mechanical arrangement, exhibits pictures to a person who drops a penny into a slot. Fichtenberg v. Atlanta, 54 S. E. 933, 126 Ga. 62.

PENSION

"A 'pension' is a bounty springing from the graciousness and appreciation of sovereignty. It may be given or withheld at the pleasure of a sovereign power. Because one is placed upon a pension roll under a valid law is no reason why that law may not be repealed and the pension cease." Eddy v. Morgan, 75 N. E. 174, 178, 216 Ill. 437.

A "pension" is a stated and certain allowance made and granted by the government for valuable services performed in its behalf. It is a reward for continuous faithfulness in the discharge of public duty, and is a compensation for the hazard of the employment. In re Roche, 126 N. Y. Supp. 766, 768, 141 App. Div. 872.

"'Pension' has been defined to be an annuity from the government for services rendered in the past. Under this definition an act requiring fire insurance companies to pay annually a specified sum on premiums to create a pension fund for disabled firemen violates a constitutional provision prohibiting the granting of a pension except for military and naval services." Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 59 S. E. 148, 152, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

"A 'peon' is one who is compelled to work for his creditor until his debt is paid." Bailey v. State of Alabama, 81 Sup. Ct. 145, 151, 219 U. S. 219, 242, 55 L. Ed. 191.

A "peon" is defined as "a debtor held by his creditor in a qualified servitude to work out the debt." The involuntary servitude prohibited by the federal Constitution is a personal servitude. An unwilling servitude enforced by the stronger to collect a debt is to reduce the victim to the condition of a peon, and logically to a condition of peonage. United States v. McClellan, 127 Fed. 971, 976 (quoting Black, Law Dict.).

PEONAGE

See Condition of Peonage; Voluntary Peonage.

"Peonage" is a status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness. Young v. State, 62 S. E. 558, 4 Ga. App. 827; United States v. Cole, 153 Fed. 801, 805.

"Peonage" is a condition of compulsory service, based on the indebtedness of the peon to the master, which indebtedness is the criminal cord by which the peon is held to the master's service. In re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686, 687.

"Peonage," within the meaning of Rev. St. §§ 1990, 5526, which make the same unlawful, and the holding of any person to peonage a criminal offense, is the holding of persons in unwilling servitude in payment of debts, by means either of force or intimidation. United States v. Clement, 171 Fed. 974, 977.

"'Peonage,' however created, is compulsory service, involuntary servitude. A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of service in payment of the debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages or breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service." United States v. Cole, 153 Fed. 801, 805 (quoting and adopting definition in Clyatt v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 197 U. S. 215, 216, 49 L. Ed. 726).

Peonage, within Rev. St. §§ 1990, 5526, making it an offense for any person to hold, arrest, return, etc., any person to a condition of peonage, is the holding of any person to service or labor to pay a debt due from the laborer to the employer, when such employé desires to leave the employment before his debt is paid off; and it is immaterial whether the contract of employment was voluntarily made by the laborer or not, and whether it was made for a present or pre-existing consideration. Peonage Cases, 136 Fed. 707, 708.

The system of "peonage" is a legacy of the Spanish government in the territory of New Mexico. Under the peonage system, a laborer is absolutely compelled to labor until he has paid his indebtedness to his employer. If he attempts to leave or leaves, he can be restrained or forced to return. The employer can sell his unexpired term to any one who will pay the amount due and assume the obligations of the master. One who has obtained money on agreement to work cannot complain of involuntary servitude on an indictment charging the violation of a labor contract under which the accused received and advanced on the date he entered into the contract where he does not controvert the averment of indictment that he has not performed any work at all. State v. Murray, 40 South. 930, 931, 116 La. 655, 7 Ann. Cas. 957.

The statute punishing by fine, a part, of which is to go to the injured party, an employé who, with intent to injure or defraud, contracts in writing to perform services and receives money or property, and, without refunding the same, fails to perform such services, or any person who, with like intent, contracts in writing to rent land and thereby obtains any money or property, and, without refunding the same, refuses to cultivate the land or comply with the contract, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it imposes on accused involuntary servitude similar to the "peonage system" once prevailing in New Mexico. Bailey v. State, 49 South. 886, 888, 161 Ala. 75.

"'Peonage' is a term descriptive of a condition which has existed in Spanish America and especially in Mexico. The essence of the thing is compulsory service in payment of debt. A 'peon' is one who is compelled to work for his creditor until his debt is paid." Hence Code Ala. 1896, § 4730, as amended by Gen. Acts 1903, p. 345, and Gen. Acts 1907, p. 636, providing that the refusal without just cause to perform labor called for in a written contract for employment under which the employé has obtained money which has not been refunded shall be prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud and punishable as a criminal offense, is invalid, tending to cause peonage in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 13, and Rev. St. §§ 1990, 5528. Bailey v. Alabama, 31 Sup. Ct. 145, 151, 219 U. S. 219, 242, 246, 55 L. Ed. 191.

"Peonage" is a status or condition of compulsory service based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. "Voluntary peonage" exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor, while "involuntary peonage" is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages for a breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service. Cr. Code S. C. 1902, § 357, declaring a laborer under contract to labor on farm lands, who shall receive advances and thereafter willfully and without just cause fail to perform the reasonable service required by the contract, guilty of a misdemeanor, is in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 13, prohibiting slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, and of U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1286, § 1990, enacted pursuant thereto, abolishing peonage. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 24, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105.

"'Peonage' is a status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness." Cr. Code S. C. 1902, § 357, providing that any laborer working for a share of a crop, or for wages in money or other valuable consideration, under a contract to labor on farm land, who shall receive advances either in money or supplies, and thereafter willfully and without just cause fail to perform the reasonable services required of him by the terms of the contract, shall be liable to prosecution for misdemeanor and punished by imprisonment, etc., constituted an attempt to secure compulsory service in payment of a debt, which was not within the state's police power to create and punish offenses. Such section, being intended to cover agricultural laborers only, was invalid as a violation of the equality clause of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. The act also authorizes the creation of a system of peonage or involuntary servitude, in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 13, declaring that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the parties have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction. Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986-988 (quoting and adopting definition in Clyatt v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 726).

"Peonage" may be defined as a "status or condition of compulsory service, based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness. As said by Judge Benedict, delivering the opinion on Jaremillo v. Romero, 1 N. M. 190, 194: 'One fact existed universally—all were indebted to their masters. This was the cord by which they seemed bound to their master's service.' Upon this is based a condition of compulsory service. 'Peonage' is sometimes classified as voluntary or involuntary; but this implies simply a difference in the mode of origin, but none in the character of the servitude. The one exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor. The other is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. But 'peonage,' however created, is compulsory service—involuntary servitude. The peon can release himself therefrom, it is true, by the payment of the debt, but otherwise the service is enforced. A clear distinction exists between 'peonage' and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject, like any other contractor, to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service." The enactment of the prohibition against "peonage" in any state or territory of the United States, contained in Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1990, 5526, was authorized by the provisions of Const. Amend. U. S. 13, forbidding slavery or involuntary servitude within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction, and granting to Congress the power to enforce the prohibition by appropriate legislation. Clyatt v. United States, 25 S. Ct. 429, 430, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 726.

PEOPLE

Restraint of, see Restraints of Kings or Princes.

The word "people," as used in the Constitution, means the political society considered as a unit comprising the entire population of all ages, sexes, and conditions. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 74 Pac. 167, 188, 31 Colo. 369, 102 Am. St. Rep. 34 (dissenting opinion).

The word "people," in Bill of Rights, § 4, providing "that people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security," refers to the people as a collective body. City of Salina v. Blakely, 83 Pac. 619, 620, 72 Kan. 230, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196.

The word "people," as used in Const. art. 1, § 2, providing that all political powers are inherent in the people, means the aggregate or mass of the individuals who constitute the state. Solon v. State, 114 S. W. 349, 353, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 261.

Citizen synonyms

The words "the people," as used in a constitutional sense, although as precise and comprehensive as "population," do not include all of the inhabitants of the state in its broadest sense. "The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican constitutions, have the sovereignty and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people and a constituent member of this sovereignty." If "the people" in a constitutional sense means "citizens," it is equally true that in a general sense "people" constitute "population." "People" is defined as "persons generally, an indefinite number of men and women, folks, population, or part of population." The word "population" as used in Const. art. 6, § 20, forbidding a surrogate of any county having a population exceeding 120,000 to practice as an attorney in any court of record, includes only the citizens of the county and not aliens. In re Silkman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1030, 88 App. Div. 102 (citing Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. [60 U. S.] 404, 15 L. Ed. 691; Webst. Dict.).

Inhabitants

The word "people," in 23 St. at Large, p. 1199, § 14, providing that courts and officers of old counties should have full jurisdiction and power in and over the people of the territory within the limits of a new county taken from their respective old counties until officers should be elected and qualified in the new county, is, in a comprehensive sense, clearly intended to embrace the inhabitants of the territory with respect to their personal and property rights and liabilities, and also all personal and property rights and liabilities over which the courts of the several old counties would have had jurisdiction, and concerning which the officers of the several old counties would have had power to act before the new county was created. Rushton v. Woodham, 46 S. E. 943, 944, 68 S. C. 110.

As state

See State.

Voters

The word "people," in Acts 1909, p. 425, providing for the creation of a board of commissioners for a county, defining their duties, and declaring that the act shall not go into effect until ratified by the "people" of the county, means the qualified voters of the county. Tolbert v. Long, 67 S. E. 826, 828, 134 Ga. 292, 137 Am. St. Rep. 222.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE

The phrase "the people of the state," in a contract "between the people of the state of New York, represented by the Board of Managers of the New York State Reformatory" and a convict labor contractor, is used to signify the people as a body politic or as a political entity called the "state," and not as meaning the people as the sovereign power in the state. F. H. Mills Co. v. State, 97 N. Y. Supp. 676, 677, 681, 110 App. Div. 843.

When the term "people of the state" is used to designate the beneficiaries of the trust in navigable waters, all the people who may choose to enjoy the same within the state are referred to, whether citizens of the state or persons who come within its territory for the purpose of enjoying such public rights. Rossmiller v. State, 89 N. W. 839, 844, 114 Wis. 169, 58 L. R. A. 93, 91 Am. St. Rep. 910.

PEPPER

See Pure Pepper.

Unground pepper, see Unground.

PER

See As Per.

The word "per" means "by." Johnson v. State (Tex.) 99 S. W. 404, 405.

The term "per 100" in a contract for the sale of "500 sax Bayo, at $3.50 per 100," meant that the sale was of 500 sacks of Bayou beans at $3.50 per 100 pounds. Gardiner v. McDonough, 81 Pac. 964, 966, 147 Cal. 313.

PER ACRE

When one uses in a clause of admeasurement such words as "per acre," he ordinarily means an entire unit of the quantity designated and not a fractional interest therein, and, when he prefixes the phrase "at the rate of," such conclusion is strengthened. Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 367, 72 C. C. A. 140.

PER ANNUM

See Per Cent. Per Annum.

The term "per annum," in a municipal bond providing for a payment of 5 per cent. "per annum," means annually, and the specified interest is payable annually. Murphy v. City of San Luis Obispo (Cal.) 48 Pac. 974, 976.

Civ. Code Alaska, § 255, fixing the rate of interest which may be agreed on, construed and held, that the words "per annum" are understood according to standard rules of grammar; that the section is not ambiguous. Raymond v. Hemple, 2 Alaska, 343.

In a contract between a city and a telephone company, whereby the company should not charge more than a certain amount "per annum" for a telephone in a party residence, the term "per annum" should be construed to designate the rate of charge, and not to imply that subscribers must make contracts on an annual basis. Colorado Telephone Co. v. Fields, 110 Pac. 571, 572, 15 N. M. 431, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083.

A statute prohibiting the making of loans, secured by mortgage or pledge, at a rate of interest greater than 12 per cent., without a license, is not vague and uncertain, and therefore void, in that it does not designate the period of time for which the charge over 12 per cent. is made unlawful; the words "per annum" or "for a year" being understood. Commonwealth v. Morris, 56 N. E. 896, 897, 176 Mass. 19.

PER CAPITA

As share, see Share and Share Alike.

Equally divided as creating division per capita, see Equally Divided.

PER CURIAM

A "per curiam" decision announces, in effect, that all the justices of the court are of one mind regarding the same, and that the case is so clear as to render discussion thereof unnecessary. Minor v. Fike, 93 Pac. 264, 77 Kan. 806 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5285).

PER DIEM

As fees, see Fees.

PER DOZEN

When one uses in a clause of admeasurement such words as "per dozen," he ordinarily means an entire unit of the quantity or number designated, and not a fractional interest therein, and, when he prefixes the phrase "at the rate of," such conclusion is strengthened. Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 367, 72 C. C. A. 140.

PER POUND

When one uses in a clause of admeasurement such words as "per pound," he ordinarily means an entire unit of the quantity or number designated, and not a fractional interest therein, and, when he prefixes the phrase "at the rate of," such conclusion is strengthened. Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 367, 72 C. C. A. 140.

PER SE

See Negligence Per Se; Nuisance Per Se.

Libelous per se, see Libel.

Slander per se, see Slander.

Steal as actionable per se, see Steal.

PER STIRPES

Equally divided as creating division per stirpes, see Equally Divided.

The expression "per stirpes" means to take by stock or through a common source, and when applied to estates signifies that the particular descendants shall take among themselves the share of their deceased parent. Parrish v. Mills (Tex.) 102 S. W. 184, 188.

PER TON

When one uses in a clause of admeasurement such words as "per ton," he ordinarily means an entire unit of the quantity or number designated, and not a fractional interest therein, and, when he prefixes the phrase "at the rate of," such conclusion is strengthened. Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 367, 72 C. C. A. 140.

PER YEAR

"The words 'per year' are equivalent to the word 'annually.'" In the absence of terms indicating a contrary intention, a covenant in a gas and oil lease to drill a well on the leased premises within two years, or thereafter to pay $80 "annually" until a well is drilled, does not require the annual payments to be made in advance, and the covenant is performed by a single payment of the entire sum at any time before the end of the year for which it is made. Rhodes v. Mound City Gas, Coal & Oil Co., 104 Pac. 851, 852, 80 Kan. 762 (citing Curtiss v. Howell, 39 N. Y. 211, 213).

PER CENT.

See Five and One Per Cent.

The apportionment of benefits by percentages held valid.

(a) The placing of the words "per cent." at the head of a column of decimal fractions, apportioning such decimal fractional part of the total benefits as is received by the specific tract opposite such decimal fraction to it, does not indicate that the tax to be calculated thereon shall be computed by taking such decimal fractional part of one per cent. of the entire cost of construction, but, instead, such decimal fractional part of the entire cost. The words "per cent." as so used mean the decimal fractional part or share by decimal part or percentage of the whole. Such schedule of apportionment of benefits by decimal fractional part or percentage thereof will be calculated under the usual interpretation instead of by a strained construction. Hackney v. Elliott, 137 N. W. 433, 439, 23 N. D. 373.

PER CENT. OFF FOR CASH

The words "six per cent. off for cash," as used in a bill of sale, are equivocal in character, and in such a case it is competent to prove to the jury how they are understood by a custom or usage among men engaged in the same class of trade with the plaintiff. Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 122, 137.

PER CENT. PER ANNUM

The words "interest," "rate," and "per cent. per annum" as applied to compensation for the use of money have a fixed and settled meaning in law, and a creditor is required to account for all payments as of the date when received, and if such payments exceed the interest, then earned, they operate to reduce the principal debt by the amount of the excess and in the same proportion reduce the burden of interest thereafter accruing. Iowa Deposit & Loan Co. v. Matthews, 102 N. W. 817, 820, 126 Iowa, 743.

PERAMBULATION

See Writ of Perambulation.

PERCENTAGE

A statute authorizing a city to order any improvements and charge the "cost to abutting property when it does not exceed 50 per cent. of the real estate valuation, exclusive of improvements, within the proposed improvement district, and providing that this limit may be exceeded when any improvement shall be petitioned for by three-fourths of the property owners to be assessed, and when such petition specifies not to exceed a certain higher "percentage," places no limit on the value of the improvements when petitioned by property owners, except that specified in the petition, and the use of the word "percentage" did not limit the assessment to a fractional part of the valuation. James v. City of Seattle, 95 Pac. 273, 276, 49 Wash. 347.

PERCOLATE—PERCOLATION

Movement of water underground through sand and gravel constitutes "percolation." Katz v. Walkinshaw, 74 Pac. 766, 768, 141 Cal. 116, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35.

PERCOLATING WATERS

There will always be great difficulty in fixing a line beyond which the water in the sands and gravel over which a stream flows and which supply and uphold the stream ceases to be a part thereof and becomes what is called "percolating water." Hudson v. Dalley, 105 Pac. 748, 753, 156 Cal. 617.

"Percolating waters" may either be rain waters which are slowly infiltrating through the soil, or they may be waters seeping through the banks or bed of a stream, which have so far left the bed and other waters as to have lost their character as part of the flow. Montecito Valley Water Co. v. City of Santa Barbara, 77 Pac. 1113, 1116, 144 Cal. 578 (citing Vineyard Irr. Dist. v. Azusa Irr. Co., 58 Pac. 1057, 126 Cal. 486, 46 L. R. A. 820).

"Percolating waters," in the common-law sense of the term, are those that are vagrant, wandering drops moving by gravity in any and every direction along the line of least resistance. The term does not include waters percolating only in the sense that they form a vast mass of water confined in a basin filled with detritus, always slowly moving downward to the outlet in conformity with the physical laws to attain a uniform level. City of Los Angeles v. Hunter, 105 Pac. 755, 757, 156 Cal. 603.

"Percolating waters" are such as ooze or percolate through the earth. Underground waters are presumed to be percolating waters until it is shown that they exist in a known and well-defined channel. Pence v. Carney, 52 S. E. 702, 704, 58 W. Va. 296, 112 Am. St. Rep. 963, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 266 (citing Boyce v. Cupper, 61 Pac. 642, 37 Or. 256).

Waters passing through the sand and gravel constituting the bed of a stream and the lands so nearly adjacent that the only and natural outlet would be through such channel are not "percolating waters," but are a part of the waters of the stream. Buckers Irr. Mill & Imp. Co. v. Farmers' Independent Ditch Co., 72 Pac. 49, 52, 31 Colo. 62.

"In the absence of statutory regulations or private agreements, all waters are, in contemplation of law, regarded as either 'flowing' or 'percolating.' The former consists of those bodies, such as lakes, ponds, and streams, which are upon or beneath the surface of the earth, and whose boundaries and course are well defined and reasonably ascertainable, and whose existence is not of a temporary or ephemeral character. As to these the owner of land has no title. His right to use or divert is measured by its reasonableness and limited to the premises along, through, or over which the waters flow. The reason for this rule is found in the fact that all such riparian owners have rights therein, and one may not unreasonably interfere with another. All waters, not within the above description of 'flowing waters,' are deemed 'percolating.' They are so regarded because, practically, they constitute themselves parts of the substances in which they exist or through which they pass. When found in land, they may not be distinguished in law from the land. They are a part of the same, and the owner of the land is the absolute owner. He may use them where and in such manner as he chooses or dispose of them to others for like use. He is subject only to the general limitation, which has application to all ownership of property, that in its acquisition and enjoyment he may not unreasonably injure or interfere with the rights of others." Hathorn v. Dr. Strong's Saratoga Springs Sanitarium, 108 N. Y. Supp. 553, 554, 55 Misc. Rep. 445.

PEREMPTORY

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE

"Peremptory challenges" to jurors is not the right to select jurors but to reject. Nicholson v. People, 71 Pac. 377, 379, 31 Colo. 53.

A "peremptory challenge" is an objection to an individual juror for which no reason need be given. State v. Ju Nun, 97 Pac. 96, 98, 53 Or. 1 (citing B. & C. Comp. § 118).

A "peremptory challenge" is not one for cause. It is one which the law in its humanity gives to an accused, to be exercised by him without giving or being able to give any reason why the juror should not serve. This challenge excludes a juror on what may be merely the whim of the accused; so great is the law's concern that he shall be tried only by those against whom he does not have even a capricious prejudice. Commonwealth v. Evans, 61 Atl. 989, 212 Pa. 369.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION

"Peremptory exceptions," founded on law, are those which, without going to the merits of the cause, show that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action, either because it is prescribed, or because the cause of action has been destroyed or extinguished." Labarre v. Burton-Swartz Cypress Co., 53 South. 113, 116, 126 La. 982 (quoting and adopting definition in Cross, Plead. p. 156).

PERFECT

Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 10000, 10033, providing that one arrested on a capias shall be entitled to his discharge on executing a bond and perfecting such bail according to the rules and practice of the court, etc., bail is not "perfected" when the sureties justify by affidavit without notice and without allowance, and the statute recognizes the right of the court to make rules regulating the manner of perfecting bail and makes it the duty of defendant to comply with such rules. Ludwick v. Kent Circuit Judge, 101 N. W. 66, 67, 138 Mich. 106.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 569 (Gen. St. 1909, § 6164), an appeal is "perfected" so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction when notice of appeal with proof of service has been filed with the clerk of the trial court, and failure of such clerk to send up the papers until after a year from the judgment or order appealed from will not defeat the court's jurisdiction or prejudice appellant. Schmuck v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 116 Pac. 818, 85 Kan. 447.

Act March 26, 1903, provides that any persons aggrieved by judgment assessing damages for the grading of a highway may appeal by filing an affidavit as required in civil cases, but that the appeal shall be "perfected" within 30 days from the rendition of judgment on the verdict or report. Held, that an appeal was not "perfected" by the filing of appellant's affidavit for appeal and the granting thereof by the trial court, and hence, where no bill of exceptions was filed within the 30 days specified, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Grading Bledsoe Hill, Buchanan County v. Bledsoe, 120 S. W. 1184, 1186, 222 Mo. 604.

"Where a gift inter vivos has been 'perfected' (that is, where nothing more is to be done to vest title in the donee), such gift can be no more revoked by the donor than a sale or any other executed contract." Hence plaintiff, having given all his property to the head of a religious sect absolutely and without reservation as a freewill offering to the Lord, expecting that it would be used for the advancement of the sect and that he would be given a home and cared for at the home of the community, cannot revoke the gift as falling within the rule authorizing revocation of gifts induced by spiritualistic meetings. Williams v. Johnston, 104 S. W. 789, 791, 84 Ark. 109 (quoting and adopting definition in 20 Cyc. p. 1212).

PERFECT AND EFFECTIVE PATENT

A patent under the public land laws of the United States becomes a "perfect and effective patent" when it is executed and is recorded in the office of the recorder of the General Land Office at Washington, and no further act is essential to pass title. Lonaugh v. United States, 179 Fed. 476, 480, 103 C. C. A. 56 (quoting and adopting definition in United States ex rel. McBride v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. Ed. 167).

PERFECT AND SATISFACTORY TITLE

See, also, Perfect Title.

The term "perfect and satisfactory title," as used in a contract for the sale of land, is such a title as is free from grave and reasonable objections, and such title as would satisfy a person of ordinary prudence who is capable of passing upon the title. Smith v. Lander (Tex.) 106 S. W. 703, 704.

PERFECT CONDITION

The amount the lessor is entitled to recover of the lessee for noncompliance with the provision of the lease to turn over machinery, at the end of the term, in "perfect condition" is not what it will cost to repair a broken engine shaft, where it cannot be repaired so as to be as good as before broken, but the cost of a new shaft. Peper v. St. Louis Brass Mfg. Co., 123 S. W. 1012, 1015, 146 Mo. App. 187.

PERFECT GRANT

There is a "perfect grant" of public lands where absolute title takes effect in present. Sena v. American, Turquoise Co., 96 Pac. 170, 171, 14 N. M. 511.

PERFECT INSTRUMENT

Instruments are said to become "perfect" on registration being had or on noting for registration, because they are then good as to all the world from that time. Wilkins v. McCorkle, 80 S. W. 834, 837, 112 Tenn. 688.

PERFECT OWNERSHIP

Ownership is "perfect" when it is perpetual. Where a claim against a city was assigned to a person in payment of a debt due him, and on further condition and consideration that he should devote the balance to be collected pro tanto to the payment of the debts due to the assignor's other creditors in whose favor to that extent such person bound himself by written contracts, as to such proportion of the claim as was needed to pay the debt due to such person his ownership was perfect, being perpetual and unincumbered by conditions. Sintes v. Commerford, 36 South. 656, 659, 112 La. 706.

PERFECT PATENT

See Perfect and Effective Patent.

PERFECT SATISFACTION

A contractor, agreeing to remodel houses to the "perfect satisfaction" of the owner, must perform the work in such a manner that the owner, acting as a reasonable man under the circumstances, must be satisfied with it. Tobin v. Kells, 98 N. E. 596, 597, 207 Mass. 304.

PERFECT TITLE

See Good and Perfect Title; Perfect and Satisfactory Title.

"A 'perfect title' is one which shows the absolute right of possession and of property in a particular person." Henderson v. Beatty, 99 N. W. 716, 718, 124 Iowa, 163 (citing Wilcox Lumber Co. v. Bullock, 35 S. E. 52, 109 Ga. 532).

It is settled in this state that, where the contract of sale calls for a "perfect title," the purchaser may insist upon a "good title of record." Gwin v. Calearis, 73 Pac. 851, 852, 139 Cal. 384 (quoting and adopting definition in Turner v. McDonald, 18 Pac. 262, 76 Cal. 177, 9 Am. St. Rep. 189; Benson v. Shotwell, 25 Pac. 249, 87 Cal. 49; Sheehy v. Miles, 28 Pac. 1046, 98 Cal. 288).

As good both in law and equity

A perfect title is one free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts, and consists of both legal and equitable title fairly deducible of record. Campbell v. Harsh, 122 Pac. 127, 129, 31 Okl. 436.

As good and valid beyond reasonable doubt

A "perfect title" is one that is good and valid beyond reasonable doubt. Dobson v. Zimmerman, 118 S. W. 236, 240, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 394 (citing Reynolds v. Borel, 25 Pac. 67, 86 Cal. 538; Sheehy v. Miles, 28 Pac. 1047, 93 Cal. 288); Henderson v. Beatty, 99 N. W. 716, 718, 124 Iowa, 163 (citing Turner v. McDonald, 18 Pac. 262, 76 Cal. 177, 9 Am. St. Rep. 245).

As merchantable or marketable title

A "perfect title" is one that is merchantable or marketable. Dobson v. Zimmerman, 118 S. W. 237, 240, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 394 (citing McClearly v. Chipman, 68 N. E. 320, 32 Ind. App. 489; Ross v. Smiley, 70 Pac. 766, 18 Colo. App. 204; Birge v. Bock, 44 Mo. App. 69).

PERFECTLY GOOD

The term "perfectly good," as applied to a note, is tantamount to saying that the maker is responsible. Weeks v. Burton, 1 Vt. 67, 69, 70.

PERFECTLY PURE

A company sold defendants tobacco to be paid for in "No. 1. ground Angostura tonka beans," and in a letter stated, "Understand we want the best article and 'perfectly pure.'" Various quantities of apparently unadulterated ground beans were furnished; the company not knowing that they were adulterated. The company's receiver notified defendants that they would be released from the cost of grinding the beans remaining undelivered, and that only unground ones would be accepted. Held, that the contract required defendants to deliver pure, unadulterated ground tonka beans, and that an adulteration containing 85 per cent. barytes and exhausted ginger was not a compliance with the contract, and authorized the receiver to stop the grinding and refuse the adulterated product tendered. Neal & Binford v. Taylor, 56 S. E. 590, 592, 106 Va. 651.

PERFORM

See Being Performed; Do and Perform.

A count in a complaint, alleging that plaintiff duly discharged all his duties under a contract and has performed all the conditions of such agreement on his part to be performed, etc., is sufficient, and states a cause of action, as it alleges in effect that plaintiff "performed" all conditions that were to be performed—that is, fulfilled—by him, since one does not undertake to perform conditions. Wertheim v. Maintenance Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 909, 910, 135 App. Div. 760.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 72, which provides that suit against a corporation must be brought in the county in which its office or place of business is situated or its chief officer or agent resides, or, if the suit be on a contract, in such county or in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, suit on a contract does not lie in a county where it is to be only partly performed, if the corporation has no office, place of business, chief officer, or agent there; the word "performed" as used in the statute being properly understood in its ordinary sense as "carry through," "execute," "accomplish," "make complete," or "perfect." Job Iron & Steel Co. v. Clark, 150 S. W. 387, 369, 150 Ky. 246.

Mechanic's lien

The words "every person who shall perform labor," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 5668, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 294, providing that "every person who shall perform labor" about a mine shall have a lien, etc., applies to ordinary laborers who perform actual, visible toil with their hands or muscles, other kinds of service not being expressly mentioned, and does not embrace superintendents or managers. Durkheimer v. Copperopolis Copper Co., 104 Pac. 895, 896, 55 Or. 37.

Statute of frauds

A contract guaranteeing the condition of a roof for five years was not an agreement which by its terms was not to be performed within a year from the making thereof within the statute of frauds. Phillip Carey Mfg. Co. v. Southern Const., 56 South. 746, 747, 2 Ala. App. 292.

A contract, employing a physician to remain with a lumber company at a certain place, until it "cut out" certain timber, and reciting that the company would be there only about two years, expressed a contingency, which might have happened within one year, and the contract thereby be fully performed, and so was not obnoxious to the statute of frauds, requiring contracts to be "performed within one year" to be in writing. Texarkana Lumber Co. v. Lennard, 104 S. W. 506, 507, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 116.

The word "performance," within the statute of frauds, providing that an agreement which cannot be performed within one year from the date of making it must be in writing, means complete and full performance according to the terms of the agreement, and an agreement fixing a definite period for performance to continue to a date more than one year from the making of the agreement is within the statute, and an agreement which cannot be performed in one year, though it may be performed in one year from the time performance is to begin, is also within the statute. Blest v. Ver Steeg Shoe Co., 70 S. W. 1081, 1086, 97 Mo. App. 137.

PERFORMANCE

See Part Performance; Specific Performance; Substantial Performance.

"Performance" means the doing or completing of an act. Knudtson v. Robinson, 118 N. W. 1051, 1053, 18 N. D. 12.

"'Performance' is, as the term implies, such a thorough fulfillment of a duty as puts an end to obligations by leaving nothing more to be done." McGuire v. J. Nells Lumber Co., 107 N. W. 130, 132, 97 Minn. 293 (quoting and adopting definition in Hare, Cont. 569).

PERFORMANCE OF DUTY

See Die in Performance of Duty.

PERFORMANCE OF THE WHOLE WORK

Where contractors agreed to make all the improvements and repairs and alterations that the owner of a building would need in the future at the regular price, the net price, adding 10 per cent. to the regular price of days' work and ordinary pay for material, and from time to time when work was ordered it was performed, each performance being individual, the only thing agreed upon being the price to be paid, this was not an agreement for the "performance of the whole work," in the sense in which that phrase is currently used in connection with building contracts. Fitzpatrick v. Ernst, 113 N. W. 4, 5, 102 Minn. 195.

PERFORMING

"Performing on a musical instrument" does not consist only in the playing on it in a common way, or fingering the keyboard of a piano, or the strings of a guitar, drawing the bow of a violin across the strings, or breathing into a horn. Rev. St. 1899, § 3018 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1729), forbids a dramshop keeper to keep, exhibit, or use, or suffer to be kept, exhibited, or used in his dramshop, a piano, organ, or other musical instrument whatever, "for the purpose of performing upon or having the same performed upon in such dramshop." Held that, while a Regina Concerto, which is a musical machine set playing by dropping a coin in a slot, and thereby releasing the spring setting the machinery in motion, is a musical instrument, and winding it up and dropping a coin in the slot constitutes performing on it, it is not such a musical instrument as the Legislature meant to designate in the statute, which meant the keeping of an instrument with the intention of the dramshop keeper to perform on it himself or engaging some one else to do so; the word "having" in the phrase "having the same performed on" not being synonymous with "permitting," but importing making an arrangement to have an act done. Thiebes-Stierlin Music Co. v. Weiss, 121 S. W. 1099, 1101, 142 Mo. App. 598.

PERIL

See Discovered Peril; Specially Excepted Peril.

PERILS OF THE SEA

By "dangers of the sea" is meant those accidents peculiar to navigation which are of an external nature and arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. Tuckerman v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co., 32 N. J. Law, 320, 323; Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Tuckerman, Milligan & Co., 33 N. J. Law, 543, 551.

By the words "dangers of the sea," in a bill of lading, are meant no other than inevitable perils, or accidents upon that element; and, by such perils or accidents, common carriers are prima facie excused, whether there is any express exception or not. Fergusson et al. v. Brent, 12 Md. 9, 33, 71 Am. Dec. 582 (citing Williams v. Grant, 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235).

"The phrase 'danger of the seas,' whether understood in its most limited sense as importing only a loss by the natural accidents peculiar to that element, or whether understood in its more extended sense as including inevitable accidents upon that element, must still, in either case, be clearly understood to include only such losses as are of an extraordinary nature or arise from some irresistible force, or some overwhelming power, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence." The Nina, 156 Fed. 512, 522 (quoting and adopting definition in The Reeside, 20 Fed. Cas. 458, 2 Sumn. 567).

"Dangers of navigation" or "perils of the sea," as used in bills of lading or concerning shipping, mean only those dangers which are inevitable, and do not excuse the vessel from liability for loss caused by negligence. Pettyjohn v. Oregon Coal & Navigation Co., 113 Pac. 438, 440, 58 Or. 392.

The expression "peril of the sea" has sometimes been used as equivalent to peril on the sea, and the distress or danger from which a vessel has been saved need not, to justify a recovery of salvage compensation, have arisen solely by reason of a "peril of the sea," in the strict legal acceptation of the words. Simmons v. The Jefferson, 30 Sup. Ct. 54, 57, 215 U. S. 130, 54 L. Ed. 125, 17 Ann. Cas. 907.

"Tempests and rough weather are common incidents in sea transit. How long a voyage may continue is beyond the power of prophecy to foretell at the inception of it. Fair winds may serve, or head winds may drive the vessel off her course. The voyage policy continues until the port of discharge shall have been reached, and, if upon goods, until they may have been safely landed. If the goods be of a perishable nature, and decay from a protracted voyage before they can be landed, the loss would not be from a 'peril of the sea.' If the cargo be shaken and stove from the inherent weakness of the packages, unsuited to withstand the roughness of sea transit, or caused by the effect of their contents during the voyage, it would not be from a sea peril, but from natural causes produced either by the fault of the shipper, or by the inherent nature of the goods. The condition of the cargo when landed does not raise the inference that its injury resulted from a sea peril, but the burden rests upon the plaintiff to prove the fact. The general rule is that everything which happens through the inherent vice of the thing, or by the act of the owners, master, or merchant shipper, shall not be reputed a peril, if not otherwise borne on the policy. If the inherent vice be stimulated by a protracted voyage, it is still no loss from a peril of the sea. It is not always easy to mark the line between the ordinary operation of the elements and their perilous action. The latter must be the proximate cause of the loss. Lord Bacon's reason is: 'It were infinite for the law to consider the causes of causes, and their impulsions one on another. Therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause.'" Perry v. Cobb, 34 Atl. 278, 280, 281, 88 Me. 435, 49 L. R. A. 389 (citing Emerig. Ins. 290; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 4 Atl. 121, 65 Md. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 314; Baker v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 12 Gray [78 Mass.] 603; Cory v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14; Gow, Ins. §§ 92, 137).

Act of God

"Perils of the sea" is sometimes construed as equivalent to an act of God, but it has grown to have a wider signification, and the expression is generally construed to denote those accidents at sea peculiar to navigation arising from irresistible forces or overwhelming power which do not happen by the intervention of man, and cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence." Cook v. Southeastern Lime & Cement Co., 146 Fed. 101, 102.

Fire

Loss of goods by fire upon shipboard is not included within an exception in a bill of lading exempting from liability for loss by "perils of the sea." Jennings v. Clyde S. S. Co., 133 N. Y. Supp. 298, 301, 148 App. Div. 615; Seacoast Lumber Co. v. Same, 133 N. Y. Supp. 303, 148 App. Div. 622.

Jettison

If the jettison of cargo or damage thereto is rendered necessary by or due to any fault or breach of contract on the part of the owner or master of the vessel, the loss must be attributed to that cause, rather than to the "sea peril," although that may enter into the case. Corsar v. J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co., 141 Fed. 269, 262, 72 C. C. A. 378.

Negligent stowage of cargo

The phrases "dangers of the sea" and "dangers of navigation" and "perils of the seas" do not indicate any different intent, as used in exceptions in bills of lading, and all are treated as convertible terms. The exception, however, does not embrace losses flowing from culpable or negligent stowage of cargo or other improper acts of the master which are proximate causes of loss. Baxter v. Leland, 2 Fed. Cas. 1048, 1050, 1 Abb. Adm. 348.

Stress of weather

Rough seas, although not extraordinary, are sea perils, and, if sufficient to account for damage to cargo properly stowed, the loss is within the exception of such perils in bills of lading. The Newport News, 199 Fed. 968, 971.

The term "dangers of the sea," as used in a bill of lading, means those accidents peculiar to navigation that are of an extraordinary nature or arise from irresistible force or overwhelming power which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exercise of human skill and prudence; the foundering of a vessel in a storm is nothing of an extraordinary nature, and, to establish the exception, the carrier must go further and prove that the particular storm was of such irresistible force and overwhelming power as that it could not have been guarded against by the ordinary exercise of human skill and prudence. Tuckerman v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co., 32 N. J. 320, 323.

"'Perils of the sea' is sometimes construed as equivalent to an act of God, but it has grown to have a wider signification, and the expression is generally construed to denote those accidents at sea peculiar to navigation arising from irresistible forces or overwhelming power which do not happen by the intervention of man, and cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence. Any loss which might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable skill or diligence, at the time when it occurred, is not deemed such a loss by the 'perils of the sea' as will exempt the carrier from liability; but a loss from the effect of storms and tempests and straining the ship or causing her to leak, whereby damage is done to the goods, may be well attributed to the 'perils of the sea,' although in one sense they may be ordinary accidents. Where it is shown that a wooden vessel was seaworthy at the inception of her voyage, that the cargo was properly stowed and protected, that she was properly provided with pumps and the same were properly worked, that her hatches were properly secured, and that she encountered on her voyage heavy seas of unusual violence adequate to strain her seams and cause her to take in an unusual quantity of water, damage to her cargo therefrom, which it is not shown could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary skill and care, is within the exception of 'dangers of the sea,' in the bill of lading, for which she is not liable." Cook v. Southeastern Lime & Cement Co., 146 Fed. 101, 102.

"The words 'perils of the seas' embrace all kinds of marine casualties, such as shipwreck, foundering, stranding, etc., and every species of danger done to the ship or goods at sea by the violent and immediate action of the wind and waves, not comprehended in the ordinary wear and tear of the voyage, or directly referable to the acts and negligence of the assured as its proximate cause." The iron ship Ninfa, 20 years old, was purchased, and soon thereafter chartered by the new owner to carry a cargo of cement from London to the ports of Los Angeles, Cal., and Portland, Or. At the time of the sale, she was examined cursorily by agents of the purchasers, one of whom tested the deck somewhat with a hammer and a small knife, but no thorough inspection was made. In the north Atlantic she encountered rough weather for several days, during which the seas washed over her decks, and at the end of that time it was found that there was a considerable quantity of water in the hold, which was pumped out. Such water admittedly entered through her deck seams, which were open in places and were partially calked by the master before reaching Portland. The weather encountered was no worse than might have been anticipated, and the ship during the most of the time did not greatly shorten sail and did not suffer material injury. On reaching port the cargo was found to have been seriously damaged by water; the cement in the lower tier of barrels being completely solidified. Held, that the damage was not due to "perils of the sea," in a legal sense, but to the unseaworthiness of the ship, and that the owners did not exercise due diligence in inspection and to make her seaworthy before the commencement of the voyage, such as to relieve the ship from liability. The Nina, 156 Fed. 512, 522 (quoting and adopting definition in Tuckerman v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co., 32 N. J. Law, 320).

"Dangers of the seas," whether understood, in its most limited sense, as importing only a loss by the natural accidents peculiar to that element, or whether understood, in its most extended sense, as including inevitable accidents upon that element, must still, in either case, be clearly understood to include such losses as are of an extraordinary nature, or arise from some irresistible force or some overwhelming power, which cannot be guarded against by the ordinary exertions of human skill and prudence." A failure to discover and repair the rent in the "mast coat" broken in the night, and not discovered or repaired until 4 p. m. the next day, stowing salt over iron and anvils, and stowing iron crates and salt around the mast, without leaving space for water that might come through the mast coat to pass down without coming in contact with the cargo, caused a loss which was not to be attributed to dangers or "perils of the sea." The Nith, 36 Fed. 88, 95, 96.

PERIOD

See Continuous Period; Limited Period.
Such period, see Such.

As continuous period

The word "period," as used in Act Cong. March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, 34 Stat. 1415, which prohibits a carrier to require or permit any employé subject to the act to remain on duty for a longer period than 16 consecutive hours, and requires that after an employé has been continuously on duty for 16 hours he shall be relieved, and not permitted to go on duty again until he has had at least 10 consecutive hours off duty, and that no such employé who has been on duty 16 hours in the aggregate in any 24-hour period shall be permitted to continue or again go on duty without having had at least 8 consecutive hours off duty, provided that no operator, train dispatcher, or other employé dispatching train orders shall be permitted to remain on duty for a longer period than 9 hours in any 24-hour period at stations continuously operated night and day, or for more than 13 hours in stations operated only in the daytime, did not mean a continuous cycle of time without intermission, and hence the fact that a telegraph operator employed by a carrier went on duty at 6:30 a. m. and worked until 12 m., was then given an intermission until 3 p. m., and then worked until 6:30 p. m., making in all 9 hours' actual service, but 12 hours from the beginning to the end, did not constitute a violation of the act. Train dispatchers, being "employés," are within the protection of the main part of the section giving to all employés "at least eight consecutive hours off duty" in each day, counting from some point in the next day, so that it would be impossible for carriers to require of them short service periods spread over the entire 24 hours, giving no opportunity for real recuperation. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 114, 118, 100 C. C. A. 534.

PERIOD OF GESTATION

The "period of gestation" may be safely stated as a general proposition at from 232 to 285 days. "Allowing the greatest latitude of inquiry, I think it should be confined to a period of time between the lowest period of time above stated and that of 300 days before the birth of the child." Soucek v. Karr, 111 N. W. 150, 151, 78 Neb. 488 (quoting and adopting definition in Masters v. Marsh, 27 N. W. 438, 19 Neb. 458).

PERIOD OF IMPRISONMENT

The term "period of imprisonment" as used in Laning's Rev. St. § 11,197, means the term of the sentence less the time deducted for good conduct. In re Ballus, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 682.

PERIODIC TENANCY

While the reservation or payment of rent at stated periods of a year or month is, in the absence of express agreement, the principal criterion to determine the duration of the successive terms of a periodic tenancy, yet, if the basic period is a shorter one than a year, the holding over creates a "periodic tenancy," not from year to year, but for a recurring period fixed by the express or implied terms of the parties. Where a lease expressly reserves a monthly rent, and the tenant holds over after the first month with the landlord's consent, the tenancy becomes a "periodic" one, in which the basic or recurring period is a month. A lease reserving a rent of $60 per month for each month of occupancy prior to July 1, 1909, and $75 for each subsequent month, but containing no agreement as to the time of termination of the lease, was a lease from month to month, though the tenant had the option of converting his tenancy into one for a five-year term. Wall v. Stimpson, 76 Atl. 513, 514, 83 Conn. 407.

PERIODICALS

A German "periodical" published weekly and forwarded to subscribers as soon as published, each number including several serial or continued stories, to which were appended several short articles on other subjects of a miscellaneous character, including a few humorous anecdotes, is not classifiable for duty under the Tariff Act as a "book"; the term "book" as so used being considered a complete book. Schmidt v. United States, 150 Fed. 238, 239.

Although a publication complies formally with the conditions of Act Cong. March 3, 1879, c. 180, § 14, it will not be entitled to second-class postage rates, unless, as required by section 10, it is a "periodical publication," which means that it shall not only have the feature of periodicity, but shall be a periodical in the ordinary sense of the term. United States ex rel. Reinoch v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C. 570, 575, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 166.

The refusal by the Postmaster General to admit to the mails, as a "periodical publication" entitled to second-class rates, a monthly musical publication, each issue of which is complete in itself, treating of the works of a single master musician, with a greater portion of its pages devoted to specimens of his genius, is not so clearly an erroneous exercise of his discretion as to call for interference by the courts. Bates & Guild Co. v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 596, 194 U. S. 106, 48 L. Ed. 894.

"A 'periodical,' as ordinarily understood, is a publication appearing at stated intervals, each number of which contains a variety of original articles by different authors, devoted either to general literature, or some special branch of learning, or to a special class of subjects. Ordinarily each number is incomplete in itself, and indicates a relation with prior or subsequent numbers of the same series. It implies a continuity of literary character, a connection between the different numbers of the series in the nature of the articles appearing in them, whether they be successive chapters of the same story or novel, or essays upon subjects pertaining to general literature. If, for instance, one number were devoted to law, another to medicine, another to religion, another to music, another to painting, etc., the publication could not be considered as a periodical, as there is no connection between the subjects and no literary continuity. It could scarcely be supposed that ordinary readers would subscribe to a publication devoted to such an extensive range of subjects. A book is readily distinguishable from a periodical, not only because it usually has a more substantial binding (although this is by no means essential), but, in fact, that it ordinarily contains a story, essay, or poem, or a collection of such by the same author, although even this is by no means universal, as books frequently contain articles by different authors. Books are not often issued periodically, and, if so, their periodicity is not an element of their character." Books complete in themselves are not, because published at stated intervals and in consecutive numbers, "periodical publications," within Act March 3, 1879, c. 180, § 10, 20 Stat. 359, declaring that mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals. Houghton v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 592, 194 U. S. 88, 48 L. Ed. 888.

Books, being expressly embraced in mail matter of the third class by the act of March 3, 1879, § 17, cannot be removed from that class and given the benefit of second-class postal rates accorded by section 14 to periodical publications, by the simple device of publishing them in a series, at regular intervals of time, whether such publications be reprints of well-known works or new matter. Weekly 32-page publications, each containing a single story, complete in itself, which are generally by the same author, and carry the same character through the series, and leave the reader to expect further tales, but which contain nothing else except a roll of honor, some laudatory letters with insignificant comment, and a page or two containing answers to inquiries, are not "periodical publications" entitled to second-class postal rates, under the act of March 3, 1879, § 14, but are "books," which, by section 17, take the higher third-class rate. Smith v. Hitchcock, 33 Sup. Ct. 6, 8, 226 U. S. 53, 57 L. Ed. 109.

PERIPHERY

By "periphery" generally is meant the outside or superficial part of a body. When applied to a sphere, it is of course the whole of the exterior surface. When applied to a disk, it means, we think, unless a larger meaning is implied, the outer edge of the disk. Motsinger Device Mfg. Co. v. Hendricks Novelty Co., 149 Fed. 995, 998, 79 C. C. A. 505.

PERISHABLE PROPERTY

Corn

Corn is "perishable freight," within Ky. St. 1908, § 785, authorizing a carrier having unclaimed freight not perishable in its possession for one year to sell the same at public auction, on giving notice to the consignor and consignee, etc., and to sell perishable freight as soon as it deems a sale necessary, on giving similar notice thereof, and to retain out of the proceeds the expenses of transportation, storage, advertisement, sale, etc. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Saulsberry, 103 S. W. 254-255, 126 Ky. 179.

PERJURY

See Subornation of Perjury.

See, also, Attempt at Subornation; False Oath; False Swearing.

Etymologically, the signification of the word "perjury" is the false swearing upon oath lawfully administered in some judicial proceeding. United States v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 338 (citing Worcester Dict.; 2 Bouv. Dict. tit. "Perjury").

The offense of "perjury" is committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding or in due course of justice to a person who swears willfully, absolutely, and falsely in a matter material to the issue or point in question. State v. Rash (Del.) 78 Atl. 405, 406, 2 Boyce, 77; State v. Thomas (Del.) 78 Atl. 640, 641, 2 Boyce, 20.

"Perjury" is an offense at common law, and consists of willfully, absolutely, and falsely swearing to a material matter in issue, where a lawful oath was administered in a judicial proceeding or in due course of justice. State v. Shaffner (Del.) 69 Atl. 1004, 1005, 6 Pennewill, 576.

The elements of the crime of "perjury" to be alleged and proved are a judicial proceeding or course of justice; the swearing of defendant to give evidence therein; his testimony; its falsity; and its materiality to the issue or point of inquiry. People v. Tatum, 112 N. Y. Supp. 36, 88, 60 Misc. Rep. 311.

The essential features of "perjury" at common law are the willful making, when under oath in a judicial proceeding or court of justice, of a false statement material to the issue or point of inquiry. The offense consists in the swearing falsely and corruptly and not through mistake. State v. Mercer, 61 Atl. 220, 221, 101 Md. 535.

False testimony circumstantially material, or supporting or giving credit to a witness, or discrediting him with respect to the main facts in issue, is "perjury." People v. Collins, 92 Pac. 513, 516, 6 Cal. App. 492.

"Perjury" is committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding or due course of justice to a person who swears willfully, absolutely, and falsely to a matter immediately in issue or to a material circumstance having a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove the fact immediately in issue. State v. Cline, 64 S. E. 591, 592, 150 N. C. 854.

To constitute "perjury," the party charged must take an oath before some competent tribunal or officer that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly that his written testimony, declaration, or certificate by him subscribed was true, when in fact some material matter so testified, declared, or certified by him was false and untrue, and known by him at the time of taking such oath to have been false and untrue. United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 449.

"Perjury" is the willful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath, or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being known to such witness to be false, and being intended by him to mislead the court, jury, or person holding the proceeding. Herring v. State, 46 S. E. 876, 879, 119 Ga. 709 (quoting Whart. Cr. Law).

A defendant on trial for crime, falsely testifying in response to questions on cross-examination for the purpose of impeachment by showing an inconsistent statement made to a third person, is guilty of "perjury," though the impeaching questions did not specify the time and place of the making of the statement, so that he might have refused to answer them. State v. Carey, 65 N. E. 527, 528, 159 Ind. 504.

"Perjury" may be committed in the giving of a deposition which, by reason of some informality, would have prevented its reception in evidence if it had been offered at the trial. State v. Woolridge, 78 Pac. 333, 336, 45 Or. 389 (citing State v. Whittemore, 50 N. H. 245, 9 Am. Rep. 196).

"Perjury" cannot be assigned on the construction by a witness of a written or oral contract, or a modification of such contract, where it is not alleged that accused has denied that he made any certain statements, or that he in terms promised to do any certain thing. Schoenfeld v. State, 119 S. W. 101, 104, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 103, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1216, 133 Am. St. Rep. 956.

"Perjury" is the willful giving, under oath, in a judicial proceeding or in the course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue. An indictment alleging that accused, after being duly sworn by a justice of the peace to testify the truth on the examining trial of accused and others charged with murder, then pending before the justice, who had authority to administer such oath, unlawfully, willfully, etc., testified that he did not at a certain time and place have a certain conversation with deceased, when in fact accused had such conversation, and that his testimony so given was material and false, charged "perjury," within Cr. Code Prac. § 184, providing that an indictment for perjury is sufficient if it sets forth the substance of the controversy in respect to which the offense was committed, the court or officer before whom the oath alleged to be false was taken, that such court or person had authority to administer the oath with proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the "perjury" is assigned. Commonwealth v. Combs, 101 S. W. 312, 314, 125 Ky. 273 (quoting and adopting the definition in Commonwealth v. Maynard, 15 S. W. 52, 91 Ky. 131).

Defendant and others conspired to defraud entrymen on public lands of the location fees, and, in order to induce them to enter the lands, M. represented to them that he was the agent of a fictitious corporation of whom a fictitious person was president, which corporation desired to purchase the land, and would do so from the entrymen, either for a specified amount, or in accordance with an estimate of timber thereon. Pursuant to such conspiracy, defendants induced the entrymen to sign and swear to entry affidavits declaring that the entrymen were purchasing the land for their own benefit, and not for speculation, and that they had no contract or agreement to transfer the same after they had contracted to convey the land to such corporation. Held that, since M. would have been personally liable on such contracts under the rule that one who holds himself out as an agent of a nonexistent principal is personally liable, the affidavits were in fact false and constituted "perjury," though there was no intention on defendant's part at any time to carry them out or purchase the land. Nickell v. United States, 161 Fed. 702, 707, 88 C. C. A. 562.

Statutory definitions

The term "false," as used in Pen. Code, § 118, defining "perjury," and providing that every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify truly, willfully and contrary to such oath states as true any material fact which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury, means "false in fact," as distinguished from legal falsity. People v. Wong Fook Sam, 79 Pac. 848, 850, 146 Cal. 114.

Under the statute defining "perjury" as the willful false swearing to a material matter, a sworn notice delivered to a sheriff, in which defendant testified that he was the owner of certain property levied on, and had bought and paid for the same, could not constitute perjury, except on a finding that such statements were untrue in fact. State v. Hulsman, 126 N. W. 700, 701, 147 Iowa, 572.

Pen. Code, § 96, declares that a person who swears or affirms that any testimony, declaration, deposition, certificate, affidavit, or other writing by him subscribed is true on any occasion in which an oath is required by law, and who willfully and knowingly testifies, declares, deposes, or certifies falsely in any material matter, or states in his testimony, declaration, deposition, affidavit, or certificate any material matter to be true which he knows to be false, is guilty of "perjury." People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 113 N. Y. Supp. 504, 511, 129 App. Div. 62.

Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2176, defines "perjury" as follows: Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or person in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully and contrary to such oath state any material matter which he knows to be false is guilty of "perjury." An indictment under this statute, alleging that the clerk of the court before whom the false oath was alleged to have been taken had authority to administer it sufficiently, averred that the court had jurisdiction of the cause in which the perjury was committed. Gray v. State, 111 Pac. 825, 827, 4 Okl. Cr. 292, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142.

Construing Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7185 (Pierce's Code, § 1695), declaring guilt of "perjury" a person who, having sworn to testify truly, willfully, and contrary thereto, states as true material matter which he knows to be false, with section 7191 (section 1701), making an unqualified statement of what one does not know to be true equivalent to a statement of what he knows to be false, the common-law and statutory crimes are substantially, if not identically, the same, and a common-law indictment is good under the statute. State v. Bald, 104 Pac. 275, 276, 55 Wash. 302, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 946.

Section 2183, Comp. Laws 1909, which declares that an "unqualified statement of that which one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which one knows to be false," is no part of the definition of "perjury." Rose v. State, 127 Pac. 873, 879, 8 Okl. Cr. 294.

Proceedings in which oath was administered

It is necessary to constitute "perjury," under, as well as independently of, Rev. St. § 2033 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1348), that the false oath or testimony be given in some matter or proceeding before some court, tribunal, or public body or officer. State v. Koslowesky, 128 S. W. 741, 743, 228 Mo. 351.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 82, requiring every pleading to be verified to the effect that the party believes it to be true, and under section 1875, making it "perjury" for one of whom an oath is required by law to willfully swear falsely respecting any matter concerning which the oath is required, a verification of a complaint by a plaintiff stating that the complaint was true as he verily believed was perjury, if willfully false. State v. Luper (Or.) 95 Pac. 811, 814.

The false swearing of any officer of any benefit society or co-operative insurance corporation on any examination by the superintendent of insurance, under Laws 1909, c. 300, adding section 63 to the insurance law (Consol. Laws, c. 28), upon a subject material thereto, constitutes "perjury." People v. Reed, 123 N. Y. Supp. 305, 309, 66 Misc. Rep. 425.

Under Timber & Stone Act June 3, 1878, c. 151, § 1, 20 Stat. 89, which requires applicants to purchase land thereunder to file a verified written statement, and after the required publication of notice to "furnish to the register of the Land Office satisfactory evidence" of certain facts, the regulations of the Land Department, requiring such evidence to be in the form of depositions under oath, are in furtherance of the purposes of the statute and valid, and false swearing in either the preliminary statement or in such depositions constitutes the crime of "perjury" and an offense against the United States, under Rev. St. § 5392. Van Gesner v. United States, 153 Fed. 46, 47, 52, 82 C. C. A. 180.

Rev. St. § 5392, declares that whoever, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, omcer, or person in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he shall testify truly, etc., shall willfully and contrary to such oath state any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury and shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than five years. Section 5393 provides that whoever procures another to commit perjury is guilty of subornation of perjury and punishable as prescribed in the preceding section. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 29, 30 Stat. 554, provides that a person shall be punished by imprisonment for not to exceed two years on conviction of having knowingly and fraudulently made a false oath in or in relation to any proceeding in bankruptcy. Held, that false swearing in bankruptcy proceedings, constituted "perjury," within sections 5392, 5393, Bankr. Act 1898, § 29, being regarded merely as changing the punishment for perjury committed in bankruptcy proceedings; and hence suborning a witness at a hearing in bankruptcy to commit perjury constituted an offense within sections 5392, 5393. Epstein v. United States, 196 Fed. 354, 356, 116 C. C. A. 174.

Administration, form, and making of oath

"Perjury" cannot be assigned of an oath not required by law. United States v. Dupont, 176 Fed. 823, 824.

In an indictment for "perjury," a direct averment that accused was sworn is unnecessary, since the term "perjury," of its own force, implies an oath lawfully administered, whether the crime charged is common-law perjury or statutory false swearing. State v. Webber, 62 Atl. 1018, 1019, 78 Vt. 463.

To make a valid oath for the falsity of which "perjury" will lie, there must be in some form, in the presence of a person authorized to administer it, an unequivocal and present act, by which affiant consciously takes upon himself the obligation of an oath. If the false oath charged is a written statement, sworn to by defendant, it is immaterial whether the oath was administered before or after the statement was reduced to writing and signed; the material point being that defendant was sworn. Markey v. State, 37 South. 53, 59, 47 Fla. 38.

"Perjury" is a false statement, written or verbal, deliberately and falsely made under the sanction of an oath or affirmation legally administered, under circumstances where an oath or affirmation is required by law, or is necessary for the prosecution or defense of any private right, or for the ends of public justice. Warren v. State (Tex.) 122 S. W. 541, 542.

By section 356 of article 27 of the Code, false swearing in an affidavit required by law to be taken is made "perjury." The oath in such cases must have been taken in the presence of an officer or tribunal authorized to administer it, but the competency of the person who reads the words of the oath to the witness and does the ministerial part of its administration is not material. He may be a clerk or his deputy or other person. State v. Mercer, 61 Atl. 220, 221, 101 Md. 535.

Knowledge of falsity of oath

A criminal and corrupt intent is a vital element of "perjury." Rose v. State, 127 Pac. 873, 879, 8 Okl. Cr. 294.

"Perjury" consists not merely in swearing to some material statement which is not true, but in willfully, intentionally, and corruptly falsifying under oath. State v. Loos, 123 N. W. 962, 963, 145 Iowa, 170.

"Perjury" consists in swearing willfully and corruptly contrary to witness' belief, not in swearing rashly and inconsiderately according to his belief. Pilgrim v. State, 104 Pac. 383, 388, 3 Okl. Cr. 49.

The crime of "perjury" or false swearing involves a willful, corrupt misstatement of a fact, in that the witness willfully testifies to a fact as true which he knows to be untrue, or so testifies to a fact as being within his knowledge when he knows that it is not, and does not consist in swearing rashly or inconsiderately, according to belief. Johnson v. Featherstone, 133 S. W. 753, 754, 141 Ky. 793.

"Perjury" consists in the willful giving, under oath or affirmation, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry, before a court or tribunal having legal authority to inquire into the cause or matter under investigation, and, in a prosecution therefor, it is incumbent on the state to show that the accused made the alleged false statements, knowing them to be false, or under circumstances from knowledge may be imputed to him. In other words, that the oath was willfully and corruptly false. State v. Smith, 83 Pac. 865, 866, 47 Or. 485 (citing Hughes, Crim. Proced. § 1582).

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2375, making one guilty of "perjury" who swears willfully and falsely touching a matter material to the point in question, perjury is the willful giving of false testimony, and it exists only where there is the specific intent to testify falsely, and the falsity of the testimony and knowledge thereof are the elements of the offense, and a false statement made through surprise, mistake, or inadvertence is not perjury. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Henby, 97 N. E. 313, 319, 178 Ind. 239.

At common law "perjury" was defined to be a "willful, false oath, by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely in a matter material to the point in question, whether he believed it or not." 2 Chit. Cr. L. 302. Thus the offense had to be "willful," but it was well settled at common law that the use of that identical word in an indictment was not necessary; it being implied from the words "falsely, maliciously, wickedly, and corruptly." 2 Chit. Cr. L. 309; Ar. Cr. Pl. 429; Id. 51, 52. This seems to be contrary to the ruling in United States v. Edward, 48 Fed. 87. Hawkins lays it down in discussing the word "willful," "it must appear by the proof to have been so;" and he defines it as being an oath taken with some degree of deliberation; and if it was the result of weakness in the witness, rather than perversity, or was occasioned by surprise or inadvertency, it could not be taken at common law to be voluntary and corrupt perjury. 1 Hawk. P. C. 319, § 2. If the testimony was induced by duress, it could not be said to be willful, and it may be safely affirmed that, at common law, use of equivalents for the word "willful" was well established, but the question assumes a different phase when we come to consider the authorities arising under the English Statute of Elizabeth (5 Eliz. c. 9), in which the words were "willfully and corruptly commit any manner of willful perjury." United States v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325, 350.

Materiality of statement

It is fundamental that, to sustain a charge of "perjury," the alleged unlawful swearing must be with reference to a matter that is material in the action in which the testimony which is alleged to be false is given. Shevalier v. State, 123 N. W. 424, 425, 85 Neb. 366, 19 Ann. Cas. 861 (citing Coke, Inst. 164; Hood v. State, 44 Ala. 81; People v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137, 48 Am. Dec. 699; State v. Anderson, 2 N. E. 332, 103 Ind. 170; State v. Hayward [S. C.] 1 Nott & McC. 546; Dilcher v. State, 39 Ohio St. 130; 30 Cyc., p. 1435; Gandy v. State, 36 N. W. 817, 23 Neb. 436).

To constitute "perjury," the false testimony must be given concerning a material matter under investigation. A witness cannot be convicted of "perjury" for false testimony which he immediately thereafter fully explained, so that the whole constituted a truthful statement of the fact. People v. Gillette, 111 N. Y. Supp. 133, 138, 128 App. Div. 665 (citing Wood v. People, 59 N. Y. 117; People v. Root, 87 N. Y. Supp. 962, 94 App. Div. 84).

"Perjury" is a crime committed when a lawful oath is administered by any one that hath authority, to any person, in any judicial proceeding, who sweareth absolutely and falsely in a matter material to the issue, or cause in question, by their own act, or by the subordination of others." The materiality of the false testimony is an essential element of "perjury," both at common law and under the statutes. People v. Teal, 89 N. E. 1086, 1089, 196 N. Y. 372, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120, 17 Ann. Cas. 1175 (quoting and adopting the definition in Coke, 3 Inst. 165).

To constitute "perjury," the false statements must be material or such as tend to influence the determination of the issues. It is not necessary that the matter should be directly and immediately material, but it is sufficient if so connected with the matter at issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove some fact that is material, and it may be assigned on false statement affecting credibility of a witness whose testimony was material to the main issue. Ordinarily the materiality of the testimony is for the court. Coleman v. State, 118 Pac. 594, 600, 6 Okl. Cr. 252.

A willfully false statement in an oath to an application for a patent, made as required by Rev. St. § 4892, that the applicant verily believes himself to be the original, first, and sole inventor of the device for which the patent is sought, is of a material matter, and constitutes "perjury," within Rev. St. § 5392. United States v. Patterson, 172 Fed. 241, 247.

Under Pen. Code, § 118, providing that every person who, having taken oath to testify truly before a competent tribunal, states as true and material matter which he knows to be false is guilty of "perjury," an indictment for perjury must show the alleged false statement to be material to the issue, either by showing an action at issue in a court of competent jurisdiction, and alleging that the testimony was willfully and feloniously false, and was material to the issue, or by setting forth the nature of the issue and the evidence given thereon, so that it may be seen that the testimony on which the perjury is assigned was material as a matter of law. People v. Schweichler, 117 Pac. 939, 940, 16 Cal. App. 738.

On a trial for "perjury," committed by accused while a witness on the preliminary examination of L. on a charge of murder, it appeared that the state sought to show that L. rode a gray horse to the place where the killing occurred, and that he returned after killing decedent. The defense was an alibi. Accused testified on the examination that, on the day of the killing, he saw T. riding a gray horse in the town near the place where the killing occurred, and that he remained there for about an hour. Held, that the court properly determined that the testimony was material. Barre v. State, 139 S. W. 641, 642, 99 Ark. 629.

Kirby's Dig. § 1968, defines "perjury" as the willful and corrupt swearing falsely to any material matter in any cause, etc., before any court officer having authority by law to administer oaths. Section 1970 makes it sufficient, in indictments, to set forth the substance of the offense, together with the proper averments to falsify the matter wherein the perjury is charged, without setting forth any part of the record, proceeding, or process. Held, that the false testimony may be shown to be material, either by direct averment, or by allegations from which their materiality appears, and, if a direct averment is made, the question of materiality becomes one of proof of that averment; the indictment being insufficient only if no averment of materiality is made. Smith v. State, 120 S. W. 985, 986, 91 Ark. 200. *

"If the matter falsely sworn to is circumstantially material, or tends to support and give credit to the witness in respect to the main fact, it is 'perjury.'" Code Cr. Proc. § 569, relating to the qualifications of bail, provides that a surety must be a resident and a householder or free holder, worth the amount specified in the undertaking, exclusive of exempt property. Section 572 requires the sureties to justify in all cases by affidavit taken before the magistrate. Section 573 permits the district attorney or magistrate to further examine sureties upon oath concerning their sufficiency in such manner as the magistrate may deem proper. Section 575 provides that, when the examination is closed, the magistrate must make an order either allowing or disallowing bail, etc. A proposed surety on a bail bond appeared before a magistrate and answered questions as to his qualifications, and signed the bail bond and affidavit of qualification, in which he swore that he was a resident freeholder and was worth $1,000 over and above his just debts and liabilities; that his property consisted of a certain described house and lot of land worth a certain sum; and that the title was recorded in his name at the office of the register of the county. His statements as to the ownership of the property were false, and were known by him to be false. Held, that the false statements constituted "perjury," since the sufficiency of the surety on a bail bond is the subject of judicial inquiry, and the statements made in the affidavit of the proposed surety were material to such issue. People v. Davis, 107 N. Y. Supp. 426, 429, 122 App. Div. 569.

Willfully and knowingly testifying to an immaterial fact is not "perjury." It is not necessary, however, that the indictment charge that any or all of the statements therein alleged to have been made by defendant were material or were of and concerning a matter material in the proceeding then being conducted, provided the facts which are set forth therein are sufficient in themselves to show that the sworn statements alleged to be false were material. But the materiality must be shown in the indictment itself, either by direct statement or by the facts stated therein. An indictment for "perjury," committed during an examination of accused in a proceeding by the superintendent of insurance, relating to the affairs of the insurance company of which he was an officer, alleged that it became material in such inquiry whether a contract between accused and the corporation, requiring it to pay him three cents from each quarterly capita tax paid by every member, and one-half cent from each monthly rate payment on certificates issued, was a liability of the corporation, whether the contract was valuable and was binding and a legal claim against it, and whether the corporation owed defendant thereunder, and that defendant falsely and willfully testified that he thought the contract was a liability of the corporation and believed that it was binding upon it and was valuable, and that he considered that the corporation owed him thereunder, when accused well knew that the facts were contrary to his statement of what he thought, believed, or considered them to be. Held, that the indictment did not show false testimony as to a material question of fact, the validity and existence of the contract being questions of law upon which accused's opinion could not be material, and hence the indictment was insufficient. People v. Peck, 180 N. Y. Supp. 967, 969, 146 App. Div. 266.

PERMANENCY—PERMANENT

The word "permanent" is not equivalent to "perpetual" or "unending" or "lifelong" or "unchangeable." Soule v. Soule, 87 Pac. 205, 208, 4 Cal. App. 97 (citing Bishop, Mar., Div. & Sep. § 1386; And. Law Dict., q. v.; Abbott Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.).

"Permanency," in the legal acceptance of the term, does not include the idea of absolute, but only of practical, irremediability. Coleman v. Bennett, 69 S. W. 784, 787, 111 Tenn. 705.

The term "permanent" as used in decisions indicating that personal property of a tangible character, to become taxable, must have acquired a situs of a permanent nature within the jurisdiction of the authority seeking to levy the tax, while it may not mean the continued and unchangeable location of the property at a given place, does intend to include the idea of location which is not of a temporary or fleeting character. Gromer v. Standard Dredging Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 490, 505, 224 U. S. 362, 377, 56 L. Ed. 801.

Citizens of a city, through plaintiff, as trustee, donated conditionally a sum of money to defendant, for which he gave his note, payable in 10 years, but subject to certain conditions, evidenced by a written contract attached, which provided that defendant should reconstruct and operate a manufacturing plant in the city and employ therein a number of workmen, estimated at from 40 to 75; that he should be credited on the note with 10 per cent. of the amount paid out in salaries and wages in the business, and should continue to operate the plant in good faith until the note was fully paid in such manner. It further provided that, in the event of the "abandonment and permanent stopping of the operation of said plant" before the note was so paid, any balance due thereon should be repaid and should become at once due and payable. Held, that the word "permanent," as employed in this contract, did not mean forever fixed and unchangeable, but was used in contradistinction to "temporary," as therein defined, and meant a continued condition of stoppage for other than the temporary causes stated, and which is indefinite and uncertain as to the time it will endure, and that temporary stoppages in operation, caused by strikes, fire, elements, unavoidable accidents or other legitimate causes for the temporary stopping of said business, were not to be construed as a breach of the contract. Castle v. Logan, 140 Fed. 707, 709, 72 C. C. A. 201.

Temporary distinguished

See Temporary.

PERMANENT ABODE

A "permanent abode" is a home which a party may leave as interest or whim may dictate, but which he has no present intent to abandon. Sullivan v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co., 98 N. W. 756, 760, 135 Mich. 661, 64 L. R. A. 673, 106 Am. St. Rep. 403 (citing Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 170).

In determining a voter's residence, within General Election Law, § 66, providing that a "permanent abode" is necessary to constitute a residence, the rules are reasonably well settled that a man must have a residence or domicile somewhere, which, when once gained, remains until a new one is acquired, and that a man can have but one domicile at a time. Welch v. Shumway, 83 N. E. 549, 550, 559, 232 Ill. 54.

PERMANENT ALIMONY

"Permanent alimony" is a gross sum awarded to the wife on dissolution of a marriage to aid in her support. Primarily it signifies not a certain portion of the husband's estate; the controlling element being a compulsory contribution on his part for her support and maintenance under the obligations of the marriage contract. Kiplinger v. Kiplinger, 138 N. W. 230, 232, 172 Mich. 552.

"Permanent alimony" is an incident to and flows from the decree of legal separation, and is granted only after the merits of the case have been determined. McFarlane v. McFarlane, 73 Pac. 203, 205, 43 Or. 477 (quoting and adopting definition in Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 392).

"Maintenance" and "permanent alimony" are synonymous terms, and mean an allowance in money to be recovered on decree of divorce from the party in fault for the support of the innocent party." Huffman v.

Huffman, 86 Pac. 593, 595, 47 Or. 610, 114 Am. St. Rep. 943.

"Permanent alimony" is that provision which the law makes for the support of a wife, or of her who was a wife, out of the estate of the husband after separation, in lieu of his common-law obligation to support her as his wife if they should have continued living together. Tuttle v. Tuttle, 128 N. W. 695, 697, 26 S. D. 545.

The word "permanent" is not equivalent to "perpetual" or "unending" "lifelong" or "unchangeable"; and the term "permanent alimony," as used in the decree of a court, merely designates the character of the alimony which is awarded, rather than the amount to be paid, or the time during which the payment should continue. Alimony awarded by a final decree of divorce is designated as "permanent" in contradistinction from that which is awarded during the pendency of the action, which is designated as "temporary." Permanent alimony is therefore subject to increase or diminution by the court. Soule v. Soule, 87 Pac. 205, 208, 4 Cal. App. 97 (citing Bishop, Mar., Div. & Sep. § 1386; And. Law Dict., q. v.; Abbott, Law Dict.; Bouv. Law Dict.; Stewart, Mar. & Div., § 360; Ex parte Spencer, 23 Pac. 395, 83 Cal. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 266; Wolff v. Wolff, 36 Pac. 767, 102 Cal. 433; Ex parte Hart, 29 Pac. 774, 94 Cal. 254).

PERMANENT DAMAGE

"Permanent damages" are those for which but one recovery may be had; compensation for all the injury the property has sustained in the past and will sustain in the future being included. McHenry v. City of Parkersburg, 66 S. E. 750, 751, 66 W. Va. 533, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

Where a railway company has entered land under a claim of right to do so, and has constructed a road thereon, and is operating it under a legislative charter, ejectment does not lie to oust it, and it cannot be subjected to successive actions of trespass; the owner's remedy being an award of "permanent damages" including recovery for the entire wrong, past, present, and prospective, and, on payment of such damages, an easement passes to the company as in condemnation proceedings. Porter v. Aberdeen & R. F. R. R., 62 S. E. 741, 743, 148 N. C. 563.

PERMANENT DOOR

A door intended to be maintained in a mine as long as coal remains to be mined and removed is, regardless of the amount of coal in the entry closed by the door, a "permanent door," within the meaning of Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, p. 1261, c. 93, § 19, cl. "e," requiring permanent doors to be so adjusted as to close automatically. Madison Coal Co. v. Hayea, 74 N. E. 755, 756, 215 Ill. 625.

PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT

"Permanent employment" means employment for an indefinite time, which may be severed by either party. The term "permanent employment," as used in a contract whereby a corporation agreed to give an attorney permanent employment as counsel if he would render certain services and the scheme involved should prove a success, is satisfied by his employment thereafter for the period of a year at a fixed salary. Sullivan v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co., 98 N. W. 756, 760, 135 Mich. 661, 64 L. R. A. 673, 106 Am. St. Rep. 403 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

"Permanent employment" is understood as meaning that so long as an employer is engaged in his present work, and has work which the employé can do, and desires to do, and so long as the employé is able to do the work satisfactorily, the employer will employ him. Hall v. Hardaker, 55 South. 977, 980, 61 Fla. 267 (adopting definition in Carr v. Carr, 46 N. E. 117, 167 Mass. 544, 85 L. R. A. 512, 57 Am. St. Rep. 488).

Where, as a part of a contract for the settlement of a cause of action for injuries to a servant, it was agreed that he should have subsequent "permanent employment" as a switch tender, it was necessarily implied that the contract should continue only as long as the road continued in business at the place where plaintiff was employed, and he remained willing and able to render the services properly, and conformed to defendant's rules. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cox, 141 S. W. 389, 392, 145 Ky. 667.

PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT

As used in an agreement to give to a railroad company a certain sum of money, in consideration of which the company agreed to permanently establish its terminus and offices at the certain city, did not mean forever or lasting forever. The covenant did not amount to a covenant that the company would never cease to make its terminus at such city, and that whatever might be the changes of time and circumstances of railroad rivalry and assistance, these things alone should remain forever unchangeable. Lucas v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 130 Fed. 436, 438, 64 C. C. A. 638 (quoting Texas & P. R. Co. v. City of Marshall, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 136 U. S. 393, 34 L. Ed. 385).

Where a railroad company establishes and keeps a depot in a certain city, and sets in operation car works and machine shops, and keeps them going for eight years, until the interests of the company and the public demand the removal of some or all of them, it is a "permanent establishment," within the fair meaning of a contract to permanently establish a terminus of its line of railroad at such place, and to construct and maintain its main car works and machine shops there, in consideration of a bonus given by the city. St. Louis, M. & S. R. Co.

v. Houck, 97 S. W. 963, 968, 120 Mo. App. 634 (citing Texas & P. R. Co. v. Marshall, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 136 U. S. 395, 34 L. Ed. 385).

A contract by a railroad to permanently establish its terminus at a certain city is satisfied and performed when it establishes and keeps a depot, and sets in operation car works and machine shops, and keeps them going for eight years, and until the interests of the railroad company and the public demand the removal of some or all of these subjects of the contract to some other place. This was the establishment at that point of the things contracted for in the agreement. It was the fair meaning of the words "permanent establishment," as there was no intention at the time of removing or abandoning them. The word "permanent" does not mean forever, or lasting forever, or existing forever. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 129 Fed. 849, 867, 64 C. C. A. 285, 68 L. R. A. 968 (citing Texas & P. R. Co. v. City of Marshall, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 136 U. S. 393, 34 L. Ed. 385).

PERMANENT FIXTURES

Other permanent fixtures, see Other.

A sawmill and machinery therein, intended to be used permanently and not adapted to any other use, were "permanent fixtures," as between the mortgagor and mortgagee of the land, notwithstanding that the mill site was subject to overflow from a river, and an unfavorable and unsuitable site. Humes v. Higman, 40 South. 128, 129, 130, 145 Ala. 215.

PERMANENT FORM OF GOVERNMENT

The word "permanent," as used in an act to provide a "permanent form of government," implies that prior systems had been temporary and provisional. State v. Harden, 58 S. E. 715, 723, 62 W. Va. 313.

PERMANENT FUND

Where a bequest contained a direction that it should "constitute a 'permanent fund,' the income whereof * * * shall be used for the purpose of keeping my burial plot in the Masonic cemetery * * * in good and proper condition," the trust was not limited to the life of the trustees, but was perpetual in its operation. In re Gay's Estate, 71 Pac. 707, 708, 138 Cal. 552, 94 Am. St. Rep. 70.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT

See Permanent Street Improvement.

"Permanent improvements" made by a parol donee of land are not necessarily everlasting in character, but are only such as rest on or are attached to the soil, and are reasonably enduring, and not intended for removal at the end of a limited term. They include beneficial changes in the premises, like the moving of buildings, the construction of roads, the grubbing of stumps and trees, and it is not essential that the value thereof should aggregate a larger sum, or be equal to the rental value of the land. Albright v. Albright, 133 N. W. 737, 740, 153 Iowa, 397.

Crops of wheat and potatoes were of no permanent value to land, and fertilizers used with the wheat crop, being for the special benefit of that crop, was not a permanent improvement within Code 1904, § 2760, permitting recovery for "permanent improvements." Wright v. Johnson, 62 S. E. 948, 951, 108 Va. 855.

Within Mechanic's Lien Law, giving a lien on land to any person making improvements thereon, and defining "improvement" as work done upon the property, or materials furnished for its "permanent improvement," the tearing down of an old building is not an improvement, since it does not permanently improve the land. Thompson-Starrett Co. v. Brooklyn Heights Realty Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 128, 130, 111 App. Div. 358.

While it is recognized as the general rule that the plowing and cultivation of land theretofore under cultivation does not constitute a "permanent improvement," the breaking and reducing of wild lands to cultivation does constitute such improvement. Where one in possession of lands under a tax deed has been defeated of the possession by the holder of the legal title, and claims compensation for permanent improvements and taxes paid, reasonable rent of the premises without the improvements should be offset, but not rent as increased by the improvements. Gibson v. Fields, 98 Pac. 1112, 1113, 79 Kan. 38, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378, 131 Am. St. Rep. 278, 17 Ann. Cas. 405.

Rev. St. 1909, c. 121, creates the "general state road fund," and section 11,915 requires such fund to be used in the construction of "permanent or continuing improvements, * * * and for no other purpose," and defines the words "permanent or continuing improvements" to be the surfacing of any road with gravel and rock, or with a mixture of sand and earthy material, commonly termed a "sandy clay" road, the grading of the road, and the construction of concrete or masonry culverts, and requires the plans to be approved by the county court and state highway engineer. Section 11,916 provides that the funds cannot be used by a county until it provides for half of the expense of the proposed improvement. Section 11,917 makes the taxable valuation of the counties the basis for distributing the fund, and section 11,918 provides that no part of the fund shall be used for rights of way, or damages to abutting owners. Section 10,229 provides that the funds arising from the sale of stamps required in certain cases to be used in case of future sales of goods shall constitute a "road fund" which the State Auditor shall distribute annually to the counties and in St. Louis city in the same proportion and in like manner as the state school funds are distributed. Held, that the latter statute was not inconsistent with the others, so that the funds arising from the stamp act should not be paid into the "general state road fund." Gasconade County v. Gordon, 145 S. W. 1160, 1164, 241 Mo. 569.

An elevated roadway constructed in a street, partly on posts resting on mudsills and partly on piles, the posts and piles being surmounted with capping or stringers and the whole overlaid with planks, constitutes a "permanent improvement" for which an assessment may be levied against the benefited property, though a permanent fill along the roadway is contemplated if it appears that the roadway is intended to be used as such as long as it can be safely used. Knickerbocker Co. v. City of Seattle, 124 Pac. 920, 922, 69 Wash. 336; Id., 124 Pac. 922, 923, 69 Wash. 365.

Under Lien Law, § 2, defining a contractor as one entering into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof, and defining a materialman as any person other than the contractor furnishing materials for such improvement, and defining the term "improvement" as including the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on real estate, and any work done on the property or materials furnished for its improvement, a contract requiring one to furnish all the window frames, sash, glass, and trim in and to buildings in course of construction for a lump sum, payable in installments as the work progressed, and requiring him to make a large part of the materials according to plans, is a contract for the permanent improvement of real estate within the lien law, and he is entitled to a lien for the materials furnished and work done. Western Sash, Door & Lumber Co. v. Gaul Const. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 1110, 1112.

PERMANENT INABILITY TO LABOR

The term "permanent inability to labor," in an instruction as to measure of damages for personal injury, is not the precise equivalent of "permanent reduction in his power to earn money"; and allowing remuneration for "inconvenience" suffered is too latitudinous. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sights, 89 S. W. 132, 133, 121 Ky. 203.

PERMANENT INCAPACITY

In an action on a benefit certificate, an instruction defining "permanent incapacity" as such as would exist throughout all time could not be complained of by insurer. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen v. Orrell, 69 N. E. 68, 69, 206 Ill. 208.

PERMANENT INHABITANT

A petition was presented for the incorporation of Haines Mission under the act of Congress (83 Stat. p. 529) providing for the incorporation of any community in Alaska having 300 or more permanent inhabitants. The proofs showed and the court found that there were 216 white persons living within the proposed town and 151 Indians. Held, the act of Congress requires at least 300 permanent white inhabitants to incorporate, that Indians are neither electors nor citizens, and cannot be counted, and the petition denied. On the hearing of a petition for the incorporation of Haines Mission, the court held that the Indians living within the town limits were neither electors nor citizens of the United States, and should not be considered in calculating the 300 permanent inhabitants necessary to incorporate. In re Incorporation of Haines Mission, 3 Alaska, 588, 592.

PERMANENT INJURY

See, also, Permanent Personal Injury.

An allegation of "permanent injuries" is not equivalent to alleging loss of time or of earnings. Scholl v. Grayson, 127 S. W. 415.

A "permanent injury" to real property, as distinguished from a temporary or continuing injury, is one of such a character, and existing under such circumstances, that it will be presumed to continue indefinitely. A "temporary or continuing injury" is one that may be abated or discontinued at any time. Worden v. Bielenberg, 138 N. W. 314, 315, 119 Minn. 330.

The fact that a railway embankment and bridge, which cause injury to land by flooding, are of a permanent character would not necessarily render the injuries permanent, the term "permanent," used in connection with such an injury, having reference not alone to the character of the structure producing it, but also to the character of the injury. Hughes v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 924, 926, 141 Iowa, 273, 133 Am. St. Rep. 164.

In an owner's action for damages from the diversion of a natural stream by a railroad construction, the injury is to be regarded as permanent, where the cost of remedying it would be so great as to justify the railroad in condemning the property and taking it under the power of eminent domain; but if the injury can be remedied at a reasonable expense, it may be regarded as temporary, and the question whether the injury is temporary or permanent is for the jury. Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Graham, 144 S. W. 737, 738, 147 Ky. 604.

In an action for personal injuries, the court instructed for defendant that there was no evidence of "permanent injury," and also instructed that the jury should consider the injury to plaintiff's health in the future. Held, that the instructions were not contradictory. Wood v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 95 S. W. 943, 947, 119 Mo. App. 73 (citing Ballard v. Kansas City, 86 S. W. 479, 110 Mo. App. 396).

By "continuing nuisance" or "constantly recurring grievance" or "permanent injury" is meant a nuisance which occurs so often, and is so necessarily an incident of the use of property complained of, that it can be fairly said to be continuous, although not constant or unceasing. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Americus Constr. Co., 65 S. E. 553, 858, 133 Ga. 392.

"Permanent injury," as applied to a nuisance, is defined as whenever the nuisance is of such character that its continuance is necessarily an injury, and, where it is of a permanent character that will continue without change from any cause except human labor, there the damage is an original damage, and may be at once fully compensated. The term "permanent," so often made use of in connection with the right to recover original damages, has reference not alone to the character of the structure or the thing which produces the alleged injury, but also to the character of the injury produced by it. In other words, the structure or thing producing the injury may be as permanent and enduring as the hand of man can make it; yet if the resulting injury be temporary or intermittent, depending on future conditions which may or may not arise, the damages are continuing, and successive actions will lie for successive injuries. Harvey v. Mason City & Ft. Dodge R. Co., 105 N. W. 958, 961, 129 Iowa, 465, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 113 Am. St. Rep. 483.

A case of "permanent injury" to lands where the damages are the consequent depreciation in the market value of the lands is made both by a declaration averring that the overflow, by wrongful obstruction of a creek, washed the soil from plaintiff's land, and rendered it practically worthless, and by evidence that the land was good bottom land, and did not overflow before the erection of the obstruction; that by reason of the overflow and filling of the channel of the creek, caused by the obstruction, the land was practically worthless as farm land; that the overflow ruined it so it would be worthless to cultivate; and that sand was washed on it, and deep gullies made through it. Coleman v. Bennett, 69 S. W. 734, 737, 111 Tenn. 705.

Continuing injury distinguished

An injury is a "permanent" one, as distinguished from a continuing one, when it is done at once by the unlawful act or the negligent omission from which the loss results without any repetition of the act, there being only one act and one damage, though the latter may be composed of several items or consist, for example, in the destruction of several pieces of property, the wrong produces one continuous train of consequences.

and the loss is all traceable back to the single origin. Mast v. Sapp, 58 S. E. 350, 351, 140 N. C. 533, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379, 111 Am. St. Rep. 864, 6 Ann. Cas. 884.

PERMANENT INTEREST

A "license" is a permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor, without having a permanent interest in the land, and is distinguished from an "easement" in that an easement is a right with reference to certain land conferring on the owner of the easement a permanent interest in the land; the word "permanent," being used not in the sense of perpetual, but as relating to a specific period. Borough Bill Posting Co. v. Levy, 129 N. Y. Supp. 740, 742, 144 App. Div. 784.

PERMANENT MERCHANT

"Permanent merchants" are those who have a permanent place of business, and "transient merchants" are transitory or temporary traders, who have no intention of locating permanently. State ex rel. Mudeking v. Parr, 123 N. W. 408, 409, 109 Minn. 147, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759.

PERMANENT MONUMENT

"A mining claim is a 'permanent monument,' as mentioned in a relocation certificate, and, when such claim is mentioned in a location certificate, it will be so construed unless the contrary appears." A certificate of a mining location stated that it was located in a designated mining district and county, and described the claim as lying west of claims designated. The certificate did not give distances or directions. Held, that the certificate was prima facie sufficient, within Rev. St. 1899, § 2546, providing that a certificate of a mining location shall contain a description of the claim by such designation of natural or fixed objects as shall identify the claim. Slothower v. Hunter, 88 Pac. 36, 40, 15 Wyo. 189 (citing Riste v. Morton, 49 Pac. 656, 20 Mont. 139; Hammer v. Garfield Min. & Mill. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 548, 130 U. S. 291, 32 L. Ed. 964).

PERMANENT NUISANCE

A "permanent nuisance" is one of such a character and which exists under such circumstances that it will be presumed to continue indefinitely. Bischof v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 106 N. W. 996, 998, 75 Neb. 838, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486.

PERMANENT ORDINANCE

Municipal Code Act (Acts 1907, p. 831) § 81, provides that no ordinance intended to be of permanent operation shall become a law unless on its final passage the majority of the members elected to the council, including the mayor, of cities of less than 6,000, shall vote in its favor. Held that, generally speaking, a permanent statute or ordinance is understood to continue in force till repealed, and that this was the obvious sense to be accorded to the word "permanent" as used therein, and hence an ordinance determining officers pursuant to sections 17 and 33 (Acts 1907, pp. 799, 811), providing that until validly repealed the offices provided for should exist, to be filled by each succeeding administration, carried on its face an intent to form a permanent rule of government until repealed, and until such time continued in force. Michael v. State ex rel. Welch, 50 South. 929, 933, 163 Ala. 425.

PERMANENT PERSONAL INJURY

"Permanent personal injury" is different from future pain and suffering, and relates to a condition lasting during all the future life of the party injured. Du Cate v. Town of Brighton, 114 N. W. 103, 105, 183 Wis. 628.

PERMANENT RECEIVER

General Corporation Law, art. 11 (Consol. Laws, c. 23), defines (section 106) a permanent receiver as a receiver appointed by or pursuant to a final judgment or a temporary receiver who is continued by a final judgment. Strauss v. Casey Machine & Supply Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 32, 34, 68 Misc. Rep. 474.

PERMANENT REDUCTION IN POWER TO EARN MONEY

As permanent inability to labor, see Permanent Inability to Labor.

PERMANENT RESIDENT

Resident indicating, see Resident.

PERMANENT STREET IMPROVEMENT

The appropriation of money for "permanent street improvements" is not so indefinite as to amount to an invalid delegation of legislative power to executive officers, where, in the year prior to the passage thereof, the committee appointed to investigate the question of permanent improvements reported in favor of a plan for permanent streets paved with asphalt, and an appropriation for such purpose had been made, and a contract let, and work satisfactorily performed on some of the streets of the city. Hett v. City of Portsmouth, 61 Atl. 596, 597, 73 N. H. 334.

PERMANENT STRUCTURE

The word "permanent" does not always embrace the idea of absolute perpetuity, or lasting forever. A structure erected without lawful authority in a street by a corporation organized to hold a street fair, for the purpose of giving a free exhibition connected with such fair, is "permanent" and is a nuisance per se. Richmond v. Smith, 43 S. E. 345, 347, 101 Va. 161.

A tile drain is not a "permanent structure," so as to prevent a purchaser of land injured by its construction from enjoining its removal. Costello v. Pomeroy, 94 N. W. 490, 120 Iowa, 213.

A railroad is a "permanent structure," as that term is used in law. But it does not follow that the failure of the owner of the road to maintain a crossing which it had agreed to do as a condition of a grant of right of way is also a permanent thing, or is included in the building of the road originally omitting to build the crossing. Stein v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 116 S. W. 733, 736, 132 Ky. 322 (citing Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Wilson [Ky.] 76 S. W. 138; Wilson v. Illinois Central R. Co. [Ky.] 92 S. W. 602).

A railroad embankment is generally considered, and properly so, as a "permanent structure." The measure of damages to land made subject to inundation by the negligent construction of a permanent railroad embankment is the difference between the market value of the land immediately before and such value immediately after the construction of the embankment. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Brown, 86 S. W. 659, 660, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 610.

As affecting the damages to be recovered for overflowing land by a structure obstructing a water course, when it would cost as much to alter the structure causing the obstruction, as to build it in the first instance, and it is of a durable character, evidently intended to last indefinitely, it may be regarded as "permanent." City of Richmond v. Gentry, 124 S. W. 337, 338, 136 Ky. 319, 136 Am. St. Rep. 255.

PERMANENTLY

Under Civ. Code La. art. 468, providing that all movables attached by the owner to the land "permanently" are likewise immovables by destination, the word "permanently" is a translation from the French phrase "a perpetuelle demeure," which may be rendered as "to remain perpetually." Morton Trust Co. v. American Salt Co., 149 Fed. 540, 543.

PERMANENTLY DEPRIVE THE OWNER

An information for receiving stolen goods, knowing the same to have been stolen, which alleges that accused received goods, knowing that the same had been taken and carried away from the owner with the intent on the part of the thief "to permanently deprive the owner" of the use thereof, etc., is fatally bad for failing to allege that accused knew that the property had been stolen; the word "stolen" meaning that a larceny has been committed, while the words "to permanently deprive the owner" of his property may not necessarily mean that a crime has been committed. State v. Mayer, 107 S. W. 1065, 1068, 209 Mo. 391.

PERMANENTLY DISQUALIFIED

The laws of a fraternal order, organized for the protection of switchmen, provided that any member who should become totally blind should be considered "permanently disqualified" and should receive the full amount of his certificate, and likewise any physical disability that might "permanently disqualify" a member from performing the duties of a switchman. A member sustaining the loss of an arm, which disabled him from being employed as switchman, is "permanently disqualified," within the meaning of his insurance contract. Switchmen's Union of North America v. Colehouse, 81 N. E. 696, 697, 227 Ill. 561.

PERMANENTLY DONE

See Permanently Employed.

PERMANENTLY EMPLOYED

Act May 1, 1905, to provide for the protection of mechanics, etc., employed in the construction and repair of railway equipment, makes it unlawful for a railroad company or corporation, or other persons who own, control, or operate any lines of railroad in the state, to build or repair railroad equipment without first maintaining at every division point a building or shed over the repair tracks where such work is permanently done, so as to provide that all men permanently employed in the construction and repair of railroad equipment shall be under shelter during inclement weather. Held, that the phrase, "where such work is permanently done," means where constantly done, and the phrase "permanently employed" means regularly employed, and the act applies to repair tracks where the "running repairs" were made consisting of the substitution of new for broken parts on cars and supplying missing parts so as to keep the cars in transit. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. State, 112 S. W. 150, 151, 86 Ark. 518.

PERMISSION—PERMIT

See Indeterminate Permit; Knowingly Permit; May Permit; Unloading Without Permit; Water Permitting.
See, also, Suffer.

The word "permit" means to resign; to allow; to suffer; to put up with; not to prohibit. Murphy v. Roney (Ky.) 82 S. W. 396, 398.

There is no difference between "permitting" and "directing" a verdict so far as those terms relate to the action of the judge or the effect upon the parties. Brooks v. Boyd, 57 S. E. 1093, 1096, 1 Ga. App. 65.

The words "suffer" and "permit," in the statute punishing one who suffers or permits gaming on premises in his possession or under his control, mean that accused must have suffered or permitted gaming, with knowledge that money was bet and won or lost thereby; or the evidence must show facts by which the jury may infer such knowledge. Lancaster Hotel Co. v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 942, 943, 149 Ky. 443.

"'Permission' involves leave and license, but it gives no right. If I avail myself of permission to cross a man's land, I do so by virtue of a license, not of a right. It is an abuse of language to call it a right. It is an excuse or license so that a party cannot be treated as a trespasser." Flaherty v. Nie-man, 101 N. W. 230, 231, 125 Iowa. 546.

The word "permit" means: "(1) To allow by tacit consent or by not hindering; take no steps to prevent; consent tacitly to; suffer. (2) To grant leave to by express consent or authorization; empower expressly." Its use is in the latter sense, in Sayle's Ann. St. 1897, art. 5060g, specifying as one of the conditions of a liquor dealer's bond that he will not give, or permit to be given, any liquor to a minor, and binds the dealer to affirmatively prevent the making of any such gifts in his place of business. A. E. Holly & Co. v. Simmons, 85 S. W. 325, 327, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 124.

"To permit" is defined as meaning to authorize or to give leave; but the term "permit" has often been used synonymously with "suffer," so that it may be said that one who suffers the doing of a thing which he might have prevented permits it. It is in this latter sense that the term is used in Act April 14, 1903, § 24, as amended, making it unlawful to permit a dog to run at large in woods or field inhabited by rabbits. An owner who knowingly allows his dog to run loose, out of his control, in the field of his neighbor where there are rabbits, and where the dog runs and kills a rabbit, "permits such dog to run at large in a field inhabited by rabbits," within the statute. Conner v. Fogg, 67 Atl. 338, 339, 75 N. J. Law, 245 (citing McHenry v. Winston [Ky.] 49 S. W. 4).

By a "permit to close a street" to travel is probably meant a permit to occupy the street; it cannot be taken to be a vote by the proper authorities closing the street to public travel. A permit, although called a "permit to close," implies that the way has not been technically closed to the public travel by the proper authorities. Jones v. City of Boston, 74 N. E. 295, 297, 188 Mass. 53 (citing and following Jones v. Collins, 59 N. E. 64, 177 Mass. 444).

Code Civ. Proc. § 2232, subd. 4, authorizes summary proceedings to recover real property against a person who has "intruded into" or "squatted upon" real property, and has so continued without permission from the person entitled to possession, or after permission given by him has been revoked by notice. Held, that the word "permission," as used in the latter part of such subdivision, had reference to permission given to a person to occupy the premises after such person had intruded into or squatted on the same, and not to permission given to a vendee to occupy the premises under a contract of sale. Stockwell v. Washburn, 111 N. Y. Supp. 413, 415, 59 Misc. Rep. 543.

Under Rev. Laws 1903, § 1806, providing that no person shall employ or "permit" any child under the age of 16 years to have the care, management, or operation of any elevator, and employer is not liable for the act of a boy 10 years of age starting an elevator in full control of an employé; the boy not being an employé, and it only appearing that he had operated the elevator once or oftener on the day of the accident to the knowledge of some employes. La Belle v. Powers Mercantile Co., 114 N. W. 1131, 1132, 103 Minn. 515.

Laws 1901, c. 411, authorizes county boards to place the clerk of the circuit court on a salary basis by resolution, and provides that such salary shall be full compensation for all services by the clerk as such, and requires him to pay to the county treasurer all fees, and other emoluments received by him. Naturalization Act, 59th Congress, June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 13, 34 Stat. 600, authorizes clerks of circuit courts to charge certain fees in naturalization proceedings, one-half of which they are authorized by the act to retain, and the balance they are required to pay over to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. Held, that the words "authorized" and "permitted," as used in the Act of Congress, referred solely to the adjustment between the clerks and the Bureau of Immigration, and did not entitle clerks on a salary basis to hold any part of such fees as against the counties, but that such fees were earned in official capacity, and must be accounted for to the county treasurer. Barren County v. Beckwith, 124 N. W. 1030, 1032, 142 Wis. 519, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 810, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1079.

Franchise distinguished

A franchise to be a corporation and conduct business comes from the commonwealth and is different in kind from a "permit" or location to such corporation to use the streets of a city. A "permit" or location is inferior and subsidiary to the franchise. Sometimes the terms of a permit from, or a contract with, local authorities are incorporated in a franchise; but the functions of a franchise cannot be performed by a permit. A franchise involves a greater or less degree of comprehensiveness and generality, and its exercise something of time and development. A permit, specification, or location is narrow and definite, adapted to immediate or early use or service, and depending upon present conditions. Metropolitan Home Tel. Co. v. Emerson, 88 N. E. 670, 671, 202 Mass. 402.

A privilege granted by a city to an ordinary railroad company to lay and operate its railroad across or along the streets of a city is termed a "permit," a "license," an "easement," or a "right of way," but never a "franchise." McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 158 Fed. 5, 15, 17, 87 C. C. A. 619 (citing City of Denver v. Bayer, 2 Pac. 6, 7 Colo. 113; *Denver Circle R. Co. v. Knowledge and consent implied

The word "permitting," in a charge in an action for injuries to an employé injured by an unguarded machine, which deals with a question of the employer's negligence in "permitting" the guide to be and remain in a defective condition, presupposes the idea of knowledge. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Gelger, 118 S. W. 179, 184, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

Under an indorsement slip attached to an insurance policy, reading "2,500 total concurrent insurance permitted," the use of the word "permitted" shows that the insurer intended to give its consent to something that was prohibited by the policy. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & National Fire Ins. Co., 37 South. 462, 465, 48 Fla. 82, 5 Ann. Cas. 748.

The words "suffer" and "permit," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 1978, and in an indictment based thereon, mean that defendant must have suffered or permitted the game with knowledge that money or property was being bet, won, or lost thereby, or that some fact or circumstance must appear from which such knowledge might be inferred. Bunnell v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 99 S. W. 237, 239.

Under the provisions of the act of March 11, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 223), the "permit," when granted as therein provided for, gives the applicant an inchoate right, which will ripen into a legal and complete appropriation only upon the completion of the works and the application of the water to a beneficial use. The right given by such permit may ripen into a complete appropriation, or may be defeated by the failure of the holder to comply with the requirements of the statute. The permit, therefore, is not an appropriation of the public waters of the state, but is the consent of the state given in the manner provided by law to construct and acquire real property. Speer v. Stephenson, 102 Pac. 365, 366, 16 Idaho, 707.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to plaintiff, a passenger, through being shot by a fellow passenger, an allegation that defendant's brakeman "permitted" the shooting embraced the element of knowledge of the danger threatened or of the facts from which it might have been anticipated; the verb "permit" importing knowledge of the act permitted. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Richardson, 82 N. E. 536, 537, 40 Ind. App. 503.

In an action for injuries to a railroad brakeman owing to his having stumbled over a clinker on the track, an instruction that if defendant "permitted" the clinker to remain on the track, it was an act of negligence proximately causing the injury, and plaintiff was entitled to recover, the word "permitted" did not import knowledge of the presence of the clinker. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Keefe, 84 S. W. 679, 682, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 588.

That a tenant of a building and his subtenant without the knowledge of the owner sold liquors therein did not show a violation by the owner of an injunction against selling or permitting liquors to be sold, since she was not bound to assume that her tenant or his subtenant would violate the law; to permit being to authorize or give leave, and to allow being to acquiesce in or tolerate, and knowledge, express or implied, is essential to be guilty of either. Sawyer v. Mould, 122 N. W. 813, 814, 144 Iowa, 185, 25 L. E. A. (N. S.) 602.

The word "permits," in the statute punishing any man who "permits" the placing of his wife in a house of ill fame, or allows or permits his wife to remain therein, is almost identical in meaning with the word "allows," and implies a sort of assent on the part of the husband, and there must be some active wish, or at least willingness in his mind, after he has knowledge of her presence in the house, that she shall continue there, and means something more than mere indifference to her whereabouts, or passive sufferance in a case where the circumstances do not call on him to interfere with her conduct. People v. Conness, 88 Pac. 821, 824, 150 Cal. 114.

The word "permit" as used in Rev. Codes 1890, § 7610, providing that if any person shall permit his premises to be used for the sale of liquor contrary to law, the premises shall be subject to lien for all the fines and costs assessed against such occupant, is to be construed as authorizing the enforcement of a lien on the premises on which a nuisance is maintained, in violation of Rev. Codes 1899, § 7895, when the proof shows that the owner knowingly permitted such use. Larson v. Christiansen, 106 N. W. 51, 52, 14 N. D. 476.

License synonymous

See License (Government Regulation).

Power to prevent implied

The word "permitted" necessarily implies power to prevent; hence, in a personal injury action by a servant, a complaint charging that the rock which fell upon and injured plaintiff was loose and to the employer's knowledge likely to fall, that the employer permitted plaintiff to work so near the rock that if it fell it would injure him, charges the employer with negligence. Mitchell Lime Co. v. Nickless (Ind.) 85 N. E. 728, 729.

Require synonymous

In Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 3, providing, as to the four months' time after the commission of an act of bankruptcy within which a petition may be filed, that such time shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer or assignment, when the act consists in having made a transfer with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or for the purpose of giving a preference as thereinbefore provided, or a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, etc., the words "required" and "permitted" in the connection used are of synonymous legal meanings. If the instrument giving the preference is one which is "permitted" to be recorded in order to give it validity as against certain classes of persons, though perfectly valid without record as to other classes, it is an instrument "required" to be recorded within the meaning of the word as there used. Loeser v. Savings Deposit Bank & Trust Co., 148 Fed. 975, 980, 78 C. C. A. 597, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1233.

PERMISSIVE USE

By "permissive" use is meant a license exercised in subordination to another's claim and ownership. Alper v. Tormey, 93 Pac. 402, 404, 7 Cal. App. 8.

PERMISSIVE WASTE

"Permissive waste" is such as is merely permitted by the tenant, and consists in the neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury to the estate or freehold, as, for example, to suffer a house to become decayed for want of proper repair. Norris v. Laws, 64 S. E. 490, 501, 150 N. C. 509.

PERPETRATE—PERPETRATION

Before a jury can find a defendant guilty of murder "perpetrated by means of poison," or by any other means whatever, they must first find that there has been an unlawful killing with malice aforethought. The mere fact that a killing has been accomplished by means of poison does not of itself establish malice aforethought. State v. Phinney, 89 Pac. 634, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 12 Ann. Cas. 1079.

Where two entered on the perpetration of a burglary, and on being discovered, and while trying to escape, one of the burglars, at a short distance from the building and on another lot, shot and killed a police officer, who had commanded him to halt, the court properly found that the killing was "in the perpetration of the burglary," and that it was murder in the first degree. Conrad v. State, 78 N. E. 957, 958, 75 Ohio St. 52, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1154, 8 Ann. Cas. 966.

PERPETUAL

PERPETUAL SUCCESSION

The term "perpetual succession" or "continued succession" means only a capacity of succession for a period limited in the charter of a corporation or a period fixed by general statutes. State ex rel. Jump v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. Gravel Road Co., 86 S. W. 170, 174, 187 Mo. 439.

Where a corporate charter does not prescribe the corporate terms, but does provide that it shall have "perpetual succession," the term "perpetual succession" means only the capacity of succession for a period limited in the charter or a period fixed by the general statutes in force at the time. State v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. G. Road Co., 92 S. W. 153, 163, 116 Mo. App. 175 (quoting definitions in State ex rel. Walker v. Payne, 31 S. W. 797, 129 Mo. 468, 33 L. R. A. 576).

The general rule is that where a special act creating a corporation uses the term "perpetual succession" in connection with the charter, it implies nothing more than a continuance of succession during the existence of the company, which, in the absence of some special provision to the contrary, is for a period of 20 years as provided for by the general corporation law. State ex rel. Major v. German Mut. Life Ins. Co., 123 S. W. 19, 20, 224 Mo. 84, 19 Ann. Cas. 1210.

"Perpetual succession," as used in a charter of a corporation limiting its corporate existence to 50 years, and providing that it should have perpetual succession, implied nothing more than a continued succession during the term fixed by its charter, and did not create a corporation in perpetuity. Chancellor Kent, in 2 Kent, Comm. 267, announced the true meaning of the words "perpetual succession" in corporate charters, wherein he says: "It is sometimes said that a corporation is an immortal, as well as an invisible and intangible, being. But the immortality of a corporation means only its capacity to take in perpetual succession so long as the corporation exists. It is so far from being immortal that it is well known that most of the private corporations recently created by statute are limited in duration to a few years." In 7 American & English Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) p. 684, it is well said: "When it is said that one of the distinguishing features of a corporation is the capacity of perpetual succession, this must be understood to mean a potential, not an actual, perpetuity; a capacity, as contradistinguished from partnerships and other voluntary associations, to continue in existence indefinitely up to the period of its constitutional or statutory limitation, in spite of the withdrawal or death of any of its members." And in 10 Encyclopedia of Law and Procedure, p. 148, it is laid down that these words "perpetual succession" mean in a general sense that the corporation is endowed with the faculty of existing forever, unless the same or another statute or the Constitution has fixed and limited the term of its existence. In other words, the term "perpetual succession" is understood to mean indefiniteness of duration, and not to refer to length of time, but rather convey the idea of regularity or unbroken continuity of existence. State ex rel. Hines v. Scott County Macadamized Road Co., 105 S. W. 752, 757, 207 Mo. 54, 13 Ann. Cas. 656 (citing State ex rel. Walker v. Payne, 31 S. W. 797, 129 Mo. 468, 33 L. R. A. 576; State ex rel. Allison v. Hannibal & Ralls County Gravel Road Co., 39 S. W. 910, 138 Mo. 332, 36 L. R. A. 457).

PERPETUALLY

P. L. 1871, p. 444, authorizing a canal corporation created by Act Dec. 31, 1824, to lease its canal or any part thereof with appurtenances and franchises either "perpetually" or for such shorter time as may be agreed on between the parties, merely authorizes the corporation to lease its property for a term not exceeding the period fixed for its existence, the word "perpetually" not giving the corporation any property or franchise that it did not previously have. McCarter v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 79 Atl. 93, 99, 78 N. J. Eq. 346.

Act March 27, 1874, § 8, regulating the acts of the State Board of Canal Commissioners, gives the commissioners control of the Illinois and Michigan canal, its feeders and property belonging thereto, and authorizes them to lease from time to time any of the canal lands owned by the state, provided that no lease shall be for more than 20 years. The act also authorizes them to sell canal lands and riparian rights along the Desplaines river, other than the 90-foot strip along the canal, to the highest bidder after giving 30 days' previous notice of the contemplated sale. Held, that a contract by which the commissioners granted certain riparian rights together with the right to flow certain canal lands belonging to the state, not limited to a specified term, and providing that the grantee should raise the towpath on the canal between certain points, and should "perpetually" maintain the same in good condition, not made either by public sale or after advertised notice, should be construed as a lease of such rights for 20 years within the authority of the commissioners, under the rule that where one attempts to grant a greater estate than he has the conveyance will be effective to pass what he has, though the grant is inoperative as to the larger estate; the word "perpetually" being construed to mean "during the term of the rights granted," and not "forever." People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 777, 241 Ill. 290.

PERPETUITY

A "perpetuity" is any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being and 21 years beyond. Armstrong v. Barber, 88 N. E. 246, 248, 239 Ill. 389.

The word "perpetuity," as applied to charitable trusts, means an inalienable and indestructible interest, subject to unforeseen social changes or eventualities destroying the property or rendering the enforcement of the trust impossible. Maxcy v. City of Oshkosh, 128 N. W. 890, 907, 144 Wis. 238, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

A "perpetuity" is defined to be a limitation taking the subject thereof out of commerce for a longer period of time than a life or lives in being, and 21 years thereafter, and, in the case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the period of gestation. Johnson v. Preston, 80 N. E. 1001, 1003, 228 Ill. 447, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Waldo v. Cummings, 45 Ill. 421; Rhoads v. Rhoads, 43 Ill. 239; Lunt v. Lunt, 108 Ill. 307; Hart v. Seymour, 35 N. E. 246, 147 Ill. 598; Howe v. Hodge, 38 N. E. 1083, 152 Ill. 252).

"Perpetuity" is a future limitation, whether executory or by way of remainder, and either of real or personal property, which is not to vest until after the expiration of or will not necessarily vest within the period fixed and prescribed by the law for the creation of future interests, and which is not destructible by the persons for the time being entitled to the property subject to the future limitation." Starcher Bros. v. Duty, 56 S. E. 524, 526, 61 W. Va. 373, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 123 Am. St. Rep. 990.

A "perpetuity" is a future limitation, whether executory or by way of remainder, and of either real or personal property, which is not to vest until after the expiration of, or will not necessarily vest within, the period prescribed by law for the creation of future estates and interests, and which is not destructible by the person for the time being entitled to the property subject to the future limitations, except with the concurrence of the individual interested under that limitation. Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co. of Baltimore City, 71 Atl. 442, 447, 109 Md. 131, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

"Perpetuities" are grants of property, where the vesting of an estate or interest is unlawfully postponed, and they are called perpetuities, not because the grant, as written, would make them perpetual, but because they transgress the limits which the law has set in restraint of grants that tend to a perpetual suspension of the title, or of its vesting, or, as is sometimes with less accuracy expressed, to a perpetual prevention of alienation. It is any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and 21 years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation; or it is such a limitation of property as renders it unalienable beyond the period allowed by law. Buxton v. Kroeger, 117 S. W. 1147, 1161, 219 Mo. 224 (quoting definition in Lockridge v. Mace, 18 S. W. 1145, 109 Mo. 166).

"Perpetuities" have been defined to be grants of property wherein the vesting of an estate or interest is unlawfully postponed. And again: Any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being and 21 years beyond. Where, under a will, an estate vested on the death of the testator, and only possession was postponed, no perpetuity was created. Flanner v. Fellows, 68 N. E. 1057, 1059, 206 Ill. 136 (quoting 2 Wash. Real Prop. 652; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 326).

Remainders created by the will of a life tenant under a power of appointment to the descendants of persons who were themselves not in esse when the grantor of the power died and his will conferring it took effect are in violation of the rule against perpetuities, for the period fixed and prescribed by law for the future vesting of an estate is a life or lives in being at the time of its commencement, and 21 years and a fraction of a year beyond, to cover the period of gestation; and where property is rendered inalienable, or its vesting is deferred for a longer period, the law denounces the devise or grant as a perpetuity and declares it void. Graham v. Whitridge, 57 Atl. 609, 611, 99 Md. 248, 66 L. R. A. 408.

The "rule as to perpetuities" has been thus defined: "No interest subject to a condition precedent is good unless the condition must be fulfilled, if at all, within 21 years after some life in being at the creation of the interest." A "perpetuity" has been stated to be: "Any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and 21 years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation." The rule is against the postponement of the vesting of estates and not against the postponement of possession. An interest which begins within lives in being and 21 years thereafter, although it may end beyond them, does not come within the rule. An immediate devise to trustees of testator's property with unconditional power to sell and dispose of the same does not violate the rule against perpetuities, though the trusteeship may, in the discretion of the trustees, and over the objections of the cestui que trust, continue 10 years from the probate of the will, for the estate in the trustees vests in interest and possession at testator's death. Armstrong v. Barber, 88 N. E. 246, 248, 239 Ill. 389 (citing Flanner v. Fellows, 68 N. E. 1057, 206 Ill. 136; Pearson v. Hanson, 82 N. E. 813, 230 Ill. 610; Scotfield v. Olcott, 11 N. E. 351, 120 Ill. 362; Graf Perp. [2d Ed.] §§ 201, 232; Quinlan v. Wickman, 84 N. E. 38, 233 Ill. 39, 17 L. R. A. [N. S.] 216; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 326; Madison v. Larmon, 170 Ill. 65, 48 N. E. 556, 62 Am. St. Rep. 356).

A "perpetuity" is defined as a limitation taking the subject-matter of the perpetuity out of commerce for a period of time greater than a life or lives in being, and 21 years thereafter. Such limitation is held to apply to future interests in both realty and personality, whether legal or equitable, and to every kind of conveyance or devise, and to every form of limitation or condition by which such future estate or interests may be created. The rule against perpetuities is not violated where a testator directs that his farm be not sold during the lifetime of his three daughters and the survivor of them, but that the same be held in trust, and the net rents therefrom paid to his daughters equally during their joint lives, and, on the death of any daughter, her share to her children, if any, and that, after the death of the survivor, the farm should be sold and the proceeds divided among testator's grandchildren and the children of such grandchildren as had died, as the farm is withheld from sale only during the lives of the three daughters. Dwyer v. Cahill, 81 N. E. 1142, 1143, 228 Ill. 617 (citing Bigelow v. Cady, 48 N. E. 974, 171 Ill. 229, 63 Am. St. Rep. 230; Flanner v. Fellows, 68 N. E. 1057, 206 Ill. 136; Howe v. Hodge, 88 N. E. 1083, 152 Ill. 252).

"In determining whether a particular devise is contrary to the rule against 'perpetuities,' the inquiry is, not whether the contingency upon which the estate is to vest actually occurs within the time limited by the rule, but whether it is possible that the event may not happen within the time. If it is possible that the event upon which the executory devise, or shifting or springing use, is to vest in some person may not happen within the time, the executory estate is void, although in fact the event actually happens within the time." Provision in a will directing that a certain portion of testator's estate shall be allowed to accumulate for the benefit of his grandchildren, and that such accumulation and income shall be equally divided among them when a designated grandchild, 2 years old at the date of testator's death, arrived at the age of 35 years, does not violate the rule against "perpetuities," but the direction for accumulation will be enforced for a period of 21 years after the testator's death, and then the amount accumulated will be distributed among the grandchildren. Hussey v. Sargent, 75 S. W. 211, 215, 116 Ky. 53 (citing 1 Perry, Trusts [5th Ed.] § 381).

A provision in a will for the deposit of money in bank, the interest to be used to keep testator's burial lot in good condition yearly, creates a "perpetuity," in violation of a constitutional prohibition thereof. McIlvain v. Hockaday, 81 S. W. 54, 55, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

"A lease for any number of years, whether for 99 or 999, is not in violation of the statute of 'perpetuities,' for in neither is the lessor precluded thereby from disposing of it at will, nor the lessee hindered in selling or assigning the lease, and by uniting in a conveyance the lessor and lessee may freely and without restraint convey both the fee and the leasehold interest." Hubbell v. Hubbell, 113 N. W. 512, 515, 135 Iowa, 637, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496, 14 Ann. Cas. 640.

A trust deed directing that on the death of the grantor's daughter, the property shall go to her "children and their descendants, if any such survive her," is not void as contrary to the rule against "perpetuities"; the words "children" and their descendants," employed in the deed, referring to those surviving at the time of the death of the daughter. Cribbs v. Walker, 85 S. W. 244, 247, 74 Ark. 104.

A will which gives property to two persons, to be paid them from time to time in certain amounts when they attain certain ages, the last payment to be made when they are 45 years old, does not violate the rule against "perpetuities" by the provision that, if they die without issue, all payments which shall not have become due shall be paid to certain others, as this, at the most, only postpones the vesting of the estate in the latter persons for two lives in being. Hull v. Osborn, 113 N. W. 784, 787, 151 Mich. 8.

A will giving the residue of the estate to testator's two granddaughters, certain amounts to be paid to each on her arriving at different ages, and the remainder of half the residue when she is 45 years old, though providing that, if either die without issue before attaining such age, such portions of her half as shall not have then become due shall be paid to the other, and that, if both die without issue, all payments which shall not have become due shall be paid to certain others, does not violate the rule against "perpetuities," as it vests the title of the residue in such grandchildren at the death of testator, subject to its being divested by their dying before completion of the payments. Hull v. Osborn, 113 N. W. 784, 787, 151 Mich. 8.

A devise of a life estate, and, after the death of the life tenant, to his widow and children, is not a "perpetuity," under Ky. St. § 2360, as the remainder must vest within 21 years after a life in being; but a conveyance of a life estate after the death of the life tenant, to go to his children until the youngest reaches the age of 25 years, when the estate is to be divided, is a perpetuity. Johnson's Trustee v. Johnson (Ky.) 79 S. W. 293, 294.

Defendant city entered into a contract with a water company, by which the city agreed not to grant to any other person the right to furnish water for fire hydrants during the life of the contract, which was for 25 years, and the city to have the privilege of buying the waterworks, but if the city did not exercise the option to purchase, the contract to continue until the city finally purchased the works. Held, that the exclusive privilege granted by the contract was a "perpetuity" and monopoly, in contravention of Const. art. 1, § 26, prohibiting the granting of a perpetuity or monopoly, which rendered the contract entirely void; and hence the city could not recover for damages arising out of the water company's failure to furnish sufficient water pressure, whereby the city market house was burned. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Houston (Tex.) 110 S. W. 973, 977.

PERQUISITE

In Bouvier's Law Dictionary, after giving its meaning in its most extensive sense, "perquisite" is defined thus: "In a more limited sense, it means something gained by a place or office beyond the regular salary or fee." The word was used in such limited sense in the Constitution, which, after limiting the amount of compensation of clerks of court in Baltimore, provides that they shall be entitled to no other "perquisite" or compensation. Vansant v. State, 53 Atl. 711, 714, 96 Md. 110.

The occupancy by the Governor during his term of office of the executive mansion provided by the state, in which he is required by law to maintain his residence, is not a "perquisite of office or other compensation," and is not prohibited by the Constitution. State v. Sheldon, 111 N. W. 372, 373, 78 Neb. 552.

PERSISTENCE—PERSIST

To satisfy the proviso of the Act of 1792 (3 Smith's Laws Pa. p. 73), "persistence," in the settlement of public land to save its forfeiture, "must mean something real; not merely the wishing or even attempting to do an act impossible, or so dangerous that no man could be expected to attempt it." Such proviso only dispenses with the forfeiture incurred, according to the law, by not making a settlement and continuing it, within and during the time prescribed by the enacting clause, and requires that it must be made as soon as the prevention ceases. Huldekoper v. Burrus, 12 Fed. Cas. 6848, pp. 840, 843, 1 Wash. 109, 118.

As used in the statute limiting actions upon the penal statutes, where the penalty goes to the state, or county, or "person" suing for the same, the word "person" means simply any person who sues as a common informer and not one having a special interest by reason of any injury or grievance. Nebraska Nat. Bank v. Walsh, 59 S. W. 952, 953, 68 Ark. 436, 82 Am. St. Rep. 301.

The word "person," as used in Act Cong. July 1, 1903, c. 1362, § 22, 32 Stat. 643 providing that, if any person whose name appears on the rolls shall die before receiving his allotment the land to which he would have been entitled shall be allotted in his name, etc., includes members, citizens, and freedmen. Hancock v. Mutual Trust Co., 103 Pac. 566, 569, 24 Okl. 391.

Construed in plural

The word "person," as provided by Ky. St. § 457, may extend and be applied to persons. Commonwealth v. Adams Express Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 123 Ky. 720.

The word "person," as used in Laws 1901, p. 61, c. 62, § 1, imposing an inheritance tax upon property passing by will or the statutes of inheritance to any person in trust or otherwise, though importing the singular, includes the plural. Dixon v. Ricketts, 72 Pac. 947, 949, 26 Utah, 215.

The word "person," as used in the statutes relating to railroad commissioners, includes persons (Gen. St. 1901, § 5997). Kansas City, Outer Belt & Electric R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 756, 73 Kan. 168.

Rev. St. § 1024, provides that when there are several charges against any person for the same act or transaction, or for two or more connected acts or transactions, or for two or more acts or transactions in the same class of crimes or offenses, which may be properly joined, instead of having several indictments, the whole may be joined in one indictment in several counts; and, if two or more indictments are found, in such case the court may order them to be consolidated. Held, that under section 1, providing that words importing the singular number may apply to several persons or things, section 1024 was not limited to indictments against a single person, but embraced consolidated indictments against several defendants. Emanuel v. United States, 196 Fed. 317, 320, 116 C. C. A. 137.

Rev. St. c. 23, § 68, relating to ways, provides that when a way is changed in grade by a road commissioner or "person authorized," to the injury of an abutting owner, he may apply in writing to the municipal officers for an assessment of damages occasioned thereby to be paid by the town. Chapter 53, § 19, relating to street railroads, provides that such road shall be constructed and maintained in such manner and upon such grades as the municipal officers of the towns where they are located may direct, and when, in the judgment of such corporation, it shall be necessary to alter the grade of any road the alteration shall be made at the expense of the corporation in accordance with the directions of the municipal officers. Held, that the two sections should be construed together, and under Rev. St. c. 1, § 2, rules 2 and 14, by which the word "person" may include a corporation and singular words include plural, where a grade was established by municipal officers at the request of a railroad company, it must be deemed to have been done by a "person authorized" within the meaning of section 68, and though section 68 provides that the damages shall be assessed by the municipal officers to be paid by the town, and section 19, that the alterations shall be at the expense of the corporation, yet the word "expense" in section 19 will include the damages to landowners, which, if paid by the town, are a part of the expense of the alteration, and are recoverable by the town from the railroad corporation. Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 74 Atl. 734, 736, 105 Me. 301.

Construed as witness

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 41, 30 Stat. 556, providing that certain acts committed by any "person" before a referee in bankruptcy shall constitute a contempt of court, the word "person" is not limited to the bankrupt, but extends to a witness guilty of perjury before the referee. In re Bronstein, 182 Fed. 349, 353.

Code Civ. Proc. § 870, provides for the examination of a party, and section 871 authorizes the examination of a "person not a party" to the action. Held, that the word "person" in section 871 means a person who can testify as a witness; and hence such section did not authorize the examination of officers of a corporation before trial, where the corporation was not a party. Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China v. North River Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 399, 400, 136 App. Div. 646.

Bankrupt

Bankr. Act 1898, § 29b, provides that a "person" shall be punished by imprisonment on conviction of having concealed property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy. Section 1, cl. 19, provides that "persons" shall include corporations, except where otherwise specified. A careful reading of this clause, in connection with the terms of section 29b, convinces that it can have no effect to extend the terms or broaden the true interpretation of the latter subsection. All who are punishable under this subsection 29b are persons who are or who have been bankrupts. Hence none of those whom the word "persons" is made to include under section 1, cl. 19—no officers, partnerships, women, participants in forbidden acts, agents, officers, or members of any board of directors or trustees—can be guilty of the offense specified in this subsection, unless they are either bankrupts when they conceal the property or have been such and have obtained their discharges before that time. Present or past bankruptcy is an essential attribute of every person who may be an offender under this statute. Field v. United States, 137 Fed. 6, 7, 69 C. C. A. 568.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 29b, 30 Stat. 554, provides that a person shall be punished on conviction of having concealed, while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, from his trustee, any of the property belonging to his estate. Held, that though there can be no offense unless the concealment is accomplished while there is a person in bankruptcy, or after his discharge, not only the bankrupt, but others aiding and abetting in the concealment, are punishable. United States v. Young & Holland Co., 170 Fed. 110-112.

Body of persons

The provisions of section 2134, Code Civ. Proc., directing that "each person upon whom a writ of certiorari is served * * * must make a return," etc., is not in conflict with the view that the return of a body or board may be made by a majority of its members, because the noun "person" is clearly used to denote any person or legal entity to whom a writ is directed. People ex rel. Lester v. Eno, 68 N. E. 868, 870, 176 N. Y. 513.

The use of the word "person" in Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, includes the natural persons who compose a corporation, and who are the beneficial owners of all its property, the technical and legal title to which is in the corporation. State v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 47 South. 989, 982, 56 Fla. 617, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639.

In view of Rev. St. 1909, § 10,160, defining the word "persons" as including a body of persons whether incorporated or not, under sections 2528 and 3881, respectively, providing that if any person disobey an injunction, the circuit court to which it is returned, or any judge in vacation thereof, shall issue an attachment for the contempt, and that every court of record shall have power to punish as for criminal contempt, persons guilty of willful disobedience of any order, the circuit court has power to punish a corporation for civil contempt. Fiedler v. Bambrick Bros. Const. Co., 142 S. W. 1111, 1116, 162 Mo. App. 528.

Carrier

Code 1897, § 2419, provides that if any common carrier or person, or any one as agent or employé thereof, shall transport to any person within the state any intoxicating liquors without first being furnished with a certificate that the consignee is the holder of a permit to sell intoxicating liquors in the county to which the shipment is made, such carrier or person shall on conviction be fined, etc. Held, that the word "person," as used in such section, means a public or private carrier, and did not include one who transported several interstate shipments of liquor from the railroad company's depot to the consignee's place of residence as a mere gratuity. State v. Wignall, 128 N. W. 935, 937, 150 Iowa, 650, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 507.

Children

The word "person," as used in a statute forbidding persons to walk along railroad tracks, should not be construed to include children so young as to be incapable of contributory negligence, under the rule that, where a statute seeks to change an existing status of a portion of a community, the change must be made in language so clear as to unmistakably manifest such legislative purpose. Erle R. Co. v. Swiderski, 197 Fed. 521, 524, 117 C. C. A. 17.

Citizen

The word "persons" in the extradition treaty between the United States and Italy, entered into in 1868 (15 Stat. 629) and amended in 1884 (24 Stat. 1001), providing for the surrender of persons charged with enumerated crimes, is sufficiently broad to embrace citizens and subjects of the contracting parties, and a citizen of the United States, who while in Italy commits an offense, and who then flees to the United States, is within the treaty and may be extradited thereunder, though Italy has always construed the word so as not to include its citizens and subjects. Ex parte Charlton, 185 Fed. 880, 884.

Custom officer

Section 5445, Rev. St., relating to "every person" who aids in effecting the illegal entry of imports, while ordinarily not intended to apply to those individuals (customs officers) covered by the preceding section of the law, does not exclude an officer of the service if the facts bring him within the definition of the "person" at whom this provision is aimed, and may therefore include a customs weigher who aids in the way prohibited. United States v. Mescall, 164 Fed. 587, 588.

Deceased person or estate of deceased person

A corpse is not a "person." That which constitutes a person is separated from the body by death. Brooks v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 97 N. E. 760, 211 Mass. 277.

A "person" includes a corporation and a joint-stock company, but it does not include an estate, or where an action is brought by the representative of an estate or trust as such; for the estate or the trust, and not the person who represents it, is really the party. Cole v. Manson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 42 Misc. Rep. 149.

Primary Election Law (Laws 1903, c. 451) § 18, subd. 1, provides that the person receiving the greatest number of votes at a primary as the candidate of a party for an office shall be the candidate of that party for such office, and his name as such candidate shall be placed on the official ballot at the following election. Held, that a dead man is not a "person" within the statute; such word meaning a living human being. State ex rel. Bancroft v. Frear, 128 N. W. 1068, 1071, 144 Wis. 79, 140 Am. St. Rep. 992.

Laws 1904, No. 30, § 81, provides that certain sections pertaining to taxes upon persons receiving property passing from decedents shall also apply to all "persons" dying before the passage of the act, but whose estates shall not have been at that time decreed or distributed, etc. Held, that "persons" refers to decedents mentioned in that section, and not to the beneficiaries. In re Howard's Estate, 68 Atl. 513, 514, 80 Vt. 489.

Where a wife loaned her husband money which was made payable on demand, and they both died without the wife having demanded, or received the money, her estate was a creditor of his estate, and a "person" within Rev. St. 1898, § 3840, providing for an order within which creditors shall present their claims and section 3844, providing that every person having a claim, who shall not, after notice given, exhibit it within the time limited, shall be forever barred. Barry v. Minahan, 107 N. W. 488, 491, 127 Wis. 570.

Employé

A mere ticket taker at a theater is not within Pen. Code, § 290, providing for the punishment of any "person" who admits to any theater, museum, or skating rink, or any place where wines or liquors are kept, any child under the age of 16 years, unless accompanied by its parent or guardian. People ex rel. Jacques v. Sheriff of Kings County, 105 N. Y. Supp. 387, 54 Misc. Rep. 8.

Forwarding agent

A forwarding agent is a "person" within the meaning of Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 2, 24 Stat. 379, forbidding preferences and discrimination in rates. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 392, 396, 220 U. S. 235, 55 L. Ed. 448.

Infant or minor

A child of immature and tender years is a "person," within Rev. Codes N. D. 1905, § 7686, authorizing an action for the death of a "person" by the wrongful act of another. Scherer v. Schlaberg, 122 N. W. 1000, 1006, 18 N. D. 421, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520.

Under the bankruptcy act providing that any natural person may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, the word "person" does not include an infant. In re Kehler, 153 Fed. 235, 237.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 11, 30 Stat. 544, provides that "debt" shall include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy; section 4 declares that any "person" who "owes debts," except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefits of the act as a voluntary bankrupt; and section 63 declares that debts shall be a fixed liability, absolutely owing at the time of the filing of the petition, etc. Held, that the words "owes debts" mean an obligation for which a debtor is legally liable, and hence the bankruptcy act includes an infant, where he owes debts for which his property is legally chargeable. In re Wairath, 175 Fed. 243, 244.

Inhabitant

An inhabitant of the province of Benguet, in the Philippine Islands, was a "person," within Organic Act July 1, 1902, c. 1369, providing that no laws shall be enacted in the Islands which shall deprive any "person" of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws. Carino v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, 29 Sup. Ct. 334, 336, 212 U. S. 449, 53 L. Ed. 594.

Lunatic

Under the bankruptcy act providing that any natural person may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, the word "person" does not include a lunatic. In re Kehler, 153 Fed. 235, 237.

Marshal

Where defendant used loud and offensive language in a conversation with a village marshal, as one of a crowd engaged in disturbing the peace, and the marshal neglected to restrain defendant or preserve order, he was not a "person" whose peace could be disturbed, within a village ordinance providing that, if any person shall willfully disturb the peace of any other person by loud and unusual noise, loud and offensive conversation, etc., he shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor. Village of Salem v. Coffey, 88 S. W. 772, 113 Mo. App. 675.

Nonresident

"In the statutes authorizing issuance of garnishment on the application of any 'person,' the word 'person' has been held to include all individuals, nonresidents as well as residents, corporations, and sovereignties." Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, 106 N. W. 821, 823, 127 Wis. 651, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1063 (dissenting opinion by Cassoday, C. J.).

The use of the word "person," in Laws 1905, p. 126, c. 105, amending Rev. St. 1898, c. 2948, by adding the provision that if there be none of such persons in the state, and the defendant corporation has or holds itself out as having an office or place of business in the state, or does business, then service may be made upon the person doing such business or in charge of such office or place of business, the word "person" shows that the Legislature intended to reach a class not covered by the word "agents" used elsewhere in the section, but it is not broad enough to include one merely temporarily in the state, to whom though not connected with the business, was intrusted for collection a bill due a foreign corporation. Honerine Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tellerday Steel Pipe & Tank Co., 88 Pac. 9, 11, 31 Utah, 326.

Officer of corporation

The president of a corporation is a "person," within Comp. Laws. § 4804, declaring that any person, agent, manager, or clerk of a corporation, with whom any money shall be deposited or intrusted, who shall appropriate it to his own use, shall be guilty of embezzlement. State v. Weber, 103 Pac. 411, 412, 31 Nev. 385.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, cl. 7, 30 Stat. 544, provides that the term "court" shall include a referee, and clause 19 declares that the word "persons" includes corporations and officers. By section 2, cl. 7, bankruptcy courts are invested with such jurisdiction in law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money and distributed, and to determine controversies in relation thereto, except as otherwise provided, and section 23, par. "a," confers jurisdiction on the United States Circuit Courts in certain circumstances over controversies between trustees and adverse claimants concerning property claimed by the trustee, except as to proceedings in bankruptcy, jurisdiction over which rests exclusively in bankruptcy courts, and by paragraph "b" suits brought by the trustee, except those to recover property under certain specified sections of the act, can be brought in the bankruptcy court only by consent of the proposed defendant. Held, that a referee in bankruptcy had jurisdiction of a proceeding to compel the officers of a corporation to pay over the proceeds of stock sales alleged to belong to the corporation, and also to pay an amount assessed against them for unpaid shares. In re Kornit Mfg. Co. 192 Fed. 392, 394.

Partnership, firm, company, society, joint-stock company, or association

A "person" includes a joint-stock company. Cole v. Manson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 42 Misc. Rep. 149.

A partnership is an entity distinct from that of its members, and is recognized in law as a "person." Clay, Robinson & Co. v. Douglas County, 129 N. W. 548, 549, 88 Neb. 363, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 756.

A partnership cannot sue, for it is not a natural or artificial "person." Phillips v. Holmes, 51 South. 625, 626, 165 Ala. 250.

A partnership is a "person" in the sense in which that term is used in the federal bankruptcy act (Act Cong. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1, subd. 15, 30 Stat. 544). In re Everybody's Grocery & Meat Market, 173 Fed. 492.

Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677, § 5, defines the term "person" to include a corporation or joint association, as well as a natural person. People v. Taylor, 85 N. E. 759, 760, 192 N. Y. 398.

The word "person" or "persons" shall be held to include firms, companies, and associations. Revenue Law (Acts 1898, No. 170, p. 346, § 91). National Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 117, 118, 121 La. 106, 126 Am. St. Rep. 313; General Electric Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 122, 123, 121 La. 116.

The word "person," as provided by Ky. St. § 457, may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate, societies, communities, and the public generally, as well as individuals, persons, and joint-stock companies. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 23 Ky. 720.

The word "person," as used in the statutes relating to railroad commissioners, includes partnerships or joint-stock companies. Gen. St. 1901, § 5997. Kansas City, Outer Belt & Electric R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 756, 73 Kan. 168.

Under Const. art. 9, § 18, giving the Corporation Commission power to regulate all transmission companies doing business in the state in all matters relating to the performance of their public duties and their charges therefor, and section 34, providing that the term "transmission company" shall include any company or other person holding or operating for hire any telegraph or telephone line, and that the term "person" shall include individuals, partnerships, and corporations, the Corporation Commission has supervision of a telephone company owned solely by an individual and operated for hire in all matters relating to the performance of its public duties and charges. Hine v. Wadlington, 109 Pac. 301, 26 Okl. 389.

Laws 1901, p. 19, c. 3, making it unlawful to permit minors in saloons, etc., provides (section 7) that the word "person," as used in the act, shall be deemed to mean firm or corporation, as well as natural person, and the person managing the business of such firm or corporation shall be liable to the penalties prescribed by this act. Territory v. Church, 91 Pac. 720, 721, 14 N. M. 226.

While it is true that section 59 of the Bankrupt Act contains the only provision of the act expressly defining who may file a petition to have a debtor adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, and that that provision is confined to creditors, and section 5, read with section 59, seems to confine the right to creditors, yet section 4a declares that any "person" owing debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefit of this act as a voluntary bankrupt, and section 1 declares that the word "persons," unless inconsistent with the context, shall include partnerships. In re J. M. Ceballos & Co., 161 Fed. 445, 448.

An unincorporated association is not a "person," and has not the power to sue or be sued; but when it has been organized and conducted for profit it will be treated as a partnership, and its members held liable as partners. Slaughter v. American Baptist Publication Society (Tex.) 150 S. W. 224, 226.

The word "person," in section 2, art. 2, of the general revenue act approved March 10, 1909, providing that "a person moving into this state from another state between March 1st and September 1st shall list his personal property acquiring an actual situs therein before September 1st and the same shall be assessed and placed upon the tax roll and the taxes thereon collected, etc.," includes a firm; and where a firm moves into the state between March 1st and September 1st, moving personal property into the state that acquires a situs therein before September 1st, said property shall be assessed and taxes thereon collected for the current year, notwithstanding one member of the firm was a resident of the state before the 1st day of March, and the other member was, and has been at all times, a resident of another state. Bivins & Carroll v. Bird, 121 Pac. 1080, 1081, 31 Okl. 286.

Under the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, a partnership is insolvent if the partnership property is insufficient to pay the firm debts, because it is a "person" (section 1 [19], c. 541, 30 Stat. 545), because any "person" is insolvent under that act whose property is insufficient to pay its debts (section 1 [15], c. 541, 30 Stat. 544), and the only property a partnership has or can apply to its debts is the firm property, and the only debts it owes are the firm debts. In re Bertenshaw, 157 Fed. 363, 368, 85 C. C. A. 61, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 18 Ann. Cas. 986.

Neither the judicial recognition by the courts of a state of the partnership entity, nor the provisions of the bankruptcy act, which define a partnership to be a "person" within the meaning of the act, and authorize it to be adjudged a bankrupt (Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, §§ 1a [19], 5a, 30 Stat. 544, 547), work a change of the established rule fixing the substantive rights of creditors respectively, of the partnership and of its individual members. In re Telfer, 184 Fed. 224, 226, 106 C. C. A. 366.

Pregnant woman

Laws Del. vol. 17, p. 523, c. 226, § 2 (Rev. Code 1852, amended in 1893, p. 930), makes it a crime for any person to administer to or advise a pregnant woman with intent to procure a miscarriage, or to "aid, assist, or counsel any person so intending to procure a miscarriage." Held, that the word "person," in the quoted clause, means some person other than the pregnant woman, and an indictment under such clause, charging defendants with having counseled a pregnant woman who was intending to procure her own miscarriage, is bad. State v. Parm (Del.) 60 Atl. 977, 978, 5 Pennewill, 556.

Private corporation

The words "person" or "persons" includes corporations. In re Charge to Grand Jury, 151 Fed. 834, 845; Cole v. Manson, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 42 Misc. Rep. 149.

A corporation by both the civil and common law is a "person," an artificial person. Davoust v. City of Alameda, 84 Pac. 760, 761, 149 Cal. 69, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 847.

A corporation is included in the term "person" as used in the statutes. Goldzier v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 214, 215, 43 Misc. Rep. 667 (citing Schatmann & Sons v. De Palo, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1008, 66 App. Div. 29).

Under Civ. Code, § 14, the word "person," as used in the statutes, includes a corporation as well as a natural person. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 115 Pac. 1091, 1098, 15 Cal. App. 679.

In the construction of statutes the term "person," being generally understood as denoting a natural person, will be taken in that sense, unless from the context or other parts of the act it appears that artificial persons, such as corporations, were also intended to be expressed. Commonwealth v. Real Estate Trust Co., 60 Atl. 551, 553, 211 Pa. 51.

Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677, § 5, defines the term "person" to include a corporation or joint association, as well as a natural person. People v. Taylor, 85 N. E. 759, 760, 192 N. Y. 398.

The word "person" or "persons" shall be held to include corporations. National Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 46 South. 117, 118, 121 La. 108, 126 Am. St. Rep. 313; General Electric Co. v. Assessors, 46 South. 122, 123, 121 La. 116 (citing Revenue Law, Acts 1898, No. 170, p. 346, § 91).

V. S. 21, provides that the word "person" may extend and be applied to bodies corporate and political. Gokey v. Boston & M. R. Co., 130 Fed. 994, 995.

The word "person," as provided by Ky. St. § 457, may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate, societies, communities, and the public generally, as well as individuals, persons, and joint-stock companies. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 123 Ky. 720.

A corporation is a "person" within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution of the United States and other constitutional clauses. Hammond Beef & Provision Co. v. Best, 40 Atl. 338, 840, 91 Me. 431, 42 L. R. A. 528.

Corporations are persons within the federal and state Constitutions, guaranteeing to all persons due process of law. Kiley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 309, 312, 138 Wis. 215; United States v. McHie, 194 Fed. 894, 898; Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 67 Atl. 1091, 1092, 80 Vt. 370, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. While corporations are entitled to the equal protection of the law with individuals, the inherent rights of a corporation are entirely separate and distinct from those of a natural person; they being created by the statute, with no powers except those conferred thereby. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 513, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

A corporation doing business within a state other than that of its creation, having an office and agents therein, and subject to the process of its courts, is a "person," within the meaning of the equality clause of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. Adams v. Standard Oil Co. of Kentucky, 53 South. 692, 694, 97 Miss. 879.

Since a corporation is a person within the federal Constitution guaranteeing to all persons equal protection of the laws, corporations are also within the protection of the fourth, and fifth, amendments of such Constitution. United States v. McHie, 194 Fed. 894, 898.

A corporation is not a "person" within the fifth amendment of the federal Constitution, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. In re Bornn Hat Co., 184 Fed. 506, 508.

A foreign corporation applying for admission to do business in a state, although a "person," is not within the jurisdiction of such state within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, forbidding a state to deny to any "person within its jurisdiction" the equal protection of its laws. State ex rel. Atlantic Horse Ins. Co. v. Blake, 144 S. W. 1094, 1096, 241 Mo. 100, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1288.

A corporation is not a "person" within the meaning of the concluding clause of the first section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, which declares that no state shall deprive any person of personal property without due process of law or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws. A corporation is a mere creature of the local law whereby it has its existence, and has no right, because of its chartered powers, to exercise corporate power beyond the territorial limits of the state which created it. Any state may absolutely and entirely exclude corporations organized under the laws of another state or may impose such conditions for the admission of foreign corporations within the limits of its jurisdiction as its lawmaking body may consider to be requisite for protection of its interest and policies. In re Speed's Estate, 74 N. E. 809, 811, 216 Ill. 23, 108 Am. St. Rep. 189.

While a corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of the federal Constitution, yet it is a "person" within its terms. Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 49 South. 404, 409, 160 Ala. 396.

A foreign corporation, though a person, under Statutory Construction Law, § 5, is not a citizen, within the provision of the United States Constitution that citizens of each state shall be entitled to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. In re Avery's Estate, 92 N. Y. Supp. 974, 979, 45 Misc. Rep. 529.

A will established a trust, and gave a power of appointment to A., the beneficiary of the trust. A. died, leaving a last will under which the trustee of the first will was appointed executor and by which A. exercised in full the power of appointment. Held, that the power of appointment to such "persons" and in such manner as she shall have directed was not limited to natural persons, but included a foreign charitable corporation. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Shaw, 107 N. Y. Supp. 337, 339, 56 Misc. Rep. 201 (citing In re Fox, 52 N. Y. 530, 11 Am. Rep. 751; Pembina Consol. Silver Mining & Milling Co. v. Pennsylvania, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 125 U. S. 189, 31 L. Ed. 650).

A statute of a general nature concerning parties to an action includes corporations, though the words "person" and "he" and similar designations pointing to natural persons only in their literal sense are used. Norwich Pharmacal Co. v. Abaly, 113 N. W. 963, 964, 133 Wis. 530.

The word "person," as used in the statutes relating to railroad commissioners includes corporations. Kansas City, Outer Belt & Electric R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 756, 73 Kan. 168 (citing Gen. St. 1901, § 5997).

A corporation has been held to be a "person" within the meaning of the statute of limitations, providing that when a "person" is out of the state limitations shall not run against a cause of action against him. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. v. Northwest Thresher Co., 108 N. W. 915, 917, 14 N. D. 147, 70 L. R. A. 814, 116 Am. St. Rep. 642, 8 Ann. Cas. 1160 (citing Olcott v. Tioga R. Co., 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 393).

In the absence of special disability, any person may be a beneficiary under a will; and a statute of wills, designating any persons as capable of taking, includes corporations. In re Beck's Estate, 121 Pac. 784, 786, 44 Mont. 561.

Under St. 1903, § 457, providing that the word "person" may extend and be applied to corporations, the court under a statutory authority to appoint some discreet, fit "person" to act as public administrator, was authorized to appoint a corporation for that office, the corporation being organized under an act giving it authority to act as guardian, executor, or administrator. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herndon's Adm'r, 104 S. W. 732, 735, 126 Ky. 589.

A corporation is not a person within Laws 1876, c. 293, by which certain sections of Laws 1875, c. 299, which originally required all "persons" to comply with certain restrictions, was amended by extending the provisions of the act to "corporations" and in another section to the officers or agents of corporations, thus making the amended sections read "persons or corporations" and "person or officer or agent of any corporation" as it was evident intention of the Legislature not to confound the two terms. Tewksbury v. Schulenberg, 41 Wis. 584, 596.

Chancery Act April 3, 1902 (P. L. p. 511, art. 2, § 5), providing for the method of service of process for appearance on defendant, does not mention corporations by name, but as the name "person" includes corporations if they fall within the general design of the act, this section warrants such service of process on a corporation defendant as is equivalent to personal service on an individual. Martin v. Atlas Estate Co., 65 Atl. 881, 882, 72 N. J. Eq. 416.

The word "person," as used in the mechanic's lien acts of West Virginia, includes a corporation, the state Constitution declaring that the word "person" includes corporations, if not restricted by the context. A corporation employed to supervise the construction of an electric railway by means of the personal services of its officers and servants is entitled to a lien therefor. Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co., 145 Fed. 458, 462, 75 C. C. A. 268, 7 Ann. Cas. 426.

Code W. Va. 1899, c. 75, § 7, which provides that "every workman, laborer, or other 'person' who shall do or perform any work or labor by virtue of any contract for any incorporated company" shall have a lien for the value of such work, gives a lien to a corporation which comes within its terms, under chapter 13, § 17, giving rules for the construction of the statutes, and providing that "the word 'person' includes corporations if not restricted by the context." Tennis Bros. Co. v. Wetzel & T. R. Co., 140 Fed. 198, 199.

The word "person" within a provision in a water power company's charter that it should not prevent any "person" owning land on the river from operating mills, etc., includes a corporation. Roanoke Rapids Power Co. v. Roanoke Navigation & Water Power Co., 75 S. E. 29, 33, 159 N. C. 893.

An indictment, which alleged that the false pretense was made to a certain corporation, sufficiently alleged the "person" to whom the false pretense was made; Code 1907, § 1, providing that the word "person" includes a corporation. Bailey v. State, 48 South. 791, 792, 159 Ala. 4, 17 Ann. Cas. 623.

Where a city ordinance provided that any person who should obstruct any street, etc., should be liable, etc., the word "person" included corporations. McKee v. Peters, 126 S. W. 255, 256, 142 Mo. App. 286.

A city ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any engineer, conductor, or other "person" to run or permit to be run on any railroad track within the limits of the city any locomotive engine, car, or train at a greater speed than eight miles per hour applies to railroad corporations operating railroads within the city. Southern R. Co. v. Jones, 71 N. E. 275, 276, 33 Ind. App. 333.

The statute providing that, after the adoption of the stock law in any county, "no person within the county" shall be required to fence against stock not permitted to run at large, exempts a railway company from the obligation to fence its tracks in a county in which the stock law has been adopted; the word "person" in the statute including corporations. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Tolbert (Tex.) 90 S. W. 508, 509.

A charter fee would not accrue to the state upon the consolidation of several existing corporations, so as to form a new corporation by virtue of P. S. 4287, as amended by Acts 1908, No. 103, providing that "three or more persons of age" may form a corporation; the word "persons" not including corporations. State v. Rutland Ry., Light & Power Co., 81 Atl. 252, 253, 85 Vt. 91.

The word "person" in federal legislation includes corporations. United States v. First Nat. Bank of Anamoose, 190 Fed. 336, 346.

A corporation is a "person" within the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Union Pac. Coal Co. v. United States, 173 Fed. 737, 739, 97 C. C. A. 578.

A "corporation" is a "person" within the express provision of Bankr. Act, § 1, subd. 19. Dressel v. North State Lumber Co., 107 Fed. 255, 256.

The expression "person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, providing that any natural person, except a wage-earner, or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, and any corporation principally engaged in manufacturing, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, applies only to natural persons, and not to corporations. In re Lake Jackson Sugar Co., 129 Fed. 640, 643.

A corporation is a "person," within the meaning of Civ. Code 1910, § 4413, relating to the liability of the master for the torts of the servant. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hudson, 73 S. E. 30, 31, 10 Ga. App. 169.

A private corporation is a "person," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, authorizing a recovery for death caused by the wrongful act or negligence of another person. Hugo Schmeltzer & Co. v. Paiz, 141 S. W. 518, 520, 104 Tex. 563.

A private corporation is included in Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, which gives a right of action for death caused by the wrongful act of another "person." Williams v. Coca-Cola Co. (Tex.) 150 S. W. 759, 761.

Code 1896, § 27, provides that personal representatives may recover for decedent's death, caused by the wrongful act, omission, or negligence of any person or persons, or corporation. Section 1 provides that the use of the word "person," used in the Code, "includes a corporation as well as natural persons." Held, that the personal representative of a person injured by a city sewer ditch had a cause of action against the city. City of Anniston v. Ivey, 44 South. 48, 49, 151 Ala. 392.

The word "person" in Gen. St. 1909, § 9752, providing that a person who, by himself or his servant, etc., or as the servant or agent of another, uses a false weight, or exposes for sale less than the quantity which he represents, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.; includes a corporation as well as a natural person. State v. Belle Springs Creamery Co., 111 Pac. 474, 477, 83 Kan. 389.

The word "persons," in Mills' Ann. St. § 413, providing that any person who shall employ a child under 14 years of age in a mill shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, applies to corporations as well as to natural persons. Overland Cotton Mill Co. v. People, 75 Pac. 924, 925, 32 Colo. 263, 105 Am. St. Rep. 74.

A corporation is a "person" within Laws 1896, p. 1052, c. 803, requiring registration of employing plumbers in the city of New York, and, as registration involves the holding of a certificate of competency which cannot be given to a corporation, plumbing work by a corporation is unlawful, and the price thereof cannot be recovered. Milton Schnaier & Co. v. Grigsby, 117 N. Y. Supp. 455, 457, 132 App. Div. 854; Id., 113 N. Y. Supp. 548, 61 Misc. Rep. 325.

The statutory construction law provides that the term "person" includes a corporation and joint-stock association. As used in Laws 1900, p. 699, c. 327, § 45, providing that a person engaged in the business of employing or master plumber shall submit to an examination before the examining board of plumbers as to his experience, etc., the word "person" applies to a corporation. William Messer Co. v. Rothstein, 113 N. Y. Supp. 772, 777, 778, 129 App. Div. 215.

In the absence of statutory enactment to the contrary, the name "person" in a statute includes a corporation if it falls within the general reason and design of the act, both as to the benefits and restrictions of the act. A statute that authorizes the doing of a certain act by a corporation or by its agent should be given effect by permitting the corporation to act either per se through its officer or per alium through its agent. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Stolzenbach, 68 Atl. 1078, 1083, 75 N. J. Law, 721, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 703, 127 Am. St. Rep. 822.

Under the express provisions of the Code, the word "person" in the act of December 15, 1871, providing that money or property stolen from the state or the Western Atlantic Railroad Company, or fraudulently obtained from the same, may be recovered from the person perpetrating the fraud or conversion, the word "person" includes a corporation. Scotfel, etc., Co. v. State, 54 Ga. 635, 638.

A corporation is in law a "person" or entirely distinct from its stockholders and officers, and it may have interests distinct from theirs, and their interests may be adverse to its interests, and knowledge on the part of the president of the corporation of a fraud committed by an entryman in procuring and commuting a homestead entry is imputed to the corporation so as to deprive it of the position of a bona fide purchaser under a conveyance from the president who had taken a deed from the patentee; the president being one of the incorporators and together with the secretary owning a large majority of the stock, being intrusted with the management and control of the corporate business, and his interest and that of the corporation being identical. J. J. McCaskill Co. v. United States, 30 Sup. Ct. 386, 391, 216 U. S. 504, 54 L. Ed. 590.

"In the statutes authorizing issuance of garnishment on the application of any 'person,' the word 'person' has been held to include all individuals, nonresidents as well as residents, corporations, and sovereignties." Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbreit, 106 N. W. 821, 828, 127 Wis. 651, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1063 (dissenting opinion by Cassoday, C. J.).

A corporation, though an artificial "person," was not embraced within the meaning of the word "person" as used in the first statute relating to foreign attachment providing that a writ of foreign attachment may issue against any person not an inhabitant of the state when certain requirements were met. Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 603, 1 Boyce, 113 (citing Vogle v. New Granada Canal & Steam Nav. Co. of New York (Del.) 1 Houst. 294).

Under Code, § 48, par. 13, providing that the word "person" may be extended to bodies corporate, corporations are included in the word "persons" as used in section 3465, providing that where two or more persons are bound by contract, judgment, or statute, jointly, jointly and severally, or severally only, including the parties to negotiable paper, the action thereon may at plaintiff's option be brought against any or all of them. Swartley v. Oak Leaf Creamery Co., 113 N. W. 496, 498, 135 Iowa, 573.

Under Code, § 48, par. 13, providing that the word "person" may be extended to bodies corporate, corporations are included in the word "persons," as used in section 3465, providing that where two or more persons are bound by contract, judgment, or statute, jointly, jointly and severally, or severally only, including the parties to negotiable paper, the action thereon may at plaintiff's option be brought against any or all of them. Swartley v. Oak Leaf Creamery Co., 113 N. W. 496, 498, 135 Iowa, 573.

A corporation is a "person" within Code, tit. 21, c. 9, providing for a civil action in the name of the state against any person unlawfully holding or exercising any public office or franchise within the state. State v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 871, 135 Iowa, 694.

Under St. 1898, § 3466, authorizing quo warranto against any "person" usurping any franchise, etc., quo warranto is appropriate to oust a corporation from exercising a franchise attempted to be conferred on it by an invalid municipal ordinance; a corporation being a "person." State v. Milwaukee Independent Telephone Co., 114 N. W. 106, 111, 133 Wis. 588.

An action by the Attorney General on behalf of the people for the forfeiture of franchises of a corporation may be brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1948, authorizing the Attorney General to maintain an action on his own information against a "person" unlawfully exercising a franchise; the word "person" in the section when considered in the light of the history of the legislation including corporations. People v. Bleecker St. & F. F. R. Co., 125 N. Y. Supp. 1045, 1051, 140 App. Div. 611.

Under Civ. Code, § 1001, authorizing any person to acquire private property for any use specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, a foreign corporation falls within the term "any person" and may condemn land for any of the purposes authorized, the right of foreign corporations to do business within the state having been recognized since 1870, and this right is not reduced by act of 1880 (St. 1880, p. 21), Civ. Code, § 407, expressly authorizing foreign corporations doing business as common carriers to exercise the right of eminent domain, the act merely increasing the powers of foreign corporations, and not purporting to reduce them. San Joaquin &

Kings River Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Strickson, 128 Pac. 924, 928, 164 Cal. 221.

A corporation is included in the word "person" as used in the criminal statutes. A corporation can be guilty of the offense of furnishing liquor to a minor. Southern Express Co. v. State, 58 S. E. 67, 69, 1 Ga. App. 700.

An incorporated club is not a "person" within the meaning of the Dramshop Act. State ex inf. Hadley v. Rose Hill Pastime Athletic Club, 97 S. W. 978, 980, 121 Mo. App. 81 (citing State ex rel. Bell v. St. Louis Club, 28 S. W. 604, 125 Mo. 308, 28 L. R. A. 573).

A club incorporated under the laws of the state is a person, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 1519, providing that any person selling liquors without a license in certain quantities, to be drunk on the premises, is guilty of a misdemeanor, etc. State ex rel. Young v. Minnesota Club, 119 N. W. 494, 496, 106 Minn. 515, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101.

Rev. Pen. Code, § 822, provides that the word "person" includes corporations. Rev. Civ. Code, § 1299, provides that sale is a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration called a "price," one transfers to another an interest in property, so the exchange of liquors by an incorporated commercial club to its members for checks sold to them violated Rev. Pol. Code, §§ 2834, 2835, 2838, 2852, making the sale of liquor in quantities less than five gallons by any person whether owner, clerk, agent, servant, or employee, a misdemeanor. State v. Mudie, 115 N. W. 107, 110, 22 S. D. 41.

Laws 1901, p. 19, c. 3, making it unlawful to permit minors in saloons, etc., provides (section 7) that the word "person" as used in the act shall be deemed to mean firm or corporation, as well as natural person, and the person managing the business of such firm or corporation shall be liable to the penalties prescribed by this act. Territory v. Church, 91 Pac. 720, 721, 14 N. M. 226.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 131, § 1, providing that the word "person" or "persons," as well as all words referring to or importing persons, may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate as well as individuals, a dramshop license may be issued to a corporation as well as an individual. Heidelberg Garden Co. v. People, 124 Ill. App. 331; People v. Heidelberg Garden Co., 84 N. E. 230, 333, 233 Ill. 290.

The expression "fit persons," in P. L. 1891, p. 257, relative to licensing of wholesale dealers, brewers, distillers, rectifiers, compounders, bottlers, storekeepers, and agents, is intended to apply primarily to individuals, but includes a corporation created for the purpose of engaging in the liquor business, and such corporation is a fit corporation to be licensed unless it has become unfit by illegal corporate acts. In re Indian Brewing Co.'s License, 75 Atl. 29, 30, 226 Pa. 56.

Under Rev. Codes, § 16, providing that the word "person" includes a corporation as well as a natural person, section 1506, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person to sell spirituous liquors to be drunk in or about the premises where sold without having first procured a license and given a bond, applies to corporations of all kinds, whether organized for profit or social advantages without profit. Ada County v. Boise Commercial Club, 118 Pac. 1086, 1088, 20 Idaho, 421, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101.

Laws 1908, c. 380, making it unlawful for any "person or persons" to sell liquor without a license, and providing that the applicant for a license must declare that he is a citizen of the United States, and the application must contain a statement of the extent of his residence in the county, is not limited to natural persons, but includes a corporation, and an incorporated social club maintaining a clubhouse and selling liquor to its members is within the act. Conococheague Club of Washington County v. State, 81 Atl. 602, 606, 116 Md. 317.

A liquor merchant's license, which 25 Del. Laws, c. 125, § 8, provides may be given a "person," will not be refused to a corporation; Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 43, c. 5, § 1, par. 10, providing the word "person" may include a corporation, and the court having for years approved applications of corporations for such licenses, and it being presumed it has passed on the question of their being entitled thereto under the statute. In re D. W. Lynch Co. (Del.) 75 Atl. 41, 1 Boyce, 104.

Under Gen. St. 1902, tit. 1, § 2712, providing that the word "person" may include a corporation, and title 16, sections 2669, 2672, and 2675, entitled "Intoxicating liquors," providing for the issuance of liquor licenses to suitable persons, etc., a corporation organized to make and sell malt liquor may be licensed to sell liquors, though section 2712 of the title provides that every person convicted of a first violation of the act shall be punished by a fine, and that such person, on every subsequent conviction, may be punished by imprisonment, in addition to the fine; the word "person" in the title including corporations. Connecticut Breweries Co. v. Murphy, 70 Atl. 450, 452, 81 Conn. 145.

Local Option Law, § 18 (Laws 1905, p. 50), provides that the issuing of a license or internal revenue special tax stamp by the federal government to any person for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prima facie evidence that such person is selling, exchanging, or giving away intoxicating liquors. Held, that the term "person," as used, includes the word "corporation." Hence it was not error to instruct that if an internal revenue license had been issued to a certain club, authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquor, such license was prima facie evidence that the club was engaged in selling, exchanging, or giving away intoxicating liquors, but that such finding alone would not be applicable to the defendants or either of them. State v. Kline, 93 Pac. 237, 242, 50 Or. 426.

Local option law (Rev. St. 1909, § 7243) provides that if the majority of the votes at a local option election are against the sale of intoxicants it shall not be lawful for "any person within the limits of such county * * * to directly or indirectly sell, give away or barter in any manner whatever" any intoxicating liquors; and section 7246 makes "any person" violating the act guilty of a misdemeanor. Held that, while a corporation could sell intoxicants in violation of the act, though it could not be punished thereunder, its agents and servants may be convicted and punished for selling for the corporation in violation of the act. State v. Robinson, 146 S. W. 456, 457, 163 Mo. App. 221.

A corporation is a "person" within the meaning of Act May 9, 1902, c. 784, § 1, 32 Stat. 193, requiring wholesale dealers in oleomargarine to keep certain books and make certain returns, and providing for punishing by fine and imprisonment "any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section," although section 5 of the same act applies in express terms to corporations, and gives the court discretionary power to punish either by fine or imprisonment or both. United States v. Union Supply Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 15, 215 U. S. 50, 54 L. Ed. 87.

A private corporation, as well as an individual, is included in the word "person," as used in section 2271, Gen. St. 1901, defining the crime of libel. State v. Williams, 85 Pac. 988, 940, 74 Kan. 180.

The word "person," in the statute punishing one who by false pretenses obtains from "any other person" any money, etc., with intent to defraud, includes a domestic corporation. State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 156, 6 Pennewill, 401.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 131, § 1, subd. 5, providing that the word "person" extends to corporations, and Cr. Code, §§ 98, 99 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38), punishing the obtaining or attempting to obtain money by confidence game, and declaring that an indictment which charges that accused feloniously obtained, or attempted to obtain, from a person named his money by means of a confidence game, is sufficient, an indictment charging accused with attempting to obtain money from a corporation by means of a confidence game need not name the person or persons on whose mind accused operated and attempted to effect an imposition. People v. Goodhart, 94 N. E. 148, 248 Ill. 373.

A corporation is a "person," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4901, which imposes a penalty on "every person" who marks an unpatented article with any word importing that the same is patented for the purpose of deceiving the public, and may be convicted of such offense. London v. Everett H. Dunbar Corp., 179 Fed. 506, 507, 103 C. C. A. 130.

The word "persons," in Rev. St. 1899, § 2815, authorizing the courts to parole persons convicted of crime, when considered in connection with the act of 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 385), authorizing the court to permit persons convicted of crime to go at large in specified instances, does not include corporations, but is limited to natural persons. State ex rel. Howell County v. West Plains Telephone Co., 135 S. W. 20, 22, 232 Mo. 579.

Pen. Code, § 179, defines homicide as the killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of another, and manslaughter is defined to be one of the different kinds of homicide. Manslaughter in the second degree is defined to be a homicide without design to effect death, committed by a person committing or attempting to commit a trespass or other invasion of a private right not amounting to a crime, or in the heat of passion, or due to any act, procurement, or culpable negligence of any person, which does not constitute the crime of murder, or manslaughter in the first degree. The statutory construction law provides that the term "person" includes a corporation, except where the context or other provisions of law indicate otherwise. Held, that as homicide is the killing of one human being by another human being, and as manslaughter is one kind of homicide, a corporation cannot commit that crime, and that the term "person" as used in the definition of manslaughter in the second degree refers to a "natural person" only. People v. Rochester R. & Light Co., 112 N. Y. Supp. 362, 59 Misc. Rep. 347.

Anti-Trust Law, Acts 1903, p. 268, c. 140, § 1, makes void all agreements, etc., between "persons or corporations" made with a view to the restriction of competition in the sale of articles, etc. Under section 2 the charters of domestic corporations and the licenses of foreign corporations are forfeitable for the making of such an agreement. Under section 3 any "person or persons" becoming parties to such an agreement are punishable by either fine or imprisonment or both. Under section 4, any "person or persons or corporation" damaged by such an agreement may recover against the offenders. Held, that the words "person or persons" in section 3 were not intended to embrace corporations, and hence a corporation is not indictable thereunder; the expressed purpose to exclude them overriding Shannon's Code, § 62, declaring the word "person" to include a corporation. Standard Oil Co. v. State, 100 S. W. 705, 712, 117 Tenn. 618, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015.

Consolidated School Law, § 63, provides that school district taxes shall be apportioned by the trustees upon all real estate within the district, and such property shall be assessed to the person or persons or corporation owning or possessing it, except that land lying in one body, and occupied by the same person, if assessed as one lot on the last assessment roll of the town, shall, though situated partly in two or more school districts, be taxable in that one of them in which such occupant resides. Held, that a corporation owning land in the district is not a "person," within the exception of the act, and a corporation owning a tract of land upon which were over 50 buildings used for manufacturing purposes, and which lay partly in another district, could not have its land taxed in the other district because its offices were in that district. People ex rel. Fleischmann Mfg. Co. v. Marens, 118 N. Y. Supp. 838, 839, 134 App. Div. 170.

It is a sufficient compliance with S. 1898, § 856, providing that the survey, map, and census of territory proposed to be incorporated as a village shall be left for public examination at the "residence or place of business within such territory of some person residing therein," that it is left at the office of a corporation, the most frequented place in the community; there having been compliance with the provision of the statute that the notice of time and place of hearing shall state where such papers are open for examination, and it being provided by section 861 that defects not going to the groundwork of the organization shall not be deemed to invalidate the incorporation. In re Village of Biron, 131 N. W. 829, 830, 146 Wis. 444.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1532, provides that where two or more persons are in possession of realty as tenants in common, etc., in which either of them has an estate of inheritance, etc., one or more of them may maintain an action for partition, and for a sale if partition cannot be made. General Constructive Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22) § 37, provides that the term "person" includes a corporation. Religious Corporations Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 51) § 12, provides that a religious corporation shall not sell its realty without applying and obtaining leave of court pursuant to the Code of Civil Procedure, and provides for the sale of the property of certain churches, in the manner stated. Held, that an action for the partition and sale of property jointly owned by two religious corporations would lie between such corporaions; section 12 referring to the procedure in case of a voluntary sale of its own property by a religious corporation, and not preventing a partition sale. New York Home Missionary Soc. v. First Freewill Baptist Church and Society of Lawrence, 130 N. Y. Supp. 879, 880, 73 Misc. Rep. 128.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 5, provides that a person doing business in this state and residing outside the state may be summoned upon trustee process by serving the writ upon his servant or agent having charge of such business. Chapter 2, § 9, provides that the word "person," as used in section 5, shall apply to bodies corporate and politic as well as to individuals." Chapter 245, § 3, provides that trustee writ shall be served upon the defendant and trustee, like a writ of summons. Chapter 219, § 13, provides that service of writs against corporations may be made upon the clerk, treasurer, cashier, or one of the directors, trustees, or managers, if any in the state; otherwise upon any principal member or stockholder, or upon any agent, overseer, or other person having the care of any property or charge of any of the business of the corporation." Held, that the words "directors, trustees, or managers," as used in section 13, have reference to the board of directors, board of trustees, or board of managers of a corporation, and where a foreign corporation had no clerk, treasurer, cashier, or member of its executive board of control within the state, service of trustee process, in a suit commenced in M. county, was properly made on a person having charge of a timber lot in such county, though a vice president of the corporation and two superintendents of mills operated by it reside in C. county. Dinnin v. Hutchins, 76 Atl. 128, 127, 5 N. H. 470.

Municipal Court Act, Laws 1902, p. 1496, § 580, § 20, declares the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are not to be deemed applicable to the Municipal Court when in conflict with the provisions of that act. Subdivision 18, § 1 (page 1489), provides that the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court extends to actions against a foreign corporation having an office in New York City. Subdivision 1, § 25 (page 1497), which section specifies the several districts in which actions in that court must be brought, after providing that, where all the parties reside out of the city, the action may be brought in any district, declares that no "person" who shall have a place in the city for the regular transaction of business shall be deemed a nonresident within the act. Held, that a corporation is included in the term "person" as used in the statutes. Sommese v. Florence Distilling Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 630, 631, 56 Misc. Rep. 70.

Kirby's Dig. § 6906, provides that each person shall make a verified statement of all personal property, stocks, etc., in his possession or under his control on the first Monday in June in each year. Section 6872 declares that the word "person" shall include corporations. Const. art. 16, §§ 5, 6, and 7, make all property subject to taxation, except certain specified exemptions, not including corporate stock, which is expressly made subject to tax by section 6873; and section 6902 provides that no person shall be required to list stocks, etc., of any corporation which is required to list or return its capital and property for taxation. Held, that local insurance companies were required to list their stock for taxation, so that such stock is not assessable to the stockholders. Dallas County v. Banks, 113 S. W. 37, 38, 87 Ark. 484.

Medical Law (Laws 1907, p. 646, c. 344) § 15, makes it unlawful for any "person" not a registered physician to advertise to practice medicine. Statutory Construction Law (Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677) § 5, makes the term "person" include a corporation. Membership Corporations Law (Laws 1895, p. 354, c. 559) § 80, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 936, c. 404, authorizes the incorporation of hospitals, and provides that the "systems of medical practice or treatment to be used" may be specified in the certificate. Held that, since a hospital incorporated under the membership corporations law has legislative authority to practice medicine through a staff of registered physicians and surgeons, it is excepted from the operation of the 1907 act, but that act does apply to a corporation organized under Act Feb. 17, 1848 (Laws 1848, p. 54, c. 40), authorizing the formation of corporations for chemical purposes, etc., to manufacture chemical preparations and publish and sell books, etc., relating to the same, though a corporation cannot be registered as a physician. People v. John H. Woodbury Dermatological Institute, 109 N. Y. Supp. 578, 124 App. Div. 877; Id., 85 N. E. 697, 698, 192 N. Y. 454.

Const. art. 6, § 5, provides that the superior court shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and in cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. Article 6, § 11, authorizes the Legislature to fix the powers of justices, provided they shall not trench on the jurisdiction of courts of record. Code Civ. Proc. § 115, confers jurisdiction on justices of all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Pen. Code, § 7, provides that the word "person" includes a corporation. Held, that a corporation accused of an offense, the punishment for which is by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment not exceeding 100 days, or by both fine and imprisonment, must be prosecuted before a justice; Pen. Code, §§ 1390-1397, relating to proceedings against corporations, providing simply a mode of procedure against corporations charged with crime which, if not applicable to prosecutions before a justice, would not divest the justice of jurisdiction, but Code Civ. Proc. § 187, permitting the use of any suitable mode of procedure, would apply. People v. Palermo Land & Water Co., 89 Pac. 723, 725, 4 Cal. App. 717.

Rev. St. c. 23, § 68, relating to ways, provides that when a way is changed in grade by a road commissioner or "person authorized," to the injury of an abutting owner, he may apply in writing to the municipal officers for an assessment of damages occasioned thereby to be paid by the town. Chapter 53, § 19, relating to street railroads, provides that such road shall be constructed and maintained in such manner and upon such grades as the municipal officers of the towns where they are located may direct, and when, in the judgment of such corporation, it shall be necessary to alter the grade of any road, the alteration shall be made at the expense of the corporation in accordance with the directions of the municipal officers. Held, that the two sections should be construed together, and under Rev. St. c. 1, § 6, rules 2 and 14, by which the word "person" may include a corporation and singular words include plural, where a grade was established by municipal officers at the request of a railroad company, it must be deemed to have been done by a "person authorized" within the meaning of section 68, and though section 68 provides that the damages shall be assessed by the municipal officers to be paid by the town, and section 19 that the alterations shall be at the expense of the corporation, yet the word "expense" in section 19 will include the damages to landowners, which, if paid by the town, are a part of the expense of the alteration, and are recoverable by the town from the railroad corporation. Hurley v. Inhabitants of South Thomaston, 74 Atl. 734, 736, 105 Me. 301.

Acts 1898, No. 19, as originally enacted, referred to "any body or persons" seeking incorporation, etc., but as revised and re-enacted by P. S. 800, provided that "persons" seeking incorporation by a special act of the General Assembly should, before the bill was introduced for that purpose, deposit as provided the fee therein specified. P. S. 26 permits the word "persons" to be applied to bodies corporate and politic. In 1896 the People's Gas Light Company, the Rutland Street Railway Company, the Vermont Internal Improvement Company, and the Chittenden Power Company filed with the Secretary of State an agreement for consolidation, the consolidated company being styled the Rutland Railway, Light & Power Company, and all the property being turned over to it, but it had never paid any charter fee. Acts 1908, No. 303, § 1, legalizes all acts and contracts whereby the Rutland Street Railway Company, the People's Gas Light Company, the Chittenden Power Company, and the Rutland City Electric Company consolidated with the Vermont Internal Improvement Company. Section 2 provided that all the charter rights, powers, etc., conferred upon the five companies should be conferred upon the Rutland Railway, Light & Power Company. Held, that the word "persons" used in section 800 included previously existing corporations, as well as natural persons; and when Act No. 303 became a law the Rutland Railway, Light & Power Company became a corporation by special act, making the charter fee, which should have been deposited when the bill was introduced, belong to the state, but if it was not deposited when the bill was introduced the state might thereafter collect it by a suit against the consolidated company. State v. Rutland Ry., Light & Power Co., 81 Atl. 252, 254, 85 Vt. 91.

Proprietor of restaurant

The proprietor of a restaurant is a "person" and his restaurant is a "place" within the city of Denver within the purview of Denver Ordinance 1902, No. 102, § 1, providing that no person shall, within the limits of the city, sell or give away intoxicating liquors to be drunk upon the premises where sold or at any place. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 88 Pac. 156, 157, 38 Colo. 401.

Public or municipal corporation

V. S. 21, provides that the word "person" may extend and be applied to bodies corporate and political. Gokey v. Boston & M. R. Co., 130 Fed. 994, 995.

The word "person," as provided by Ky. St. § 457, may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate, societies, communities, and the public generally. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 S. W. 386, 387, 123 Ky. 720.

A municipality is not a "person" or "corporation," within Rev. Laws, c. 171, § 2, as amended by St. 1907, c. 375, which makes persons and corporations liable for negligent death. Donahue v. City of Newburyport, 98 N. E. 1081, 1082, 211 Mass. 561, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 742.

Code 1896, § 27, provides that personal representatives may recover for decedent's death, caused by the wrongful act, omission, or negligence of any person or persons, or corporation. Section 1 provides that the use of the word "person," used in the Code, "includes a corporation as well as natural persons." Held, that the personal representative of a person injured by a city sewer ditch had a cause of action against the city. City of Anniston v. Ivey, 44 South. 48, 49, 151 Ala. 392.

The city granting the right to a corporation to operate an interurban railway on its streets is a proper plaintiff in an action, in virtue of the statute (Gen. St. 1901, § 5150), authorizing it to be brought by a person claiming an interest adverse to the franchise, which is its subject, as a municipal corporation is a "person" within the meaning of the word as there used. City of Olathe v. Missouri & K. I. Ry. Co., 96 Pac. 42, 43, 78 Kan. 193.

Although a "municipal corporation" has delegated to it certain powers of government, it is only in reference to those delegated powers that it will be regarded as a government. In reference to all of its transactions, such as affect its ownership of property in buying, selling, or granting, and in reference to all matters of contract it must be looked upon and treated as a private person, and its contracts construed in the same manner and with like effect as those of natural persons. Davoust v. City of Alameda, 84 Pac. 760, 761, 149 Cal. 69, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 536, 9 Ann. Cas. 847.

"The Regents of the University of Idaho," created a corporation by the laws of the territory and the Constitution of the state, is a public corporation and an agency of the state, and as such is not subject to garnishment in the absence of a statute clearly evincing the purpose of the Legislature to subject public corporations to such process; and the general provision that any "person" may be garnished is not sufficient for that purpose, although the word "person" is expressly defined by the statutes as including a corporation; such provisions being generally construed as restricted to private or business corporations. Moscow Hardware Co. v. Colson, 158 Fed. 199, 201.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, providing that, on the return of an unsatisfied execution on a judgment for necessities, the court shall grant an order for execution against the salary or wages of the judgment debtor, and it shall be the duty of any "person or corporation" to whom the execution shall be presented, and who shall be indebted to the judgment debtor, to pay over to the officer the amount of the debt, does not authorize the institution of the supplementary proceedings therein provided for against a municipal corporation to reach the salary of a police officer. Rosenstock v. City of New York, 91 N. Y. Supp. 737, 739, 101 App. Div. 9; Chapman & Co. v. Same, 91 N. Y. Supp. 1090, 101 App. Div. 607.

Same—County

Each organized county is a body corporate, and as such deemed to be a "person," within Const. art. 6, § 2, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Harris v. Stearns, 97 N. W. 361, 362, 17 S. D. 439.

"A county may, for some purposes, be considered a 'person' in law, but it is a corporate person which can speak and act only through its appropriate officers and agents." Hence an allegation that an act was done or notice given, or demand made by the county, without explanation, conveys no information whatever to the bearer or reader, as to the particular individual through or by whom the act, notice, or demand, is alleged to have been effected, so that an allegation, in an indictment against a county treasurer for embezzlement, that the county had demanded the funds, was wholly insufficient. State v. McKinney, 106 N. W. 931, 933, 130 Iowa, 370.

Rev. St. 1898, § 661, provides that no execution shall issue on a judgment against a county except on leave of court, obtained after the time when the town treasurers should by law have made returns of taxes. Other statutory provisions contemplate the collection of judgments against counties by the levy of a tax. Section 2902 makes a judgment a lien on the real property of every "person" against whom such judgment shall be rendered and docketed. Held, that a judgment against a county is not a lien on land bought in by the county for taxes, notwithstanding the provision of Rev. St. 1898, § 2902, that the word "person" shall extend and be applicable to bodies corporate unless plainly inapplicable. Buell v. Arnold, 102 N. W. 338, 340, 124 Wis. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 100.

Same—State

Code 1899, c. 31, § 25, requiring the owner of property sold for taxes to tender to the claimant of the tax title the taxes and interest required to be refunded, relates to "persons," and does not apply to the state. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 830, 57 W. Va. 447.

Dispensary commissioners and the manager thereof are officers of the state, and are not, as such, suable under Civ. Code 1895, § 3871, giving a parent a right of action against any person selling spirituous liquor to his minor son. Fowler v. Rome Dispensary, 62 S. E. 660, 663, 5 Ga. App. 36.

The word "person," in Rev. St. U. S. §§ 3140, 3232, 3244, providing that every person selling or offering for sale distilled spirits shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors and must pay the special tax imposed, and declaring that the word "person" shall when not otherwise distinctly expressed be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, includes the dispensing and selling agents of the state, which in the exercise of its sovereign power has taken charge of the business of selling intoxicating liquors, and the United States may exact in such case a license tax prescribed by Internal Revenue Laws for dealers in intoxicating liquors. State of South Carolina v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 111, 199 U. S. 437, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 1a, cla. 6, 19, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, 545, which define "persons" as including corporations and "corporations" as meaning "all bodies having any of the powers and privileges of private corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships," a state is a person, and under section 64b (5) is entitled to priority for a debt due it from the estate of a bankrupt which is given priority by its own insolvency law. In re Western Implement Co., 166 Fed. 576, 582.

Laws 1905, p. 870, c. 175, in amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, authorizing an execution against the wages or salary of the judgment debtor, and making it the duty of any person or corporation, municipal or otherwise, to whom the execution shall be presented, and who shall be indebted to the judgment debtor, to pay over to the officer the amount of the debt, does not authorize the issuance of an execution against the salary of a state officer; the state being neither a person nor a corporation nor a municipal corporation. Osterhoudt v. Keith, 117 N. Y. Supp. 809, 810, 133 App. Div. 83.

The champerty act (1 Rev. St. p. 739 [1st Ed.] p. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, § 147) provides that "every grant of land shall be absolutely void, if at the time of the delivery thereof, such lands shall be in the actual possession of a person claiming under a title adverse to that of the grantor." Section 5 of the statutory construction law (Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677) provides that "the term 'person' includes a corporation and a joint-stock association," and when used to designate a party whose property may be the subject of any offense, the term "person" also includes the state. Held, that the state could therefore only be included as a "person" when the statute relates to any of its property which may be the subject of an offense, and hence the champerty act does not apply to the possession of the state, and that, if the forest commission could be regarded as in actual possession for the state, it would not render the statute applicable as it is no more a "person" than is the state. Saranac Land & Timber Co. v. Roberts, 109 N. Y. Supp. 547, 125 App. Div. 333; Id., 88 N. E. 753, 760, 195 N. Y. 303.

Same—United States

The United States is not a "person" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64, 30 Stat. 563. Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Guarantee Title & Trust Co., 174 Fed. 385, 387, 98 C. C. A. 603.

Selectmen

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 2067, authorizing persons interested in altering highways to remonstrate against the report of the committee assessing benefits and damages, and empowering the court to order a jury and "grant relief to the person or persons making such application," when construed in connection with section 2070, providing that, if the report of the jury shall not increase the damages allowed or diminish the assessment of benefits, the court shall order the applicant for the jury to pay the costs of the application, etc., the court, in proceedings to assess damages and benefits for the change of the grade of a highway, may not order a jury to make a reassessment of damages and benefits on the application of the town by its selectmen; the selectmen not being referred to by the words "person or persons," in the quoted clause. Selectmen of Town of Montville v. Alpha Mills Co., 81 Atl. 1051, 1052, 85 Conn. 1.

Women

A woman is a "person" within the contemplation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, and entitled to the equal protection of the laws. Carrithers v. City of Shelbyville, 104 S. W. 744, 745, 128 Ky. 769, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421 (citing Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 18 Fed. 385).

PERSON OF THE FAMILY

The word "person," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 570, providing for service of a summons by leaving a copy of the petition and writ at defendant's usual place of abode with some person of his family, is synonymous with the word "member" as used in a return showing that a copy of the writ and petition was left with a member of defendant's family. The words may be used interchangeably. One could not be a person of a family without being a member nor could he be a member without being a person. Colter v. Luke, 108 S. W. 606, 609, 129 Mo. App. 702.

Where, in an action for divorce, the complaint alleged that plaintiff and defendant had been living together as husband and wife until the day before the suit was commenced, and implied that, though prior thereto the parties had a joint residence in M. county, such residence had been severed, and that the plaintiff had the custody of the minor children, an order authorizing service of process on the defendant, temporarily residing without the state, by publication, was not objectionable by reason of the fact that the affidavit did not negative the possibility of substituted service by delivering a copy to some person of defendant's family, above the age of 14 years, at his dwelling house or usual place of abode. Then when a suit for a divorce has been commenced, it must be inferred that the marital relations have been interrupted, and, the defendant being temporarily absent, the plaintiff and the children, occupying the dwelling house or usual place of abode of the defendant, are not "persons of the family" within the meaning of the term as used in the statute. McFarlane v. Cornellus, 73 Pac. 325, 327, 328, 43 Or. 518.

The phrase "person to whom it is issued," as used in a commutation ticket containing a stipulation that if it should be offered by any other than the person to whom it is issued it would be forfeited and taken up by the conductor, is synonymous with "person named on its face." Colton v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 77 Atl. 1020, 80 N. J. Law, 592.

PERSON WHO BUILDS

The phrase "person who built it," contained in the statute providing that the owner of a building lot might rest one-half of the building wall on his neighbor's land and that the neighbor should have the right thereafter to make it a wall in common by paying one-half of the value to the "person who built it," means the owner, whether he became such by building the wall in person or hiring it done by another, or by purchasing it with the lot after it is built. Southworth v. Perring, 82 Pac. 785, 787, 71 Kan. 755, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 114 Am. St. Rep. 527 (citing Thomson v. Curtis, 28 Iowa, 229).

PERSON WHO MAKES, ALTERS, OR REPAIRS

A statute providing that a "person who makes, alters, or repairs" any article of personal property, or who, by labor or skill, improves such article, may have a special lien thereon, and may retain possession until his charges are paid, creates a lien in favor of a bailee for hire, to whom property is delivered in the way of his trade or occupation, and who by his labor and skill imparts additional value thereto, but does not create a lien in favor of a person who performs services with reference to personal property in his possession as a mere servant. *Michaelson v. PERSON WHO PERFORMS LABOR

In the statute which grants a lien to "every person who shall perform labor" upon a mine and provides that "every laborer or materialman" claiming under the act shall take certain steps to perfect his lien, the phrase "person who shall perform labor," etc., applies to ordinary laborers who perform actual, visible toll with their hands or muscles, other kinds of service not being expressly mentioned, and does not embrace superintendents or managers. *Durkheimer v. Held, that the phrase "such persons as would inherit as heirs" had the same effect as if the limitation over had been to defendant's heirs, and hence defendant acquired the fee under the rule in Shelley's Case. Cook v. Councilman, 72 A. 404, 109 Md. 622.

PERSONAL

The adjective "personal" is defined by Webster as pertaining to the external or bodily appearance. It is defined in the Century Dictionary as things of or pertaining to the person. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Zwirtz, 73 Pac. 941, 942, 13 Okl. 411.

PERSONAL ACTION

An action under an act authorizing the recovery of money paid and lost on a wager, for money lost and paid on a bet on the result of an election, is a "personal action" and survives the death of plaintiff. Motlow v. Johnson, 44 South. 42, 151 Ala. 276.

Mandamus is a "personal action," within Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 787, c. 105, § 2, declaring that all personal actions, with specified exceptions, shall survive, and is a "suit at law," within Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that no suit at law shall abate at the death of any party, where the cause of action survives. State v. Jessup & Moore Paper Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 350, 351.

Where a tenant's property was sold under an agreement that the proceeds should be deposited in a bank for the purpose of satisfying the landlord's and other claims out of them, an equitable proceeding by the landlord to satisfy his claim out of the deposit, in which the bank, the tenant, and other claimants were made parties, was a "personal action," and not one against the deposit, so that it could be brought against all of defendants in the county within which any of them resided, under Code, § 3501, requiring personal actions to be brought in a county in which some of defendants actually reside. Kean v. Rogers (Iowa) 118 N. W. 515, 517.

PERSONAL AILMENT

Confinement in childbirth is not a "personal ailment" within the meaning of such a provision in a contract of insurance. Rascot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 108 Pac. 1048, 1053, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 138 Am. St. Rep. 180.

PERSONAL AND LAWFUL HEIR

Where a testator to prevent any trouble about the property which he might leave to his heirs at his death gave his wife a life estate in all his real and personal property, with power to dispose of any portion of the personalty that should suit her convenience, the residuary clause reading, "The balance of all my estate, both personal and real, I give and bequeath to my dear children," naming them, "and to their personal and lawful heirs, share and share alike," the words "personal and lawful heirs" are not equivalent to "heirs of the body begotten," so that the testator's children would only take a life estate, such words no more indicating the bodies out of which the heirs shall issue than if the word "personal" had been omitted, but that the testator intended to give the children named in the residuary clause an estate in fee in the real estate. Webbe v. Webbe, 84 N. E. 1054, 1056, 234 Ill. 442, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1079.

PERSONAL BAGGAGE

See, also, Personal Luggage.

The personal baggage of a passenger includes jewelry carried for his personal use, but not that carried for sale or for the use of another. Brick v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 58 S. E. 1073, 1074, 145 N. C. 203, 122 Am. St. Rep. 440, 13 Ann. Cas. 328.

The term "personal baggage" means whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience, according to his habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to his immediate necessities or to the ultimate purposes of the journey. This includes not only all articles of apparel, whether for use or ornament, but also the gun case, or fishing apparatus of the sportsman; the easel of the artist on a sketching tour or the books of the student or other articles of an analogous character, the use of which is personal to the traveler, and the taking of which has arisen from the fact of his journeying. Memoranda and papers in the possession of an agent, but relating exclusively to the business of his principal, and carried by him solely for business purposes, are not "baggage" when put by the agent into his trunk, and, in the absence of a consent or custom of the railroad to accept such papers as "baggage," no damages can be recovered for their loss or for delay in their shipment and delivery. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 37 South. 500, 85 Miss. 7, 67 L. R. A. 646, 107 Am. St. Rep. 265.

Merchandise for sale is not within the usual definition of "personal baggage," nor within Rev. St. § 2799, relating to the duty of persons arriving in the United States to declare their personal baggage. United States v. One Trunk, 175 Fed. 1012, 1015.

There seems to be no good reason why an article for use at the end of the journey, or for the use of the traveler's wife, child, or other member of his immediate family, should not fall within the definition of the term "personal baggage." Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Skinner, 113 S. W. 1019, 1020, 88 Ark. 189, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 850 (citing 3 Hutch. on Carr. § 1246; Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 104 N. W. 773, 141 Mich. 412, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 352, 113 Am. St. Rep. 533, 7 Ann. Cas. 57).

A carrier need not carry goods, articles, furniture, etc., or anything not fairly to be regarded as "personal baggage" reasonably required for the convenience and comfort of the passenger, as baggage, and may refuse to carry such articles except as freight. Under the customary methods for carrying freight, stage costumes, scenery, etc., making up the paraphernalia of a traveling theatrical company do not constitute the personal baggage which a carrier impliedly contracts to carry without additional compensation, and along with the passenger. Saunders v. Southern R. Co., 128 Fed. 15, 20, 21, 62 O. C. A. 523 (citing and adopting Oakes v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 26 Pac. 230, 20 Or. 392, 12 L. R. A. 318, 23 Am. St. Rep. 126; 3 Thomp. Neg. § 3417).

PERSONAL COMMUNICATION

A statute prohibiting testimony of a party in respect to any transaction or communication "by him personally" with a deceased person does not forbid testimony of transactions or communications between deceased and third persons in the witness' presence if the witness did not participate therein and they were not affected by his presence. Unless the transactions or communications are personal and had with the deceased by the party either literally or in practical effect as by participating in or influencing them, they do not fall under the prohibition of the statute. Wollman v. Ruehle, 80 N. W. 919, 920, 104 Wis. 603.

The word "personally," in St. 1893, § 4212 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1893, § 4509), providing that no party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, etc., is not limited to conversations had with a deceased, but includes any transaction or communication had with a deceased person individually. Conklin v. Yates, 83 Pac. 910, 912, 16 Okl. 266.

In an action by an administrator to recover money lent to defendant by decedent, testimony by defendant that money for payment of the debt was inclosed in an envelope, taken to the post office, and that certain steps were there taken to have the postmaster register the letter and send it to decedent in a distant state, and also that in due time defendant received a writing acknowledging receipt of the money, which writing was identified and introduced in evidence was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 320 (Gen. St. 1909, § 5914), providing that no party shall testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by him with a decedent, where the adverse party is the administrator of such decedent; witness' acts not constituting a personal transaction or communication. Bryan v. Palmer, 111 Pac. 443, 444, 83 Kan. 298, 21 Ann. Cas. 1214.

Under Code, § 4604, prohibiting testimony of an interested witness concerning personal transactions or communications with a deceased person in an action against her administrator, evidence by plaintiff, in an action to establish a note signed by his father and stepmother as a claim against the latter estate, that he gave the father an order to obtain the note from the party in whose custody it was, and that he afterwards saw it in his father's possession, and evidence of the father to the same effect, was admissible, since such evidence does not constitute "personal transactions" or "personal communications." Curd v. Wisser, 95 N. W. 286, 287, 120 Iowa, 743 (citing Gable v. Halner, 49 N. W. 1024, 83 Iowa, 457; Dysart v. Furrow, 57 N. W. 644, 90 Iowa, 59; McElhenney v. Hendricks, 48 N. W. 1056, 82 Iowa, 657; Walkley v. Clarke, 78 N. W. 70, 107 Iowa, 451).

PERSONAL CREDIBILITY

The expression "personal credibility," as used in Civ. Code, § 5146, which provides that in determining where the preponderance of evidence lies the personal credibility of witnesses may be considered so far as the same legitimately appears from the trial, means that which would lead the jury to believe or disbelieve what the witness had said by reason of his appearance before them, his manner of conducting himself in their presence, his manner of testifying, and those other numerous and largely indescribable things which make one man believe or disbelieve another simply from seeing and hearing him; especially as considered apart from the inherent probability or lack of probability of the particular thing he has testified to, and apart from the corroboration or refutation which his testimony has received during the progress of the trial. Western & A. R. Co. v. Henderson, 65 S. E. 48, 50, 6 Ga. App. 385.

PERSONAL CREDIT

Negotiable Instruments Law (Laws 1897, p. 722, c. 612, § 20), requires that an instrument to be negotiable must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money, and section 22 defines an unconditional promise as therein used as: "An unqualified promise or order to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this act, though coupled with: (1) An indication of a particular fund out of which reimbursement is to be made, in a particular account to be debited with the amount; or (2) a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument. But an order or promise to pay out of a particular fund is not unconditional." It was claimed that the statute was but a codification of the former law, and that it was always the rule that it was essential to negotiability that the "general credit" of the maker be pledged to the obligation, the court says: "Many decisions and text-books are cited in support of this contention; and it must be conceded that they contain general broad statements of the rule and definitions tending to sustain it. The facts upon which the adjudications were had, however, were not analogous to those now before the court; and it will, we think, be found in all of them that the expressions 'general credit' and 'personal credit' were used, not as indicating that the entire general or personal credit of the maker must be pledged to the obligation, but rather to show that general or personal credit must be pledged, as contradistinguished from limiting the liability to a particular or specific fund, which would make the obligation in effect an assignment pro tanto of the fund, and not a negotiable bill of obligation of the maker." Hibbs v. Brown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 353, 357, 112 App. Div. 214 (citing Laws 1894, p. 412, c. 235; Code Civ. Proc. § 1919-1924; In re Jones' Estate, 65 N. E. 570, 172 N. Y. 575, 60 L. R. A. 476; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 19 Am. Rep. 300; People ex rel. Winchester v. Coleman, 31 N. E. 96, 133 N. Y. 279, 16 L. R. A. 183).

PERSONAL EFFECTS

"The words 'personal effects' in a will, when not restricted by the context, mean everything embraced within the description 'personal property.'" Gallagher v. McKeague, 103 N. W. 233, 234, 125 Wis. 116, 110 Am. St. Rep. 821.

Merchandise for sale is not within the usual definition of "personal effects," nor within Customs Administrative Act June 16, 1890, c. 407, § 4, 26 Stat. 131, providing that, except in case of "personal effects," no importation of any merchandise shall be entered without invoice. United States v. One Trunk, 175 Fed. 1012, 1015.

PERSONAL EXEMPTION

"Personal exemptions" from taxation are "such as have been by legislative enactment granted either directly to persons or corporations that are named in the acts thus granting them or granted to such persons or corporations as may comply with the requirements of such legislative enactment, and thus bring themselves within the granting clause thereof, and by so doing make themselves the beneficiaries of such granting clause." Grand Canyon R. Co. v. Treat, 95 Pac. 187, 189, 12 Ariz. 69.

PERSONAL FREIGHT

A contract to carry the "personal freight" of certain parties between designated points free of charge means freight owned by them individually, and is not too indefinite to be executed. Hurley v. Big Sandy & C. Ry. Co., 125 S. W. 302, 304, 137 Ky. 216.

PERSONAL IMMUNITY

The theory that every one has a right to privacy, and that the same is a personal right, growing out of the inviolability of the person, defined by Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts (2d Ed. p. 29), as: "'Personal Immunity.' The right to one's person may be said to be a right of complete immunity, to be let alone." And that a person is entitled to relief at law or in equity for an invasion of the same is generally understood to have been first publicly advanced in an article entitled "The Right to Privacy," published in 4 Harv. Law Rev. 193 (December, 1890), wherein some of the necessities for invoking such relief are set out as follows: "Recent inventions and business methods call attention to the next step which must be taken for the protection of the person, and for securing to the individual what Judge Cooley calls the right 'to be let alone.' Instantaneous photographs and newspaper enterprise have invaded the sacred precincts of private and domestic life; and numerous mechanical devices threaten to make good the prediction that 'what is whispered in the closet shall be proclaimed from the housetops.' For years there has been a feeling that the law must afford some remedy for the unauthorized circulation of portraits of private persons, and the evil of the invasion of privacy by the newspapers, long keenly felt, has been but recently discussed by an able writer. The alleged facts of a somewhat notorious case, brought before an inferior tribunal in New York a few months ago, directly involved the consideration of the right of circulating portraits; and the question whether our law will recognize and protect the right to privacy in this and in other respects must soon come before our courts for consideration. Of the desirability—indeed, of the necessity—of some such protection, there can, it is believed, be no doubt the press is overstepping in every direction the obvious bounds of propriety and of decency. Gossip is no longer the resource of the idle and of the vicious, but has become a trade, which is pursued with industry, as well as effrontery. To satisfy a prurient taste the details of sexual relations are spread broadcast in the columns of the daily papers. To occupy the indolent, column upon column is filled with idle gossip, which can only be procured by intrusion upon the domestic circle. The intensity and complexity of life, attendant upon advancing civilization, have rendered necessary some retreat from the world, and man, under the refining influence of culture, has become more sensitive to publicity, so that solitude and privacy have become more essential to the individual; but modern enterprise and invention have, through invasions upon his privacy, subjected him to mental pain and distress, far greater than could be inflicted by mere bodily injury. Nor is the harm wrought by such invasions confined to the suffering of those who may be made the subjects of journalistic or other enterprise. In this, as in other branches of commerce, the supply creates the demand." This right to be let alone does entitle to relief one whose picture has without his permission been printed in a mercantile advertisement, the right going only so far as to protect the individual from bodily injury. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 99, 100, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

PERSONAL INCONVENIENCE

"Personal inconvenience" resulting from physical disability belongs to the same class as pain and suffering. In an action by a married woman for personal injuries, plaintiff may recover damages for physical or personal inconvenience resulting from the injury. In an action against a street railway for injuries received by plaintiff through stepping on an electrified metal plate on defendant's car, allegations in the petition that as a result of the injuries plaintiff's lower limbs were partially paralyzed, her nervous system injured and diseased, and she suffered severe pains, etc., and that as a result of the injury she was for a considerable period of time confined to her bed and was unable to perform her household duties, etc., were broad enough to include damages on account of physical inconvenience. McRae v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 102 S. W. 1032, 1035, 125 Mo. App. 502.

PERSONAL INDIGNITY

Personal indignities rendering life burdensome, which are made a ground for divorce by the statute, include conduct short of actual personal violence, or such conduct as renders further cohabitation dangerous or unsafe. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 100 Pac. 321, 323, 52 Wash. 160.

PERSONAL INJURY

See Permanent Personal Injury; Serious Bodily Harm or Injury.

Right of action for as chose in action, see Chose in Action.

An injury to a person within the meaning of the law does not necessarily involve any element of personal contact with the person complaining of the injury. Riddle v. MacFadden, 94 N. E. 644, 645, 201 N. Y. 215.

An action by a husband for the loss of services of his wife resulting from injuries through the alleged negligence of defendant is an "action for injuries to the person" within the statute of limitations. Mulvey v. City of Boston, 83 N. E. 402, 403, 197 Mass. 178, 14 Ann. Cas. 349.

The damages for failure to deliver a telegram, or delay in delivering it, are not "injuries to the person," within the meaning of Ky. St. 1903, § 2515, prescribing limitations of one year in actions against corporations for injuries to the person. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Witt (Ky.) 110 S. W. 889, 890.

An "injury to the person," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 4222, subd. 5, requiring service of notice within one year in an action to recover damages for such an injury, does not include a father's loss of service and expenses of medical attendance and nursing resulting from an injury sustained by a minor son. Wysocki v. Wisconsin Lake Ice & Cartage Co., 104 N. W. 707, 708, 125 Wis. 638.

Supplement of March 24, 1896, to the statute of limitations (P. L. p. 119), providing that action for "injuries to persons" shall be brought within two years, applies only to actions for personal injuries, and hence not to an action to recover for injury to a vessel caused by a negligent collision. Dailey v. Kiernan, 67 Atl. 1027, 1028, 75 N. J. Law, 275.

In prosecution of a husband for knowingly persuading his wife to go from one state to another with intent that she should practice prostitution in violation of the white slave act (Act Cong. June 25, 1910, c. 395, § 3, 36 Stat. 825), prohibiting white slave traffic, such offense was in the nature of a "personal injury" to her person so as to entitle her to testify against her husband. United States v. Rispoli, 189 Fed. 271, 272.

Code Civ. Proc. § 549, declares that a defendant may be arrested in an action for damages for a personal injury. Section 3343, subd. 9, provides that a personal injury includes libel or other actionable injury to the person either of the plaintiff or of another. Held, that an injury inflicted through the negligence of defendant's servant is a personal injury within section 3343. Ossmann v. Crowley, 92 N. Y. Supp. 29, 30, 101 App. Div. 597 (citing Lasche v. Dearing, 53 N. Y. Supp. 58, 23 Misc. Rep. 722; Daids v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 285, 104 App. Div. 23).

Code Civ. Proc. § 549, authorizes the arrest of defendant in an action for damages for "personal injury." By section 3343, subd. 9, "personal injury" is stated to include among other things, assault, battery, false imprisonment, or "other actionable injury" to the person. Held, that the words "other actionable injury" to the person mean other like to assault, or in an action in which defendant was himself at fault, and hence the statute does not authorize the arrest of defendant in an action for negligence or assault where the act causing the injury was that of his servant, but which is imputed to be his act, though not authorized by him. Daids v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 220, 45 Misc. Rep. 208.

Decedent Estate Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 13), § 120, provides that for wrongs done to the property, rights, or interests of another, for which an action might be maintained against the wrongdoer, an action may be brought after the injured person's death by his executors, etc., but that such section shall not extend to an action for personal injuries, as such action is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, except that the right of action for injuries resulting in death is not affected. Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 9, provides: "Personal injury" includes libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction and malicious prosecution, etc. Held that, the right of privacy being in its nature personal an action for violation thereof through the unauthorized use of plaintiff's name and picture, brought under Civil Rights Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 6) §§ 50, 51, does not survive plaintiff's death. Wyatt v. Hall's Portrait Studio, 128 N. Y. Supp. 247, 248, 71 Misc. Rep. 199.

Alienation of affections

Injury to a wife by the alienation of her husband's affections resulting in mental suffering, ill-health and the destruction of her home, is within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550, 551, excepting from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy judgments in actions for willful and malicious "injuries to the person." Leicester v. Hoadley, 71 Pac. 318, 319, 320, 66 Kan. 172, 65 L. R. A. 523.

The phrase "injury to the person," as used in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 260, § 10, providing that no person who shall be committed on execution in any action for malicious injury to the person, health, or reputation of another shall be deemed within the meaning of section 1 of the act, authorizing persons imprisoned for debt to apply to be admitted to take the poor debtor's oath, includes an action for alienation of the affection of a wife, the gist of the action being depriving him of companionship and a wounding of his feelings. Taylor v. Bliss, 57 Atl. 939, 940, 26 R. I. 16.

An action for alienating a wife's affections, for enticing her away, and for criminal conversation is in effect an action upon the case and barred only after six years; it is not an action for injury to the person and barred after two years under section 3 of the Statute of Limitations as amended in 1896 (P. L. 1896, p. 119; 3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 3164). Crane v. Ketcham, 84 Atl. 1052, 1053, 83 N. J. Law, 327.

Breach of marriage promise

A "personal injury," as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 9, includes libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction, and malicious prosecution; also an assault, battery, false imprisonment, or other actionable injury to the person either of the plaintiff or another. An action for breach of promise to marry, though seduction is alleged as the ground of damage, is not an action for a personal injury within section 873, providing that in actions for personal injuries the defendant may have an order for physical examination. Pitt v. Dunlap, 105 N. Y. Supp. 846, 847, 54 Misc. Rep. 115.

Death

The words "personal injuries," as used in Laws 1886, c. 572, p. 801, relating to actions against municipal corporations for damages for personal injuries, includes injuries resulting in death. Crapo v. City of Syracuse, 90 N. Y. Supp. 553, 555, 98 App. Div. 376; Id., 76 N. E. 465, 466, 183 N. Y. 395.

In view of Kirby's Dig. § 6288, providing that for wrongs done to the person or property of another an action may be maintained against the wrongdoers, the expression "injury to the person" is confined to injury or damage of a physical nature and no other, and will not include the injuries suffered by a husband arising out of the killing of his wife. Billingsley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 107 S. W. 173, 174, 84 Ark. 617, 120 Am. St. Rep. 95.

Laws 1853, p. 97, entitled "An act requiring compensation for causing death from wrongful act, neglect or default," provides that, when the death of the person is caused by wrongful act, such as would have entitled the party injured to maintain an action in respect thereof if death had not ensued, the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages resulting to a widow and next of kin from such death. Held, that an action for wrongful death under such act was not an action for "personal injuries" within Laws 1905, p. 111, entitled "An act concerning suits at law for personal injuries and against cities, villages and towns," requiring as a condition to the maintenance thereof that the specified notice shall be served on the defendant, and hence the service of such notice was not a necessary element of a cause of action by plaintiff against a city for the wrongful death of plaintiff's decedent. Prouty v. City of Chicago, 95 N. E. 147, 148, 250 Ill. 222.

Deceit

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 9, defining a "personal injury" as an actual injury to the person, an action for deceit is not for a personal injury, within section 1910, providing that any claim or demand can be transferred except where it is to recover damages for a personal injury or for breach of promise to marry. Keeler v. Dunham, 99 N. Y. Supp. 669, 671, 114 App. Div. 94.

False imprisonment

"False imprisonment" is an injury to the person and is embraced within the provision of the Code authorizing the plaintiff to unite in the same complaint two or more causes of action for personal injuries. Paul v. Ford, 102 N. Y. Supp. 359, 361, 117 App. Div. 151 (quoting De Wolfe v. Abraham, 45 N. E. 455, 151 N. Y. 187).

Where plaintiff sued for false imprisonment, in that he was arrested as a witness and taken by an officer from defendant's train, a prayer that it was the duty of the carrier to use all reasonable care to protect plaintiff from "personal injury" and insult was not objectionable as abstract, since the false arrest and imprisonment constituted a "personal injury"; such term being defined to include libel, slander, criminal conversation, seduction, malicious prosecution, assault and battery, false imprisonment, and other actionable injuries to the person. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 82 Atl. 709, 714, 116 Md. 441, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 502 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5341).

Libel or slander

Code Civ. Proc. 1895, § 3476, divides injuries into two classes, viz., injuries to the person and injuries to the property, and section 3477 declares that injury to property is a deprivation of the owner of the benefit thereof by taking, withholding, deteriorating, or destroying it, and section 3478 provides that every other injury is an "injury to the person." Held that, under Code Civ. Proc. 1895, § 66, providing that justices of the peace shall have civil jurisdiction in actions for damages for "injury to the person" if the damages claimed do not exceed $300, prior to its amendment by Laws 1907, p.

186, expressly depriving justices of the peace of jurisdiction of an action for slander, such action was for an "injury to the person" within the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, provided the amount claimed did not exceed $300; the phrase "injury to the person" not being limited to those injuries which would support an action for trespass vi et armis at common law. McKenzie v. Doran, 104 Pac. 677, 678, 39 Mont. 598.

"In modern parlance the words 'personal injury' are often used to designate a physical injury to the party. But usually, when there is any attempt to put the matter into legal phraseology, these and equivalent words are understood to import the meaning in which they have long been used by recognized authorities, whether in legal text-books and commentaries or precise definition by courts, in classifying the rights of individuals. In 1 Bl. Comm. 129 et seq., the author classifies and distinguishes those rights which are annexed to the person, jura personarum, and acquired rights in external objects, jura rerum; and in the former he includes personal security, which consists 'in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation.' And he makes the corresponding classification of remedies. The idea expressed is that a man's reputation is a part of himself, as his body and his limbs are, and that detraction of it is an injury to his personality, and Chancellor Kent in his twenty-fourth lecture shows that the same classification of rights was expressed in our colonial legislation and has always been observed, and, on page *16 of the second volume of his Commentaries, he says: 'As a part of the rights of personal security, the preservation of every person's good name from the vile arts of detraction is justly included. The laws of the ancients, no less than those of modern nations, made private reputation one of the objects of their protection.' A judgment for libel is for an "an injury to the person" and is not released by a discharge in bankruptcy. Thompson v. Judy, 169 Fed. 553, 555, 556, 95 C. C. A. 51.

Injuries to character and mental suffering resulting from a libelous publication are "personal injuries," within the meaning of Act La. No. 68, p. 95, of 1902, amendatory of Rev. Civ. Code La. 1870, art. 2402, which provides, inter alia, that "damages resulting from personal injuries to the wife shall not form part of this community, but shall always be and remain the separate property of the wife and recoverable by herself alone," and under such provision a wife may maintain an action to recover damages for a libel affecting herself. At common law, libel and slander were regarded as injuries to the person, or "personal injuries." Where the terms "injury to the person" and "personal injuries" are used in the statutes of the United States, and of the several states, they are generally held to include libel. Times-Democrat Pub. Co. v. Mozee, 136 Fed. 761, 763, 69 C. C. A. 418 (citing 3 Bl. 119; Cooley, Torts [2d Ed.] 23, 24; Bouv. Law Dict. verbo "Injury"; McDonald v. Brown, 51 Atl. 218, 23 R. I. 546, 58 L. R. A. 768, 91 Am. St. Rep. 659; Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 13 S. E. 250, 87 Ga. 79, 80; Sanderson v. Hunt, 76 S. W. 179, 116 Ky. 435, 3 Ann. Cas. 168; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 359, 16 Am. Rep. 270; Ott v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 72 N. W. 833, 70 Minn. 50, 54; Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 458, 29 Am. Rep. 499; Smith v. Sherman, 4 Cush. [58 Mass.] 408; State v. Clayborne, 45 Pac. 303, 14 Wash. 622).

Mental injury

The words "personal injuries," as used in a statute providing that actions for personal injuries to a wife shall be brought in her name, extend to injuries to her feelings resulting from abuse, slander, or libel. Martin v. Derenbecker, 40 South. 849, 850, 116 La. 495.

Mental suffering is included in the term "personal injuries," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3353a, providing that causes of action upon which suit has or may be brought by the injured party for personal injuries other than those resulting in death whether such injuries be to the health, the reputation, or the person of the injured party, shall not abate by reason of his death but shall survive in favor of his heirs, etc. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kaufman (Tex.) 107 S. W. 630, 631.

Seduction

An action for seduction is an action for "personal injuries," within Pub. Acts 1890, No. 155, barring actions for personal injuries, unless brought within three years from the occurrence; a "personal" wrong or injury being an invasion of a personal right and pertaining to the person. May v. Wilson, 128 N. W. 1084, 1085, 164 Mich. 26, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 654.

PERSONAL LIBERTY

See, also, Right of Privacy.

"Personal liberty consists," says Blackstone, "in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatever places one's own inclination may direct, without restraint, unless by due course of law." Civil Rights Cases, 3 Sup. Ct. 15, 109 U. S. 3, 39, 27 L. Ed. 835.

"Personal liberty" is the power of locomotion, of changing situation, of removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, except by course of law. It includes not only the right to go where one pleases but to maintain himself in a lawful manner while there, to live and work where he chooses, to earn his livelihood by a lawful calling, to enter into contracts essential to carry out his avocation, as well as mere freedom from imprisonment. It also includes the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 107, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

"Personal liberty" includes not only freedom from physical restraint, but the right to be let alone to determine one's own mode of life, whether it shall be one of publicity or of privacy, and to order one's life and manage one's affairs in a manner that will be most agreeable to him, so long as he does not violate the rights of others or of the public. Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 70, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561. "The right of 'personal security' is not fully accorded by allowing an individual to go through life in possession of all of his members, and his body unmarred; nor is his right to 'personal liberty' fully accorded by merely allowing him to remain out of jail, or free from other physical restraints. The liberty which he derives from natural law, and which is recognized by municipal law, embraces far more than freedom from physical restraint. The term 'liberty' is not to be so dwarfed, 'but is deemed to embrace the right of a man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare.' 'Liberty,' in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation." "The right of one to exhibit himself to the public at all proper times, in all proper places, and in a proper manner, is embraced within the right of 'personal liberty.' The right to withdraw from the public gaze at such times as a person may see fit, when his presence in public is not demanded by any rule of law, is also embraced within the right of 'personal liberty.' Publicity in one instance, and privacy in the other, are each guaranteed. If 'personal liberty' embraces the right of publicity, it no less embraces the correlative right of privacy." Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 70, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561 (citing Brannon, Fourteenth Amendment, 111).

The "right to personal liberty," which exists independent of any express provision of law, includes not only absolute freedom of travel, but the preservation of the person inviolate against attack or compulsory stripping or exposure. People ex rel. Gow v. Bingham, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 1014, 57 Misc. Rep. 66.

PERSONAL LUGGAGE

See, also, Personal Baggage.

"Whatever a passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience either with reference to immediate necessities or the ultimate purposes of the journey, must be considered 'personal luggage.'" The term would include money for expenses and diamond rings suitable for the passenger's station in life. Hasbrouck v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 735, 739, 742, 64 Misc. Rep. 478 (quoting and adopting definition in Ray, Neg. Imp. Duties, p. 561).

PERSONAL MORTGAGE

A "personal mortgage" is more than a mere security. It is a sale of the thing mortgaged, and operates as a transfer of the whole legal title to the mortgagee subject only to be defeated by the full performance of the condition. In re Riggs Restaurant Co., 130 Fed. 691, 693, 66 C. C. A. 48 (citing Butler v. Miller, 1 N. Y. 500).

PERSONAL NOTICE

"Personal notice" to an absent defendant of an attachment of his real estate implies more than casual information of the suit or of the seizure of his property, but it relates to his receiving or learning of the copy of the writ that he is entitled to have left for him. Wade v. Wade's Adm'r, 69 Atl. 826, 827, 81 Vt. 275.

PERSONAL OBLIGATION

A contract giving D. exclusive right to drill in defendant's land with a view of finding commercial substances, and in case of success within 90 days thereafter to pay defendant $100 per arpent for a conveyance of the land, did not impose a "personal obligation" on D. within Civ. Code, art. 2000, declaring an obligation personal when the obligor undertakes to perform anything that requires his personal skill and attention; and hence the contract was assignable. Anse La Butte Oil & Mineral Co. v. Babb, 47 South. 754, 755, 122 La. 415.

Personal property is the right or interest which a person has in things personal. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

Ordinarily the term "personal property" includes money, goods, chattels, etc. Brom- berg v. McArdle, 55 South. 805, 172 Ala. 270, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 855.

"Personal property" is any right or interest which a man may have in things movable and includes chattels, things in action, and evidence of debt." Fishburn v. Londershausen, 92 Pac. 1060, 1062, 50 Or. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1234, 15 Ann. Cas. 975 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 662).

The term "personal property," as used in the statute relating to taxation, means and includes all property not included in the term "real estate." Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. v. Territorial Board of Equalization, 84 Pac. 511, 518, 9 Ariz. 383.

The words "personal property" as used in Rev. St. Wis. 1878, § 2317, providing that no contract for the sale of personal property by the terms of which the title is to remain in the vendor and possession in the vendee until the purchase price is paid shall be valid against any other person than the parties, without filing, is not limited to property sold to be used and not resold. Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 158 Fed. 885, 888.

The provision of Comp. Laws 1897, § 3834, that the personal property of corporations organized for the purpose of maritime commerce and navigation shall be assessed only in the city or township which is stated in their articles of association, is not confined to vessel property so called, but extends to all the "personal property of corporations engaged in maritime commerce or navigation." Teagan Transp. Co. v. Board of Assessors of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 273, 274, 139 Mich. 1, 69 L. R. A. 431, 111 Am. St. Rep. 391.

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 8454, provides that "In entering personal property upon the proper tax books for the purpose of taxation it shall be a sufficient description of the same to use the words 'personal property,' and such phrase shall comprehend and embrace all species of personal property belonging to the person charged therewith on the tax books, and no more specific description or designation thereof shall be necessary." Brunson v. Starbuck, 70 N. E. 163, 165, 32 Ind. App. 457.

Testatrix gave specific personal property and specified sums to beneficiaries and directed the executor to sell the remainder of household furniture, goods, chattels, and stock, and to convert "all other personal property" into money and divide the same equally between two beneficiaries. Held, that the term "personal property" was sufficiently comprehensive to include all goods, chattels, notes, bonds, mortgages, choses in action, and money possessed by testatrix at the date of her death, so that all her personal property was disposed of by the will. Skinner v. Spann, 93 N. E. 1061, 1070, 175 Ind. 672.

In Rev. Laws, c. 140, § 2, providing that such parts of the "personal property" as the probate court, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, may allow as necessities to the widow for herself, shall not be taken as assets for the payment of debts, legacies, or charges of administration, the term "personal property" means the personal property left by the deceased at the time of his death, and as to this property, upon the appointment of an executor or administrator, jurisdiction of the court attaches for the purpose of allowing to the widow as necessities whatever she ought to receive. It is not the personal property that is in the hands of the administrator at the time of filing the petition for an allowance which the law appropriates for payment of necessities, but it is all that comes into his hands so far as it may be needed under the decree of the court. Whitcomb v. Taylor, 78 N. E. 536, 537, 192 Mass. 555.

Rev. St. Ohio 1890-92, § 2731, providing that "all property, whether real or personal in this state, * * * and all money, credits, investments and bonds, stocks and otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation," when construed in connection with the related sections, which require the listing for taxation of property held by trustees or agents for others, includes, and subjects to taxation as "personal property," every form of such property having a situs in the state, including such forms as money, credits, bonds, or stocks, whether such situs is given by reason of the residence of the owner in the state, in which case such forms of property are taxed without regard to the place of their deposit, or whether by reason of their being held within the state by an agent of a nonresident owner; and municipal bonds deposited with the state superintendent of insurance by a foreign insurance company for the protection of Ohio policy holders, as required by section 3660, are taxable, and when not returned by either the company or the superintendent of insurance may properly be listed by the auditor of the county in which they are held. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto v. Halliday, 126 Fed. 257, 265, 61 C. C. A. 271.

Statutory definitions

"Personal property" includes money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 33, 28 Am. Rep. 527 (quoting and adopting definition in Rev. St. c. 5).

Statutory construction law defines the term personal property as follows:—"The term 'personal property' includes chattels, money, things in action, and all written instruments themselves, as distinguished from the rights or interests to which they relate, by which any right, interest, lien or incumbrance in, to or upon property, or any debt or financial obligation is created, acknowledged, evidenced, transferred, discharged or defeated, wholly or in part, and everything except real property, which may be the subject of ownership." Morgan v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 185, 188, 119 App. Div. 645 (citing Laws 1892, p. 1486, c. 677, § 4).

Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, § 2781a, providing that the term "personal property" applies to all kinds of omitted property for the taxation of which, for any of the years in which it was omitted, provision was not made by law, considered in connection with other provisions for the listing, valuing, levying, and collection of taxes on taxable property which is not returned to the taxing officers or has been omitted from tax duplicates, should be construed as if reading, "all kinds of 'omitted' property," etc., and as intended to apply only to property which was properly taxable in such years but which was not returned or properly returnable for taxation thereon. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto v. Halliday, 127 Fed. 830, 831, 837, 838.

The term "personal property," as employed in a tax law, includes bonds, notes, credits, and choses in action. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. Tex. 1897, art. 5063, providing that personal property shall, for the purposes of taxation, be construed to include goods, moneys, and evidences of debt, "owned by citizens of the state," does not, when considered in connection with all the provisions of the law relating to the subject of taxation, operate to exclude from taxation property owned by nonresidents that has a taxable situs within the state. It embraces a deposit of securities with the State Treasurer by a foreign guaranty company as required by Acts 25th Leg. p. 244, c. 165, approved June 10, 1897, as security for the performance of its obligations. State v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 80 S. W. 544, 553, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214.

"Gen. St. 1909, § 9215, provides the term 'personal property' shall include every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership, not forming part of real property; also the capital stock, undivided profits, and all other assets of every company, incorporated or unincorporated, and every share or interest in such stock, profit, or assets, by whatever name the same may be designated, provided the same is not included in other personal property subject to taxation or listed as the property of individuals." Hunt v. Board of Com'rs of Allen County, 109 Pac. 106, 107, 82 Kan. 824.

The object of the provision, "all goods, chattels, and effects belonging to inhabitants of this state, situated without this state, except the property actually and permanently invested in business in another state shall not be included," in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8411, defining what the term "personal property" shall include for the purpose of taxation, was not to avoid double taxation, since the purpose of that section was not to exempt any property from taxation, but to define the term "personal property" as used in the taxing law. Hasely v. Ensley, 82 N. E. 809, 811, 40 Ind. App. 598.

Bonds

Bonds are "personal property." Wuller v. Chuse Grocery Co., 89 N. E. 796, 798, 241 Ill. 398, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 132 Am. St. Rep. 216, 16 Ann. Cas. 522 (citing Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 224).

For purposes of taxation "personal property" includes bonds. Buck v. Beach, 71 N. E. 963, 967, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272.

Bonds in which a foreign insurance company is required by Rev. St. Ohio, § 3660, as a condition of doing business in Ohio, to invest a portion of its capital stock, to be deposited with the superintendent of insurance for the protection of the local policy holders, are "personal property" within the meaning of section 2744, requiring insurance companies to list for taxation all their personal property, which, by the terms of that section, is to include moneys and credits within the state, and is also defined in section 2730 as including the capital stock, although the taxation of investments in bonds, provided for in sections 2730, 2731, extends only to such securities as are in the hands of individual residents, owned by themselves or held by them for others, since these last sections were not intended to limit other sections of the tax law, but were enacted to carry out a general purpose to tax all personal property within the state. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Bowland, 25 Sup. Ct. 345-351, 196 U. S. 611, 49 L. Ed. 619.

Building

A dwelling house erected on a city street, though by mistake extending onto an adjoining lot, under a permit conditioned that the builder will remove it on 30 days' notice from the city, built on wooden shoes extending its entire width, and resting on wooden blocks laid on the ground, so that removal will not disturb the freehold, remains "personal property." Page v. Urlick, 72 Pac. 454, 455, 31 Wash. 601, 96 Am. St. Rep. 924 (citing and adopting Cobbey, Replevin [2d Ed.] § 373; Jewett v. Patridge, 12 Me. 243, 27 Am. Dec. 173; Board of Com'rs of Rush County v. Stubbs, 25 Kan. 322).

Claimant purchased certain land along a street to be widened, and, having previously acquired a building, which had been taken by the city and paid for in another street opening proceeding, moved the building to the land so acquired after the commencement of the proceeding, and placed the same with reference to the prior existing street lines, though the land purchased was sufficient in depth to have enabled him to have located the building with reference to the proposed line of the street. After this, claimant sold to his grantor the rear part of the lot, so as to preclude a relocation of the building on the lot with reference to the proposed line. Held, that the building was not located in good faith, and, having been once severed from the soil, it became "personal property," and should be so considered in determining the question of damages for the part of the lot required for the street. In re Briggs Ave. in City of New York, 89 N. E. 814, 816, 196 N. Y. 255, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273, 17 Ann. Cas. 1032.

Chattel real

Check

A check drawn by the Treasurer of the United States in settlement of a claim against the government is "personal property" within Code, § 105 (21 Stat. 1206, c. 854), providing that publication may be substituted for personal service of process on nonresidents of this district in suits to enforce liens against real or personal property within the District of Columbia. Jones v. Rutherford, 26 App. D. C. 114, 119.

Chose in action

Generally speaking, a "chose in action" is personal property. In re Morace (Del.) 74 Atl. 375, 376, 1 Boyce, 67.

For purposes of taxation "personal property" includes choses in action. Buck v. Beach, 71 N. E. 963, 967, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272.

"Personal property" includes things in action and evidences of debt. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 33, 28 Am. Rep. 527; Fishburn v. Londershausen, 92 Pac. 1060, 1062, 50 Or. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1234, 15 Ann. Cas. 975 (citing Rev. St. c. 5; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. p. 662).

"Choses in action" are "personal property" within the statute against fraudulent conveyances. Hall & Farley v. Alabama Terminal & Improvement Co., 39 South. 285, 288, 143 Ala. 464, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 130, 5 Ann. Cas. 363.

In Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 3, p. 125, § 122, providing that actions to recover damages for injury to real or "personal property" shall survive, the term "personal property" was not intended to be applied to a right of action occasioned by the malicious interfering by one person with the business of another, but was intended to apply only to actions for damages to tangible articles and things movable—to chattels—as distinguished from actions for damages to one's business. Jones v. Barmm, 75 N. E. 505, 506, 217 Ill. 381.

Choses in action in the hands of a trustee subject to a lien or pledge are "personal property," within the purview of Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 28, providing that, if a trustee is chargeable for any personal property subject to mortgage or other lien, the court may appoint a receiver and dispose of it if more can be obtained for it than the claims upon it. Musgrove v. Goss, 72 Atl. 371, 372, 75 N. H. 208 (citing Fling v. Goodall, 40 N. H. 209).

Act Pa. June 7, 1870 (P. L. 58), providing for the issuance of a special writ of fieri facias on a judgment against a corporation after return of execution unsatisfied and the sale thereunder of "the personal, mixed or real property, franchises and rights of such corporation," as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, does not authorize the sale under such writ of a chose in action or claim in tort belonging to the corporation. International Coal Min. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 152 Fed. 554, 555.

An assignment by one of several purchasers of real estate conveyed to a trustee with directions to sell and divide the proceeds among the several purchasers of his interest in the trust agreement to a bank in which he is depositor as security for a note is an assignment by way of a pledge of a chose in action constituting "personal property" within Code Civ. Proc. § 17, and the bank notwithstanding section 726 may offset its matured claim on the note against the deposit without proceeding to collect the security. John M. C. Marble Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, 115 Pac. 59, 62, 15 Cal. App. 347.

Civ. Code, § 4662, subsec. 3, provides that "personal property" includes things in action. Code Civ. Proc. § 1218, provides that all property or any interest therein of the judgment debtor not exempt by law is liable to execution, and all property not capable of manual delivery may be attached on execution in like manner as on writs of attachment. Section 1224 requires the sheriff to execute a writ by collecting or selling the things in action, etc. Section 1232 provides that the officer making the sale must execute and deliver to the purchaser of real (personal) property not capable of manual delivery a certificate of sale upon payment of the purchase money. Section 895, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 139, provides for attachment of debts, credits, and other personal property not capable of manual delivery by serving upon the debtor or person responsible a copy of the writ, etc. Held, that a wife who obtained a judgment against her husband for separate maintenance had a remedy against persons who had converted the husband's property by execution against her husband to collect amounts due under her judgment under which his claim against such persons might have been sold and bought in by her, whereupon she could sue them at law, and that she could not otherwise maintain an action against them in equity, since equity will aid only where an adequate remedy is not found in the prov-sions of law. Raymond v. Blancgrass, 93 Pac. 648, 653, 36 Mont. 449, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976.

Code 1907, § 3765, provides that the surviving husband of a woman who dies intestate shall be entitled absolutely to half the personality of her separate estate. Section 4486 provides that all property of a wife, held by her previous to her marriage, is her separate property. Section 2486, giving to the administrator a right of action for negligence causing death, provides that the damages recovered shall not be liable for the debts of the deceased, and shall be distributed according to the statute of distributions. Held, the right of action being expressly vested in the administrator alone, so as not to be assignable, which right is inseparable from the idea of property, and the action by the administrator being more as an agent to effect the legislative policy to prevent homicide, and as trustee of any recovery, than as the representative of deceased in reducing property of the estate to possession, that, where a widow remarried and died pending a suit by the administrator of the first husband to recover for his death, the surviving second husband was not entitled to share in the subsequent recovery, the wife having had no "property" right in the cause of action, within the meaning of the statutes of distribution, her interest being merely personal, especially in view of Code 1907, § 2, defining "personal property" as money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt; the use of the phrase "things in action," in connection only with assignable property, indicating the legislative intent that it shall have a similar meaning. Holt v. Stollenwerck, 56 South. 912, 913, 174 Ala. 213.

Claim ex contractu or ex delicto

A claim for damages for death by wrongful act is "personal property" within the meaning of Code 1899, c. 13, § 17, subsec. 16, providing that the words "personal property" include goods, chattels real and personal money credits, investments, and the evidences thereof. Richards v. Riverside Ironworks, 49 S. E. 437, 438, 56 W. Va. 510.

A sale of the property of a corporation by a sheriff under a special writ of fieri facias, under the provisions of Act Pa. April 7, 1870 (P. L. 58), which authorizes the issuance of such writ on the return of an execution unsatisfied, and the sale thereunder of "any personal, mixed, or real property franchises and rights of such corporation" as such statute has been construed by the Supreme Court of the state, does not pass title to a claim for damages existing in favor of the corporation, and, on its subsequent adjudication as a bankrupt, a pending action on such a claim may be prosecuted to judgment by its trustee. International Coal Min. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 152 Fed. 551, 553.

Clams

When clams are reclaimed from nature and transplanted to a bed, so marked by stakes as to show that they are in the possession of a private owner, they are "personal property," and may become the subject of larceny. People v. Morrison, 86 N. E. 1120, 1121, 194 N. Y. 175, 128 Am. St. Rep. 552.

Clearing house certificate

Under Code 1907, § 7824, making felonious taking, etc., of personal property of a certain value grand larceny, an indictment alleging taking of clearing house certificates, personal property of another, sufficiently alleges taking of property subject to larceny, in absence of evidence of their nature; section 2 providing that "personal property" shall include money, evidences of debt, etc. Johnson v. State, 48 South. 792, 159 Ala. 113.

Corporation stock

Shares of stock in a corporation are "personal property." Gundry v. Reakirt, 173 Fed. 167, 169 (citing 2 Cook, Corp. [5th Ed.] § 485); Wuller v. Chuse Grocery Co., 89 N. E. 796, 798, 241 Ill. 398, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 132 Am. St. Rep. 216, 16 Ann. Cas. 522 (citing Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 224).

The term "personal property" as used in the tax law includes the capital stock of corporations. Abrahams v. Medlicott, 119 Pac. 375, 376, 86 Kan. 106, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187.

Shares of stock in a corporation are regarded as "personal property" situated at the domicile of the owner, for the purposes of taxation. Darnell v. State, 90 N. E. 769, 772, 174 Ind. 143.

"Stock" in a corporation is a right which a shareholder has by reason of his ownership of stock, and is a right to participate according to the amount of his stock in the surplus profits of the corporation on a division, and ultimately, on its dissolution, in the assets remaining after payment of debts, and this right is personal property. In re Osborne, 153 App. Div. 312, 138 N. Y. Supp. 18, 20.

In jurisdictions possessing attachment laws with language similar to that of ours, it has been held that shares of stock are not included within the phrase "real and personal property." Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 606, 1 Boyce, 113 (citing Foster v. Potter, 37 Mo. 525).

Trover will lie for the wrongful conversion of shares of stock of a corporation. Herrick v. Humphrey Hardware Co., 103 N. W. 685, 687, 73 Neb. 809, 119 Am. St. Rep. 917, 11 Ann. Cas. 201.

Shares of stock of a corporation are "personal property," within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 957, declaring that, when the capital stock of any corporation is divided into shares and certificates therefor are issued, the shares are personal property. Haynes v. Brown, 89 Pac. 1124, 1125, 18 Okl. 389.

Under the act of 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 394) exempting the personal property owned by citizens or corporations of this state situate and being out of the state upon which taxes shall have been actually assessed and paid within 12 months, stock is "personal property." Trenton v. Standard Fire Ins. Co., 68 Atl. 1111, 1112, 76 N. J. Law, 79.

Code 1899, c. 106, § 9, giving plaintiff in attachment a lien on personalty of his debtor on the levy of the attachment or service on garnishee on all choses in action and other securities of defendant from the suing out of the attachment, includes shares of stock in the terms "personal property, choses in action, and other securities." Lipscomb's Adm'r v. Condon, 49 S. E. 392, 393, 56 W. Va. 416, 67 L. R. A. 670, 107 Am. St. Rep. 938.

Stock held by a resident in a foreign corporation whose property is all outside the state is not such "property" or "personal property" as is taxable under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 11,348, 11,415, 11,519; the last section defining property to include every tangible or intangible thing being the subject of ownership, whether animate or inanimate, real or personal. State ex rel. Koeln v. Lesser, 141 S. W. 888, 890, 237 Mo. 310.

Shares of stock in a corporation are the property of the holder thereof, separate and distinct from the property of the corporation itself, and, in the absence of any more specific definition by the Legislature, would be held to be subject to taxation as "personal property." Hasely v. Ensley, 82 N. E. 809, 810, 40 Ind. App. 598.

Under a statute providing that for the purpose of taxation "personal property" shall include all chattels belonging to inhabitants of the state unless permanently invested in another state and shares in foreign corporations owned by the citizens of the state, shares in a foreign corporation owned by a citizen of the state are taxable as "personal property," although corporate property is assessed where situated. Thrall v. Guiney, 104 N. W. 646, 648, 141 Mich. 392, 113 Am. St. Rep. 528.

"Personal property" defined by Gen. St. Kan. 1909, § 9215, relating to taxation, to include every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership not forming a part or parcel of real property, includes shares of stock in a corporation organized in another state where its principal office is located, and this though practically all of the capital of the corporation was invested in real and personal property in Kansas which was itself taxed. Hunt v. Board of Com'rs of Allen County, 109 Pac. 106, 107, 82 Kan. 824.

Shares of corporate stock are personal property within Civ. Code 1895, § 4976, providing that, in a suit to quiet title to property in the state to which a nonresident claims title, such nonresident may be served by publication. An equitable petition alleged that by agreement with a stockholder and promoter of a domestic corporation plaintiff's intestate was to have certain shares of stock, when paid for in the manner provided, that this had been done, and plaintiff's intestate became the real owner, but the executors of the other contracting party had refused to transfer, or have transferred, such stock. Held, that the shares of stock were "personal property," and for the purpose of a suit to quiet title their situs was the domicile of the corporation. Hamil v. Flowers, 65 S. E. 961, 962, 133 Ga. 216.

Shares of stock in an incorporated company held and claimed by a nonresident of the district where the company has its domicile or is engaged in business cannot be considered "personal property within the district," so as to authorize the court, in a suit in which complainant sets up title to the stock, to order the holder to be constructively served in the manner provided by statute. McKane v. Burke, 132 Fed. 688, 689 (citing Kilgour v. New Orleans Gaslight Co., 14 Fed. Cas. 468; 2 Woods, 144).

Under Civ. Code, § 324, declaring that shares of stock in a corporation are "personal property" and may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, and providing that such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is entered on the books of the corporation, etc., a bona fide transfer of corporate shares, though unregistered, takes precedence over a subsequent attachment or execution levied on the stock for the debt of the vendor, in whose name the shares stand on the corporation books. National Bank of Pacific v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 108 Pac. 676, 677, 157 Cal. 573, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391.

Shares of stock in a corporation are personal property belonging to the respective shareholders, and are within the scope and operation of Const. art. 3, § 51, which declares that the personal property of residents in the state shall be subject to taxation in the county or city where the resident bona fide resides for the greater part of the year for which the tax may be levied, and not elsewhere, except goods and chattels permanently located, which shall be taxed in the city or county where they are so located. City of Baltimore v. Allegany County Com'rs, 57 Atl. 632, 636, 99 Md. 1.

Tax Act April 11, 1866, § 5, provided that all real and personal estate should be taxable, except stocks and other personal estate owned by citizens of the state and being out of the state, upon which taxes should have been paid within 12 months. Tax Act April 8, 1903, in revision of Tax Act 1866, provides for the taxation of all property not "expressly exempted," and contains the exact words of exemption, save that the words "personal property" are substituted for "stocks and other personal estate" in the older act. Held, that stock in a foreign corporation owned by a resident is exempt, under Tax Act April 8, 1903, where taxes have been paid on the corporation's property in its own state within 12 months. Inhabitants of City of Trenton v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. of New Jersey, 73 Atl. 606, 607, 77 N. J. Law, 757.

Credits

For purposes of taxation, "personal property" includes bonds, notes, choses in action, and other evidences of credit within the domestic state. Buck v. Beach, 71 N. E. 963, 967, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272.

As used in Rev. St. Wis. 1849, c. 15, § 1, providing for the assessment of personal property, and declaring that the term should be construed to mean all debts due from solvent debtors, whether on account, note, contract, bond, mortgage, or other security, whether due or to become due, all credits constituted "personal property" subject to taxation. Kingsley v. Merrill, 99 N. W. 1044, 1045, 122 Wis. 185, 67 L. R. A. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 748.

Crop

Growing crops are "personalty" which pass by deed as appurtenant to the realty, but may be severed therefrom by reservation, either by parol agreement or instrument in writing. Cooper v. Kennedy, 124 N. W. 1131, 1132, 86 Neb. 119, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 136 Am. St. Rep. 701.

Corn standing in the field on the homestead of a bankrupt and which had fully matured at the date of the bankruptcy is "personal property" and cannot be held exempt as a part of the realty. In re Sullivan, 142 Fed. 620, 621.

Where there was a sale of all the strawberry plants growing on a certain tract of land, the property falls clearly within the classification of fruits of industry and not natural products, and must be treated as "personal property" and the subject of replevin. Cannon v. Mathews, 87 S. W. 428, 430, 75 Ark. 336, 69 L. R. A. 827, 112 Am. St. Rep. 64, 5 Ann. Cas. 478.

The common products of the soil which are treated like "personal property" are the usual annual crops, such as cereals, maize, vegetables, and the annual products of perennial plants and shrubs, but personal property does not include ginseng, of which the root alone has commercial value, and which requires from seven to fifteen years to mature. Kuehn v. City of Antigo, 120 N. W. 823, 824, 139 Wis. 132, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1043.

"Grass rooted to the ground is, for the purpose of sale 'personal property'; and the purchaser has possession sufficient to sustain trespass, though he is not the owner of the land, or the tenant thereof." Where the tenant of a farm, on leaving the state, sold to plaintiffs the right to graze their stock on grass and stalks growing on the farm, plaintiffs to care for the leased premises during the tenant's absence, it did not convert the stalks and grass into "real estate," and hence the landlord, in turning out the stock and locking the gates of the premises, was guilty of a conversion of the stalks and grass, which were "personal property." Ledy v. Carson, 90 S. W. 754, 755, 115 Mo. App. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Avitt v. Farrell, 68 Mo. App. 665).

Possessory warrant lies only for the recovery of personalty, and immature growing crops are not "personal property," but realty, so that a landlord cannot bring possessory warrant against his cropper for such crops, under Civ. Code 1910, § 3706, giving a landlord the right to repossess crops by such proceeding. Gainous v. Martin, 72 S. E. 1100, 10 Ga. App. 210.

Debts

Where two parties contract for the sale of real estate, and the purchaser makes a partial payment and is to pay the remainder in installments, and the seller is to convey the legal title on payment in full of the price, it creates a debt from the purchaser to the seller, which is "personal property" within Gen. St. 1909, § 9215, defining personal property as including every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership; "tangible" being defined as something capable of being possessed or realized; real; substantial; evident—and is subject to taxation under Gen. St. 1909, § 9214, providing for taxation of all property real and personal. Williams v. Board of Com'rs of Osage County, 114 Pac. 858, 84 Kan. 508, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1221.

Domestic animal

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 867, which provides that, within the meaning of "personal property which may be the subject of theft" are included all domesticated animals or birds, when they are proved to be of any specific value, on a prosecution for the theft of a chicken, failure to prove its value necessitates a reversal of a judgment of conviction. Hasley v. State, 94 S. W. 899, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 45.

Pen. Code, § 484, defines larceny as the felonious stealing, etc., of personal property of another. Held, that the phrase "personal property of another," as so used, means property in the possession of another who is entitled, as bailee or otherwise to retain possession, for some benefit or profit to himself to the exclusion of all others, and not absolute ownership as defined by Civ. Code, § 679, so that a taking of a helper by the general owner thereof from the possession of an agister entitled to hold the same under a lien for pasturage, with the intent to deprive the latter thereof, constituted larceny. People v. Cain, 93 Pac. 1037, 1039, 7 Cal. App. 163.

Same—Dog

Dogs are personal property, for the negligent killing of which a railroad company is liable. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Rhoden, 123 S. W. 798, 800, 93 Ark. 29, 137 Am. St. Rep. 73, 20 Ann. Cas. 915.

A dog is "personal property" within the statute providing that "larceny" is the felonious stealing, taking and carrying, riding or driving away personal property of another, and that it shall embrace every theft which unlawfully deprives another of his money or other personal property. State v. Soward, 103 S. W. 741, 742, 83 Ark. 264, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117, 119 Am. St. Rep. 136, 13 Ann. Cas. 79.

Electricity

Electricity is "personal property" capable of sale. Flickelsen v. Wheeling Electrical Co., 67 S. E. 788, 789, 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893.

As estate

See Estate.

Fishery

"As a right of property, a fishery is real and not 'personal property.'" Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1068, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732.

Good will

Laws 1892, p. 1486, c. 677, § 4, defines "personal property" as including everything, except real property, which may be the subject of ownership, and hence the good will of a business firm is taxable under the Transfer Tax Law. In re Dun's Estate, 82 N. Y. Supp. 802, 803, 40 Misc. Rep. 509.

Income and income producing investments

The term "personal property," as used in a will directing the executors to convert all personal property into money, is not limited to personal property of a tangible nature, but includes income-producing investments. Curtis v. Osborn, 65 Atl. 968, 970, 79 Conn. 555.

Insurance policy

Laws 1892, p. 1486, c. 677, § 4, provides as follows: "The term 'personal property' includes chattels, money, things in action, and all written instruments themselves, as distinguished from the rights or interests to which they relate, by which any right, interest, lien, or incumbrance in, to or upon property, or any debt or financial obligation is created, acknowledged, evidenced, transferred, discharged or defeated, wholly or in part, and everything, except real property, which may be the subject of ownership. The term chattels includes goods and chattels." Rev. St. p. 4, c. 1, tit. 7, § 33; Code Proc. § 463; Code Civ. Proc. (1890) § 3343, subd. 7. Where a foreign insurance company doing business in the state under the laws thereof issued a policy to a resident, who, with the company's consent, assigned it to another resident as collateral security for advanced premiums, and the assignee died a resident of the state, and his trustees held the policy as an asset of his estate, the subject-matter of an action by the trustees against the company and the beneficiaries to recover the amount of premiums advanced is "personal property" within the state, within Code Civ. Proc. § 438, subd. 5, authorizing the service of summons on a nonresident defendant by publication, where the complaint demands judgment that defendant be excluded from an interest in "personal property" within the state, and the nonresident beneficiaries may be served by publication. Morgan v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 52 N. E. 438, 440, 189 N. Y. 447; Morgan v. Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co., 116 Pac. 385, 388, 16 Cal. App. 85.

Judgment

A judgment is "personal property," subject to levy and sale on execution, under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 336, 340. Acme Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hinkley, 122 N. W. 482, 23 S. D. 509, 21 Ann. Cas. 743.

Land certificate

An unlocated land certificate is "personal property." Phillips v. Palmer, 120 S. W. 911, 913, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 91; McLain v. Pate (Tex.) 124 S. W. 718, 720.

Leasehold

A lease for a term of years is "personal property," a chattel real, so that a judgment is not a lien on a leasehold estate acquired by the debtor under a lien executed subsequent to the judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 671, making a judgment a lien on all the real property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution owned by him at the time, or any which he may afterwards acquire. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 76 Pac. 243, 246, 142 Cal. 529.

An unexpired three-year lease on premises condemned was "personal property," and not "real estate," within the constitutional provision conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases involving title to real estate. Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128, 131, 246 Mo. 122; Ellis v. Bingham (Tex.) 150 S. W. 602.

An unexpired lease of real property for 20 years or any longer term is "personal property," both at common law and under the statutes of Missouri, and therefore, on the death of the lessee, passes to his administrator, except as to the interest of the widow, under Rev. St. 1899, § 2933, giving her lower in a leasehold. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 92, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 458, providing that "the words 'real estate,' or 'land' shall be construed to mean lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interests therein other than a chattel interest; and the words 'personal estate' shall include chattels, real and other estate, such as, on the death of the owner intestate, would devolve on his personal representatives," a leasehold interest in a store building is "personal estate" rather than "real estate" or "land." Combs Lumber Co. v. Chinn (Ky.) 80 S. W. 251.

"Personal property," defined by Acts 1905, c. 35, p. 309, to include " * * * all things of value, movable and tangible which are the subject of ownership; all chattels, real and personal," etc., includes a lease of land for coal mining and coke manufacturing purposes for a period of 30 years, with the right to erect buildings, etc., upon payment of a rent or royalty of ten cents per ton for all coal mined, and with a clause for forfeiture—constituting a chattel real—so as to make it taxable as personal property to the lessee. Harvey Coal, etc., Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 936, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

A lease granting oil and gas mining privileges for a term of years is a "chattel real." (a) A chattel real is "personalty." (b) A lease for such purposes, made by the guardian of a minor, permission of the court having first been obtained thereto, and such lease having been approved and confirmed by the court, though without the preliminary notices essential for the order of sale and confirmation of the same in case of the sale of real estate of minors by guardians, is valid against a collateral attack. Duff v. Keaton, 24 Pac. 291, 295, 33 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

Money

As money, see Money.

"Personal property" includes money. Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 33, 28 Am. Rep. 327; Bromberg v. McArdle, 55 South. 805, 72 Ala. 270, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 855.

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 16, subd. 3, money is "personal property." Sencerbox v. First Nat. Bank of Omaha, 93 Pac. 369, 372, 14 Idaho, 95.

Code 1907, § 2, which defines personal property and includes money in its classification, is limited with respect to such words to their use in the codification and has no application in the interpretation of the term "personal property" as used in a bequest or devise. Bromberg v. McArdle, 55 South. 805, 72 Ala. 270, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 855.

Testatrix left her surviving two sons and two daughters, and gave articles of jewelry to each of her daughters, and all her household goods, wearing apparel, and personal property to be divided between the daughters, and directed her executors to sell the remainder of her estate, and divide it "equally among my four children." Held, that the words "personal property" should be limited to articles of a personal character of the same species as those mentioned, and did not include cash in bank. In re Gibbons' Estate, 73 Atl. 183, 224 Pa. 37.

Testatrix owned three houses and lots, certain personal property, and two saving deposits. She devised one of these houses to each of her three nieces, and by the second clause of her will bequeathed to her niece Q. all of her household furniture and "personal property of whatsoever kind" in her W. street house. The will disposed of all testatrix's property, and contained no residuary clause. After execution of will, she sold one of the houses, and deposited the proceeds with other money to the credit of her saving bank deposits. The passbooks for these deposits, together with certain other money, and jewelry, were in testatrix's possession at her W. street residence when she died. Held, that the proceeds of the property sold did not pass to the devisee of testatrix's residence under the description "personal property of whatsoever kind," but that as to this testatrix died intestate. In re Delaney's Will, 117 N. Y. Supp. 838, 133 App. Div. 409.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2713, subd. 5, provides that necessary household furniture or other personal property, to a value not exceeding $150, shall remain in the possession of a widow while she lives with and provides for minor children, and shall not be deemed assets; section 2514, subd. 13, declares that "personal property" signifies every kind of property which survives a decedent other than real property; General Construction Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22) § 39, provides that the term "personal property includes chattels, money * * * and everything except real property"; and Poor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 42) §§ 84, 85, relating to burial of soldiers, etc., provides that counties shall inter any honorably discharged resident soldier, whether dying in a state institution or not, who does not leave sufficient means to defray his funeral expenses, but such expenses shall not exceed $50. Deceased, an honorably discharged veteran, died in a state home, leaving $54, and no other money or property. Held, in a proceeding against the comptroller to pay funeral expenses claimed by undertakers, that the money left was exempt, belonged to the widow, and was not assets out of which to pay funeral expenses, and hence that the county was liable. People ex rel. Brown v. Prendergast, 131 N. Y. Supp. 441, 443, 146 App. Div. 713.

Mortgage

Under statutes defining larceny as the taking of any personal property, etc., and declaring that the words "personal property" includes money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt, deeds, and conveyances, a mortgage may be the subject for larceny. Shannon v. Sims, 40 South. 574, 575, 146 Ala. 678.

Rev. St. 1881, § 6271, provided that all personal property within the state owned by nonresidents should be subject to taxation; section 6273 required the term "personal property" to be construed to include all rights, credits, and choses in action; sections 6279, 6330, provided for agents listing property; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8410, provides that all property within the jurisdiction of the state, not expressly exempt, shall be subject to taxation; sections 8429, 8458, make provision for agents listing property; section 8421 provides that personal property of nonresidents shall be assessed to the owner, or to the person having control thereof, in the township, town, or city where the same may be; section 8460 requires all notes to be valued in the schedule; and section 8463 requires the schedule to be attested by oath, and to contain a full list of property held or belonging to the person making the same. H., living in P. county, handled money for L., a nonresident, for whom she made collections and new loans, and took notes and mortgages to secure them in L.'s name. All the business was done and the property covered by the mortgage was situated in P. county, where all papers, etc., were kept, under H.'s control, to be handled as necessary in conducting the business for and under the direction of L., from whom H. had a power of attorney. The notes, etc., were not listed for taxation by H., but subsequently they were assessed for omitted taxes upon notice given to H. as agent for L., and the taxes were extended in the name of H. Held, that the notes and mortgages were properly taxed in P. county, and injunction would not lie to restrain the collection of the taxes. Hathaway v. Edwards, 85 N. E. 28, 30, 42 Ind. App. 22.

Natural gas

Natural gas, when extracted from the earth and put into a pipe line, is "personal property"; and when the pipe line is opened, and the gas extracted and consumed, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, the act constitutes conversion. Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Marion Gas Co., 74 N. E. 15-16, 35 Ind. App. 295.

Oysters

When oysters are reclaimed from nature and transplanted to a bed, so marked by stakes as to show that they are in the possession of a private owner, they are "personal property" and may become the subject of larceny. People v. Morrison, 86 N. E. 1129, 1121, 194 N. Y. 175, 128 Am. St. Rep. 552.

Petroleum

Petroleum oil is a mineral, and while it is in the earth it forms a part of the realty; and when it reaches a well and is produced on the surface it becomes "personal property," and belongs to the owner of the well. If it moves from place to place by percolation or otherwise it forms a part of the tract of land in which it tarries for the time being, and if it moves to the next adjoining tract it becomes a part and parcel of that tract; and it forms a part of the same tract until it reaches a well and is raised to the surface, and then for the first time it becomes the subject of distinct ownership separate from the realty. It becomes the property of and belongs to the person who reaches it by means of a well and severs it from the realty. Nonamaker v. Amos, 76 N. E. 949, 951, 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 4 Ann. Cas. 170 (citing Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co., 49 N. E. 399, 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 63 Am. St. Rep. 721; Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co. v. Ullery, 67 N. E. 494, 68 Ohio St. 259).

Pew

The right to a pew in a house of public worship is "personal property," under Rev. Laws, c. 36, § 38, and is an exclusive right to occupy a particular portion of the house under restrictions, and the owner is not a tenant in common of the estate on which the house stands, and where the house is taken down when fit for occupancy, and the pew is destroyed in the process of alteration or repair, and this merely on the ground of expediency, the pew owner is entitled to indemnity, and where the house is abandoned, not unreasonably nor with intent to injure the pew holder, he is without remedy. Massachusetts Baptist Missionary Soc. v. Bowdoin Square Baptist Soc., 98 N. E. 1045, 1046, 212 Mass. 198, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 472.

Promissory note

Promissory notes are "personal property." Wuller v. Chuse Grocery Co., 89 N. E. 796, 798, 241 Ill. 398, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 132 Am. St. Rep. 216, 16 Ann. Cas. 522 (citing Cooper v. Corbin, 105 Ill. 224).

For purposes of taxation "personal property" includes notes. Buck v. Beach, 71 N. E. 963, 967, 164 Ind. 37, 108 Am. St. Rep. 272.

A note received by a bank in payment for bank stock is "personal property," within Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that no corporation may issue its stock except for labor done, services performed, or money or property actually received, and, as such property is an asset of the bank, collectible to discharge its debts. Meholin v. Carlson, 107 Pac. 753, 762, 17 Idaho, 742, 134 Am. St. Rep. 286.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3710, providing that, in actions for the enforcement of liens upon "personal property pledged or mortgaged" to secure indebtedness, proof that the party holding the lien had exacted usurious interest shall render such pledge invalid, did not use the words "personal property" as distinguished from choses in action, but the words would include incorporeal property, such as a promissory note. Winfrey v. Strother, 128 S. W. 849, 850, 145 Mo. App. 115.

Notes in the hands of a trustee subject to a lien or pledge are "personal property," within the purview of Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 28, providing that, if a trustee is chargeable for any personal property subject to mortgage or other lien, the court may appoint a receiver and dispose of it, if more can be obtained for it than the claims upon it. Musgrove v. Goss, 72 Atl. 371, 372, 75 N. H. 208 (citing Fling v. Goodall, 40 N. H. 208).

Transfer Tax Law, § 220, imposes a tax upon the transfer, where the transfer is by will or intestate law, of property within the state, when deceased was a nonresident at his death. General Construction Law, § 39, defines the term "personal property" as including all things in action and all written instruments themselves as distinguished from the rights to which they relate, by which any right in property or any debt, etc., is created. Held, that promissory notes owned by a nonresident, and part of which were executed by nonresidents, and which were secured by property situated in another state but were, at the owner's death, and for some time prior thereto, in a safe deposit box in this state, were taxable under the transfer tax law. In re Tiffany's Estate, 128 N. Y. Supp. 106, 107, 143 App. Div. 327.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 5063, provides that "personal property" shall, for purposes of taxation, be construed to include all goods, chattels, and effects, and all moneys, credits, bonds, and other evidences of debt, owned by citizens of the state, whether the same be in or out of the state, etc. A nonresident owning lands in Texas sold them to agents, who took in part payment the purchasers' negotiable notes, secured by a vendor's lien on the land. These notes were kept by the agents in Texas for collection, the proceeds when collected, being deposited in a bank for the owner's benefit. It did not appear that any limitation was imposed on the power of the agents to take at maturity of the notes, such steps as they deemed proper to enforce collection. Held, that the notes were subjects of taxation within the state under said article. Hall v. Miller (Tex.) 110 S. W. 165, 169 (citing Jesse French Piano & Organ Co. v. City of Dallas [Tex.] 61 S. W. 942).

Under Gen. St. § 7503, defining "personal property" as including every tangible thing which is the subject of ownership not forming part or parcel of real property; also tax sale certificates, notes, and all evidences of debt secured by lien on real estate, which must be listed and taxed each year in the county, township, and school district in which it is located, notes belonging to a resident of Kansas, given by a resident of Missouri and secured by trust deeds of real estate in Missouri, which were never taken into Kansas, but were left for safe-keeping only in the vault of a bank in Missouri, constituted "personal property" in Kansas, having its location in the county, township, and school district where the owner resides. Board of Com'rs of Johnson County v. Hewitt, 93 Pac. 181, 183, 76 Kan. 816, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493.

A suit in equity in a federal Circuit Court to enjoin the further prosecution therein of an action at law against complainant, on a promissory note, by a citizen and resident of a state in which the suit is brought, and to have such note canceled and delivered up to complainant, on the ground that it was one obtained by fraud, is one to enforce an equitable claim to "personal property" within the district, within the meaning of Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 Stat. 472, and the court is authorized by an order made thereunder to bring in the nonresident payee of the note, who is alleged in the bill to have or claim some interest therein, the note being personal property. Manning v. Berdan, 132 Fed. 382, 383.

Rev. St. 1881, § 6271, provided that all personal property within the state owned by nonresidents should be subject to taxation; section 6273 required the term "personal property" to be construed to include all rights, credits, and choses in action; and sections 6279, 6330, provided for agents listing property. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8410, provides that all property within the jurisdiction of the state, not expressly exempt, shall be subject to taxation; sections 8429, 8458, make provision for agents listing property; section 8421 provides that personal property of nonresidents shall be assessed to the owner, or to the person having control thereof, in the township, town, or city where the same may be; section 8460 requires all notes to be valued in the schedule; and section 8463 requires the schedule to be attested by oath, and to contain a full list of property held or belonging to the person making the same. H., living in P. county, handled money for L., a nonresident, for whom she made collections and new loans, and took notes and mortgages to secure them in L.'s name. All the business was done and the property covered by the mortgage was situated in P. county, where all papers, etc., were kept, under H.'s control, to be handled as necessary in conducting the business for and under the direction of L., from whom H. had a power of attorney. The notes, etc., were not listed for taxation by H., but subsequently they were assessed for omitted taxes upon notice given to H. as agent for L., and the taxes were extended in the name of H. Held, that the notes and mortgages were properly taxed in P. county, and injunction would not lie to restrain the collection of the taxes. Hathaway v. Edwards, 85 N. E. 28, 30, 42 Ind. App. 22.

As property

See Property.

Property attached to realty

At common law fixed and movable machinery are alike regarded as "personal property." Commissioners of Anne Arundel County v. Baltimore Sugar Refining Co., 58 Atl. 211, 212, 99 Md. 481.

Accused having detached parts of machinery in a leather factory for the purpose of stealing them, they became "personal property" the instant they were severed from the realty. State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 740, 6 Pennewill, 323.

An engine, boiler, and machinery do not lose the character of "personality" by being installed by the seller under a conditional sale in the buyer's building for a laundry, where they may be removed, with foundations and connections, without injury to the building. Monarch Laundry v. Westbrook, 63 S. E. 1070, 1072, 109 Va. 382.

A bill of sale of "personal property" on certain premises would not cover gas logs, gas chandeliers, and window screens, put in by the owner, as against the mortgagee of the real estate; the same being fixtures. Cunningham v. Seaboard Realty Co., 58 Atl. 819, 67 N. J. Eq. 210.

Fixtures attached to real property, which would pass under a deed, may retain their character as personal property as between the owner of the realty and the owner of the fixtures; and where such divided ownership exists it is improper to assess such property as realty. People ex rel. Knickerbocker Safe Deposit Co. v. Wells, 91 N. Y. Supp. 283, 285, 99 App. Div. 455.

Wire fastened to posts for the purpose of fencing a part of the public domain, for temporary use as a summer pasture for live stock, is "personal property"; and one who cuts or tears it from the posts and carries it away with larcenous intent, without the consent of the owner, may be convicted of larceny. Junod v. State, 102 N. W. 462, 463, 73 Neb. 208, 119 Am. St. Rep. 890.

Where the seller takes purchase-money notes and delivers possession of an engine and boiler, retaining title as security, and the contract of sale is registered pursuant to statute, the property retains its character as personality both as between the parties and others claiming adversely to the lien, though attached to the realty, and is "personality" within the meaning of a fire policy thereon, which avoided the policy if the subject of insurance was personality, and was, or thereafter became, incumbered by a chattel mortgage. Lancaster v. Southern Ins. Co., 69 S. E. 214, 216, 153 N. C. 285, 138 Am. St. Rep. 665.

Mirrors resting on mantels or slabs, and secured at the top by iron spikes driven into the wall, through which screws were driven into the mirror frames, which had been treated by the owners both of the personal property and the realty as personal property, are held to be "personal property," although the frames were painted in the same style as the woodwork of the room. Cranston v. Beck, 56 Atl. 121, 122, 70 N. J. Law, 145, 1 Ann. Cas. 686.

"An agreement between landlord and tenant giving the right to the tenant to remove his fixtures, thereby makes them 'personal property' as between the parties. * * * The mere intention of a tenant to remove a fixture put in by him before the expiration of his lease would not have the effect of making the same personal property, because its removal might have the effect of injuring the realty." McLain Inv. Co. v. Cunningham, 87 S. W. 605, 606, 113 Mo. App. 519.

Where plaintiffs sold a gasoline engine to L. under an express agreement that the title thereto should remain in plaintiffs until the purchase price was paid in full, and that on default plaintiffs were authorized to remove the engine without process of law, such agreement operated as a matter of law to preserve the character of the engine as "personal property," though it was substantially affixed to real estate purchased by L. from defendant, not only as against L., but also as against defendant, on her electing to resume possession of the real estate for L.'s default in paying the installments of the price. Davis v. Bliss, 79 N. E. 851, 852, 187 N. Y. 77, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458 (citing Tift v. Horton, 53 N. Y. 377, 13 Am. Rep. 537; Kerby v. Clapp, 44 N. Y. Supp. 116, 15 App. Div. 37; Godard v. Gould & Strong [N. Y.] 14 Barb. 662; Ford v. Cobb, 20 N. Y. 344; Sisson v. Hibbard, 75 N. Y. 542).

Railroad

"By intention things fixed to 'realty' and in a sense physically a part thereof, may be deemed to be 'personalty.' By the union of land, and rights granted by the public classed as personality, forming a thing of itself in which the personal element predominates, and which could not be separated from the other element without disintegration to the point of destruction, and to the detriment of public and private interests as well, the combination may be deemed to be 'personalty' of an inseparable nature. * * * A railroad system, while largely land and tangible things of a movable character attached or appurtenant thereto, the thing that gives the great value and special character to the whole is he franchise element, creating the public duty; so such special element is deemed to be the principal thing, impressing all minor parts with its character, and making the entire combination one entire machine of a personal nature." Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. State, 108 N. W. 557, 588, 128 Wis. 553.

Real property

The term "personal estates" in a will may pass real property, where such is the manifest intention. Rue v. Connel, 62 S. E. 306, 308, 148 N. C. 302.

Receipted voucher

A "receipted voucher" is an acknowledgment of the payment agreed on as due, and is a written instrument by which a pecuniary obligation is created and acknowledged and defeated and discharged. A "receipted voucher" may be the subject of larceny, within Gen. St. 1894, § 6842, providing that, in construing the Penal Code, the term "personal property" shall include every description of money, goods, chattels, effects, evidences of rights in action, and all written instruments by which pecuniary obligation is created, acknowledged, defeated, or discharged. State v. Scanlan, 94 N. W. 686, 89 Minn. 244.

Rents or royalty

Rent is "personalty," vesting in the representative of a deceased, as provided by Civ. Code 1895, § 3353, and the fact that it is payable in cotton, and not money, does not change the rule. Strickland v. Thornton & Nasworthy, 58 S. E. 540, 2 Ga. App. 377.

The husband conveyed by quitclaim the upper half of his placer mining claim to his wife, who leased it for mining purposes until the mineral should all be extracted. Subsequently the wife died intestate, and the husband was appointed administrator of her estate. He received her royalty of the gold and gold dust extracted from her part of the mining claim by her lessees, and on final account retained one-half thereof as surviving husband, and paid the other half to her children and heirs. Held, that the gold dust delivered into the hands of the administrator by the wife's lessees was "personal property," and under section 169 of the Civil Code of Alaska the surviving husband was entitled to receive one-half. In re McCarty's Estate, 3 Alaska, 242, 250.

Slag

Slag, dumped as refuse from an ore smelter or mill, while ordinarily appurtenant to the land on which it is dumped, may be treated by the owner of both the land and dump as "personalty," and may be sold and delivered as such. Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 258, 263, 82 C. C. A. 588.

Timber

Where timber reserved in a deed is cut and made into railroad ties within the time allowed by the reservation, it is no longer realty, but "personal property," for the removal of which trespass will not lie. Richmond Land Co. v. Watson, 107 S. W. 1045, 129 Mo. App. 554.

Turpentine

Crude turpentine that is collected in cavities or boxes cut in the pine trees which supply it is "personal property," for the unlawful conversion of which trover may be maintained. Quitman Naval Stores Co. v. Conway, 58 South. 840, 63 Fla. 253.

Crude turpentine, collected in boxes cut in pine trees in a condition to be dipped up and used in the manufacture of spirits of turpentine and kindred products, is "personal property." Melrose Mfg. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 South. 595, 596, 59 Fla. 312.

Crude turpentine in turpentine boxes in the pine trees in a state, to be dipped up, is "personal property," and the turpentine crop is properly classed with "fructus industriales," as it requires annual labor and cultivation. Richbourg v. Rose, 44 South. 69, 74, 53 Fla. 173, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 12 Ann. Cas. 274.

"Turpentine, when in the boxes in the state to be dipped up, is 'personalty.' It no longer forms a part of the tree, but it exists separate from the tree, and has been separated by a process of labor and cultivation. The box, though in the tree, is but a convenient receptacle for the turpentine, after it has been extracted or has been made to exude from the pores, which contained it, while in the tree, as a part of it. When it ceases to be a part of the tree, it necessarily becomes a chattel." Dickens v. State, 39 South. 14, 15, 142 Ala. 49, 110 Am. St. Rep. 17 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Moore, 83 N. C. 70, and citing State v. King, 4 S. E. 44, 98 N. C. 648).

Wages

Wages are "personal property" within Civ. Code Proc. § 521, exempting $500 in personal property to the head of a family having neither lands, town lots nor houses which are exempt. Jones v. Union Pac. R. Co., 120 N. W. 946, 947, 84 Neb. 121.

Watermains, hydrants, and underground piping

Where a water company was organized to furnish water for the town of G. and C., and maintained its office, works, and principal place of business in C., its underground piping, water mains, and hydrants laid in the streets of G. were taxable in C. as "personal property" attached to and connected with its establishment within Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2328, 2329, providing that the personal property of a corporation shall be liable to taxation in the town in which it has its principal place of business or exercises its corporate powers. Field v. Guilford Water Co., 63 Atl. 723, 724, 79 Conn. 70.

Water right

A "water right" is the legal right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, water course, or source of supply, and exists only in contemplation of law, and is for purposes of taxation "personal property," within Const. art. 12, § 17, and Pol. Code 1895, §§ 16, 3680, defining "property" as including money, franchises, and other things capable of private ownership, and defining "real estate" as including the possession or ownership of land, mines, minerals, and quarries, and "improvements" as including all buildings, structures, etc., and "personal property" as including everything which is the subject of ownership, not included within real estate or improvements, so that under section 3716, providing that the personal property and franchises of water companies must be assessed in the district where the principal works are located, a water company owning a water right without the limits of a school district and conveying water by pipe lines into the district, where it is distributed to the inhabitants thereof, is properly assessed in the district; that being the place of business and principal works of the company. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Settles, 95 Pac. 838, 37 Mont. 237.

Wild animal

"Wild animals, while living, though they are, according to Lord Holt, the property of the owner of the soil on which they are living, are not his 'personal property,' so as to be the subject of larceny. They partake, while living, of the quality of the soil, and are, as growing fruit was, considered as part of the realty." State v. Mallory, 83 S. W. 955, 958, 73 Ark. 236, 67 L. R. A. 773, 3 Ann. Cas. 852.

PERSONAL REMEDY

A "personal remedy" is where the injured party seeks redress of the party who inflicted the wrong and thus obtains a remedy for the wrong committed, while a "legal remedy" is where the injured party seeks his remedy by and through the intervention of the courts. People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 86 Pac. 263, 34 Colo. 336, 114 Am. St. Rep. 163.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE

The term "personal representatives" is often used in statutes and instruments of writing so as to include all persons who stand in place or represent the interests of another, either by his act or by operation of law. In re Harton's Estate, 62 Atl. 1058, 1059, 213 Pa. 499, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939.

The term "personal representative," in its commonly accepted sense, means administrator or executor, though this is not the only definition. It may mean heirs, next of kin, or descendants, and sometimes assignees or grantees. The sense in which the term is to be understood depends somewhat on the intention of the party using it, and is to be gathered, not altogether from its use, but by the surrounding circumstances. Reed v. American-German Nat. Bank, 155 Fed. 233, 236 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5358; Griswold v. Sawyer, 26 N. E. 464, 125 N. Y. 411).

Where testator gave property in trust to pay the income to his wife for life, on her death to divide the income into equal parts semiannually, with authority to pay one of such parts to each of testator's five sons or to the "legal representatives" of any who might have died, "per stirpes," in case the trustee should be satisfied that such part of the income was needed for the comfortable support of such son or his "family" and would not be used in payment of any of his debts, the term "personal representatives," used by testator to describe those whom he wished to make the beneficiaries of the income in place of a deceased son, is one of flexible meaning. The sense in which he intended it to be used must be gathered, if possible, from the language of the whole instrument, read in the light of the relevant circumstances existing when it was executed. The uncertainty which often attends the meaning to be given to the term is relieved by the addition of the words "per stirpes," so that it would require strong indications to the contrary to justify the belief that any different body of persons was intended than those who would inherit from the deceased son or be the distributees of his estate, to be determined either as of the time of his death or as at the time of the several payments, or possibly lineal descendants only. Lepard v. Clapp, 66 Atl. 780, 782, 80 Conn. 29.

Duluth City Charter, § 276, provides that before payment on a contract for public work the contractor or his "personal representatives" shall make and file an affidavit that all claims for labor have been paid. Held, that the term "personal representatives" includes those persons who may stand in place of or represent the interest of the contractor, including his assignee of the money due on his completed contract. Lowry v. City of Duluth, 101 N. W. 1059, 1061, 94 Minn. 95.

Administrator or executor

The term "personal representative" ordinarily means only executors and administrators, and therefore it should be so construed, unless there is something in the context that indicates that it was used with a wider meaning. Casey v. Hoover, 94 S. W. 982, 983, 197 Mo. 62.

The words "personal representatives," as used in a statute relative to the foreclosure of mortgages by advertisement, which requires notice to be served upon the mortgagor or his personal representatives, means executors or administrators, and not heirs or devisees. Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 260, 54 W. Va. 32.

Under Civ. Code, § 419 (Gen. St. 1909, § 6014), giving a right of action for wrongful death of a nonresident of the state, and providing that the action may be brought by the "personal representative" for the benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin, an action for wrongful death of a nonresident may still be brought by the Kansas administrator of his estate, notwithstanding the passage of Laws 1889, c. 131, supplemental to the former act, authorizing the widow or next of kin to bring the action. Cox v. Kansas City, 120 Pac. 553, 555, 86 Kan. 298.

Same—Special or temporary administrator

A special administrator is a "personal representative" of the decedent, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 4503, and may sue for wrongful death. Jones v. Minnesota Transfer Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 606, 607, 108 Minn. 129.

As citizen

See Citizen.

Legal representative synonymous

"Personal representatives" and "legal representatives" are sometimes used interchangeably, as signifying, not only executors or administrators, but also those who legally stand in place of, or represent the interests of, another. Lowry v. City of Duluth, 101 N. W. 1059, 1061, 94 Minn. 95.

As representative

See Representative.

Widow and children

The words "heirs" and "personal representatives," as used in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4823, providing that, when the death of a person is caused by any injury received from the wrongful act of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action, include only the widow and children of the deceased person, and do not authorize an action by the mother for the wrongful death of her unmarried adult son, on whom she was dependent. Manning v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 75 Pac. 994, 34 Wash. 406.

Under the federal employers' liability act making a carrier liable in case of the death of any of its employes to his "personal representative" for the benefit of his widow and children, a widow of an employe killed through the negligence of the employer may sue as administratrix for the use of herself as widow; there being no child. Gutierrez v. El Paso & N. El R. Co., 117 S. W. 426, 428, 102 Tex. 378.

PERSONAL SECURITY

See, also, Right of Privacy.

"Personal security" includes the right to exist and the right to the enjoyment of life while existing, and it is invaded by a deprivation of those things which are necessary to the enjoyment of life according to the nature, temperament, and lawful desires of the individual. "The right of 'personal security' is not fully accorded by allowing an individual to go through life in possession of all his members and his body unmarred; nor is his right to 'personal liberty' fully accorded by merely allowing him to remain out of jail, or free from other physical restraints. The liberty which he derives from natural law, and which is recognized by municipal law, embraces far more than freedom from physical restraint. The term 'liberty' is not to be so dwarfed, but is deemed to embrace the right of a man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare. 'Liberty' in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation." Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 70, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561 (citing Brannon, Fourteenth Amendment, 111).

PERSONAL SERVICE

See Personally Served.

The expression "personal service" of process, generally speaking, means the actual delivery of the process to defendant in person. Holliness Church of San Jose v. Metropolitan Church Ass'n, 107 Pac. 633, 634, 12 Cal. App. 445.

The term "personal service" has a fixed and definite meaning at law. It is service by delivery to defendant personally. Other modes of service may be given the force of such service by legislative enactment; but the use of the words "personal service" unqualifiedly in a statute means actual service by delivering to a person, and not to a proxy. Thisler v. Little, 121 Pac. 1123, 86 Kan. 787 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5363).

"The term 'personal service' has a fixed and definite meaning in law. It is service by delivering the writ, notice, or order to the defendant personally, as contradistinguished from other modes of service, and hence does not include service by leaving a copy at the defendant's last known place of abode, or by mailing a copy to him." Dalton v. St. Louis, M. & S. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 610, 612, 113 Mo. App. 71.

The term "personal service" of process has a fixed and definite meaning in law. It is service by delivery of the writ to the defendant personally. Other modes of service may be given the force of such service by legislative enactment; but the use of the words "personal service," unqualified in a statute, means actual service by delivering to the person, and not to a proxy. McKenzie v. Boynton, 125 N. W. 1059, 1062, 19 N. D. 531.

Unless otherwise provided, a statute providing for the service of notice contemplates "personal service," which means the actual delivery in some way of the notice to the person to whom it is directed, though delivery by an officer or a return is not ordinarily necessary. Scanlon v. Scanlon, 135 N. W. 634, 637, 154 Iowa, 748.

Substituted service of summons if properly made by leaving copy at defendant's usual place of abode with some suitable person of at least 14 years of age, as authorized by Comp. Laws 1907, § 2948, subd. 8, constitutes "personal service." Grant v. Lawrence, 108 Pac. 931, 933, 37 Utah, 460, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 280.

Service of summons on the captain of a boat belonging to a foreign transit company is "personal service," within the statute authorizing entry of judgment by default on personal service. Phillips v. Portage Transit Co., 118 N. W. 539, 540, 137 Wis. 189.

The words "personal service" in Rev. Laws, c. 167, § 2, giving municipal courts jurisdiction of a transitory action against a defendant who is not an inhabitant of the state, if "personal service" is had within the state, apply to a service by process on the person who is either the personal defendant or the person representing a foreign corporation as the one on whom a lawfully binding service can be had, and as to a personal defendant the service may be had on him in whatever place he may be found, and the local court of that place has jurisdiction, while service on the commissioner of corporations seems to be personal service within the scope of those words, and has the same effect to give jurisdiction as a service on a personal defendant. Potter v. La Pointe Mach. Tool Co., 88 N. E. 418, 420, 201 Mass. 557.

PERSONAL SERVICES RENDERED

The words "personal services rendered," as used in a statute providing that the earnings of a judgment debtor for his personal services rendered at any time within 30 days next preceding the levy of an execution or attachment, shall be exempt, where necessary for the support of his family, does not necessarily contemplate that the services be rendered another. They may in proper cases mean the services which one renders to himself. Dayton v. Ewart, 72 Pac. 420, 422, 28 Mont. 153, 98 Am. St. Rep. 549.

PERSONAL SERVITUDE

The involuntary servitude prohibited by the federal Constitution is a "personal servitude," and this "consists in the subjection of one person to another. If it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do. This right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi contracts." United States v. McClellan, 127 Fed. 971, 976 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 986).

PERSONAL SOLICITATION

The solicitation by mail of orders for intoxicating liquor is "personal solicitation" within Pen. Code 1895, § 428, prohibiting the solicitation, personally or by agent, of orders for intoxicating liquor in a prohibition county, where the solicitor in person writes or mails the letter received by the prospective buyer. Rose v. State, 62 S. E. 117, 121, 4 Ga. App. 588.

PERSONAL STATUTES

Laws regulating the privileges and prescribing the disability of married women are "personal statutes," purely domiciliary in character. Marks v. Germania Sav. Bank, 34 South. 725, 727, 110 La. 659.

PERSONAL TRANSACTION

The words "personal transactions or communications," within the meaning of section 23, c. 130, Code, include every method whereby one person may derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition or language of another. Freeman v. Freeman, 76 S. E. 657, 659, 71 W. Va. 303.

The word "personally," in St. 1893, § 4212, providing that no party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, etc., is not limited to conversations had with a deceased, but includes any transaction or communication had with a deceased person individually. Conklin v. Yates, 83 Pac. 910, 912, 16 Okl. 263.

The testimony of one suing an administrator for caring for his intestate that she gave the intestate medicine, prepared his food, and cared for him generally, he being altogether helpless, is testimony of "personal transaction," with the intestate, and is inadmissible, within Code, § 590, prohibiting parties in interest from testifying to "communications and transactions" with deceased persons, as against their personal representative. Davidson v. Bardin, 51 S. E. 779, 139 N. C. 1.

A statute prohibiting testimony of a party in respect to any transaction or communication "by him personally" with a deceased person does not forbid testimony of transactions or communications between deceased and third persons in the witness' presence, if the witness did not participate therein and they were not affected by his presence. Unless the transactions or communications are personal, and had with the deceased by the party either literally or in practical effect, as by participating in or influencing them, they do not fall under the prohibition of the statute.—Wollman v. Ruehle, 80 N. W. 919, 920, 104 Wis. 603.

In an action by an administrator to recover money lent to defendant by decedent, testimony by defendant that money for payment of the debt was inclosed in an envelope, taken to the post office, and that certain steps were there taken to have the postmaster register the letter and send it to decedent in a distant state, and also that in due time defendant received a writing acknowledging receipt of the money, which writing was identified and introduced in evidence was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 320 (Gen. St. 1909, § 5914), providing that no party shall testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by him with a decedent, where the adverse party is the administrator of such decedent; witness' acts not constituting a "personal transaction" or communication. Bryan v. Palmer, 111 Pac. 443, 444, 83 Kan. 298, 21 Ann. Cas. 1214.

Under Code, § 4804, prohibiting testimony of an interested witness concerning personal transactions or communications with a deceased person in an action against her administrator, evidence by plaintiff, in an action to establish a note signed by his father and stepmother as a claim against the latter estate, that he gave the father an order to obtain the note from the party in whose custody it was, and that he afterwards saw it in his father's possession, and evidence of the father to the same effect, was admissible, since such evidence does not constitute "personal transactions" or "personal communications." Curd v. Wisser, 95 N. W. 266, 267, 120 Iowa, 743 (citing Gable v. Hainer, 49 N. W. 1024, 83 Iowa, 457; Dysart v. Furrow, 57 N. W. 644, 90 Iowa, 59; McElhenney v. Hendricks, 48 N. W. 1056, 82 Iowa, 657; Walkley v. Clarke, 78 N. W. 70, 107 Iowa, 451).

PERSONAL USE

The term, as used in a will by which a testator bequeathed to a legatee $5,000 to be expended by him in accordance with testator's instructions and also $1,000 for his "personal use," indicated that the $5,000 was not to go to the legatee individually, but was to be distributed by him for a particular purpose, and, this having failed, the bequest would be adjudged invalid. In re Keenan, 94 N. Y. Supp. 1099, 1100, 107 App. Div. 234.

PERSONAL WARRANTY

A "personal warranty," as defined in Code Prac. art. 379, arises from the obligation which one has contracted to pay the whole or part of a debt due by another to a third person, and does not include a contract of indemnity, so as to permit the calling of an indemnitor in warranty. A contract of indemnity executed by a contractor for the erection of a public schoolhouse with his surety is an original undertaking to make good a future loss or damage, and no action lies on such a contract until after a loss or damage has been sustained, and there is no obligation to pay any part of a debt due to a third person, and therefore no "personal warranty" within Code Prac. art. 379. Rain v. Arthur, 55 South. 743, 129 La. 143.

PERSONALLY

"The word 'personally' often means 'in propria persona'; but that is not its necessary and only meaning." The word "personally," as used in Const. 1902, § 21, art. 2, providing that male citizens who have personally paid toll taxes three years shall be entitled to register, does not require that the voter be physically and bodily present when he pays his tax, but only that his tax be paid by him out of his funds. He may send the amount by check or through an agent. Tilton v. Herman, 64 S. E. 351, 353, 109 Va. 503.

PERSONALLY KNOWN

A certificate of acknowledgment reciting that the grantor was to the officer "personally known" imported merely an acquaintance with the person acknowledging the instrument, and was not the equivalent of a certificate that the individual acknowledging the instrument was "to me known," which was a certificate that the person acknowledging the instrument was known to the officer as the grantor of the deed on which the certificate was indorsed. Carolan v. Yoran, 93 N. Y. Supp. 935, 936, 104 App. Div. 488.

PERSONALLY PAY

Const. 1902, § 20, art. 2, provides that male citizens who have personally paid poll taxes for three years shall be entitled to register, and section 21 (Code 1904, p. ccxiii) gives such person the right to vote if he has personally paid such poll tax at least six months prior to the election. Held, that the phrase, "personally pay," in section 21, does not require that the voter be physically present when he pays his tax, but only that his tax be paid by him out of his own funds. Const. § 20, art. 2 (Code 1904, p. ccxii), requiring all persons to have "personally paid" their poll taxes to be entitled to register, only requires that the voter pay his tax out of his own funds, though the amount be sent by check or through an agent. Tilton v. Herman, 64 S. E. 351, 352, 109 Va. 503.

PERSONALLY PRESENT

Rev. St. § 4811, providing that the accused must be "personally present at the trial," does not mean that the defendant must all the time be in the actual presence of the jury, but rather that he must be at the trial in court and in its presence. The court is the real thing, fixed and permanent. The jury is but a temporary adjunct for a partial purpose of the trial, and hence defendant need not be personally present while the jury were taking a view. State v. Mortensen, 73 Pac. 562, 572, 28 Utah, 312.

PERSONALLY RESPONSIBLE

A by-law of a union of musicians, which provides that any leader engaging members to perform for less than the stipulated price shall become "personally responsible" for all fines that may be imposed on such members, means that, if the fines imposed on the members be not paid by them, the leader is responsible therefor; but, before he can be called on to pay, charges must be preferred and an opportunity given to defend, as expressly provided in another by-law. The words "personally responsible" do not mean "primarily liable." Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 95 N. Y. Sup. 155, 157.

PERSONALLY SERVED

"Personally served," as used in section 4229, Rev. Codes, means service upon the defendant personally, and service by leaving a notice at the last and usual place of abode of the defendant is not personal service, but a substitute for it. Under that part of section 4229, Rev. Codes, which provides that, "when from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant or his legal representative, at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in such action, to answer to the merits of the original action," held, that where the service of summons is made upon the county auditor, and not upon an officer of the company, or its designated agent, such summons has not been "personally served" on the defendant within the meaning of the term "personally served" as used in said section 4229. Brooks v. Orchard Land Co., 121 Pac. 101, 104, 21 Idaho, 212.

PERSONALLY UNOCCUPIED

Where the owner of certain farm buildings insured the same, and the house thereon had been occupied by a tenant, and the tenant moved out on the 4th day of April, but he continued to pay rent up to the 19th of April, when the property was destroyed by fire, and continued to work on the farm pleasant days, and during his absence therefrom the stock was cared for by a neighbor, the plaintiff's buildings insured were "personally unoccupied" without the consent of the company for more than 10 days immediately preceding their destruction within the terms of a policy providing that such nonoccupancy should render the policy void. Knowlton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 62 Atl. 289, 291, 100 Me. 481, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517.

PERSUADE

An instruction that "preponderance of proof" means that the jury are persuaded of the soundness of the claim more satisfactorily than the contrary was not objectionable in not employing the word "weigh," nor as implying that the jury might be persuaded by argument rather than proof, as the jury could understand the term "persuaded" only to mean that the proof must be more persuasive and convincing. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Kountz, 168 Fed. 832, 839, 94 C. C. A. 244.

PERSUASION

"Persuasion" is not coercion. Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 108 Pac. 42, 44, 12 Cal. App. 572.

"Picketing" has been condemned by every court having the matter under consideration. It is a pretense for "persuasion," but is intended for "intimidation." Gentlemen never seek to compel and force another to listen to the art of persuasion. To stop another on the street, get in his road, follow him from one side of the street to another, pursue him wherever he goes, stand in front of his residence, is not persuasion. "Intimidation" cannot be defined. Neither can "fraud" be defined. But every person knows whether his acts are fraudulent, and he knows whether his acts are intimidating. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102, 119, 121.

PERTAIN

The word "pertain" means to belong, or to pertain, whether by nature, by appointment, or custom; to relate, as "things pertaining to life." Chicago Theological Seminary v. Illinois ex rel. Raymond, 23 Sup. Ct. 386, 388, 188 U. S. 662, 47 L. Ed. 641.

PERTAINING TO PROBATE COURTS

The jurisdiction "pertaining to probate courts," granted to county courts by the Constitution, included the right to determine heirship as an incident to the distribution of intestates' estates. The statute relating to escheat proceedings, in so far as it attempted to oust the county court of jurisdiction to determine heirship for the distribution of personal estate of a decedent in process of administration therein, was in violation of the Constitution. State v. McDonald, 104 Pac. 967, 971, 55 Or. 419.

PERTAINING TO PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

A provision of a city charter, requiring matters "pertaining to public improvements" to be referred to the board of public works before final approval by the council, and providing that the board shall examine and pass upon all plans and specifications relating to improvements and on bids for the work embraced therein, applies only to contracts, plans, and specifications for the erection of public improvements and the work and material therefor, and not to a subsidiary contract for the supervision of the construction of an improvement. City of Houston v. Potter, 91 S. W. 389, 392, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 381.

PERTICULER

The word "perticuler," as used in the title "First Perticuler Baptist Church in Harris and Bridgeton," is supposed to mean regular or straight, in the same sense as the adjective is sometimes applied to one wing of a political party in distinction from those who have seceded from the regular organization. Hamlin v. Perticuler Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 317, 103 Me. 343.

PERVERSE VERDICT

"A verdict which is the result of anything ulterior to a reasonably fair application of the judgment of the jury to the evidence and the law as given by the court is 'perverse.' Where a verdict is contrary to all the evidence, it does not fall within the ordinary idea of perversity, as regards when a verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted, because in such cases there really is no jury question. Perversity as to a verdict, correctly speaking, relates to some ulterior influence upon the jury in deciding a case involving a jury question and in relation thereto." Godfrey v. Godfrey, 106 N. W. 814, 819, 127 Wis. 47, 7 Ann. Cas. 176.

PERVERSION

Fraudulent voting at an election, whether consisting of voting disqualified persons, repeating, or voting under the names of other voters, is a "perversion or obstruction of the due administration of law," which by Crimes Act (P. L. 1898, p. 805) § 37, as amended by Act March 22, 1899 (P. L. 1899, p. 214), is made the subject of a criminal conspiracy. State v. Nugent, 71 Atl. 485, 487, 77 N. J. Law, 84.

PERVERSY

"Perversity" does not necessarily signify dishonesty, nor anything of that nature.

It suggests a state of being moved consciously or unconsciously, most generally the former, to look at things from a wrong standpoint." Godfrey v. Godfrey, 106 N. W. 814, 819, 127 Wis. 47, 7 Ann. Cas. 176.

PETIT LARCENY

By Pen. Code, § 444, any larceny not embraced within the definition of grand larceny is "petit larceny." Buffehr v. Territory, 89 Pac. 415, 11 Ariz. 185.

"Petty larceny," under the act of 1874, is the larceny of property of less value than $100 and is punishable with imprisonment in any parish prison, or in the penitentiary at the discretion of the court for not more than 2 years. State v. Wall, 52 South. 556, 559, 126 La. 400.

Cr. Code 1896, § 5049, provides that if any person steals personal property of the value of $5 or more from or in any dwelling house he is guilty of "grand larceny." Held, that in order to constitute theft of that grade the property stolen must be of the value of $5 or more, and if less than that value the offense is "petit larceny," defined by Cr. Code 1896, § 5050. Thomas v. State, 46 South. 565, 566, 155 Ala. 92.

Act No. 124 of 1874, § 8, divides larceny into grand and petit larceny, and makes the larceny of property or money worth $100 or more grand larceny, punishable with imprisonment for not more than ten years, and the larceny of property under the value of $100 "petit larceny," punishable with imprisonment for not more than two years. Act No. 64 of 1910 makes the stealing of cattle a specific offense, punishable with imprisonment for not less than one year. Held that, the two statutes being repugnant and the whole subject of cattle stealing being covered by the later one, the earlier one was repealed thereby by necessary implication in so far as cattle theft is concerned. State v. Hickman, 53 South. 680, 127 La. 442.

Under Pen. Code, § 15, providing that a misdemeanor for which no other punishment is specifically prescribed is punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary or county jail for not more than one year, or by a fine of not more than $500, or both, and section 532, defining every larceny not grand larceny in the first or second degrees as petit larceny, and section 535, declaring that petit larceny is a misdemeanor, "petit larceny," is, in the absence of any special provision, punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or penitentiary for a term not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $500, or by both. People ex rel. Cosgriff v. Craig, 114 N. Y. Supp. 833, 835, 129 App. Div. 851.

Where the property taken is articles of wearing apparel of the value of $3, and the articles are taken from a "box car" placed at the side of a railroad track and "used as a tool and supply house," the offense is "petit larceny." In re Spaulding, 88 Pac. 547, 75 Kan. 163.

As felony

See Felony.

PETIT MAL

It appears that a person who has suffered from epilepsy in the major form, or "grand mal," as it is technically termed, in which the expression is usually through convulsions, may later pass into the stage of minor epilepsy, or "petit mal," which is the more dangerous form, because of liability to sudden attacks of maniacal paroxysms or of epileptic furor. The victim of such attacks is unconscious of his conduct, and usually, but not universally, will not remember what has occurred. People v. Egnor, 67 N. E. 906, 907, 175 N. Y. 419.

PETITION

See Cross-Petition.

Filing, as commencement of action, see Commencement of Action.

Presenting petition, see Present—Presented—Presentation.

A "petition" is a formal written request or prayer for a certain thing to be done, the signers of which attach their signatures voluntarily. Davis v. Henderson, 104 S. W. 1009, 1010, 127 Ky. 13.

Code Prac. defines a "petition" to be a written document, addressed to a competent judge, containing the name or title of the court to which it is addressed. Hence a petition by a candidate aggrieved by the decision of the election committee must contain the title of the court, and may be filed by the clerk in the absence of the judge. Vial v. Elfer, 45 South. 545, 546, 120 La. 673.

A bill in equity is in reality a "petition" by another name; the only difference being that a petition is less formal in its averments and prayers, and defendant is brought in by a citation, instead of by subpoena ad respondendum, and is required to answer in a shorter time. Fraser v. Fraser, 75 Atl. 979, 980, 77 N. J. Eq. 205.

As used in Comp. Laws, § 479, as amended by St. 1895, p. 35, c. 37, providing that, when a majority of the resident taxpayers of a road district shall petition the county commissioners, etc., the county clerk shall lay the petition before them, at their next meeting, etc., the word "petition," as well as the general framing of the statute, indicates that the legislative intent was not to force compulsory action on the board of county commissioners, but to give it a reasonable discretion. State ex rel. Dangberg v. Board of Com'rs of Douglas County, 77 Pac. 984, 987, 27 Nev. 469 (concurring opinion of Fitzgerald, J.).

The word "petition," as used in a statute relating to the granting of liquor licenses, means a request by eligible citizens to a county court to grant a dramshop license to a designated applicant to keep a dramshop in a designated locality. A blank form of petition, not addressed to any court, and failing to designate the town where the signers are residents, or to ask for the granting of a license to any person, the signers' names being appended to blank books, circulated independent of the blank form, is insufficient. State ex rel. Marbury v. Tulloch, 82 S. W. 645, 646, 108 Mo. App. 32.

The purpose of a "petition" for a writ of review is to show prima facie from an inspection thereof that the inferior court or tribunal acted without jurisdiction or has exercised its functions erroneously; and hence it must state every fact, that from an inspection thereof, assuming the facts stated to be true, the court can say there was error upon which to issue the writ. Raper v. Dunn, 99 Pac. 889, 890, 53 Or. 203; Hart v. Richardson, 101 Pac. 900, 54 Or. 270.

PETITION FOR REVIEW

The proceeding which is named a "petition for review" by the Legislature is highly remedial, and must necessarily accommodate itself to the needs and practices of every proceeding that comes within its scope. Marshall v. Hill, 151 S. W. 131, 137, 246 Mo. 1.

PETITION IN ERROR

Appeal as including, see Appeal.

A clear distinction exists between a proceeding by "petition in error" and an appeal, as in an appeal the appellate court does not merely review the actions of the trial court, but re-examines the questions presented and in effect affords a retrial of them. Bishop v. Huff, 116 N. W. 665, 667, 81 Neb. 729 (citing Western Cornice & Manufacturing Works v. Leavenworth, 72 N. W. 594, 52 Neb. 422).

A "petition in error" in the district court to review a judgment or order of an inferior tribunal is an independent proceeding, having for its immediate object a reversal of the judgment or order complained of. Hence a judgment of reversal in such a case may be reviewed in this court, notwithstanding the cause stands for trial on its merits in the district court, under section 601, Code Civ. Proc., after such judgment. Ribble v. Furmin, 94 N. W. 967, 969, 69 Neb. 38 (citing Dane County Bank of Stoughton v. Garrett, 67 N. W. 884, 48 Neb. 916; Tootle v. Jones, 27 N. W. 635, 19 Neb. 588; Banks v. Uhl, 5 Neb. 240).

PETITIONING CREDITOR

When after a petition in involuntary bankruptcy had been filed by certain creditors, an attorney filed a second petition against the debtor in behalf of other creditors, and also demurred to the first and the demurrer was sustained, but on leave given the first petition was amended, and an adjudication made thereon; the second petition being ignored, such attorney did not render services to the "petitioning creditors," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (3), 30 Stat. 563, and was not entitled to the allowance of a fee from the estate thereunder. Frank v. Dickey, 139 Fed. 744, 745, 71 C. C. A. 562.

PETITORY ACTION

"The 'petitory action' is a proceeding at law for the recovery of property, and can be maintained in the courts of the United States only where the right of possession can be shown, and, according to the principles and distinctions settled in this court, corresponds in character with the action of ejectment at common law." Gilmer v. Poindexter, 10 How. (51 U. S.) 257, 267, 13 L. Ed. 411.

Where plaintiff alleged that he himself was the owner of certain property, and was then and had been in possession of the same for over 10 years under title, and that defendant had "trespassed," and was still "trespassing," upon the same by cutting down and hauling off timber thereon under claim of an absolutely null tax title, which he had spread upon the records, and prays that he be quieted in his own ownership and possession of the property, that he recover damages from the defendant for his trespass, and that the tax title be declared null and void, his action is not a "petitory action." Gilmore v. Schenck, 39 South. 40, 43, 115 La. 386 (citing Wilbert v. Michel, 8 South. 607, 42 La. Ann. 356).

PETROLEUM

As mineral, see Mineral.

As personal property, see Personal Property.

As real property, see Real Property.

In construing paragraphs 626, 633, § 2, Free List, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 199, 200, providing, respectively, for a countervailing duty on "products of crude petroleum" and for the free entry of "paraffin," held that the latter is the more specific, and governs the classification of paraffin, even though it be a product of crude petroleum. Schoellkopf, Hartford & Hanna Co. v. United States, 139 Fed. 58.

The provision in paragraph 626, Free List, § 2, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 199, for "products of crude petroleum," does not include articles not composed in chief value of petroleum, even though the petroleum predominates in quantity. United States v. R. F. Downing & Co., 146 Fed. 56-60, 76 C. C. A. 376.

PETTIFOGGERY

"Pettifoggery" is unprofessional practice unworthy of an officer of the law charged with the duty of aiding in the administration of justice, including the offer of evidence with knowledge of its inadmissibility, in order to get it before the jury by arguing for its admissibility, addressing the judge with arguments on a point not properly calling for determination by him, and the introduction into an argument, suitably addressed to the court, of remarks or statements intended to influence the jury or bystanders. State v. Kaufmann, 113 N. W. 387, 389, 22 S. D. 433 (quoting 67 Cent. Law J. 46).

PETTY LARCENY

See Petit Larceny.

PETTY OFFENSE

Such "petty offenses" as at the common law were triable without a jury by a tribunal legally constituted for that purpose are not "crimes," within the meaning of the jury clause of the federal Constitution. Offenses for which a term of imprisonment for more than one year may be imposed are not "petty offenses," such as may be heard by a tribunal authorized by law to act without a jury. Low v. United States, 169 Fed. 86, 89, 90, 94 C. C. A. 1.

If the punishment for the violation of a municipal ordinance is of the same character as that imposed for a petty offense against the state, the infraction of the ordinance cannot be called a "petty offense" for the purpose of summary trial, the result of which is to impose as severe a punishment as would follow a violation of the state law, in which the accused is entitled to a trial by jury; and therefore a provision in a municipal charter which authorizes punishment for offenses against the ordinances of the city by confinement of the offender in the chain gang of the county, where persons convicted of misdemeanors against the state and felons whose punishment have been reduced are confined, is unconstitutional. Pearson v. Wimbish, 52 S. E. 751, 756, 124 Ga. 701, 4 Ann. Cas. 501.

PEW

"The merchandise consisting of the seeds of a grass called 'phalaris' is sold for food for birds. It is cultivated for the seeds. The straw is very short, and of but little value. It is botanically a grass in the same sense in which wheat, oats, and other seeds are grasses. The principal use, as the board finds, is that of its grain as bird food. It is the well-known canary seed." It is not free of duty under the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 656, 30 Stat. 201, for "grass seeds * * * not specially provided for," but is dutiable under Tariff Act, July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 254, 30 Stat. 171, covering "seeds of all kinds not specially enumerated." Nordlinger v. United States, 127 Fed. 683, 684, 62 C. C. A. 409.

PHARMACY

See Practice of Pharmacy.

"Pharmacy" is ordinarily defined as the business of compounding and dealing in drugs and medicines, the definition having been somewhat enlarged by statutory provisions; but the sale of cigars, ice cream, and soda water is not within its intendment. In re Maulsby, 113 N. W. 548, 549, 136 Iowa, 66.

PHARMACEUTICAL PREPARATION

A "pharmaceutical preparation" is primarily a combination of drugs compounded for medicinal uses. State Board of Pharmacy v. Gasau, 107 N. Y. Supp. 409, 412, 122 App. Div. 803.

PHARMACIST

An information charging that accused was a druggist and the proprietor of a drug store and a pharmacist, and that he sold intoxicating liquors without a prescription, charges a violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 3047, making it an offense for a druggist, proprietor of a drug store, or pharmacist to sell intoxicating liquors except on a written prescription, and providing that any druggist who shall violate the act shall be punished as prescribed, and it is not duplicitous or multifarious, since the terms "druggist," "proprietor of a drug store," and "pharmacist" are synonymous, for the business of pharmacist, or apothecary, or druggist, is one. State v. Clinkenbeard, 125 S. W. 827, 830, 142 Mo. App. 146.

PHONOGRAPHIC REPORT OF TESTIMONY

Under the provisions of section 4442, the "phonographic report of the testimony" on file means the stenographic report of the stenographer or the stenographer's notes, and not the transcription of the testimony by such stenographer, and, upon a hearing upon motion for a new trial when made upon the minutes of the court, the sufficiency of the evidence and the questions arising during the trial and the matters contained in the reporter's notes may all be referred to, and the court may determine such questions from his recollection of what took place and from his own minutes kept of the proceedings, and by reference to the stenographer's notes, without waiting for a transcript of the proceedings and evidence as transcribed by the stenographer. Kelley v. Clark, 121 Pac. 95, 98, 21 Idaho, 231.

PHONY ROLLS

"Phony rolls" are packages resembling money, consisting of paper covered with bills on the outside, alleged to be part of the paraphernalia of confidence men. People v. Smille, 103 N. Y. Supp. 348-350, 118 App. Div. 611.

PHOTOGRAPH

Cinematograph films are "photographs," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189. United States v. Berst, 175 Fed. 121.

A series of separate pictures printed on a positive film from a number of negatives taken by a camera, and designed for use in a moving picture machine, and which, taken together, tell a connected story, constitute a "photograph," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4952, and may be the subject of a copyright, although in taking the negatives the camera was placed in different locations. American Mutoscope & Biograph Co. v. Edison Mfg. Co., 137 Fed. 262, 266.

A "photograph" is defined as a "picture or likeness obtained by photography." Where a contract, granting one the privilege within a certain concession at an exposition of taking and selling photographs, provided that the lessor would not grant like or "similar" privileges to any one else, the grant of a privilege to another to cut "silhouettes" with scissors and paste them on cards was not an infringement, though a silhouette made in such manner cannot be distinguished by an ordinary person from a photographic silhouette, which is in the nature of a photographic novelty, and the only means of distinction is by the paper ordinarily used by photographers. Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps, 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51 (citing Webst. Dict. and Cent. Dict.).

As copy

"Photography" is defined as "the science which relates to the action of light on sensitive bodies in the production of pictures; the fixation of images and the like." Frankel v. German Tyrolean Alps, 97 S. W. 961, 962, 121 Mo. App. 51 (citing Webst. Dict.).

"A court cannot refuse to take judicial cognizance that 'photography' is the act of producing fac similes, or representations of objects by the action of light on a prepared surface. As such it has been so long recognized; and the mechanical and chemical process employed, and the scientific principles on which it is based, are so generally known that it would be vain for a court to decline cognizance of it." State v. Matheson, 103 N. W. 137, 138, 130 Iowa, 440, 114 Am. St. Rep. 427, 8 Ann. Cas. 430 (quoting and adopting definition in Luke v. Calhoun County, 52 Ala. 115).

PHRASE

See Trade Phrase.

A "phrase" is defined to be two or more words properly arranged, not constituting an entire proposition, but performing a distinct etymological office. They are of several kinds, but it is necessary to define only that class to which the phrase in the sentence to be construed, the meaning of which is the subject of the present controversy, belongs; i. e., a prepositional phrase, which is one that is introduced by a preposition and has a noun or pronoun (word, phrase, or sentence) or a participle for its object of relation. Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 161, 233.

PHTALIC ACID

"Phtalic acid, anhydrous," a coal-tar preparation, which though not an acid chemically, is commercially known as and performs the functions of an acid and is free of duty under paragraph 473 Free List, § 2, c. 1244, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, as an acid used for manufacturing purposes. The word "anhydrous," being merely an adjective designation, does not prevent the substance from coming within the commercial designation of an acid. Heller & Mertz Co. v. United States, 124 Fed. 299, 300.

PHYSICAL

PHYSICAL DISCOMFORT

See Physical Injury and Discomfort.

PHYSICAL FACT

In a requested instruction in an action for injuries received by the premature starting of a street car while plaintiff was in the act of boarding it, that if the jury find the "physical facts" conflicting with the oral testimony the verdict should be in accordance with the former, the words "physical facts" must be taken to mean the location and movements of plaintiff and the car from the inception to the close of the occurrence, and the effect of the car's movement on plaintiff.

Schmitt v. St. Louis Transit Co., 90 S. W. 421, 425, 115 Mo. App. 445.

PHYSICAL IMPOSSIBILITY

"Physical impossibility," when applied to the ability of a party to perform his contract, means "practical impossibility according to the state of knowledge and of the day." One who signed on April 28th a contract to convey land on April 23d of the same year is not bound because of the impossibility of performance of such contract. Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 48 S. E. 796, 801, 136 N. C. 443, 67 L. R. A. 977 (quoting 9 Cyc. p. 326).

PHYSICAL INABILITY

"Physical inability," within the meaning of an employer's contract for sick benefits, means inability to perform manual labor which would enable the injured member to earn wages equal to what he would have earned in the employment in which he was engaged when injured. Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 132 N. W. 920, 921, 90 Neb. 112, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1145, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764.

As used in a contract for benefits between the relief department of a railroad company and its employees in case of disability, providing that the word "disability" shall mean physical inability to work, the words "physical inability to work" mean inability to perform such labor as the insured member was engaged in at the time of his injury, or similar labor which would enable him to earn wages equally remunerative. Keith v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry., 116 N. W. 957, 959, 82 Neb. 12, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352, 130 Am. St. Rep. 655.

PHYSICAL INCONVENIENCE

The phrase "physical inconvenience" is too vague to constitute a definite element of damages resulting from a personal injury to a married woman. In an action by a married woman for physical injuries, the petition, in enumerating the items of damages, having alleged that she was permanently crippled and disabled for labor, and had lost her capacity to earn money, she having testified that since her marriage she had done no labor, except to take care of her children and perform household tasks, and the evidence showing a partial paralysis from the injury, interfering with the discharge of such duties, and the instruction on damages being that they should be assessed at such sum as would compensate her for pain and "physical inconvenience" and impairment of health suffered or to be suffered because of the injuries, a requested instruction that she could not recover for her inability to perform her household duties, or for loss of time therefrom, should have been given. Newell v. St. Louis Transit Co., 84 S. W. 195, 108 Mo. App. 530 (citing Root v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 83 N. W. 904, 113 Iowa, 675; Jensen v. Chi- cago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 57 N. W. 359, 86 Wis. 589, 22 L. R. A. 690.

The term "physical inconvenience" resulting from physical disability belongs to the same class as pain and suffering. In an action by a married woman for personal injuries, plaintiff may recover damages for physical or personal inconvenience resulting from the injury. In an action against a street railway for injuries received by plaintiff through stepping on an electrified metal plate on defendant's car, allegations in the petition that as a result of the injuries plaintiff's lower limbs were partially paralyzed, her nervous system injured and diseased, and she suffered severe pains, etc., and that as a result of the injury she was for a considerable period of time confined to her bed, and was unable to perform her household duties, etc., were broad enough to include damages on account of physical inconvenience. McRae v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 102 S. W. 1032, 1035, 125 Mo. App. 562.

PHYSICAL INJURY

An instruction that if plaintiff suffered no physical injury, or injuries, in alighting from defendant's train at an improper place, she could not recover damages from fright or mental anguish, if any she suffered, but that bodily suffering from cold, or from being wet, if any, would be a "physical injury" within such instruction, was proper. Dye v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 115 S. W. 497, 500, 135 Mo. App. 254.

PHYSICAL INJURY AND DISCOMFORT

The rendering of a passenger on a train nervous almost to sickness, by threatened ejection, constitutes "physical injury and discomfort." Southern Pac. Co. v. Bailey (Tex.) 91 S. W. 820, 821.

PHYSICAL OCCUPANCY

"Physical occupancy" of property and legal possession of the same are not necessarily identical. A person may be held in law to be in actual possession of property, though at that time he be not physically upon it; and for that same reason another person, who at that time may have been in point of fact physically upon it, was not in legal possession. State ex rel. Honey Island Land & Timber Co. v. King, 35 South. 181, 184, 110 La. 961.

PHYSICAL OPERATION OF A SWITCH

A railroad employé whose duty was to turn a turntable for all engines coming in or going out of an engine house, and to throw the switch for the tracks in whichever way they were going, was engaged in the "physical operation of a switch" within Const. § 162 (Code 1904, p. cclix), abolishing the fellow-servant rule as to such an employé, and under express provisions thereof and of Code 1904, § 1294k, may recover for injuries caused by negligence of a coemployé entitled to direct his services. Washington-Southern Ry. Co. v. Cheshire, 65 S. E. 27, 29, 109 Va. 741.

PHYSICAL VIOLENCE

As cruelty, see Cruelty.

PHYSICALLY INCAPABLE

The words "physically incapable," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1743, authorizing the annulment of a marriage on the ground that one of the parties was "physically incapable" of marriage, mean want of potentia copulandi, and not merely incapacity for procreation, and a husband cannot obtain a divorce on the ground of the barrenness of the wife. Schroter v. Schroter, 106 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 56 Misc. Rep. 69.

"A 'physician' is one who is versed in medical science, a branch of which is surgery; and a surgeon is a physician who treats bodily injuries and ills by manual operations and use of surgical instruments and appliances. A 'physician' as defined by our statute and in common parlance, is a person skilled in both medicine and surgery." Goss v. Goss, 113 N. W. 690, 692, 102 Minn. 346 (citing Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 2295-2300; 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5374-5376).

Those who profess to heal the sick by magic, physic, or supernatural agency may be imposters, but are not "physicians" within Pol. Code 1895, §§ 1477-1491, defining and regulating the practice of medicine, and their system is in no sense the practice of medicine. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 550, 4 Ga. App. 293.

"The relation of 'physician' and 'patient' (so far as Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of professional information, unless waived by the patient is concerned) springs from the fact of professional treatment, independent of the causes which led to such treatment." Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 70 N. E. 111, 112, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

Code, § 2579, provides that "any person shall be held as 'practicing medicine' or to be a 'physician,' who shall publicly profess to be a physician and assume the duties of that profession, or who shall make a practice of prescribing, or of prescribing and furnishing medicine, for the sick, or who shall publicly profess to cure or heal." State v. Yates, 124 N. W. 174, 175, 145 Iowa, 332.

The definition of the section (Code, § 2579) also includes any one "who shall publicly profess to be a physician * * * and assume the duties." Held, that publishing a card as "doctor of neurology and ophthalmology" was a public profession that he was a "physician," and this, with the assumption of duties as such, came within the meaning of the section. State v. Wilhite, 109 N. W. 730, 731, 732, 132 Iowa, 226, 11 Ann. Cas. 180.

The term "physician," as used in Laws 1890, p. 122, c. 87, authorizing registration of reputable resident physicians engaged in actual practice on July 1, 1897, meant any person of whatever school, or whether belonging to any known school, in good faith treating human ills by any remedy, however small, so as to be known among the people as a physician, and was not limited to a person possessed of that technical knowledge of the human system and of drugs and other remedies, and how to administer them, commonly supposed to be possessed by members in good standing of the great schools of medicine, especially in view of Laws 1897, p. 509, c. 264, § 7 (St. 1898, § 1435f), defining the term to include every person who shall for a fee prescribe drugs or other medicines or surgical treatment for the cure or relief of any wound, fracture, bodily injury, infirmity, or disease. State v. Schmidt, 119 N. W. 647, 650, 138 Wis. 53.

Under the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person to engage in practicing medicine without having first obtained a license, and providing (Rev. Code 1852, as amended in 1896, p. 58, c. 117) that every person (except apothecaries) whose business it is for fee and reward to prescribe remedies or perform surgical operations shall be deemed a "physician" within the act, it is not necessary that the prescription shall be in writing, and any direction given to the patient for drugs, medicines, or other remedies for the cure of bodily diseases, directing how they are to be applied to or used by the patient, is prescribing remedies within the meaning of the statute, to "prescribe remedies" meaning, in medicine, "to write or to give medical directions, or to indicate remedies"; and it is immaterial whether the direction is given by the defendant himself or by another person, even though such other person be a licensed physician, but engaged by and acting under the direction of defendant in the conduct of his business. State v. Lawson (Del.) 69 Atl. 1066, 1067, 6 Pennewill, 395.

Under a statute authorizing insane persons to be removed to a particular hospital on a certificate of two "physicians" that such person is insane, such certificate may be made by nonresident physicians not officers of an institution for the care of the insane. In re Crosswell's Petition, 66 Atl. 55, 56, 28 R. I. 137, 13 Ann. Cas. 874.

Chiropractic

One advertising and holding himself out as a chiropractic and offering to treat diseases by the methods dictated by that school is within Code, §§ 2579, 2581, requiring persons practicing as "physicians" to procure a license, and making it an offense for them to practice medicine without such license. State v. Zechman (Iowa) 138 N. W. 387, 389.

Masseur

An indictment alleging that accused practiced on human beings without authority of law, in that he unlawfully treated a physical disease of a person named and charged him indirectly therefor, said treatment being given in the capacity of a "physician," under a system of treatment consisting in the performance of physical manipulations, sufficiently charges a practicing of medicine within Pen. Code, art. 755, declaring that one who shall treat any disease by any system and charge therefor shall be regarded as practicing medicine, and the indictment need not allege that the treatment accused practiced was not within his particular sphere as a masseur, nor negative that he did not publicly represent himself as a masseur. Milling v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 434, 435.

Osteopath

Laws 1907, p. 636, c. 344, regulating the practice of medicine, provides for licenses to practice medicine after an examination by the State Board of Medical Examiners, and states the educational requirements of the examination, and prohibits the practice of medicine without a registered license. Section 7, subd. 6, provides that an applicant for license to practice osteopathy shall show that he has studied not less than three years, and subdivision 4 requires all other applicants to have studied not less than four years. Section 14 after stating certain exemptions from the statute, provides that any person engaged in the practice of osteopathy at the passage of the act who presents to the board evidence of graduation from a college of osteopathy with a two years' course, including certain subjects, may be licensed without examination, but such license shall not permit the holder to administer drugs or perform surgery. Section 1, subd. 7, provides that a person practices medicine within the act who holds himself out as able to diagnose any human disease, etc., and who prescribes for any disease, injury, etc.; and, by subdivision 8, "physician" means a practitioner of medicine. The Sanitary Code, § 5, provides that the word "physician" includes every person "practicing about the cure of the sick or injured," or who prescribes for such person. Section 160 requires every physician to be registered with the department of health, and requires physicians who have attended deceased persons to preserve a registry of their death, stating the cause, with other details, and to state the same in their report. Section 167 prohibits any interment of a dead body without a permit from the board of health, and a regulation of the board of health prohibits such permits except on the certificate and record of death of the physician pursuant to the Sanitary Code. Held, that a duly licensed osteopath was a physician within the Sanitary Code as well as the statute, and was entitled to registration as a physician. Bandel v. Department of Health of City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 431, 127 App. Div. 382; Id., 85 N. E. 1067, 1068, 193 N. Y. 133, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

Orthopedist

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 520, excluding physicians as witnesses as to matters communicated to them as such by patients, the word "physician" includes those only who are lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine, and hence, in view of sections 8400 and 8410, making it unlawful for one to practice medicine without first obtaining a license and punishing such practicing without a license, an orthopedist who had not received a physician's license was not a physician within said section 520, and information gained by him while giving a course in gymnastic exercises was not privileged. William Laurile Co. v. McCullough, 90 N. E. 1014, 1018, 174 Ind. 477, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 49.

PICKER

A "picker" is a machine used in cotton mills for the purpose of cleaning motes, which is waste cotton run through the lapper at a cotton mill, to which a small quantity of cotton still attaches. Washington Mills v. Cox, 157 Fed. 634, 636, 85 C. C. A. 154.

As the result of the use of a pick to shift the needle in a circular knitting machine, the term "picker" has come to designate the means by which the needles are shifted in an automatic machine, and the machine itself is called the "picker machine." The pickers which raise the needles are known as elevating or lifting pickers, or "lifters," and the pickers which depress the needles as the depressing pickers, or "droppers." Two lifting pickers are used in automatic reciprocating knitting, one operating when the cam cylinder moves in one direction, and the other when the cam cylinder moves in the opposite direction, and the same is true of the depressing pickers. Mayo Knitting Machine & Needle Co. v. E. Jenckes Mfg. Co., 133 Fed. 527, 529, 66 C. C. A. 503.

PICKET—PICKETING

The word "picket" is defined as "a body of men belonging to a trades union, sent to watch and annoy men working in a shop not belonging to the union, or against which a strike is in progress." Originally the word had no such meaning, and this definition is the result of what has been done under the term and the common application that has been made of it. Ideal Mfg. Co. v. Ludwig, 112 N. W. 723, 725, 149 Mich. 133, 119 Am. St. Rep. 656 (quoting Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 77 N. W. 13, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, Cent. Dict. and Webster's Dict.).

The word "picket" is defined as a body of men belonging to a trades union, sent to watch and annoy men working in a shop not belonging to the union, or against which a strike is in progress. Picketing, if confined strictly and in good faith to gaining information and to peaceful persuasion and argument, is not forbidden by law; but when it is used for the purposes of intimidation it is unlawful. Goldfield Consol. Mines Co. v. Goldfield Miners' Union No. 220, 159 Fed. 500, 523 (quoting Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 77 N. W. 13, 14, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421).

The word "picket," in connection with strikes, is borrowed from the nomenclature of warfare, and is strongly suggestive of a hostile attitude against the individual or corporation against whom the labor union has a grievance. It is, however, possible that a picket established at or near a factory where a strike is in progress may act lawfully, and go no farther than to induce others to assist the striking employes by lawful persuasion and inducements, but the slightest evidence of threats, violence, or intimidation of any character should be sufficient to show the unlawful character of the picket, since a picket under the most favorable consideration means an interference between the employer seeking employes and the men seeking employment. Jones v. Van Winkle Gin & Ma- chine Works, 62 S. E. 236, 238, 131 Ga. 336, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 848, 127 Am. St. Rep. 235.

"Picketing" of men may simply mean the stationing of men for observation. If in the doing of this act, solely for such purpose, there be no molestation or physical annoyance, or let or hindrance of any person, then it cannot be said that such an act is per se unlawful; but "picketing" may also mean the stationing of a man or men to coerce or to turn aside against their will those who would go to and from the picketed place to do work, or in some other way to hamper or hinder the free dispatch of business by the employer. In that case "picketing" may well be said to be unlawful. An injunction against "picketing," without qualification, is therefore too broad. Mills v. United States Printing Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 185, 187, 99 App. Div. 605.

"Picketing" by strikers is the detachment of men in suitable places for the purpose of coming into personal relations with the new workmen, in order, if possible, to induce them by peaceful argument to leave the places which they have taken for such natural and proper reasons as may appeal to men in such circumstances. Picketing may be lawfully resorted to, provided the pickets are limited in numbers, so that their presence does not in itself amount to intimidation and the pickets so conduct themselves as to leave persons solicited feeling that they are not being subjected to compulsion, but are at liberty to comply or not as they please. Pope Motor Car Co. v. Keegan, 150 Fed. 148, 149.

"Picketing" has been condemned by every court having the matter under consideration. It is a pretense for "persuasion," but is intended for "intimidation." Gentlemen never seek to compel and force another to listen to the art of persuasion. To stop another on the street, get in his road, follow him from one side of the street to another, pursue him wherever he goes, stand in front of his residence, is not persuasion. "Intimidation" cannot be defined. Neither can "fraud" be defined. But every person knows whether his acts are fraudulent, and he knows whether his acts are intimidating. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102, 119, 121.

PICKING

"Picking" at one may mean mere innocent amusement, and it may not tend to show anything criminal. Where, on a prosecution for rape, defendant denied that he was intimate with prosecutrix, and denied that while in the tent of a certain person he had been reproved for his conduct with prosecutrix, it was error subsequently to permit the husband of such person to testify for the state that he and his wife were in their tent, and that defendant was then talking to the girl, and that he kept "picking at her," and that witness' wife then said that she did not want any such conduct in the tent, and that if there had to be anything of the kind between defendant and prosecutrix she did not want defendant there any more; the phrase "picking at her" being indefinite, and the remarks of witness' wife probably indicating to the jury that the conduct of defendant was indecent. Denton v. State, 79 S. W. 560, 561, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 193.

PICKLES

The provision for "pickles" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, covers only vegetables. So pickled walnuts are excluded, and are classifiable as unenumerated manufactures under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Acker, Merrill & Condit Co., 171 Fed. 77, 78, 96 C. C. A. 181.

Capers pickled in vinegar, which are used as a condiment and in flavoring sauces, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, relating to "pickles and sauces of all kinds." Articles are not to be removed from a provision for pickles and sauces, and placed in a provision for drugs, simply because a medical or therapeutic property may be extracted from them. Articles are not to be excluded from the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170 for "vegetables * * * including pickles and sauces of all kinds," on the ground that they are not palatable or desirable as a distinct and separate eatable, or are not known as garden vegetables. The use, rather than strict botanical classification, is the determinative factor; and capers, which are flower buds, but are used as pickles or as a sauce, are included in said provision. S. S. Pierce Co. v. United States, 176 Fed. 440-444.

PICTURE

The word "pictures," as used by a revenue agent in the statement filed by him of property belonging to a person omitted from taxation, includes all of the paintings, drawings, and sketches on the walls of one's residence or office building. Commonwealth v. Glover, 116 S. W. 769, 774, 132 Ky. 588.

As print

See Print—Printing.

PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATION

Chromolithographs representing actual groups of persons and things, which have been designed from hints or descriptions of the scenes represented, and which are to be used as advertisements for a circus are "pictorial illustrations," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4952, allowing a copyright to the "author, designer, or proprietor * * * of any engraving, cut, print, * * * or chromo," as affected by the Act 1874, c. 301, §

3, and on complying with all the statutory requirements the proprietors are entitled to the protection of the copyright laws. "These chromolithographs are 'pictorial illustrations'. The word 'illustrations' does not mean that they must illustrate the text of a book, and that the etchings of Rembrandt or Steinla's engraving of the Madonna di San Sisto could not be protected to-day if any man were able to produce them." "The ballet is as legitimate a subject for illustration as any other." Bilestein v. Donaldson Lithographing Co., 23 Sup. Ct. 298, 188 U. S. 239, 251, 47 L. Ed. 460.

PIECE

See In the Piece.

In a writing limiting the responsibility of a warehouse for any piece or package to $50, the word "piece" should be construed to mean an individual article with separate identity at the time of storage, and not a concealed portion in a whole, as laces packed in a sideboard. Rapp v. Washington Storage Warehouse & Van Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 855, 858, 75 Misc. Rep. 16.

"An indictment charging larceny of a certain number of pieces of paper, each of a certain stated value is good. * * * There is no such difference between pieces of paper and railroad tickets in reference to the statutes punishing embezzlement as to make it improper to charge an embezzlement of both kinds of property in the same count." Commonwealth v. Parker, 43 N. E. 499, 500, 165 Mass. 526.

The words "lot," "piece," and "parcel" apply peculiarly to the land itself, and are never employed to describe improvements. Canty v. Staley, 123 Pac. 252, 254, 162 Cal. 379.

"The terms 'tract or lot' and 'piece or parcel of real property,' or 'piece or parcel of land,' mean any contiguous quantity of land in the possession of, owned by, or recorded as the property of the same claimant, person, or company." In this connection the word "contiguous" means land which touches on the sides. Hence two quarters of the same section, which only touch at the corner, do not constitute, for the purpose of taxation, one tract or parcel of land. Griffin v. Denison Land Co., 119 N. W. 1041, 1043, 18 N. D. 246 (quoting from Rev. Codes, 1905, § 1480 [Rev. Codes 1899, § 1176]).

Laws 1890, p. 376, c. 132, § 32, provides that the assessor shall actually view when practicable and determine the true and full value of each lot of real property listed for taxation and shall enter the value thereof in one column, etc., and the statutes further provide that the term "tract," or "lot" and "piece" or "parcel" of real property, and "piece" or "parcel" of land, whenever used in the act relating to revenue and taxation, shall be held to mean any contiguous quantity of land in the possession, owned by, or recorded as the property of, the same claimant, person or company. Held, that under the statutes smaller tracts or subdivisions composing a larger tract could not be assessed as one tract, where the land was owned by different persons under recorded titles or in joint ownership, and assessments in one tract of different ownerships or estates in different tracts seem to be inhibited, where the different titles are of record. State Finance Co. v. Bowdle, 112 N. W. 76, 78, 16 N. D. 193.

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to opening and widening of streets, provides by section 16 that the superintendent of streets upon receiving a diagram shall assess the cost of an improvement upon the land in the district, including the property of any railroad. Held, in view of Civ. Code, § 3541, declaring that an interpretation which gives effect is preferred to one which makes void, that as all railroad land other than rights of way was subject to assessment under the general language used, it was intended to assess its rights of way, whether consisting of an easement or title in fee, and that the use of the street for the purposes specified in its franchise constituted a "piece or parcel of land" within the meaning of the act subject to assessment for resulting benefits. Los Angeles Pac. Co. v. Hubbard, 121 Pac. 306, 309, 17 Cal. App. 646.

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 718, which provides that in a proceeding to register title any number of contiguous pieces of land in the same county and owned by the same person and in the same right, or any number of pieces of property in the same county having the same chain of title, and belonging to the same person, may be included, several noncontiguous tracts having the same chain of title may be included in one proceeding; the terms "pieces of property" and "pieces of land" being synonymous. Held v. Houser, 127 Pac. 139, 140, 53 Colo. 363.

PIER

See Lying Between Piers; Public Pier.

A "pier" is a structure extending from the solid land out into the water to afford convenient passage for persons and property to and from vessels alongside of the pier. Its use is thus shown to be essentially the same as that of a way, and it bears to the vessels moored beside it relations similar to those which a way bears to contiguous places. A pier may also be, as a way, either public or private, and when the state granted the right to build piers on this land the right covered public as well as private piers. Borough of Seabright v. Allgor, 56 Atl. 287, 288, 69 N. J. Law, 641.

"A 'pier' is defined as a projecting wharf or landing place." In The Haxby, 94 Fed.

1016, it was said: "The Century Dictionary defines a pier to be a projecting quay, wharf, or other landing place; and without some qualifying adjective, this is the ordinary meaning of the word. It may be a solid stone structure, or an outer shell of stone or wood, filled in with earth, or it may be a framework formed by fastening a platform of planks upon piles driven into the soil at the bottom of the water. In either event, it is a protection of the land." The limits of a city which is bounded on navigable water may be extended by natural accretion and embrace what is actually made land, wharves, permanently filled in with earth, and the like, unless its charter clearly prohibit such extension, and no distinction should be made between such wharves and piers which rest on piles; a "pier" being a projecting landing place, made either as a solid structure or on piles driven into the soil at the bottom of the water. Western Maryland Tidewater R. Co. v. City of Baltimore, 68 Atl. 6, 10, 106 Md. 561.

A covenant in a deed of riparian lands, providing for a line for solid filling and beyond that an exterior line for piers, and stipulating that the land beyond the solid filling line shall not be used for any purpose except the erection of a pier or piers thereon under which the tide may ebb and flow, is not violated by the erection of a boathouse on the piers resting on the land. The word "pier" generically means a support, and in its precise use the absence or presence of water surrounding it is immaterial, though its customary use is with respect to projections into water. Chelsea Land & Improvement Co. v. Westcott, 72 Atl. 1007, 75 N. J. Eq. 367.

PIERCED

A coal mining lease provided for suspension of a minimum royalty clause or exemption therefrom so long as a "fault" in existence in the mine, contact with which occasioned such exemption clause, should be a hindrance to the successful operation of the mine and for resumption of the minimum royalty after the "fault" had been "pierced" and the normal vein "recovered." Held, that the words "pierced" and "recovered" mean more than a mere breach of the fault and discovery of coal on the opposite side, but, if the immediate obstacle has been overcome, the main entry put in condition for successful operation and, together with side entries, carried into the body of the coal for several hundred feet, encountering the same obstacle or others in some of the entries; but none in others, it is for the jury to say whether the fault has been overcome within the meaning of the lease. Collins v. White Oak Fuel Co., 71 S. E. 277, 280, 69 W. Va. 292.

PIETY

In determining the validity of a charity, there is no distinction between the promotion of "piety" and of "religion"; the two words being synonymous. Glover v. Baker, 83 Atl. 916, 931, 76 N. H. 893.

PIGEON

As poultry, see Poultry.

PIGMENTS

Hematite iron ore in a form in which it cannot be used as a pigment is not dutiable as "pigments," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 58, 30 Stat. 154, but as "iron ore," under Schedule C, par. 121, 30 Stat. 159. Hill v. Francklyn & Ferguson, 162 Fed. 880, 882, 89 C. C. A. 570.

PILE

PILE DRIVER

As machine, see Machine.

PILE DRIVER CAR

A "pile driver car" is a flat car on which is built a pile driver and an engine, which propels the car forward and backward with its own power by means of sprocket chains and wheels. Johnson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 116 N. W. 936, 104 Minn. 444, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

PILOT ASSOCIATION

See Partnership.

PIMP

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2440, which makes it an offense to live with a common prostitute, it was error, in an action for calling defendant a "pimp," to refuse to instruct that the charge was justified if plaintiff lived with prostitutes at the hotel where he was employed by defendant, where there was evidence that women, who stayed several days at a time at the hotel, consorted with him, and that he procured patronage for them. Eddy v. Cunningham, 125 Pac. 961, 962, 69 Wash. 544.

PIN

An indictment for the robbery of a diamond pin, which the evidence showed was a stud suspended from the shirt by a corkscrew piece of metal, which describes the property as "one pin, of" a specified value, sufficiently describes the property, within Const. art. 2, § 9, giving accused the right to demand the nature of the accusation; a "pin" being defined as an ornament fastened to the clothing by a pin. People v. Nolan, 95 N. E. 140, 250 Ill. 351, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 401.

PINCH OFF

The term "pinch off," as applied to the culture of trees, consists of the growing of the bud on top much more rapidly than the root or original stock, causing the trunk of the tree or new stock to be larger above the point where it has been joined or grafted than the stem of the original variety. Brackett v. Martens, 87 Pac. 410, 412, 4 Cal. App. 249.

PINCHING

The term "pinching" means to move a railroad car forward with a crowbar, the operation being to thrust the bar between the wheel and the rail and move the load by lifting the other end. Fassbinder v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 104 S. W. 1154, 126 Mo. App. 563.

"Pinching" a railroad car consists in placing a crowbar on a rail under a wheel and prizing the car along until it has acquired sufficient momentum to take it down-grade. Street's Adm'r v. Norfolk & W. R. Co., 45 S. E. 284, 285, 101 Va. 748.

PINE TIMBER

All merchantable pine timber, see All.

A permit to cut state timber must be construed with reference to Laws 1895, p. 349, c. 163, authorizing the sale of such timber only when it is liable to waste; and a permit to cut "pine timber" will include "dead and down timber." State v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co., 119 N. W. 387, 390, 107 Minn. 54.

PINEAPPLES PRESERVED IN THEIR OWN JUICE

Pineapples preserved in cans in their own juice, with 3 per cent. of sugar added for flavoring, and not aiding substantially in the preservation, which is accomplished by the canning process, held dutiable as "pineapples preserved in their own juice," and not as fruit preserved in sugar, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171. United States v. J. S. Johnson & Co., 152 Fed. 164, 165, 81 C. C. A. 416.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, provides for fruit preserved in sugar and for "pineapples preserved in their own juice." Held, as to pineapples in hermetically sealed cans, in their own juice, but with 7 to 20 per cent. of sugar added for flavoring only, that they were dutiable under the latter rather than the former provision. United States v. J. S. Johnson & Co., 166 Fed. 1002, 1003.

The addition of from 2.28 to 8.82 per cent. of sugar to pineapples preserved in cans in their own juice does not remove the fruit from the provision for "pineapples preserved in their own juice," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, to the provision in the same paragraph for "fruits preserved in sugar." U. H. Dudley & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 881, 82 C. C. A. 627.

PING PONG BALLS

Not dutiable as toys, see Toys.

PIONEER

The term "pioneer," as applied to a patented invention, is commonly understood to denote a patent covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what has gone before. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cramer, 24 Sup. Ct. 291, 296, 192 U. S. 285, 48 L. Ed. 437 (quoting and adopting definition in Westinghouse v. Boyden Power Brake Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 707, 170 U. S. 537, 43 L. Ed. 1136).

"The word 'pioneer,' although used somewhat loosely, is commonly understood to denote a patent covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what had gone before." Dey Time Register Co. v. Syracuse Time Recorder Co., 152 Fed. 440, 447 (quoting and adopting definition in Cimloti Unhairing Co. v. American Fur Refining Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 697, 198 U. S. 399, 406, 407, 49 L. Ed. 1100).

A "pioneer patent" is one covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to make a distinct step in the progress of the art as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what had gone before. Autopiano Co. v. Amphion Piano Player Co., 186 Fed. 159, 163, 108 C. C. A. 291.

A "pioneer patent" is one which first discloses means to accomplish a certain result, and the term does not apply to a patent for new means to accomplish a result already attained in another way, although they may be an improvement on the old way. National Dump Car Co. v. Ralston Steel Car Co., 172 Fed. 393, 397, 97 C. C. A. 91.

A "pioneer invention" is a device of such novelty and importance "as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from mere improvement or perfection of what has gone before." A machine for making on a commercial scale and more cheaply an article previously made only by hand is a "pioneer invention," and a patent therefor is entitled to a liberal construction. Electric Candy Mach. Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 973.

"The term 'pioneer invention,' although used somewhat loosely, is commonly understood to denote a patent covering a function never before performed, a wholly novel device, or one of such novelty and importance as to mark a distinct step in the progress of the art, as distinguished from a mere improvement or perfection of what has gone before. Most conspicuous examples of such patents are the one to Howe of the sewing machine, to Morse of the electric telegraph, and to Bell of the telephone." Cimiotti Unhairing Co. v. American Fur Refining Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 697, 700, 198 U. S. 399, 49 L. Ed. 1100.

PIOUS GIFT

A charitable or "pious gift" is one given for the love of God or for the love of your neighbor, in the catholic or universal sense, given from these motives and to these ends, free from stain or taint of any consideration that is personal, private, or selfish. More precisely, it is a gift to the general public use, extending to the poor as well as the rich. A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift to be applied consistently with existing laws for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds and hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from diseases, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or erecting and maintaining public buildings, or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. In order that there may be a good trust for a charitable use, there must be some public benefit open to an indefinite and vague number, the persons to be benefited to be uncertain and indefinite and to be selected or appointed to be the particular beneficiaries of the trust for the time being. A charity is any gift, not inconsistent with existing laws, which is promotive of science, or tends to the education, enlightenment, benefit, or amelioration of the condition of mankind, or the diffusion of useful knowledge, or for the public convenience. Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 375, 196 Mo. 234 (citing Coggeshall v. Pelton [N. Y.] 7 Johns. Ch. 294, 11 Am. Dec. 471; Mitford v. Reynolds [Pa.] 1 Phil. Ch. 191, 192; Perin v. Carey, 24 How. [65 U. S.] 506, 16 L. Ed. 701; In re Hinkley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457; Missouri Historical Society v. Academy of Science, 8 S. W. 346, 94 Mo. 459; Chambers v. City of St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543).

PIPE

See Service Pipe; Stovepipe.
All pipes, see All.

In a complaint charging that one of the "pipes" connected with furnaces and boilers and filled with hot steam under high pressure was "insecure, defective," etc., the word "pipe" is used as generally descriptive of a conduit for steam, and the word fairly includes the flanges which connect sections of pipe. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. v. Firmment, 170 Fed. 151, 153, 95 C. C. A. 1.

PIPE LINE

As real estate, see Real Property.

PIPING

Under ground piping as personal property, see Personal Property.

PISTOL

As deadly weapon, see Deadly Weapon.
Gun as including, see Gun.
See, also, Revolver.

An object, once a "pistol," does not cease to be one by becoming temporarily inefficient. Mitchell v. State, 55 South. 354, 99 Miss. 579, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1174, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 512.

The furnishing of a Stevens 32-caliber rifle by a father to his minor son was not an offense, within Rev. St. 1898, § 4397, prohibiting any person from giving any "pistol or revolver" to a minor. Taylor v. Seil, 97 N. W. 498, 120 Wis. 32.

To call a toy a pistol does not make it a "pistol," or to call a pistol a toy does not make it a "toy," within Pen. Code 1895, § 344, forbidding the sale of a pistol to a minor; nor is its essential character changed by the purpose for which it is sold or used in a particular case. Mathews v. Caldwell, 63 S. E. 250, 251, 5 Ga. App. 336.

Such act contemplates a weapon, and not a mere imitation of a weapon, not reasonably capable of being put to the use for which the corresponding weapon is intended; and there is no liability for injuries received from a toy pistol sold. Mathews v. Caldwell, 63 S. E. 250, 251, 5 Ga. App. 336.

Where an indictment charged accused with inflicting a mortal wound on deceased "with a revolving pistol," and later charged that the wounds were "gunshot wounds," it was not fatally defective for indefiniteness and uncertainty; the term "gunshot wounds" being broad enough to include wounds made by a "pistol." The word "gun" is a generic term, and includes pistol. According to Webster's Dictionary a "gun" is "any firearm for throwing projectiles by the explosion of gunpowder." In common usage the words "pistol" and "gun" are used interchangeably, and as the averment was "after the giving and inflicting the said gunshot wounds in the manner and form aforesaid and at the time and place aforesaid," etc., it is not open to the objection that it was vague, indefinite, uncertain, and argumentative. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 263, 198 Mo. 23.

PIT

See Borrow Pits; Cinder Pit.

The "pit" of a locomotive tender is the part of the tender next to the engine, in which the coal for use in the locomotive is stored. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hanson (Tex.) 90 S. W. 1122.

Quarry synonymous

"Pit" is synonymous with "quarry," signifying a large opening in the earth from which rock or ores are taken. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrel, 53 South. 705, 711, 127 La. 466.

PIVOT

The general meaning of the term "pivot" is such as to imply a fixed shaft or hub, and no one would understand a pivotal support to be other than a rigid, nonrotating shaft support. United States Light & Heating Co. v. Safety Car Heating & Lighting Co., 191 Fed. 850, 851.

"Place" is a comprehensive term, and may consist of one or more rooms in a building, or it may be an entire building, or more than one building within the same place used together for the convenient conduct of a prohibited purpose. A place kept as a nuisance, in violation of section 7605, Rev. Codes, 1899, may consist of one or more buildings, where they are both used for the unlawful purpose as parts of the same premises. State v. Brown, 104 N. W. 1112, 14 N. D. 529.

The word "place" has a broad significance, and applies, not only to a building, but also to any inclosure, whether covered or not. Under St. 1890, c. 230, providing that the officers of a city may license persons to keep more than four horses in certain specified buildings or places therein, and whoever, not being licensed, uses "any building or place for a stable for more than four horses" may be enjoined, one cannot, unlicensed, keep four horses in each of several buildings on the same lot. Brookline v. Hatch, 45 N. E. 756, 757, 167 Mass. 380, 381, 36 L. R. A. 495.

The words "time and place," in a statute requiring a description in the notice of the time and place of the occurrence of the injury, means a statement of the day and hour when, and a description of the locality where, the person injured received the direct injury to his person or property from the defendant's negligent act, as nearly as these facts can be given. Peck v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 757, 758, 77 Conn. 161; Wright v. City of Omaha, 110 N. W. 754, 755, 78 Neb. 124.

"Place," as used in the road and bridge act, requiring highway commissioners to give notice of the time when and "place" where they will meet to examine the route of a proposed road, and hear reasons against its establishment, means some definite point or locality, and the site of a proposed road one mile long is not such "place" or locality. Town of Audubon v. Hand, 83 N. E. 196, 197, 198, 231 Ill. 334.

Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1749, c. 600) § 2, provides that no recovery for injuries shall be maintained unless notice of the "time, place, and cause of injury" be given the employer. A notice stated that the claimant was injured on or about a certain day in defendant's yard, through the negligence of the defendant in not providing competent servants to unload its coal from cars, and in not stationing guards to warn claimant of danger, and in failing to protect its employes. There were five different "places" in the yards where cars were unloaded, and the claimant was one of a gang of 20 or 30 men. Held, that the notice was insufficient. Miller v. Solvay Process Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 1020, 1022, 109 App. Div. 135.

Where a note is made payable at a designated branch office of a trust company, presentation at the principal office of the trust company on the due date of the note and at the designated branch after banking hours on the day following is not sufficient as against an indorser, under Negotiable Instrument Law, § 133, providing for presentment for payment at the "place" of payment specified; a "place" not meaning an individual, corporation, or institution. Ironclad Mfg. Co. v. Sackin, 114 N. Y. Supp. 42, 43, 129 App. Div. 555.

The word "place," as used in a law relating to licenses for vehicles, providing that a license number obtained in another "place" or state shall be removed from said vehicle while the vehicle is being used within this commonwealth, could not properly be regarded as applying to a municipality within the commonwealth; but what was intended was that the foreign license number should be removed from any vehicle which comes from another territorial division outside the state into the limits of the state, and only in such case. Brazier v. City of Philadelphia, 64 Atl. 508, 510, 215 Pa. 297, 7 Ann. Cas. 548.

A federal postoffice building, in which it is charged that defendant committed forgery, is a "place," within the meaning of Act July 7, 1898, c. 576, § 2, 30 Stat. 717, providing that, when any offense is committed in any place, jurisdiction over which has been retained by or ceded to the United States; the punishment for which is not provided by any law of the United States, the offender shall receive the same punishment as the laws of the state provide for the like offense; so that a federal court has jurisdiction to prosecute and punish for forgery, denounced by the state law, committed in a postoffice building owned and occupied by the United States within a state, over which legislative jurisdiction has been ceded by the state. United States v. Andem, 158 Fed. 996, 1000 (citing and adopting Ft. Leavenworth R. Co. v. Lowe, 5 Sup. Ct. 995, 114 U. S. 525, 29 L. Ed. 264).

Code, § 283, provides that all judicial proceedings must be public, unless otherwise specifically provided by statute or agreed on by the parties; and section 286 declares that courts must be held at the "place" provided by law, except for the determination of actions, special proceedings, or other matters not requiring a jury, when, by the consent of the parties, they may be held at some other place. Held, that where, after the regular term of the district court at which defendant was indicted had convened, in its regular room in the courthouse, the presiding judge announced that the session would be adjourned to the office of the county superintendent, on the first floor of the courthouse, for the purpose of having another defendant, who was in a weak physical condition, present when the grand jury was impaneled—the room being sufficiently large to accommodate the court, its officers, the jurors, attorneys, and a number of the general public—the holding of court in such room was not error. State v. Richards, 102 N. W. 439, 440, 126 Iowa, 497.

Under Act Cong. May 19, 1828, c. 68, § 3, providing that an execution on a judgment of a federal court and proceedings thereon shall be the same in each state as are now used in courts of such state, Act Cong. Feb. 16, 1839, c. 27, § 4, providing that the marshal may, at the written request of defendant, change the sale of property to the "place" where the federal court for the district is held, and Act Miss. June 22, 1822 (How. & H. Dig. p. 633) § 17, providing that sales of land shall be at the courthouse of the county, an execution sale by a marshal, on a judgment of a federal court, outside the county in which the land was situated, was void, unless it was at the place of holding the federal court of the district, and the return showed that it was on the "written request" of defendant. Neither the return on an execution that the execution sale by a marshal, on a judgment of a federal court, outside the county where the land was situated, was "in J.," nor the bill in a suit to remove clouds from title, alleging that it was at the "front door of the statehouse in J.," shows that the sale was at the place authorized by Act Cong. Feb. 16, 1839, c. 27, § 4, 5 Stat. 317; the "place" where the United States court for the district is holden being the special house in which the federal court held its sittings. Jones v. Rogers, 38 South. 742, 746, 85 Miss. 802.

As city or town

The word "place," as used in defining the seat of justice as the place where the courthouse, jail, and county offices are located, means town. Babcock v. Hahn, 75 S. W. 93, 94, 175 Mo. 136.

Under a statute requiring a lien claim for materials furnished, etc., for a vessel to state the "place" where the vessel was built, etc., a claim stating that work was done and materials were furnished in "Baltimore city" was sufficient. Lucas v. Taylor, 66 Atl. 26, 27, 105 Md. 90.

As county or parish

Civ. Code, art. 1591, provides that males who have not attained the age of 16 years complete are incapable of being witnesses to testaments. Article 1578 requires three witnesses residing in the "place" where the will is executed in case of nuncupative testaments by public act. Article 1594 provides that by residence of the witness, in the place where the testament is executed is understood his residence in the parish. Held, that a boy over 16 years of age is capable of being a witness to a will, and, where he actually resides in the parish where the will is executed, he is a competent witness to a nuncupative will by public act, though his parents reside in another parish. Oglesby v. Turner, 54 South. 400, 402, 127 La. 1093.

As park

The word "place," as used in a plat showing a pond with trees, which had not been planted about it, should be construed as meaning "park"; it being perfectly clear that the donors intended that the space should be used for a pleasure ground for the public. Fessler v. Town of Union, 56 Atl. 272, 276, 67 N. J. Eq. 14.

Gaming

To maintain a "place" of any character where persons are allowed to bet, offer to bet, place an order for a bet, or telegraph or telephone bets on races of any sort, is an act prohibited by Pen. Code 1895, § 398, and such an act cannot, in the absence of express legislative authority, properly be made penal by a municipal ordinance. Thrower v. City of Atlanta, 52 S. E. 76, 124 Ga. 1, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 110 Am. St. Rep. 147, 4 Ann. Chs. 1 (citing Thrower v. State, 45 S. E. 126, 117 Ga. 756).

Liquor laws

The word "place," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 7605, declaring a place where liquors are kept for illegal sale to be a nuisance, means the particular building or apartment where the unlawful sale is made or the intoxicating beverages are kept for sale. State v. Poull, 105 N. W. 717, 718, 14 N. D. 557.

The word "place," in Rev. St. c. 29, § 49, authorizing search and seizure for the unlawful keeping of intoxicating liquors, cannot be construed as broad enough to cover the search for liquors in a valise in the possession of a person charged with unlawfully keeping or depositing liquors but not alleged to be in any definite or fixed locality. State v. Fezzetta, 69 Atl. 1073, 1075, 108 Me. 467.

The proprietor of a restaurant is a "person," and his restaurant is a "place," within the city of Denver, within the purview of Denver Ordinance 1902, No. 102, § 1, providing that no person shall, within the limits of the city, sell or give away intoxicating liquors to be drunk upon the premises where sold or at any place. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 88 Pac. 156, 157, 38 Colo. 401.

As used in Dispensary Act Feb. 16, 1907, § 27, making it a misdemeanor to carry intoxicants for unlawful use to any place or county where the manufacture and sale of intoxicants is prohibited, the word "place" means any spot within the county at which it would be unlawful to manufacture or sell liquors. State v. Arnold, 61 S. E. 891, 892, 80 S. C. 383.

"The popular idea associated with the word 'saloon' is that it is a room, rather than a building with several rooms. Webster also defines 'dramshop' as 'a shop or barroom where spirits are sold by the dram,' and therefore authority to keep a saloon at a certain street and number does not authorize the use of the whole building, but the room where licensee had his bar and ran his saloon was the place where he sold liquor, within the meaning of 'place' as used in the statute and city ordinances." Malkan v. City of Chicago, 75 N. E. 548, 551, 217 Ill. 471, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 488, 3 Ann. Cas. 1104.

In an action under Gen. St. 1909, § 4387, authorizing an injunction against the keeping of a place where intoxicants are illegally sold, a finding that defendant was guilty of keeping a place where intoxicants were sold is supported by evidence that he sold beer, which he kept for that purpose in a barrel in an alley, the want of other paraphernalia not preventing the spot occupied being a "place" within the statute, nor did its location prevent his being its "keeper," so long as he used it for his own ends. State v. Dykes, 111 Pac. 179, 180, 83 Kan. 250.

The word "place," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 7605, providing that all places where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law shall be common nuisances, means the particular place, room, or apartment where in the liquor was kept for sale or sold in violation of law. Where a boarder at a hotel kept intoxicating liquor in his bedroom, and on three or four occasions sold liquor to persons in the hotel, but without the knowledge or consent of the owner of the building, or of the proprietor thereof, the hotel could not be adjudged a common nuisance, and the particular place or room where the liquor was kept or sold could only be adjudged a nuisance and abated, on its being particularly identified in the proofs. State ex rel. Kelly v. Nelson, 99 N. W. 1077, 1078, 13 N. D. 122.

Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 7239, 7240, relating to local option elections and to the order and notice of election and providing that, on proper petition, an election shall be ordered held and a notice thereof given by publication in a newspaper, etc., without expressly requiring the designation of polling places, the jurisdictional notice of an election is a notice giving the date and place on which it is to be held, and the naming of the place is satisfied by naming the city or territory in which it is to be held, as the term "place" has many meanings and is synonymous with "town" or "city" or a "certain territory," the term "polling places" not being synonymous with, "place of election." State ex rel. Fahrman v. Ross, 143 S. W. 502, 506, 160 Mo. App. 682.

A statute making it unlawful to sell by wholesale intoxicating liquors, except manufacturers selling liquors of their own make at the place of manufacture, must be construed to give it a reasonable effect. Within the meaning of the statute, "place of manufacture" is not the distillery survey, but the premises of the defendant, where the whisky is made. The word "place" is not in ordinary speech so restricted in meaning. Thus a homestead is the family's place of residence; but it includes not only the house in which the family resides, but the land about it, and the words are used in a like sense when one speaks of the place of a man's domicile, or when we speak of a man's place of business or place of employment and the like. The word "place" in the statute must be taken in its common acceptance, and not in its restricted sense. It is not used as equivalent to the town or district where the manufactory is situated, but to indicate the premises on which the manufacturing is done. It includes, not only the government survey, but the property about it, which is used in connection with it, and is fairly a part of the plant. Commonwealth v. Oldham, 100 S. W. 1184, 1185, 125 Ky. 262.

Master and servant—Place for work

The word "place," used in referring to the place where a servant is required to work, usually means the premises where the work is to be done. Cleveland, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Foland (Ind.) 88 N. E. 787, 791.

The word "place" in negligence cases usually means the premises where the work is to be done, and does not comprehend the negligent acts of fellow servants by reason of which the place is rendered unsafe or dangerous. Haskell & Barker Car Co. v. Prezdziankowski, 83 N. E. 626, 630, 170 Ind. 1.

The word "place," within the rule requiring a master to furnish a safe place of work, means the premises where the work is being done, and does not comprehend negligent acts of fellow servants rendering the place unsafe. Southern Indiana Ry. Co. v. Harrell, 68 N. E. 262, 265, 161 Ind. 689, 63 L. R. A. 460 (citing Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 71 Fed. 853).

A wall in course of construction is not a bricklayer's "place of work," within the rule requiring an employer to provide a safe place of work; the place furnished being the scaffold. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 N. Y. Supp. 361, 364, 129 App. Div. 321.

"A staging or scaffolding for workmen is not a 'place' in which work is to be done, within the rule requiring the master to furnish his servants a suitable and safe place in which to work, but it is an 'appliance' or instrumentality by the means of which the work is to be done." Phoenix Bridge Co. v. Castleberry, 131 Fed. 175, 180, 65 C. C. A. 481 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomas, Neg. p. 790).

A tunnel in course of construction is not a "place of work," within the rule requiring an employer to provide a safe place of work; the work creating the place itself. Toppi v. McDonald, 112 N. Y. Supp. 821, 824, 128 App. Div. 443.

A vat containing a hot liquor and covered by loose slats is not a "place" within the rule that a master must furnish a safe place, when the same is used by a servant standing on the slats while painting, but the same is in the nature of a temporary platform. Marsen v. Nichols Copper Co., 118 N. Y. Supp. 867, 869, 134 App. Div. 294.

A bridge used as a part of the scenery in a play was not a "place" within the rule which requires the master to furnish his employees with a safe place to work, but was rather an appliance, such as scaffolding used in the conduct of the work has been held to be. Hahn v. Conried Metropolitan Opera Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 161, 162, 126 App. Div. 815.

Where defendant provided a ladder by which its servant was expected to reach one of the manhead doors in the rear of the boilers of defendant's plant, such ladder constituted a "place," within the rule requiring a master to furnish his servant with a reasonably safe place in which to work. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Steele, 110 S. W. 171, 175, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 634.

Where one end of an iron skid or running board was placed on a railroad freight house floor against a cleat to prevent it from slipping, and the other end in a car door, for loading and unloading cars, the skid and cleats being moved about from car to car, and being a part of the tools and appliances furnished the freight handlers, the skid and the cleat in such case were not a "place of work" under the common-law rule relative to furnishing a safe place to work. Nappa v. Erie R. Co., 88 N. E. 30, 31, 195 N. Y. 176, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96.

National banking law

The word "place," as used in an act of Congress providing that the shares of national banks shall be assessed in the place where the bank is located, refers to the location of the bank, and not to the state authority under which the tax is to be assessed. Packard v. Lewiston, 55 Me. 456, 457.

Selection of county seat

The word "place," as used in section 6, art. 17, para. 324, William's Ann. Const. Okl., means a definite locality, competent to be voted upon for the county seat of a county. Delaware County ex rel. Carver v. Hogan, 127 Pac. 492, 494, 33 Okl. 791.

A tract of land or locality which, prior to the Governor's proclamation calling a county seat election, had been by its owners platted, and which was thereafter, and before the election, the scene of a public picnic, attended by a large number of voters of the county, and at which a public auction of the lots was held, and public notice given of its metes and bounds, and the location of which was well known to the voters of the county, is a "place" within Const. art. 17, § 6, providing that the Governor shall cause to be placed upon the tickets to be voted at such election the names of such towns as may, more than 20 days prior thereto, file with him verified petitions therefor, and that the word "town" shall be construed to mean town, city, or place. Town of Grove v. Haskell, 104 Pac. 56, 64, 24 Okl. 707.

PLACE (Verb)

"To 'adjust' is to 'place an order.'" Anderson v. Seropian, 81 Pac. 521, 527, 147 Cal. 201.

A declaration charging that an employer neglected and omitted to properly and securely "place" the arm of a derrick means that he neglected to properly put the derrick in position in a safe manner, secure against the strain to which it might be subjected. George B. Swift Co. v. Gaylord, 82 N. E. 296, 301, 229 Ill. 330.

Machinery is "placed" in a plant by the owner within the meaning of Porto Rico Code, § 335, defining the conditions under which property, movable in its nature, becomes immobilized, where it is installed by a tenant under a stipulation in the lease that it shall become a part of the plant belonging to the owner, without compensation to the lessee. Valdes v. Central Altagracia, 32 Sup. Ct. 664, 665, 225 U. S. 58, 56 L. Ed. 980.

Act May 29, 1901, § 26 (P. L. 302), provides as follows: "That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful to fish in any waters in this commonwealth with dynamite, nitroglycerine, torpedoes, electricity, quicklime, or with any kind of explosive or poisonous substances; or to place such substances in any waters whatever, except for engineering purposes, when written permission has been given therefor by the proper national, state, city or county official or officials." Held (1), that the act applied in its prohibition to the deposit in streams of nonexplosive substances of a poisonous kind; (2) that the placing of explosive or poisonous substances in a stream need not be directly connected with the catching of fish; (3) that the word "place" did not mean that the poisonous substances must directly pass from the hand into the stream, but contemplated an intentional act proximately connected with the introduction of the poisonous substances into the stream; (4) that in proving the commission of the prohibited act it is not necessary to prove that the accused was impelled thereto by an evil motive to destroy the fish, but he may be convicted by showing that, although engaged in a lawful business, he intentionally discharged poisonous substances employed in his business so that such substances flowed into the stream. Commonwealth v. Immel, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 388, 394.

Where a coffee merchant rented space from a grocers' association in a food show, where he maintained a booth from which he advertised coffee by serving cups of coffee, gratis, to prospective patrons, and he had no interest in the operation of the show as a whole, which was under the control of the association, which charged an entrance fee, the merchant was not conducting a "place of amusement," within the civil rights act (Act Cong. March 1, 1875, c. 114, 18 Stat. 335, and Code, § 5008. Brown v. J. H. Bell Co., 123 N. W. 231, 237, 146 Iowa, 89, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 852.

PLACE OF BUSINESS

See At His Place of Business; Established Place of Business; Principal Place of Business.

Defendant's agent maintained an office in New York, paying his own rent and stenographer, from which defendant's wares were advertised without protest. Defendants used such office as their own, when they wished to press slow debtors. They permitted the agent to advertise and represent that he was their Eastern agent, and from this office many sales were made, though most of the sales were concluded at the corporation's home office at Chicago. Held, that the corporation had a "place of business" in New York, and was therefore subject to suit there. Chadeld Chemical Co. v. Chicago Wood Finishing Co., 180 Fed. 770, 771.

Agency synonymous.

Civ. Code 1895, § 1900, provides that service of writs on a corporation may be affected by leaving a copy of the writ with the agent of the defendant, or, if there be no agent in the county, then at the "agency" or "place of business." Held, that the "agency" or "place of business" refers to the same place; that is, the "agency" and "place of business" are synonymous. Tuggle v. Enterprise Lumber Co., 51 S. E. 433, 434, 123 Ga. 480.

Burglary

The words "place of business," as used in the statute defining burglary, mean any house, other than a "dwelling, mansion, or storehouse," occupied as a place of business in which valuable goods are contained. The allegations of the indictment were sufficient to show that the "place of business" alleged to have been broken into and entered with intent to commit a larceny was a house, and that valuable goods were contained therein. If the words "place of business," with the context, were insufficient to show that "the place of business" was a house, it was a formal defect, to be reached by special demurrer, and was cured by the verdict. Keenan v. State, 74 S. E. 297, 10 Ga. App. 792.

Cropper.

The dwelling house of a landlord is not the place of business of a cropper within Acts 1910, p. 134, prohibiting one from "carrying around" a pistol without a license outside of his own house or place of business, especially where it affirmatively appears that the cropper did not live in the house with his landlord, but in a different dwelling. Boyd v. State, 73 S. E. 551, 10 Ga. App. 451.

Liquor laws

A "place of business," within the prohibition law of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81, § 1), means a place devoted by the proprietor to the carrying on of some form of trade or commerce. Jenkins v. State, 62 S. E. 574, 575, 576, 4 Ga. App. 859.

A nearby room, which a person uses in connection with the business conducted in his regular place of business, is a part of his "place of business," within the general prohibition statute (Acts 1907, p. 81). Bashinski v. State, 62 S. E. 577, 578, 5 Ga. App. 3.

If a person should make a common practice of selling liquor at a fixed place, that place would become his "place of business"; but a single sale of liquor, or even sporadic sales, will not ipso facto convert the place where the sale occurs into the seller's place of business, within the prohibition act of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81). Bashinski v. State, 62 S. E. 577, 578, 5 Ga. App. 3.

If one kept a public restaurant consisting of two main eating rooms and a kitchen, and kept intoxicants on hand in the kitchen, he was guilty of violating the law prohibiting the keeping of intoxicants at a "place of business." Hall v. State, 70 S. E. 211, 213, 8 Ga. App. 747.

A "place of business" as used in the prohibition act (Pen. Code 1910, § 426), is a place where a calling for the purpose of gain or profit is conducted. Union & Mechanics' Club v. City of Atlanta, 71 S. E. 1060, 1062, 136 Ga. 721.

A man's "place of business" continues to be his place of business on Sunday, within the statute prohibiting the keeping of liquor at a place of business, though the law prohibits him from transacting his business there on that day. Landreth v. State, 73 S. E. 349, 350, 10 Ga. App. 399.

A "place of business," within prohibition statute (Acts 1907, p. 81), making it unlawful to keep on hand at one's place of business intoxicating liquor, is a public place of business in contradistinction to a place of private business. The word "business" is used in the sense of trade, commerce, or traffic, and not as synonymous with occupation, vocation, or employment. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1085, 4 Ga. App. 207.

As used in Acts Ga. 1907, p. 81, making it criminal for any person to give away to induce trade at any place of business or keep or furnish at any other public place any of the prohibited liquors, the term "place of business" does not refer to a public place, in the sense of being devoted to governmental use, but refers to any place at which, though privately owned or controlled, a number of persons have assembled through common usages or by general invitation, express or implied. Tooke v. State, 61 S. E. 917, 922, 4 Ga. App. 495.

If a person should make a common practice of selling liquor illegally at a fixed place, that place would thereby become his "place of business"; but a single sale of liquor, or even sporadic sales, will not ipso facto convert the place where the sale occurs into the seller's "place of business," in accordance with the meaning of that phrase as found in the Georgia prohibition act of 1907. Lyons v. Atlanta, 64 S. E. 713, 6 Ga. App. 248 (quoting Bashinski v. State, 62 S. E. 577, 5 Ga. App. 3).

If one lives at or near his place of business, and keeps on hand liquors in his dwelling house, and his dwelling house is used in connection with his place of business as part of the place of business, and the purpose of keeping the liquors in the dwelling is to have them conveniently located to the immediate place of business, the dwelling house would be in law a part of the place of business, and such keeping on hand would be a keeping of liquors at one's "place of business." All parts of one's place of business, including rooms, closets, stairs, yards, and courts used in connection with the business itself, are a part and parcel of the place of business, within the liquor law relating to the keeping of liquors on hand at one's place of business. Flahive v. State, 73 S. E. 536, 10 Ga. App. 401.

In a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors on hand at defendant's place of business, an instruction that any nearby room or place used by the proprietor in connection with the business, and in such relation to the actual place of business as to indicate a nearby room or compartment, is also a part of his "place of business," was proper. Holland v. State, 72 S. E. 290, 292, 9 Ga. App. 831.

The private operating room of a practicing dentist prima facie is not a public place of business, within the general prohibition law (Laws 1907, p. 81), making it unlawful to sell, etc., at any place of business, or keep at any other public place, intoxicants; the term "place of business" meaning a place where the public generally are expressly or impliedly invited for the purpose of transacting business with the owner, and the term "public place" including a place which for the time being is made public by the attending of people who go there with or without invitation and without restraint. Cantrell v. State, 70 S. E. 96, 97, 8 Ga. App. 725.

Where intoxicating liquor is kept in a room apparently used solely as a bedroom and adjoining the owner's place of business, he cannot be convicted of keeping such liquor on hand at his place of business, unless it appears that the room was used not in good faith, solely as a place of abode, but as a convenient cover or subterfuge for keeping the liquor for use in connection with his business. Where in such a case the evidence as to the real purpose for which the room is being used is in conflict, and a finding that it was being used as a part of the "place of business" and for an illegal purpose is dependent upon inference, it is error to charge: "If one elects to make his place of abode at his place of business, then the keeping on hand of spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors is a violation of the law." Frazier v. State, 74 S. E. 851, 11 Ga. App. 154.

This court reaffirms the ruling in Jenkins v. State, 4 Ga. App. 859, 62 S. E. 574, that "the phrase 'at their place of business,' appearing in the general prohibition statute of 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 81, § 1), includes in its meaning the immediate room or place in which the business in question is conducted, also any nearby room or place used by the proprietor in connection with the business or in such a relation to the actual 'place of business' as to indicate that the nearby room, compartment, etc., is a convenient place which the proprietor would probably use for keeping therein such liquors as he might desire to furnish to others for the purpose of inducing trade, or for keeping therein liquors intended for unlawful sale under cover of the business carried on in the main place." It was not error to instruct the jury in the language above quoted. Smith v. State, 74 S. E. 711, 712, 11 Ga. App. 89.

Acts 1908, c. 27, entitled "An act to enable the voters of W. county to determine whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be 'sold' in the county," and providing penalties for its violation, provides, by section 2, that, if local option is adopted in W. county, it shall be unlawful for any person "under any pretense whatever, directly or indirectly, to barter, sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of it, at a place of business, or keep at any place whatsoever for the purpose of bartering or selling any * * * intoxicating liquors within the limits of W. county," and further makes it unlawful to take orders for intoxicants or to operate as a distributing agent therefor. Held, that an indictment thereunder for illegally "selling" intoxicants need not allege that the sale was at a place of business conducted by accused, that not being necessary to constitute an offense under the statute; the words "place of business" merely enlarging the prohibition by making it unlawful to give away or otherwise dispose of intoxicants under any other circumstances at a place of business than those previously mentioned. Mitchell v. State, 80 Atl. 1020, 1021, 115 Md. 360.

Rural mail carrier

A rural mail carrier is not, while engaged in carrying and distributing mail as such in the vehicle used by him, on his own premises and place of business within Pen. Code 1911, art. 476, permitting the carrying of weapons on one's own premises or "place of business." Lattimore v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 588, 590.

PLACE OF CONTRACT

The expression "place of contract," in the rule that the validity of a contract is governed by the law of the place of contract, means the place where the contract is entered into. Mayer v. Roche, 75 Atl. 235, 236, 77 N. J. Law, 681, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 763.

Where a person residing in one place makes a proposal to purchase property by letter to a person residing in another place, and such proposal is there accepted, the place of acceptance is the "place of the contract" and the place where a cause of action to enforce it accrues, under Gen. St. 1906, § 1333, providing that suits shall be begun only in the county where defendant resides or where the cause of action accrued or where the property in litigation is. Morgan v. Eaton, 52 South. 305, 306, 59 Fla. 562, 138 Am. St. Rep. 167.

The intention of the parties to a personal contract as to the place of the contract is generally determinable by the presumption of fact that the place was intended to be where the contract was actually made, unless the place of performance was elsewhere, when the presumption is that the latter place was intended; but such presumptions are rebuttable, "place of contract" meaning the place mutually intended for reference as to validity and interpretation. International Harvester Co. of America v. McAdam, 124 N. W. 1042, 1044, 142 Wis. 114, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774, 20 Ann. Cas. 614.

PLACE OF ELECTION

Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 7239, 7240, relating to local option elections and to the order and notice of election and providing that, on proper petition, an election shall be ordered held and a notice thereof given by publication in a newspaper, etc., without expressly requiring the designation of polling places, the jurisdictional notice of an election is a notice giving the date and place on which it is to be held, and the naming of the place is satisfied by naming the city or territory in which it is to be held, as the term "place" has many meanings and is synonymous with "town" or "city" or a "certain territory," the term "polling places" not being synonymous with "place of election." State ex rel. Fahrman v. Ross, 143 S. W. 502, 506, 160 Mo. App. 682.

PLACE OF INJURY

A notice stating that plaintiff, while riding along A. street "near" B. street, was thrown from his wagon because defendant negligently allowed a large stone to be in the highway at that point, but failing to specify the date when the accident happened, and not referring to any house or other monument upon A. street, by which the specific location of the stone could be fixed, was insufficient, under a statute requiring claims against the city for injuries, to be presented to the council describing the "place of injury." Forseyth

v. City of Oswego, 95 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 107 App. Div. 187.

PLACE OF MANUFACTURE

A "place of manufacture" is, generally speaking, one where articles of trade are created out of raw material in its simple or some improved form. Sharpe v. Hasey, 114 N. W. 1118, 1119, 134 Wis. 618.

PLACE OF PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION

A statute, requiring barbers to procure a license from a state board before plying their trade, did not make a barber shop a "place of public accommodation," within another statute, authorizing recovery of double damages for discrimination against a person of color by proprietors of such places. Faulkner v. Solazzi, 85 Atl. 947, 949, 79 Conn. 541, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 9 Ann. Cas. 67.

Laws 1895, p. 974, c. 1042, entitled "An act to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights," and providing that all persons within the state shall be entitled to equal accommodation in hotels, etc., "and all other 'places of public accommodation,'" does not include a boot-blackening stand; and a refusal to shine the shoes of a colored man because of his color does not subject its proprietor to the penalty of the act. Burks v. Bosso, 73 N. E. 58, 59, 180 N. Y. 341, 105 Am. St. Rep. 762.

PLACE OF PUBLIC AMUSEMENT

A roller skating rink to which the public are invited on the sole condition of paying a fixed charge is a public place of amusement within St. 1898, § 4398c, providing that any person denying to another the equal enjoyment of the accommodations of "inns, restaurants, saloons, barber shops, eating houses, public conveyances, * * * or any other place of public accommodation or amusement," shall be liable to the person aggrieved. Jones v. Broadway Roller Rink Co., 118 N. W. 170, 171, 136 Wis. 595, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

Under an ordinance providing that before issuing a license to operate a theater, dancing hall, or other place of public amusement, the mayor shall make an examination of the place for which the license is desired, to see that all the provisions of the building ordinances of the city have been complied with, and defining the word "place" as used in the ordinance as "the theater, opera house, auditorium, hall, park, grounds, garden, tent, or other inclosure within which it is intended to produce, offer, or present any such entertainments," it is not contemplated that a license shall issue until the building in which the entertainment is to be given is completed. People v. Busse, 93 N. E. 327, 329, 248 Ill. 11.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 189, provides that the term "place of public amusement" shall be construed to mean circuses, theaters, variety theaters, and such other amusements as are exhibited, and for which an admission fee is charged. Ex parte Jacobson, 115 S. W. 1193, 1194, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 237.

According to Pen. Code 1895, art. 189, a "place of public amusement," at which the sale of liquors on Sunday is prohibited, is construed to mean circuses, theaters, variety theaters, and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged. Muckenfuss v. State, 116 S. W. 51, 52, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 229, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 131 Am. St. Rep. 813, 16 Ann. Cas. 768.

Under Pen. Code Tex. art. 189, forbidding the keeping open of "places of public amusement" on Sunday, and defining such places to mean theaters, etc., and such other amusements as are exhibited and for which an admission fee is charged, a contract providing for the appearance and exhibition of persons as performers in places of public amusement on Sunday in theaters, for admission to which a fee is charged, cannot be enforced in the courts of that state, in so far as it includes Sunday exhibitions. La Crandall v. Ledbetter, 159 Fed. 702, 703, 86 C. C. A. 570.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 189, provides that the proprietor of any place of public amusement, or the agent or employé of any such person who shall permit it to be open for the purpose of public amusement on Sunday shall be fined, and defines the term "place of public amusement" to include circuses, theaters, variety theaters, and such other amusements as are exhibited, and for which an admission fee is charged. Defendant, in a prosecution under such section as the agent and employé of an amusement company, was shown to have been the ticket agent and in the ticket office of the building in which the performance was given, and to have sold admission tickets thereto, but urged that under the statute only the proprietor could "permit" the place to be open; and hence that no mere subordinate could be convicted thereunder. Held, that the intent of the section was to make it an offense for any agent or employé of the proprietor to do any act toward keeping the theater open and running on Sunday, whether he had control of it, or could permit it to be opened, or not; and hence that defendant was guilty of the offense. Oliver v. State (Tex.) 144 S. W. 604, 609.

PLACE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP

See, also, Place of Worship.

An indictment under Pen. Code, § 342, is sufficient which alleges the carrying of a pistol to "a place of worship," and locates that place by name, though it fails to charge that any public gathering was being held at the time; the term "a place of public worship" importing such a gathering. Amorous v. State, 57 S. E. 999, 1001, 1 Ga. App. 818.

PLACE OF RESIDENCE

See Principal Place of Residence; Usual Place of Residence.

Under a statute relating to elections, providing that, on petition to strike the name of any person deceased, etc., from the list of voters, summons shall be served at his "place of residence" given in the registry, where the house in which a voter resided had been destroyed, and there was no building, service by laying the summons on the lot and putting a brick on it is sufficient. Applegarth v. Carter, 62 Atl. 712, 713, 102 Md. 341.

The place of a steamboat corporation's residence, within Pub. St. 1901, c. 56, § 12, and Laws 1905, p. 414, c. 25, § 1, providing for the taxation of vessels, etc., at the owner's "place of residence," is the place where its business is principally conducted, and not the place where it merely maintains an office and holds stockholders' meetings, and the situs of the corporation's business is not changed by a declaration in its articles of incorporation that the place of business shall be a place other than where it actually conducts its business. Woodsum Steamboat Co. v. Town of Sunapee, 69 Atl. 577, 74 N. H. 495.

The intent of the Legislature in enacting Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, relating to the construction of statutes, and providing that the construction of all statutes shall be by the following additional rules, unless such construction be plainly repugnant to the intent of the Legislature or of the context of the same statute, and the place where any person having no family shall generally lodge, shall be deemed the "place of his residence," was simply to furnish additional rules of construction which the court might or might not use as the case might require, and the intent was not to construe all statutes itself by defining the word "residence," and the revenue statute (Rev. St. 1899, c. 149 [Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4198-4322]) providing that all personal property shall be assessed in the county and district in which the owners reside, and making no distinction as to the place where property of persons who have families and those who have none shall be assessed, the rule of construction under section 4160 is not applicable, being repugnant to the intention of the Legislature. Where a person worked a farm, keeping a furnished room in the house thereon, which he occupied when there, and claimed his residence there, but generally and continuously lodged with his parents in another school district because they were old and helpless, and he considered it his duty to stay with them at night, returning to his farm every morning, the district where his farm was situated was the district of his residence, within chapter 149, providing that all personal property shall be assessed in the county and district where the owners reside. State ex rel. Kelly v. Shepperd, 117 S. W. 1169, 1172, 218 Mo. 656, 131 Am. St. Rep. 568.

PLACE OF SOJOURN

"Place of his sojourn," under Code Civ. Proc. § 435, providing for substituted service on a resident where the "place of his sojourn" cannot be ascertained, etc., means a definite locality, and not an entire country. Hess v. Felt, 112 N. Y. Supp. 470, 471, 60 Misc. Rep. 541.

PLACE OF STARTING

As used in Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 4494, requiring railroads to furnish reasonable accommodations for the transportation of passengers and property as shall be presented within a reasonable time at the place of starting, as applied to a Texas railroad company whose line ended at the boundary of the state, did not require the railroad company to maintain a station at the place where the railroad stopped, without reference to whether such place would be in an unbroken forest, a wild and unsettled prairie, a river, swamp, or the middle of a stream forming the state boundary, but should be construed to mean the "place" or the "town" from which the railroad started. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 112 Pac. 1010, 1016, 27 Okl. 565 (quoting Railroad Commission of Texas v. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co., 117 S. W. 794, 102 Tex. 393).

PLACE OF STORAGE

In a prosecution for a violation of Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 125, it does not avail defendant that corn exceeding the amount of the receipt was in cars standing on railroad tracks in a yard which was a part of the elevator property and operated in conjunction with it; the "place of storage," within that section, being the elevator, and not the yard. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 949, 230 Ill. 623.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 124, provides that whoever fraudulently utters any receipt or other written evidence of the delivery of any grain, flour, pork, etc., when the quantity specified therein has not in fact been delivered, and is not at the time of issuing the same still in store and the property of the person to whom the receipt is issued, shall be imprisoned as therein prescribed. Section 125 provides that whoever, having given any such receipt, shall sell or in any manner remove from the "place of storage" any such property without the consent of the holder of the receipt shall be imprisoned as therein prescribed. Held, that the words "wharf or 'place of storage' or in any warehouse, mill, store or other building," describing the place in which the property is situated, did not limit the operation of sections 124 and 125 to buildings alone in which goods were received in store for hire, but that the same extended to all buildings in which goods were stored, whether for hire or otherwise, and hence one who, being the owner of an elevator, and having issued a receipt for grain therein also owned by him, thereafter removed the same without the consent of the holder violated section 125. McReynolds v. People, 82 N. E. 945, 949, 230 Ill. 623.

PLACE OF TRADE

A "place of trade" is a place devoted to the business of buying and selling, or of plying some mechanical form. Sharpe v. Hasey, 114 N. W. 1118, 1119, 134 Wis. 618.

PLACE OF TRIAL

The "place of trial," in the Code provisions relating to actions involving title to land, is the place where the action is brought and where the record is preserved for the guidance of those who may be interested in land titles. In title 4 of the Code the words "place of trial" are synonymous with "venue." Weathersbee v. Weathersbee, 62 S. E. 838, 839, 82 S. C. 4.

PLACE OF TRUST OR PROFIT

As used in Const. art. 14, § 7, providing that no person, who shall hold any office or place of trust or profit, under the United States, or any department thereof, or under the state, etc., shall hold or exercise any other office or place of trust or profit under the authority of the state, provided, etc., the terms "office" and "place of trust" are synonymous, and have reference to a public position, involving a delegation to the individual of some part of the sovereign functions of the government, to be exercised for the public benefit. State v. Smith, 59 S. E. 649, 650, 145 N. C. 476.

PLACE OF WORSHIP

See, also, Place of Public Worship.

A public school opened with prayer and the reading without comment of passages from King James' translation of the Bible, during which pupils are not required to attend, is not a "place of worship," nor are its teachers "ministers of religion," within the meaning of Const. § 5, providing that no person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship or contribute to the support of a minister of religion. Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist., 87 S. W. 792, 793, 120 Ky. 608, 69 L. R. A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 9 Ann. Cas. 136.

The holding of morning exercises in the public schools, consisting of the reading by the teacher without comment, of nonsectarian extracts from the Bible, King James' version, and repeating the Lord's Prayer, and the singing of appropriate songs, in which the pupils are invited, but not required, to join, does not convert the schools into a place of worship in violation of Const. art. 1, § 6, providing that no one shall be compelled to support "any place of worship," the phrase "any place of worship" meaning a place where a number of persons meet together for the purpose of worshipping God. Church v. Bullock, 109 S. W. 115, 118, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

PLACER

"Placers" are merely superficial deposits, occupying the beds of ancient rivers or valleys, washed down from some vein or lode." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 367, 188 U. S. 532, 47 L. Ed. 575.

The term "placer," as used in Act July 9, 1870, permitting the entry of placer claims, contemplates merely superficial deposits occupying the beds of ancient rivers or valleys washed down from some vein or lode. Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Soderberg, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 367, 188 U. S. 526, 47 L. Ed. 575.

Lode distinguished

A "placer" is earth, sand, or gravel containing valuable mineral in particles, as distinguished from a lode which is a solid vein of metal. They are two distinct things and not two different states of the same thing, and hence a reservation from sale of one of these things leaves nothing to the determination of the state's sales agent. McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 215, 78 N. J. Law, 394.

PLACER GOLD

As merchandise, see Merchandise.

PLACER LOCATION

A "placer location" is the location in accordance with the acts of Congress of a tract of land for the mineral-bearing or other valuable deposits upon or within it that are not found in lodes or veins in rock in place. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., 157 Fed. 203, 204, 84 C. C. A. 651.

"A 'placer location' is not a location of lodes or veins underneath the surface, but is simply a claim of a tract or parcel of ground for the sake of loose deposits of mineral upon or near the surface. A lode or vein may be known to exist at the time of the placer location or not known until long after the patent therefor has been issued.

There being no necessary connection between the placer and the vein, Congress . . . has provided that in an application for a placer patent the applicant shall include any vein or lode of which he has possession; and that if he does not make such inclusion the omission is to be taken as a conclusive declaration that he has no right of possession of such vein or lode. If, however, no vein or lode within the placer claim is known to exist at the time the patent is issued, then the patentee takes title to any which may be subsequently discovered." Clipper Min. Co. v. Eli Mining & Land Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 632, 635, 194 U. S. 220, 48 L. Ed. 944.

PLAIN

PLAIN GLASS BOTTLES

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156, for "plain" glass bottles, held not to include fancy bottles with metal mountings. Mark Cross Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 610, 611.

PLAIN IMPLICATION

The phrases "plain implication" and "necessary implication" have exactly the same meaning when used in reference to the construction of deeds. By these is not meant a physical necessity, but a logical necessity. Where a clause is enlarged in its effect beyond the import of the words used on the theory of an intent established by an implication, it must be necessary to so enlarge it in order to give effect to the plain and express provisions of other clauses, or the probability of intent must be so strong that the contrary thereof cannot be supposed. Griffin v. Fairmont Coal Co., 53 S. E. 24, 65, 59 W. Va. 480, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115.

PLAIN MEANING

The "plain meaning" of language used in correspondence or other contract writing is simply the meaning of the people who did not write the document, and to insist that the language used in the writing must be given this "plain meaning" involves the fallacy of assuming that there is or ever can be some one, real, or absolute meaning. There can be only some person's meaning, and that person's meaning the law is seeking is the writer of the document. New Roads Oilmill & Mfg. Co. v. Kline, Wilson & Co., 154 Fed. 296, 303, 83 C. C. A. 1 (citing 4 Wig. § 2462).

PLAIN PAPER ENVELOPES

See Paper Envelopes.

PLAIN SIGHT

The words "plain sight" in an instruction in a railroad crossing accident case, that it was plaintiff's duty when he arrived at a point from which a train could be seen to take reasonable precautions, by looking in the direction from which a train might come, to ascertain if a train, which might endanger him, was coming, and if the train which injured him was in plain sight from the point where it was his duty to look, and the circumstances suggested a reasonable probability of danger, an attempt to cross was negligence, mean nothing more than that the train was within the range of plaintiff's sight, had he been looking in that direction, and so are unobjectionable. Case v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 1037, 1940, 147 Iowa, 747.

PLAIN, SPEEDY, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY

Riverside City Charter (St. 1907, p. 1330) § 193, creates a police court, and gives it jurisdiction, concurrent with the justice's court, of all civil actions and proceedings arising within the city limits. Defendant in an action in that court to recover on a note, after his demurrer for want of jurisdiction had been overruled, applied for a writ of prohibition against the police court and the judge thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, defines the writ of prohibition and its effect. Section 1103 provides that the writ may be issued to an inferior tribunal in all cases where there is not a "plain, speedy, and adequate remedy" in the ordinary course of law, and section 974 gives an appeal from the judgment of a justice's or police court. Held that the prohibition was properly denied, because under section 974 the applicant had a plain and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Simpson v. Police Court of City of Riverside, 117 Pac. 553, 554, 160 Cal. 530.

PLAIN VIEW

Where a saloon was conducted in the basement of a building, and the bar was so arranged that it commenced 35 feet from the nearest part of the sidewalk, and the tops of the windows were but 4 feet above the walk, it did not comply with the mulct law, requiring that the bar should be established "in plain view of the street," unobstructed by screens, blinds, or other devices. "Plain view" of the bar means plain view from the street or sidewalk used by pedestrians in the usual and ordinary way. McColl v. Ralby & Fisher, 103 N. W. 972, 973, 127 Iowa 633.

PLAINLY

A warranty, indorsed on a policy and referred to in the body thereof as indorsed thereon, is plainly expressed in the policy, within Code 1907, § 4579, forbidding warranties or other stipulations of the application to be made a part of the policy by reference, but must be "plainly expressed therein." Hunt v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 55 South. 201, 202, 172 Ala. 442.

The requirement that notice that a dictionary, on which the copyright has run out, is not published by the original publisher should be "plainly printed" means that it should be printed with the intention to be read and understood. G. & C. Merriam Co. v. Saalfeld, 198 Fed. 369, 373, 117 C. C. A. 245.

PLAINTIFF

See Equitable Plaintiff; Legal Plaintiff.

The "plaintiff" is a constituent part of every court, and is the one who complains of injury done. Accoust v. G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. (Tex.) 83 S. W. 1104, 1105.

In actions at law, the complaining party is usually known as "plaintiff." Motley, Green & Co. v. Detroit Steel & Spring Co., 161 Fed. 389, 393.

A "plaintiff" is the person who in a personal action seeks a remedy in a court of justice for an injury to, or a withholding of, his rights. Burrell v. United States, 147 Fed. 44, 46; 77 C. C. A. 308.

The "plaintiff" in a case is the actor; the one who invokes the aid of the law and puts its machinery in motion to establish a right or redress a grievance. On him necessarily rests the burden of prosecuting the suit without unnecessary or unreasonable delay. Latta v. Wiley (Tex.) 92 S. W. 433, 437.

"In condemnation proceedings, the words 'plaintiff' and 'defendant' can be used only in an uncommon and liberal sense. The plaintiff complains of nothing. The defendant denies no past or threatened wrong. Both parties are actors; one to acquire title, the other to get as large pay as he can." Metropolitan Water Co. v. Kansas City, 164 Fed. 738, 745 (citing Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. v. Boynton, 27 Sup. Ct. 321, 204 U. S. 576, 51 L. Ed. 629).

In a complaint for personal injuries, and resulting in the death of plaintiff's intestate, the inadvertent use of the word "plaintiff" in one instance in a paragraph, in which in all other instances the words "plaintiff's intestate" were used, did not render the complaint meaningless and fatally defective. King v. Mail & Express Co., 98 N. Y. Supp. 891, 892, 113 App. Div. 90.

Defendant demanding set-off or counterclaim

Though, by a state statute, the word "plaintiff" embraces a defendant who demands a set-off or counterclaim, "plaintiff," in a suit in a court of such state, is not to become theoretically or constructively a defendant, entitled to the removal of the cause under the federal statute. Illinois Central R. Co. v. A. Waller & Co., 164 Fed. 358, 361.

As plaintiff in execution

The "plaintiff" referred to in Rev. St. 1892, § 1200, providing that in claim proceedings, if the verdict is for the "plaintiff," the court shall enter judgment awarding a recovery by the "plaintiff" from the defendant and his sureties, means the "plaintiff" in execution. Strobhar v. Jesse French Piano & Organ Co., 37 South. 177, 178, 48 Fla. 158.

As plaintiff's agent

Under Civ. Code 1893, § 4130, permitting the verification of an account by the plaintiff, the term "plaintiff" includes, by necessary implication, plaintiff's agent. Coffee v. McGaskey Register Co., 66 S. E. 1032, 1034, 7 Ga. App. 425.

Construed in plural

The word "plaintiff," in an instruction in an action in which there are two plaintiffs, is not necessarily misleading, but the jury must understand the word to mean the parties bringing the action. Citizens' Gas & Oil Min. Co. v. Whipple, 69 N. E. 557, 560, 32 Ind. App. 203.

Code Civ. Proc. § 417, requires a summons to be subscribed by "plaintiff's attorney," who must add to his signature his office address; and section 418 prescribes, as part of the form of a summons, the words, "You are hereby summoned . . . to serve a copy of your answer on the plaintiff's 'attorney.'" Held, that the use of the singular form of the word "attorney" does not indicate that there can be no more than one "attorney" on the plaintiff's side of the case; the use of the word being no more significant than the use of the singular form of the word "plaintiff's." In either case the singular is used as the simple and natural mode of the expression without any intent to exclude the plural but to embrace it. Jones v. Conlon, 95 N. Y. Supp. 255, 256, 48 Misc. Rep. 172.

PLAN

See European Plan; Gross Premium Plan; Installment Premium Plan.

"The word 'plan,' in speaking of a public work, is ordinarily used to describe the general plan or system of work." Bowden v. Kansas City, 77 Pac. 573, 575, 69 Kan. 587, 66 L. R. A. 181, 105 Am. St. Rep. 187, 1 Ann. Cas. 955 (citing Johnston v. District of Columbia, 6 Sup. Ct. 923, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. Ed. 75).

A "plan," when applied to a building, is an architectural drawing representing the horizontal sections of the various floors or stories of the building, the disposition of apartments and walls, with the situation of the doors, windows—in fact, represents the different stories as they are to be built, and the whole as it will appear when completed. Nave v. McGrane, 113 Pac. 82, 85, 19 Idaho, 111.

Specifications distinguished

"Plans" may be important, or even necessary, to indicate the methods to be followed and the results to be accomplished in carrying out a building contract. But there is a distinction between them and specifications that provide for the kinds, quality, and quantity of materials to be used and the work to be done, and the time and manner of doing it, without which the contract would be incomplete and ineffective. They are not in the same sense nor to the same extent an integral part of the contract. Their office is rather to illustrate and explain what is to be done. In order to sustain a mechanic's lien, specifications which are expressly made a part of the contract, or are referred to as a part thereof, must be filed with the contract; but the plans of the work, not being, like the specifications, an integral part of the contract, need not be filed. Knelly v. Horwath, 57 Atl. 957, 958, 208 Pa. 487.

The word "plans," as used in Rev. St. 1809, § 5859, as amended, requiring contracts for street improvements to be let to the lowest bidder on plans and specifications filed with the city clerk, means a profile, drawing, or picture showing, in a general way, the character of the work, while "specifications" means a detailed statement of the character of the improvements, the purpose of the provision being that by filing plans and specifications information would be furnished to enable bidders to intelligently figure the cost; and, where there was nothing complicated or difficult to understand about grading or paving the street to be improved, and all the details of the work were fully stated, both in the ordinance authorizing it and in the specifications filed, the omission to file plans did not invalidate the contract. McCoy v. Randall, 121 S. W. 31, 34, 222 Mo. 24.

PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS

Where a county board empowered a committee to investigate and report regarding "the best manner of raising funds" for the construction of a new courthouse, and to make recommendations, and a report in writing, together with plans and specifications, on or before a specified date, such committee had no authority to decide to build the courthouse, nor to employ architects to prepare "working plans and specifications," but only preliminary plans and specifications for the information of the board. Kinney v. Manitowoc County, Wis., 135 Fed. 491, 494, 68 C. C. A. 203.

"Plans and specifications" are "in no sense to be confused with a 'preliminary survey and estimate of cost.' They are entirely distinct and dissimilar things. The one is only a measurement and survey of the territory to be covered by the contemplated plant and an approximate estimate of cost. The other is an accurate, detailed working plan, showing materials to be used and manner of construction." Hence an engineer, who prepared plans and specifications for the erection of a waterworks system under an agreement to be paid a percentage of the cost of the plant, may, when the project is abandoned, recover for the services actually performed in preparing such plans and specifications. Jenks v. Town of Terry, 40 South. 641, 88 Miss. 364.

PLANING MILLPLANING MILL BUILDING

In a policy covering a planing mill and additions, where a shaft from an engine room furnished the motive power to the mill, and where the shavings from the mill were carried by machinery to the engine house, and the buildings and machinery were not only connected, but inseparable, the words "planing mill building" would seem to be broad enough to include the engine room. Guthrie Laundry Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, 87 Pac. 649, 651, 17 Okl. 571, 10 Ann. Cas. 936 (quoting Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 36 N. W. 594, 71 Wis. 33).

PLANK

PLANK LINOLEUM

"Plank linoleum," made by running upon the burlap foundation paste of two colors in stripes of equal width, a process differing from that employed in making inlaid linoleum, is, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 337, 30 Stat. 180, dutiable as "linoleum . . . figured or plain," rather than as "inlaid linoleum." "Plank linoleum" is made by running upon the burlap paste of two colors in stripes of equal width. The paste is prevented by machinery from mixing, and establishes between the stripes a fairly definite line. Pressure follows immediately upon the application of the paste to the burlap. The effect produced somewhat resembles a floor laid in alternate planks of different woods. United States v. Scott & West, 164 Fed. 285-287.

PLANT (VERB)

"Planting" means, in 'oysterman's phraseology,' as counsel say, 'depositing with the intent that the oysters shall remain until they are fattened.' McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 397, 24 L. Ed. 248.

PLANT

See Deciduous Plant; Manufacturing Plant; Pottery Plant; Waterworks and Electric Light Plant; Ways, Works, Machinery, or Plant.

The tools, machinery, and articles employed by subcontractors in the work of constructing a subway is known as a "plant." McCabe v. Hunt, 82 N. Y. Supp. 664, 666, 40 Misc. Rep. 466.

Substances used in dressing a pulley belt in a manufacturing plant to keep the belt from slipping are a part of the "plant," within the employer's liability act. Riddle v. Bessemer Soil Pipe Co., 54 South. 525, 526, 170 Ala. 559.

Under Employer's Liability Act, subd. 1, making a master liable for a defect in the ways, works, machinery, and plant, a ladder used in doing the master's work is a part of the "plant," and the master is liable for injuries caused by a defect in it. Grasselli Chemical Co. v. Davis, 52 South. 35, 37, 166 Ala. 471.

A ladder used by a master in pursuit of his business as a contractor, engaged in the construction of a building, is a part of his "plant," within the liability act, providing that, when a servant is injured in the business of the master, the master is liable, as if the servant were a stranger, when the injury is caused by a defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery, or plant connected with or used in the business of the master. Huyck v. McNeerney, 50 South. 926-929, 163 Ala. 244.

A servant injured by a defect in chain tongs used on a pipe machine may recover under Labor Law, § 202, as amended, providing that if an employé while exercising ordinary care is injured by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery or plant of his employer he may recover; chain tongs being a part of the master's plant, the term "plant" in its ordinary sense including whatever apparatus other than stock in trade an employer uses to carry on his business. McKeon v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 185 N. Y. Supp. 291, 294, 76 Misc. Rep. 599.

The word "plant" in Code 1896, § 1749, declaring that a master is liable for any injury to his servant caused by any defect in the ways, works, machinery, or plant, comprises whatever apparatus, fixtures, or tools a master uses in his business. Any injury resulting to an employé from the negligence of the employer, or of another employé intrusted by the common master with the duty of seeing that his plant is in proper condition, in not providing suitable tools, implements, or appliances, or in allowing such tools, implements, or appliances to be in a defective condition is within such provision. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Mobley, 86 South. 181, 184, 139 Ala. 425.

The word "plant," as used in the mechanic's lien act, means property owned or used in carrying on some trade or business, and cannot be applied to a row of buildings, where the only business carried on is house-keeping. Todd v. Gernert, 72 Atl. 249, 223 Pa. 103.

Mechanic's Lien Law June 4, 1901 (P. L. 432) § 2, provides that every improvement and the curtilage pertinent thereto shall be subject to a lien for debts due the contractor or subcontractor in the erection or removal thereof. Section 3 declares that the curtilage shall include other structures, whether newly erected or altered, and forming part of a single business or residential plant. Section 12 provides that a single claim may be filed against more than one structure if they are all intended to form part of one plant. Held, that where a contractor with two distinct contracts for building a house and garage on adjoining lots belonging to the same owner, submitted two separate lots of materials to a subcontractor at different times, who furnished the materials, the subcontractor cannot file one lien against both structures. The word "plant," in section 12, Act June 4, 1901 (P. L. 437), is used in its commercial sense, as property owned or used in carrying on some trade or business. Schively v. Radell, 76 Atl. 209, 211, 227 Pa. 484.

Where an agreement indemnifying a contractor's surety provided that, in the event of the contractor's being unable to complete the contract, the contractor thereby assigned such "plant" as the contractor then owned or had upon the work to the surety, the term "plant" was sufficient to include lumber and other materials intended for use in the building in process of erection, together with horses, carts, and harnesses used in connection with the work. Wood v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 143 Fed. 424, 425.

"Plant," as applied to a factory, is defined by the Century Dictionary to consist of "the fixtures, machinery, tools, apparatus, appliances, etc., necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business or any mechanical operation or process." The Standard Dictionary defines it as "a set of machines, tools, etc., necessary to conduct a mechanical business, often including the buildings and grounds or, in case of a railroad, the rolling stock, but not including material or product; hence the permanent appliances needed for any institution, as a post office." The Imperial Dictionary defines the word to mean: "The fixtures, machinery, tools, apparatus, etc., necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business. The locomotives, carriages, vans, trucks, etc., constitute the plant of a railway." In the Encyclopedic Dictionary, the word is defined: "The tools, machinery, apparatus, and fixtures used in a particular business; that which is necessary to the conduct of any trade or mechanical business or undertaking." Webster's International Dictionary defines it: "The whole machinery and apparatus employed in carrying on a trade or mechanical business; also sometimes including real estate and whatever represents investment of capital in the means of carrying on a business, but not including material worked upon or finished products; as the plant of a foundry, mill, or railroad." "It will be noticed that the only definition including real estate is found in Webster's International Dictionary, and there it is qualified by the word 'sometimes.' That there may be instances in which courts will hold real estate to be a part of a plant cannot be doubted. The ground occupied by the factory or mill, or even that part adjoining the factory used for offices or warehouses, may be treated as a part of the plant, but a large tract of land, miles from the plant proper, to be used for the purpose of raising the raw material for use in the factory, has never been held to be a part of the plant." Old Colony Trust Co. v. Standard Beet Sugar Co., 150 Fed. 677, 680.

A corporation was empowered to manufacture, sell, and distribute electricity for lighting, heating, and manufacturing purposes in two towns, and to maintain a dam on a river, and take as for public use any water rights or land, and to flow any lands to construct its dam and the establishment of its plant, but not to flow any mill privilege. It was empowered to transmit electric power in said town in such manner as might be expedient, and to erect poles and wires. The town and the corporation were authorized to contract for public lighting. Held, that the word "plant" in defendant's charter included its poles and wires. Brown v. Gerald, 61 Atl. 785, 786, 100 Me. 351, 70 L. R. A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526.

"Plant" is "the fixtures, machinery, tools, apparatus, appliances, etc., necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business, or any mechanical operation or process." In its ordinary sense it "includes whatever apparatus is used by a business man in carrying on his business, . . . all goods and chattels fixed or movable, alive or dead, which he keeps for permanent employment in his business." Where plaintiff's agent, when taking an order from defendant for an engine with connections, was present at defendant's well, wherein was installed a pump, invented by defendant, and knew that defendant desired to obtain power to utilize the pump in raising water to irrigate his crop, the word "plant," in the provision of the order that payment shall be as soon as "plant" is running in good order, will be held to cover and include the pump as well as the engine; its operation being essential to accomplish the purpose desired. Scott Supply & Tool Co. v. Roberts, 93 Pac. 1123, 1124, 42 Colo. 280 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Cent. Dict.).

Of railroad

Rev. St. Ind. § 7063, provides that every railroad or other corporation, except municipal, operating in the state, shall be liable in damages for personal injury suffered by any employé while in its service, where such injury is suffered by reason of any defect in the condition of "ways, works, plant, tools, and machinery connected with or in use in the business of such corporation." If the employé so injured is in the exercise of due care and diligence, and the defect is the result of negligence on the part of the corporation or some person intrusted by it with the duties of keeping such part of its plant in proper condition. Held, that a temporary scaffold constitutes a part of the plant of a railroad corporation, within the meaning of such act. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Austin, 127 Ill. App. 281, 284.

PLANTATION

Where a reservation in a timber deed provided that the vendors should have the right to use such timber from the land as might be necessary for ordinary plantation purposes connected with the land, not including the right to clear any of the land, the grantors or those claiming under them were entitled to use the timber for every other ordinary plantation purpose, than clearing any part of the land, etc., construing the word "ordinary" in its usual acceptation as "common," "usual," "common occurrence," "usual practice," and the word "plantation" as a cultivated estate, a large farm for raising the different products of agriculture. Midland Timber Co. v. Pegues, 76 S. E. 32 34, 93 S. C. 82.

PLANTER

A "planter" is one who is engaged in the business of producing crops from the soil, and it is immaterial whether he sows and reaps with his own hand, with the hand of a tenant, the hand of a cropper, or the hand of a hired laborer. Butler, Stevens & Co. v. Georgia & A. Ry. Co., 47 S. E. 320, 322, 119 Ga. 959.

PLANTS

In construing the provision in Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule G, par. 234½, 28 Stat. 525, for "lily of the valley . . . plants used for forcing," held that lily of the valley roots, sprouted, which are imported for forcing, are dutiable thereunder, being included within the term "plants," in a popular sense, though not technically. McAllister v. United States, 147 Fed. 773.

PLASTERER

As machinist, see Machinist.

PLASTIC

Where a term is defined in a patent, that is the construction to be given it, rather han the definition found in the dictionaries; and held, therefore, in a patent for the interior fire-finishing of the glass article which provides that it is to be subject to the fire blast when in a "plastic" condition, by this term according to the patent is meant before the imperfections imparted to the inner surface of the mold by the plunger have become permanent by the formation of a glaze. Blair v. Jeannette-McKee Glass Works, 161 Fed. 355, 356.

PLAT

A "plat" is a representation of land on paper, appealing to the eye by means of lines and memoranda rather than by words. Thompson v. Hill, 78 S. E. 640, 644, 137 Ga. 308.

PLATTED

The term "platted," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3658, giving the council of a city jurisdiction of a proceeding to annex platted territory, means legal plats executed for town purposes as provided by sections 4411, 4413. Ernsperger v. City of Mishawaka, 80 N. E. 543, 544, 168 Ind. 253.

PLATEN

In printing, a "platen" is the flat part of a press which comes down upon the form and by which the impression is made. A platen press is any form of printing press which gives impression from a platen, in distinction from rotary or cylinder press, which gives the impression from a cylinder or a curved surface. The Century Dictionary defines the term as: "(a) The part of a printing press which presses the paper against the type and by which the impression is made; (b) hence an analogous part of a typewriter on which the paper rests to receive an impression; (c) the movable table of a machine tool, as a planer, on which the work is fastened and presented to the action of the tool." Dey Time Register Co. v. Syracuse Time Recorder Co., 152 Fed. 440, 446.

PLATES

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, for "plates" of steel, does not include an engraved piece of steel, 15 feet long, 4 feet 2 inches wide, 6.5 inches thick, and weighing over six tons, which is a completed article ready for use in glass manufacture, because it is not a "plate," and because said paragraph is limited to articles in an incomplete condition. Theodore W. Morris & Co. v. United States, 169 Fed. 666; Id., 174 Fed. 656, 657, 98 C. C. A. 410.

Misnomer alone cannot make a tariff provision applicable; and the appellation of "drawplates" cannot bring articles within the enumeration of "plates," which are not plates in form, nor commercially known as plates, and to which such name has clung inappropriately because plates were formerly used for the same purpose. Newman v. United States, 159 Fed. 123, 124, 86 C. C. A. 511.

The provision for steel plates in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, while not covering all steel articles that are known as plates, includes so-called monogram dies and plates used in engraving, which, besides being called plates, are within the dictionary definitions of "plates." United States v. Sellers, 160 Fed. 518, 519.

Thin, checkered, steel plates about 12 by 5 feet, specially adapted for use in the construction of floors for boiler rooms, are dutiable as steel "plates," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, rather than as "plate * * * steel," under paragraph 126, 30 Stat. 159. Hill v. R. D. Wood & Co., 163 Fed. 51, 89 C. C. A. 635.

PLATES AND STEEL IN ALL FORMS AND SHAPES

A so-called steel table, engraved, weighing nearly six tons, measuring 12 feet by 4 feet by 6 inches, and mounted like a table top on a frame, held to be within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, for "plates and steel in all forms and shapes." Morris v. United States, 140 Fed. 774.

Drawplates and wortles, which are practically completed articles manufactured from steel bars or plates and having a purpose distinct from that of the original product, are not within the provision for plates in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, relating to "plates and steel in all forms and shapes." This provision was not intended to include plates manufactured into some other completed article.

United States v. C. Newman Wire Co., 152 Fed. 488.

PLATES NOT MANUFACTURED

Plates that have been ground, polished, and planished are not copper in "plates . . . not manufactured," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 532, 30 Stat. 197. United States v. B. F. Drakenfeld & Co., 178 Fed. 258, 259, 101 C. C. A. 618.

PLAY

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 7260, providing that any person who shall deal, "play," or carry on, or open or cause to be opened, or who shall conduct, either as owner, proprietor, employé, whether for hire or not, any game of poker shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, one who merely plays at a game of poker, not having any interest in the place, is within the statute. State v. Smith, 108 Pac. 618, 619, 58 Wash. 235.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 379, as amended by Acts 27th Leg. p. 26, c. 22, makes it an offense for any person to "play" at any game of cards at any house or other public, or at any, place except a private residence occupied by a family. Held, that it is an offense to play cards, even without betting, at any place, except at a private residence occupied by a family. Lamar v. State, 95 S. W. 509, 511, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 563 citing Hodges v. State, 72 S. W. 179, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 444; Weaver v. State, 31 S. W. 400, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 554).

The word "shooting," as applied to the game of craps, is synonymous with the word "playing." Indeed, the word "playing," as used in the statute relating to gaming, is simply a generic term. To shoot craps is to play craps. To roll tenspins is to play tenspins. Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776.

Bet synonymous

Under Pen. Code, § 388, as amended March 28, 1907 (Acts 30th Leg. c. 49), which makes it an offense to bet or wager at any gaming table or any game of any character whatsoever that can be played with cards, there is no distinction between playing and betting, and, when it is charged that an accused "played" at cards, it means that he was betting, or, if it was a banking game, that he exhibited it for the purpose of obtaining bets, and generally the word has such meaning in statutes with reference to gaming. Purvis v. State, 137 S. W. 701, 702, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 302, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 536.

PLAY (Noun)

A "play" is a dramatic composition for scenic representation by speaking or acting, as a tragedy, comedy, farce, melodrama, or pantomime. People v. Klaw, 106 N. Y. Supp. 341, 351, 55 Misc. Rep. 72 (quoting and adopting the definition in Stand. Dict.).

PLEA

See Compound Plea; Dilatory Plea; Saving Benefit of Plea.

The office of a "plea" is to set up facts which otherwise would not be apparent to the court, and to pray the benefit of certain legal conclusions from them. Where the grounds of objections to the jurisdiction of the court on appeal appear on the face of the record, a plea to the jurisdiction is unnecessary, and a motion to erase the appeal from the docket is the proper mode of taking advantage of the objections. In re O'Brien's Petition, 63 Atl. 777, 781, 79 Conn. 46 (citing in support of definition Gould, Plead. c. 1, §§ 3, 20; Id. c. 3, § 12; Id. c. 5, § 25; Tweedy v. Jarvis, 27 Conn. 42, 47).

"A 'plea' goes to the bill, not to the service or to the appearance." A defendant in a case incorrectly employs a "plea" to obtain the striking of his name from a motion to transfer the case to another court and from a demurrer which had been filed for the reason that the attorney who made the motion and filed the demurrer had no authority to represent him. Sanderson v. Bishop, 171 Fed. 769, 771.

The word "pleas," as used in 33 Edw. I, St. 2, declaring those to be conspirators who conferred "falsely to move or maintain pleas," is equivalent to "actions." State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 655, 27 R. I. 252.

As answer

See Answer.

In equity

A "plea" in equity is in effect an answer which reduces the issue between the parties to a single point. Gilson v. Appleby, 78 Atl. 668, 78 N. J. Eq. 96.

A "plea in equity" is different from an answer in equity and from an answer under our code pleading, being not directly responsive to the bill of complaint in equity, or to the petition under the Code, nor is it the same as a demurrer, but it is more in the nature of a demurrer than of an answer, for as a demurrer admits the facts well pleaded, but only for the purposes of the demurrer, and as the demurrer, if overruled, cannot be read in evidence, so also the plea in equity is not effective as an admission in courts adhering to the chancery procedure. Meissner v. Standard Ry. Equipment Co., 109 S. W. 730, 731, 736, 211 Mo. 112.

It is the office of a "plea in equity" to present some one single and well-defined ground of defense, which if sustained, will dispose of the case and avoid the expense and delay of a hearing; and in a suit for infringement of a patent the defense of noninfringement cannot properly be presented by a plea, at least where it involves a consideration of evidence extrinsic to the patent itself. American Sulphite Pulp Co. v. Bayless Pulp & Paper Co., 163 Fed. 848, 944.

Demurrer

A demurrer to a declaration is not a "plea," within a court rule requiring defendant to elect whether he will demand a jury trial at or before the time of first filing a plea, but in no event after the time allowed by law to plead, and hence an election made within an extended time granted for pleading after overruling a demurrer is made in time. City of Baltimore v. Thomas, 80 Atl. 726, 728, 115 Md. 212.

PLEA IN ABATEMENT

A "plea in abatement" goes to the writ. Whiton v. Balch, 89 N. E. 1045, 1046, 203 Mass. 576.

A "plea in abatement" is essentially a dilatory plea, and must be filed at the first term. Quillian v. Johnson, 49 S. E. 801, 803, 122 Ga. 49 (citing Civ. Code 1895, § 5058).

A "plea in abatement" to an indictment may be made when there is a defect in the record which is shown by facts extraneous thereto. Lindsey v. State, 69 N. E. 126, 128, 69 Ohio St. 215.

A "plea in abatement" is one in which is set up matter tending to defeat or suspend the suit or proceeding in which it is interposed, but which does not debar the plaintiff from recommencing another action at some other time or in some other way. Chicago & Bloomington Stone Co. v. Nelson, 69 N. E. 705, 706, 32 Ind. App. 355.

"Pleas in abatement" do not deny the merits of plaintiff's claim, but simply tend to delay the remedy, and to support such a plea it must appear that the two suits are for the same cause or causes of action, or the identity of the matters involved must be such that a judgment in the first could be pleaded in bar as a former adjudication. Botto's Ex'r v. Botto (Ky.) 80 S. W. 174.

A motion to quash an indictment, supported by affidavits, is substantially a "plea in abatement," which is the proper and regular method of attacking the same on the ground that the grand jury had been improperly constituted. State v. Paramore, 60 S. E. 502, 503, 146 N. C. 604.

A plea to an indictment, which alleged substantially that the respective counts violated specified provisions of the Constitution and should be quashed and the prosecution abated, was not a "plea in abatement" as contemplated by Rev. St. 1899, § 2562, declaring that no plea of abatement or other dilatory plea to an indictment should be received unless the party offering it should prove the truth thereof by affidavit or other evidence. State v. Martin, 129 S. W. 931, 932, 230 Mo. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 628.

A plea of the statutory right or privilege to have an action brought against a natural person begun in the county where he resides is a "plea in abatement." E. O. Painter Fertilizer Co. v. Du Pont, 45 South. 507, 508, 54 Fla. 288.

"A 'plea in abatement' is a defense to a pending action, and is properly so termed." Bliss, Code Pl. § 345; Bergkofski v. Ruzofski, 74 Conn. 204, 50 Atl. 565. "What was known under the old practice as a plea in abatement went to some defect or error which merely defeated the present proceeding, but did not show that the plaintiff was forever concluded from maintaining the action." Baylies, Code Pleading and Prac. (2d Ed.) 385. And he further says (page 386): "All this has been changed by the Code. That act contemplates but one answer, which shall embrace matter in abatement as well as matter in bar; and the defendant may now unite matter in abatement and matter in bar, and have both tried and determined at the same time." Groton Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. American Bridge Co., 137 Fed. 284, 295 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5406-5409).

A "plea in abatement" is a dilatory plea, and, being such, is construed with much greater strictness than an ordinary plea in bar, and no intentment can be taken in its favor. Such a plea must contain the utmost fullness and particularity in statement in every respect, as well as the highest attainable accuracy and precision, leaving on the one hand nothing to be supplied by intentment and on the other no supposable answer unobviated. O. Callahan Co. v. Wall Rice Milling Co., 89 N. E. 418, 419, 44 Ind. App. 372.

A "plea in abatement" is one which goes, not to the merits of the action, but merely postpones it until some requisite disclosed by the plea is complied with. Where, in a proceeding to compel the granting of a liquor license, the objectors pleaded the adoption of local option in the county, in accordance with the local option act of 1908 (Acts Sp. Sess. 1908, c. 2), by a majority vote, the plea was in bar, and not in abatement, and therefore was not required to state any facts beyond those necessary to defeat the right of action, nor was it required to state the facts with the definiteness and certainty of a plea in abatement. Kunkle v. Coleman, 92 N. E. 61, 63, 174 Ind. 315.

A "plea in abatement" must allege fully, not only what is necessary to be answered, but must anticipate and exclude all such supposable matter as would, if alleged on the opposite side, defeat the plea. Price v. Wakeham, 107 S. W. 132, 133, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 339.

"Pleas in abatement" are founded on some defect apparent on the face of the indictment, or on some matter outside the record going to its insufficiency. That the indictment was not returned in open court, but to the trial judge, after all persons had been excluded from the courtroom excepting the prosecuting attorney and another, and that persons not authorized by law were permitted in the grand jury room, was properly raised by plea in abatement. State v. Firey, 122 S. W. 1007, 1008, 223 Mo. 194.

PLEA IN BAR

A "plea in bar" goes to the merits of the action. Whiton v. Balch, 89 N. E. 1045, 1046, 203 Mass. 576.

A "plea in bar" is one which alleges matter in avoidance of a cause of action. Where, in a proceeding to compel the granting of a liquor license, the objectors pleaded the adoption of local option in the county, in accordance with the local option act of 1908 (Acts Sp. Sess. 1908, c. 2), by a majority vote, the plea was in bar, and not in abatement, and therefore was not required to state any facts beyond those necessary to defeat the right of action, nor was it required to state the facts with the definiteness and certainty of a plea in abatement. Kunkle v. Coleman, 92 N. E. 61, 63, 174 Ind. 315.

A "plea in bar," as indicated by the word "bar," means a special plea constituting a sufficient answer to an action at law, so-called because it barred (i. e., prevented) the plaintiff from further prosecuting it with effect, and, if established by proof, defeated and destroyed the action altogether. A statute providing that a county warrant, having been delivered that shall not be presented for payment within 5 years from its date, or, having been presented and not paid for want of funds, shall not be again presented for five years after the funds are set apart for payment, shall be "barred" is a limitation of actions on warrants as well as a direction to the county officers. Wilson v. Knox County, 34 S. W. 45, 46, 132 Mo. 387 (quoting 1 Burrill, Law Dict. 185).

PLEA NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM

A "plea non infregit conventionem" is not a proper one, since it pleads a negative to a negative, and two negatives do not make a good issue. But, although the plea is informal, it is not an immaterial one, and will sustain a verdict. It is bad on demurrer, but good on motion in arrest of judgment. To the declaration for breach of the covenant of a lease to surrender the premises in as good condition as when taken, ordinary wear and damage by fire or providential causes alone excepted, alleging that defendant did not surrender in good condition, but with a window broken, and that it was not injured by ordinary wear or fire or providential causes, defendant answered, admitting the leaving of the broken window, but pleading that this did not constitute a breach, but was within the exception, having been caused by the settlement of the building due to the action of the frost and heat. Held, that this was a "plea of non infregit conventionem," which, though not proper, it pleading a negative to a negative, was good in the absence of a demurrer. Drouin v. Wilson, 67 Atl. 825, 826, 80 Vt. 335, 13 Ann. Cas. 93.

PLEA OF THE CROWN

In English law, a phrase now employed to signify criminal causes in which the King is a party. State v. Bacon, 61 Atl. 653, 656, 27 R. I. 252 (citing Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Revision]).

PLEA OF GUILTY

"A 'plea of guilty' in a court is a confession of the crime charged in the complaint or indictment." State v. Call, 61 Atl. 833, 100 Me. 403.

A "plea of guilty" is a record admission of whatever is well alleged in the indictment. People v. Earing, 130 N. Y. Supp. 1099, 1102, 71 Misc. Rep. 615.

A "plea of guilty" differs from a full and voluntary confession, in that, while the latter is merely evidence of guilt, the former is a formal confession before the court on which judgment may be rendered. State v. Branner, 63 S. E. 169, 170, 149 N. C. 559.

A "plea of guilty" is a confession of guilt, and is equivalent to a conviction, and the court must pronounce judgment and sentence as on a verdict of guilty. Lowe v.

State, 73 Atl. 637, 638, 111 Md. 1, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, 18 Ann. Cas. 744.

Under a provision of the Penal Code, providing that if a jury shall find any person guilty of murder they shall also find the degree, and if any person shall plead guilty to murder a jury shall be summoned to find the degree, etc., a trial of a prosecution for murder is precisely the same under the plea of guilty as under the plea of not guilty, and in such a case a plea of guilty is not tantamount to a confession of murder in the first degree. Murray v. State, 78 S. W. 927, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 400.

PLEA OF TITLE

Code Civ. Proc. § 2951, provides that, in a suit before a justice of the peace, defendant may allege in his answer facts showing that title to real property will come in question. Held, in an action before a justice for breach of contract for the cutting of hoop poles, that a special plea that plaintiff was not the owner of the land, nor the trees cut therefrom, was insufficient as a "plea of title," which means some affirmative, unequivocal assertion on the part of defendant of title to the locus in quo, or some part thereof. Rose v. Purcell, 120 N. Y. Supp. 860, 862, 64 Misc. Rep. 674.

PLEA SON ASSAULT

See Son Assault.

PLEA TO THE JURISDICTION

A "plea to the jurisdiction" is an affirmative plea, for it is only by asserting an affirmative position that the plea can prevail. On the trial of an issue of fact raised by a plea to the jurisdiction the burden is on defendant to establish the averments of his plea. Pyron v. Ruohs, 48 S. E. 434, 435, 120 Ga. 1060.

"The distinction between 'pleas to the jurisdiction' and 'pleas in abatement,' which prevailed at the common law, has not been recognized by this court. It follows, therefore, that 'pleas to the jurisdiction,' like ordinary pleas in abatement, may be put in by attorney without admitting jurisdiction of the person. The same result follows from the provisions of circuit court rule 6. Having provided that a plea of the general issue may be filed with a plea in abatement, which could certainly be signed by attorney without waiving the plea in abatement, it would seem illogical to hold that the dilatory plea must be signed by the party in person." Fell v. Gorman, 108 N. W. 282, 283, 144 Mich. 521 (citing 1 Chit. Plead. [16th Ed.] pp. 569, 588; National Fraternity v. Circuit Judge, 86 N. W. 540, 127 Mich. 186).

"In equity, 'pleas to the jurisdiction' simply assert that the court of chancery is not the proper court to take cognizance of the rights sought to be enforced by the complainant." A defendant may take advantage of insufficient service of process in a suit in chancery by a plea to the jurisdiction reciting a special appearance. Upon a hearing upon bill and plea raising a question of jurisdiction, the merits may not be gone into further than is necessary to determine the question of jurisdiction. Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 822, 825, 69 N. J. Eq. 397 (citing 1 Danell, Chan. Pl. & Pr. [6th Am. Ed.] p. 621, star page 627).

PLEA TO THE PERSON

In equity, "pleas to the person" assert that the complainant is incapacitated to sue, or that the defendant is not the person who ought to be sued. Groel v. United Electric Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 822, 825, 69 N. J. Eq. 397 (citing 1 Danell, Chan. Pl. & Pr. [6th Am. Ed.] p. 621, star page 627).

"Pleadings" are the juridical means of investing the court with jurisdiction of a subject-matter to adjudicate thereon. State v. Topham (Utah) 123 Pac. 888, 894.

"The very object and design of all 'pleading' is that the adverse party may be informed of the real cause of action or defense relied upon by the pleader, and may thus have an opportunity of meeting and defeating it, if possible, at the trial. Unless the complaint fairly accomplishes this purpose, pleading would be a useless ceremony, productive only of delay, and the parties might better be permitted to state their demands orally before the court at the time of the trial, as is done in courts of justices of the peace." Soden v. Murphy, 94 Pac. 353, 354, 42 Colo. 352 (quoting Pom. Rem. & Rem.

Rights, § 554; Saxonia, N. & R. Co. v. Cook, 4 Pac. 1111, 7 Colo. 574; Seymour v. Fisher, 27 Pac. 240, 16 Colo. 189; Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 21 Pac. 1028, 13 Colo. 117, 4 L. R. A. 767).

"A 'pleading' is primarily and essentially a statement of facts. Where the facts are stated in a pleading, the pleader may and often should state that conclusion from such facts upon which he based his right; but, when the facts upon which the pleader's conclusion is based are not stated, his conclusion from such undisclosed facts goes for nothing, and, not being in itself a relevant fact, is not admitted by a demurrer." Millville Gas Light Co. v. Sweeten, 64 Atl. 959, 960, 74 N. J. Law, 39.

A "pleading" is a judicial admission, and is a waiver of all controversy so far as the adverse party may desire to take advantage of it. Holbrook v. J. J. Quinlan & Co., 80 Atl. 339, 346, 84 Vt. 411.

"The principal purpose of written 'pleadings' is to frame and present the issues to be tried." Tate v. Rose, 99 Pac. 1003, 1005, 35 Utah, 229.

"Pleadings" are the precise statements of the cause for the relief asked by plaintiff on the one side and the like denial, negative or affirmative, of such cause by the other side, and they must be sufficient, in the absence of such denial, to entitle the plaintiff to the relief asked without evidence in their support. Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, §§ 3225, 3231, provide that "pleadings" are the written statements by the parties of the facts constituting their respective claims and defenses, and declare that the complaint must contain a statement in ordinary, concise language of the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action, and, where the complaint contains more than one cause of action, each shall be distinctly stated in separate paragraphs and numbered. Bolen-Darnall Coal Co. v. Williams, 104 S. W. 867, 868, 7 Ind. T. 648.

The words "avens," "says," and "pleas," as used in a "pleading," are equivalent terms, and the use of the word "pleads" means no more than the preceding words, and signifies no more than they would, to characterize the language as a plea, than if it had not been used. Mylin v. King, 35 South. 998, 1000, 139 Ala. 319.

Rev. St. 1898, § 4096, authorizing examination of an adverse party otherwise than as a witness on the trial in any action or proceeding, and declaring that such examination may be taken before issue joined to enable the party to "plead," is not limited to a complaint, answer, or reply but extends to a "claim" urged in defense of a proceeding instituted by either party in aid of an action or defense which may be put in issue and tried, including an examination of plaintiff who has brought a proceeding for the examination of defendant's books and papers before the filing of a complaint, as authorized by section 4183. Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 104 N. W. 811, 812, 125 Wis. 643.

Affidavit

The section of the Code relating to verification of "pleadings" has no application to an application and affidavit under Code, § 3901, providing for the examination of an attachment defendant on oath respecting his property when it appears by the affidavit of plaintiff that not enough property is known on which attachment can be executed to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. Carpenter v. Clements, 98 N. W. 129, 131, 122 Iowa, 294.

An affidavit required for the institution of contempt proceedings is not a "pleading," within the ordinary sense of the term, so as to fall within the ordinary rules governing the construction of formal allegations of the parties of their respective claims and defenses. State v. Sieber, 88 Pac. 313, 314, 49 Or. 1.

Application for bankrupt's discharge

An application for a bankrupt's discharge should be considered a pleading within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 18c, 30 Stat. 551, providing that all pleadings setting up matters of fact shall be verified under oath. In re Taylor, 188 Fed. 479, 482.

As distinguished from proceedings

A prayer to take a case from the jury which makes no reference to the pleadings presents only the question whether the facts that might properly be found from the evidence constitute a good cause of action, and, if the prayer refers to the "proceedings," it does not by that term include "pleadings," as the "proceedings" consist of successive acts done and steps taken as parts of the suit during its progress, while the "pleadings" consist of statements of the litigants, in legal form, of facts constituting a cause of action and grounds of defense. Monumental Brewing Co. v. Larrimore, 72 Atl. 596, 599, 109 Md. 682 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5410, 5632, 5633).

Brief

A brief on rehearing is not a "pleading," but an argument addressed to the court and to its individual members, so that to incorporate therein scandalous or insulting matter is to commit a contempt in open court. In re Dunn, 124 N. W. 120, 85 Neb. 606.

Defense or counterclaim

A counterclaim is not a "pleading" in the action within the rule that a demurrer searches all the pleadings prior to itself for the first fault, so that on the trial of the issues created by the demurrer judgment must be given against the party who committed the first fault, and the court on demurrer to a counterclaim will not pass on the sufficiency of the complaint. Fulton County Gas & Electric Co. v. Hudson River Telephone Co., 93 N. E. 1052, 1053, 200 N. Y. 287.

The word "pleading," in Code Civ. Proc. § 545, authorizing the striking out on motion of irrelevant or scandalous matter "in a pleading," embraces a defense or counterclaim which are distinct and independent pleadings, and which must be complete in themselves. Stroock Plush Co. v. Talcott, 113 N. Y. Supp. 214, 218, 129 App. Div. 14.

Documents to sustain application to set aside judgment

Documents filed by defendants on their application to set aside a default judgment against them upon service by publication were not "pleadings" within the rule that a plea of venue must precede a plea on the merits, so that their plea of privilege to be sued in another county was not waived by filing such documents. Wolf v. Sahm, 120 S. W. 1114, 1117, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 564.

Exceptions

Neither circuit court rule 2, § E, nor rule 26, § E, requires that exceptions to the reasons of the court for denying a new trial shall be filed within 15 days, and exceptions filed in time to be incorporated in the bill of exceptions are sufficient, as, until the bill of exceptions is signed, the court may file supplemental reasons which may be excepted to, all of which may be incorporated in the bill of exceptions when settled; exceptions to the reasons not being in any sense a "pleading." United States Graphite Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 123 N. W. 27, 28, 158 Mich. 598.

Mandamus, writ, return, and demurrer

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2082, providing that the proceedings, after joinder of issue on law or facts on an alternative writ of mandamus, are the same as in an action, the Code relating to the proceedings in an action applies to mandamus, and for the purpose of the application the writ and the return, or the writ and the demurrer, are deemed "pleadings in an action." People ex rel. Ajas v. Department of Health of City of New York, 123 N. Y. Supp. 294, 296, 188 App. Div. 559.

Motion to make complaint definite and certain

A motion to make the complaint definite and certain is not a "pleading." The object of the motion is to enable the opposite party to demur, answer, or reply intelligently, and should be made before the time to answer or demur. Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 164, provides that the only "pleading" on the part of the defendant is either a demurrer or an answer. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 62 S. E. 9, 10, 81 S. C. 126.

Notice of claim by materialman

The notice required by Mechanics' Lien Law, § 3, P. L. 1898, p. 538, giving materialmen a lien by stop notice on the funds in the hands of the owner and requiring the stop notice to state the amount due from the contractor, and that a demand has been made to him and payment refused, is not a "pleading," but its object is to put the party on whom it is served on inquiry and to inform him that a claim is made against him which he must investigate for the benefit of the party giving the notice, and a notice which states that material was sold to a contractor for a building, but does not expressly allege that it was actually used in the building, is sufficient. McNab & Harlin Mfg. Co. v. Paterson Bldg. Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 709, 715.

Opening statement

Statements of the case, or of the defense and of the evidence expected to be produced at the commencement of the trial, are not "pleadings," within the purview of article 8 of the Code, and are not vulnerable to attack by demurrer. Glenn v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 124 Pac. 420, 421, 87 Kan. 391.

Remonstrance in drain proceeding

A two-thirds remonstrance in a proceeding for a drain is not strictly a "pleading" or answer. Thorn v. Silver, 89 N. E. 943, 945, 174 Ind. 504.

PLEADING A CONTRACT

In "pleading a contract" it is not sufficient to state that a contract was executed, since to "plead a contract" means to plead its provisions, undertakings, or engagements. McNealey v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 95 S. W. 312, 313, 119 Mo. App. 200 (citing Dawson v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 76 Mo. 514; Brown v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 18 Mo. App. 568; Crow v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 57 Mo. App. 185; Northrup v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 435, 4 Am. Rep. 837).

PLEASURE

PLEDGE

By a "pledge" the pledgee takes only a special property; the general property remaining in the pledgor. White River Sav. Bank v. Capital Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 59 Atl. 197, 198, 77 Vt. 123, 107 Am. St. Rep. 754.

A "pledge" is trust property, and the character of a pledgee is that of a trustee. The law does not permit a pledgee to purchase the pledge at his own sale except upon an agreement with the pledgor, because he has a duty to perform in relation to the property inconsistent with the character of a purchaser, and such a sale is voidable at the option of the pledgor. Wetherell v. Johnson, 70 N. E. 229, 231, 208 Ill. 247 (citing Union Trust Co. v. Rigdon, 98 Ill. 458; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 479).

"A 'pledge' is a bailment of personal property to secure an indebtedness. A pledge cannot be created by delivery of title deeds." A third person paying the purchase money at the instance of the vendee, and taking the title to the land direct to the vendor, holds neither the land nor title as pledgee. Such a transaction is the equivalent of the vendor's conveyance to the vendee, and a conveyance by the vendee to the person paying the purchase money as security for the debt. Fleming v. Georgia R. Bank, 48 S. E. 420, 422, 120 Ga. 1023 (citing Civ. Code 1895, § 2956; Davis v. Davis, 14 S. E. 194, 88 Ga. 191).

To constitute a "pledge" of personal property, there must be a contract whereby the property is held as security, but it is not essential that such a contract shall be express, as it may be implied from the circumstances of the case, if it appears that the minds of the parties met with respect to the same subject-matter, and consented to the same thing for a sufficient consideration. Wilkinson v. Misner, 138 S. W. 931, 934, 158 Mo. App. 551.

A "contract of pledge" is a legal obligation, made by the deposit with the pledgee of personalty as security for a debt or other engagement, with an implied power of sale on default; the pledgor retaining the general ownership, subject to the lien of the pledgee. Tennent v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 112 S. W. 754, 759, 133 Mo. App. 345.

By Civ. Code, §§ 2986, 2987, a "pledge" is a deposit of personal property by way of security for the performance of another act, and every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only is to be deemed a "pledge." Rohrbacher v. Superior Court, 78 Pac. 22, 23, 144 Cal. 631.

A "pledge" is more than a simple lien, being a deposit or delivery of possession and control of property as security for a debt, vesting a right to the property in the pledgee to the full extent necessary to protect and collect the debt. Austin v. Hayden, 137 N. W. 317, 322, 171 Mich. 38.

A "pledge" is a bailment to secure the payment of a debt or the performance of some other act, in which the pledgee only acquires a special property in the thing pledged. Trenholm v. Miles, 59 South. 930, 931, 102 Miss. 835.

An instrument, purporting to sell certain movables on a plantation for a certain price paid in cash, cannot be construed as against third persons as a contract of pledge securing the contingent liability of a surety on a release bond. Millot v. Conrad, 38 South. 139, 114 La. 193.

One is no less a pawnbroker because he requires pawnors to execute notes or chattel mortgages in connection with the transaction, whether or not he relies exclusively on the goods received, as, under Civ. Code, §§ 2924, 2987, 2988, every contract by which possession of personal property is transferred as security, only, is a "pledge." Levison v. Boas, 88 Pac. 825, 827, 150 Cal. 185, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661.

Where a customer leaves stock in the hands of a broker as collateral security for a balance due on its purchase price, a qualified relation of pledgor and pledgee exists, so that the broker, while he is not compelled to retain in his possession the identical stock purchased on his customer's order, must have in his possession or under his control an amount of the stock in question equal to that purchased, which he can deliver to the customer when the account is closed. Strickland v. Magoun, 104 N. Y. Supp. 425, 427, 119 App. Div. 113.

Chattel mortgage distinguished

A "chattel mortgage" is a present transfer of title to mortgaged property, with a defeasance, so that, upon payment of the debt or performance of the obligation secured, the title to the property reverts to the mortgagor; while a "pledge" is a transfer of the possession of personalty, not the title, as security for the performance of some act by the pledgor, with provisions for sale of the property or other disposition thereof by the pledgee upon the pledgor's default. Palmer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 130 N. W. 250, 252, 114 Minn. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 957.

A transaction whereby neither an absolute nor a defeasible title to personalty is transferred by the owner, but only possession with the power to sell if default is made in the payment of the note secured, is not a sale or a mortgage, but a "pledge." Grand Ave. Bank v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 115 S. W. 1071, 1074, 135 Mo. App. 366.

Delivery required

"To constitute a 'pledge' there must be an actual delivery of possession to the pledgee, and to preserve his pledge he must retain possession." Gray v. Doty, 94 Pac. 1008, 1009, 77 Kan. 446 (citing Raper v. Harrison, 15 Pac. 219, 37 Kan. 243).

A "pledge" is a delivery of goods by one to his creditor to be kept until the discharge of the debt. People v. German Bank, 110 N. Y. Supp. 291, 293, 126 App. Div. 231.

A "pledge" is a lien created by the owner of personal property by the mere delivery of it to another, upon an express or implied understanding that it shall be retained as security on an existing or future debt. Farson v. Gilbert, 114 Ill. App. 17, 19.

To make a valid "pledge" as against other creditors, there must be an actual or constructive delivery of the possession of the goods, and the delivery must be clear, unequivocal, complete, and effective at all times.

so as to give notice to third persons of the pledgee's rights. Incorporeal property, incapable of manual delivery, cannot be pledged without a written transfer of title performing the office of delivery of possession, on a pledge of corporeal property, and hence a book account is not pledged by a delivery of the copy of the account without an assignment thereof in writing. American Exchange Nat. Bank of New York v. Federal Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh, 75 Atl. 683, 685, 226 Pa. 483, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, 184 Am. St. Rep. 1071, 18 Ann. Cas. 444.

The word "pledge," as used in Kirby's Dig. Ark. § 5720, is used in its colloquial, rather than technical, sense, since there can be no pledge without delivery and there could be no delivery of "uncollected assessments." Street Grading Dist. No. 60 of Little Rock, Ark., v. Hagadorn, 186 Fed. 451, 455, 108 C. C. A. 429; Connor v. Kimball, 186 Fed. 458, 108 C. C. A. 436.

"A 'pledge' is a disposition of personal property as security (Civ. Code, § 2986), and is dependent on possession, and is not valid until the property is delivered to the pledgee. Civ. Code, § 2988. The delivery must be as complete as is required in the case of sales of personal property by section 3440 of the Civil Code, and change of possession must be continuous and open." Defendant, having possession under an oral contract for purchase of land on which he had commenced making brick, executed two written instruments, one of which purported to transfer all his interest in the contract for the purchase of the land and in and to the brick made and to be made thereon to plaintiff; the other instrument, after reciting the transfer, providing that it was made as security for all moneys to become due from defendant to plaintiff, who agreed to advance money for the making of the brick. The agreement further provided that the plaintiff was to be and remain the owner of all the brick made and entitled to his possession until payment of all sums due him. The writings as to the brick constituted a contract for the creation of a "pledge." Sequeira v. Collins, 95 Pac. 876, 877, 153 Cal. 426.

Ownership of stock distinguished

Where defendant's son-in-law, promoting a consolidation of corporations, was financially embarrassed, and procured a loan on the note of the new corporation, secured by bonds underwritten or guaranteed by defendant under an agreement providing that a block of stock in the new corporation should be placed in his hands as security for the son-in-law's performance of his agreement to procure other parties to underwrite the loan so as to take up defendant's obligation, but the stock was in fact issued directly to defendant as a stockholder, and resignations of the officers of the corporation were placed in his hands, but he refused to act as a stockholder, and did not act upon the resignations, defendant was a "pledgee," and not a "shareholder," and was not subject to a stockholder's liability. Colonial Trust Co. v. McMillan, 87 S. W. 933, 940, 188 Mo. 547, 107 Am. St. Rep. 835.

Transfer of note as collateral

Rev. St. 1899, § 3710, provides that in an action to enforce a lien on personal property pledged or mortgaged, or involving the validity of such lien, proof that the party holding the lien has exacted usurious interest for the debt shall render any mortgage or pledge of personal property, or any lien thereon, invalid. Held, that the delivery of a promissory note as collateral security for a principal note given for the same amount as the balance due on the first note, and executed to plaintiff the day that a payment was made on the first note, was a "pledge" within the meaning of the statute, though it was signed by an additional maker. The authorities have defined "collateral security" as a pledge of incorporeal property as distinguished from chattels. The words necessarily indicate something additional to the principal obligation, and running along with it as security therefor. Winfrey v. Strother, 128 S. W. 849, 850, 145 Mo. App. 115.

PLEDGE FAITH OF STATE

Act 1909, authorizing the State Treasurer to deliver to certain persons bonds issued under Act March 4, 1879 (Laws 1879, p. 183, c. 98), in discharge of an indebtedness, does not "pledge the faith of the state," within Const. art. 2, § 16, declaring that no such law shall be passed, unless the bill be read three times in each house. For the General Assembly to order the State Treasurer to pay a debt with money is not "pledging the faith of the state," within Const. art. 2, § 16, relating to the reading of bills. Battle v. Lacy, 64 S. E. 505, 506, 150 N. C. 573.

PLENARY PROCEEDINGS OR SUIT

A proceeding in a circuit court by parties injuriously affected by orders of the interstate commerce commission, though not parties to the proceedings before the commission on which they are based, to suspend or annul such orders, is not an "appeal," but a plenary suit in equity." F. H. Peavey & Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 176 Fed. 409, 417.

Whenever a bill or petition is filed in the orphans' court, whether or not the parties are cited to appear, if they do appear and answer the proceedings, are "plenary." Stonesifer v. Shriver, 59 Atl. 139, 140, 100 Md. 24 (citing Pegg v. Warford, 4 Md. 385).

PLENTRY OF CHANGE

To say that a street car conductor had "plenty of change" at the time he was asked to change a bill in order to collect a passenger's fare does not mean plenty for the single transaction, but plenty for the reasonable requirements of the trip. Funderburg v. Augusta & A. R. Co., 61 S. E. 1075, 1076, 81 S. C. 141, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868.

PLOTTAGE

"Plottage" is a percentage added to the aggregate value of two or more contiguous lots when held in one ownership as representing an increased value by reason of the fact that they admit of more advantageous disposition and improvement than a single lot. People ex rel. Pennsylvania N. Y. & L. I. R. Co. v. O'Donnel, 115 N. Y. Supp. 509, 511, 130 App. Div. 734.

"Plottage" covers an enhancement of value by reason of the fact that parcels of land sought to be condemned are held in single ownership. The question whether or not plottage is an element of value depends necessarily on the particular circumstances surrounding the use of the property and its situation; there being no rule of law that "plottage," taken alone, must have a value in any particular case. In re City of New York, 107 N. Y. Supp. 567, 569, 56 Misc. Rep. 306.

"Plowbote" is the right to a sufficient supply of wood for making and repairing instruments of husbandry. Anderson v. Cowan, 101 N. W. 92, 93, 125 Iowa, 259, 68 L. R. A. 641, 106 Am. St. Rep. 303.

PLOWING

A railway construction contract provided that "loose rock," as distinguished from "earth," for the purpose of computing compensation for excavation, should include hard shale or soapstone, coarse boulders in gravel, cemented gravel, hardpan or any other material, requiring, in the company's engineer's judgment, the use of pick and bar, or which could not be plowed with a specified plow.

It was further provided that the plowing test should apply to all the materials, and that only such material should be loose rock as in the engineer's judgment could not be plowed with such plow. Held, that the provision for a plowing test did not apply to the particular material specified as hardpan, etc., and that the clause relating to "other material which could not be plowed," etc., meant such as could not be plowed with reasonable facility; a mere "rooting-up" of material, or a cutting of a very shallow furrow, or such plowing as would require men to ride on the plow beam, etc., not being "plowing" within the contract. Indianapolis Northern Traction Co. v. Brennan, 87 N. E. 215, 228, 174 Ind. 1, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851.

PLUMB

See Out of Plumb.

The Century Dictionary defines "plumb" as not only "vertical" but also "true," "accurate." While in its primary sense "plumb," in mechanics, means "vertical," etc., an object when said to be out of plumb may be understood to be defective in some other sense. The meaning that should be attached to the term in pleading is to be extended to that sense in which it is capable of being understood. In an action by a servant for personal injuries received by reason of defective machinery, there was no variance between an allegation that a wheel driving the belting was "out of plumb and wabbly," causing the belting to alternately tighten and loosen, in such manner as to tear out the rivets holding sections of the belt together, and proof that the surface of the wheel over which the belting worked was not true to the axle, that the axle had gotten out of the true center by the wheel having worn on one side, and that its operation was thereby rendered irregular and unsteady. Receivers of Kirby Lumber Co. v. Poindexter (Tex.) 103 S. W. 439, 440.

PLUMBING BUSINESS

Code 1906, § 3854, imposing a privilege tax on one "doing a plumbing business," applies only to a person, firm, or corporation taking contracts and completing them by employing other plumbers to do the work, and does not apply to an individual plumber working by the day or taking contracts for himself alone. Wilby v. State, 47 South. 465, 93 Miss. 767, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 677.

PLURAL

In statutory construction "words used in the singular number include the 'plural' and the plural the singular, except where a contrary intention plainly appears." Hence the words of a statute requiring the filing of a lien statement should be read in the plural, if the circumstances justify, and where grain, upon which a thresher's lien, under chapter 83 of the Civil Code (Rev. Codes 1899, §§ 4823-4825), is claimed, was grown on land situated in two counties, the lien statement should be executed in duplicate and filed in both counties. Gorthy v. Jarvis, 108 N. W. 39, 40, 15 N. D. 509 (quoting Rev. Codes 1899, § 5184).

PLURAL MARRIAGE

Under the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, marriages celebrated and solemnized by mere civil authority and with only the sanction of the law are regarded as marriages for time only, while a marriage solemnized by a duly constituted person, authority, or "by the holy and eternal priesthood of the Saints" is designated a "celestial or patriarchal marriage," binding not only during this life, but throughout the life to come. As used in Const. Idaho, art. 6, § 3, disqualifying as voters, jurors, or officers, among others, one who is a bigamist, polygamist, or living in what is known as patriarchal or celestial marriage, the words "bigamous," "polygamous," "plural," "celestial," and "patriarchal" marriages were meant and intended to prohibit and forbid any man having more than one wife at one time under whatever name or designation he might choose to style his marriage; and the use of each of these words was directed against bigamous and polygamous marriages. The "celestial" or "patriarchal" marriage, in order to come within the prohibition of the Constitution, must be "bigamous" or "polygamous." One who teaches or practices having more than one wife at any one time, or belonging to an organization teaching such doctrine, is disqualified for the duties of an elector, and consequently for holding any civil office, within the laws of the state, but it is not intended by the Constitution to interfere with the religious beliefs and opinions of any one. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 26, 38, 14 Idaho, 621.

PLURALITY OF COUNTS

A "plurality of counts," in an indictment, may consist in the charging of the same criminal transaction as having been committed in a number of different ways or in the charging of a number of distinct transactions of the same general nature. It is permissible to join one or more counts charging violations of the general prohibition law, which went into effect January 1, 1908, with counts charging violations of such laws regulating or prohibiting the sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors as may have been in force in the particular venue of the trial prior to that date and within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. Tooke v. State, 61 S. E. 917, 820, 4 Ga. App. 495 (citing Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 1015 [a] 4).

PLUSH

So-called "panne velvet" is dutiable as "plush," and not as "velvets," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 386, 30 Stat. 186. United States v. Passavant & Co., 164 Fed. 912.

No rule exists in trade or commercial usage declaring that fabrics having a pile of 3.5 millimeters or less in length should be regarded as velvets, and of over 3.5 millimeters as plush. United States v. Silberstein, Castell & Co., 153 Fed. 965, 966.

PNEUMONIA

See Traumatic Pneumonia.

The fact that an animal, apparently sound when delivered to a carrier for shipment, arrives at its destination sick with a disorder, such as "pneumonia," does not raise the presumption that the carrier has been guilty of negligence; "pneumonia" being a well-known and malignant disease attacking both man and beast at times when least expected, and frequently under conditions which shroud its cause and beginning in mystery. Medical science has not yet reached a stage when it can with any degree of certainty protect or prevent its development in animated beings. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Brosius & Le Compte, 105 S. W. 1131, 1136, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 647.

POCK

It is always permissible to amend the pleadings to make them conform to the proof, so that in slander for charging that plaintiff had syphilis, gonorrhoea, and clap, there was no error in permitting an amendment of the petition so as to include a charge that plaintiff had the "pock," on the ground that defendant's counsel had no opportunity to learn the nature of that disease, or whether plaintiff was afflicted therewith, so as to prepare for trial on that issue; the word "pock" being commonly known to be but another name for syphilis, or French or Spanish pox. Mills v. Flynn (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1082, 1084.

POCKET PICKING

POINT

See Between Two Points; Division Point; Intermediate Point; Meeting Point; Signal Point; Terminal Point.

Aim distinguished

"The word 'aim' is more specific than the word 'point.' Intention is one of the connotations of the word 'aim,' but not of the word 'point.' To aim is to point intentionally with a deliberate purpose." We aim at a bird; we point a cannon against a wall; we level a cannon at a wall. Pointing is, of course, used with most propriety with reference to instruments that have points. It is likewise a less decisive action than either aiming or leveling. A stick or finger may be pointed at a person merely out of derision; but a blow is leveled or aimed with an expressed intent of committing an act of violence. Livingston v. State, 65 S. E. 812, 6 Ga. App. 806 (citing and adopting Herrington v. State, 48 S. E. 908, 121 Ga. 141, and quoting Crabbe's English Synonyms).

Aim synonymous

Code 1906, § 1045, makes it an offense to "point or aim" a gun, etc. Defendant was indicted, for that he did "point and aim" a pistol at and toward prosecutor, etc., and was found guilty as charged. Held, that the words "point" and "aim," as used in such section, were synonymous, and defendant was therefore charged and convicted of but a single offense. Coleman v. State, 48 South. 181, 182, 94 Miss. 860.

In boundary

A "point" in a boundary is the extremity of a line. Tiffany v. Town of Oyster Bay, 126 N. Y. Supp. 910, 912, 141 App. Div. 720.

Railroad station

Under a contract providing that a carrier would return the outfit of a railroad contractor to point of shipment from any point on the carrier's line, the word "point" would be construed to mean a station or point where the carrier was doing its regular business as a common carrier. Santa Fé, P. & P. Ry. Co. v. Grant Bros. Const. Co., 108 Pac. 467, 469, 18 Ariz. 186.

Signal points

The employers' liability act (Code 1896, § 1749, subd. 5), making railway companies liable for injury to an employé caused by the negligence of any person in charge of any "signal, points," etc., is a literal copy of the English statute using the words "signal points," designating an apparatus for giving signals, called "points." In the original Alabama statute (Acts 1884-85, p. 116) the word "signal" was used, without "points." Held, that the present statute covers cases of negligence of persons having charge of signals generally; "points" referring to apparatus used in giving signals; and not merely localities. Cogbill v. Louis & N. R. Co., 44 South. 683, 685, 152 Ala. 154.

POINT OF DESTINATION

The "point of destination" of goods shipped by express is ordinarily not a mere common terminal point, like a depot in the case of a railroad, or a wharf in the case of a steamboat, but is the place of business or residence of the consignee. Saunders v. Adams Express Co., 74 Atl. 670, 671, 78 N. J. Law, 441.

POINT OF NAVIGABILITY

The doctrine that a riparian owner has the right to maintain landings, etc., to the "point of navigability," of a navigable stream is not to be understood in the narrow sense of being limited to that point where the stream may be navigable for some purposes at certain stages of water. It must be understood as giving the riparian owner the right to construct landings, etc., to the extent necessary to make his property reasonably available at any ordinary stage of water for any navigation for which the stream is adapted and used, provided it does not obstruct the paramount rights of the public. It must have reference, not only to an ordinary low stage of water, but also to the size and kind of vessels which navigate the stream and the kind of business done upon it. Hobart v. Hall, 174 Fed. 433, 445, 446, 467 (quoting Union Depot St. Ry. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 17 N. W. 626, 628, 31 Minn. 297, 47 Am. Rep. 789).

POINTED OUT

Where appellee admits that, if the verdict is excessive, the trial court committed error in denying the motion for a new trial, it follows that the error is "pointed out" when appellant, in his opening brief, assigns as error the only ruling which the trial court made upon the question of excessive verdict. Its denial of the motion for a new trial. An error is not "presented" or "pointed out" simply because appellant does not argue the matter in his opening brief, since failure to argue an assignment of error does not prevent a review of the same. There is no statute or rule of court requiring an argument of an assignment of error. Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. Ry., 87 Pac. 491, 492, 44 Wash. 363.

POISON

See Added Poisonous Ingredient; Contact with Poison; Voluntary Taking of Poison.

Administer poison, see Administer.
Poison taken, see Taken.

While, under a provision of an accident insurance policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries resulting from poison or anything accidentally or otherwise taken, the word "poison" may be construed to mean liquids commonly known as poisons, the words following "or anything" clearly indicate an intention to include everything of a poisonous nature. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Hudgins (Tex.), 72 S. W. 1047, 1049 (quoting Kasten v. Interstate Casualty Co. of New York, 74 N. W. 534, 99 Wis. 73, 40 L. R. A. 651).

The words "poisonous or injurious to the health," as used in Pa. Act June 26, 1895 (P. L. 317) § 3, subcl. 7, were held in Com. v. Kevin, 51 Atl. 594, 202 Pa. 23, 90 Am. St. Rep. 613, to refer to the ingredients used in adulteration. Com. v. Kebort, 61 Atl. 895, 896, 212 Pa. 289.

Sting of insect

A death from blood poisoning caused by the sting of an insect is not the result of "poison in any form or manner," or of "contact with poisonous substances," within the meaning of those terms in an accident policy. Omberg v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 40 S. W. 909, 911, 101 Ky. 303, 72 Am. St. Rep. 413.

Wood alcohol

. See Wood Alcohol.

POISONOUS GERM

An infinitesimal poisonous germ, or that which it generates, is not "poison," as the word is ordinarily understood. Death caused by a poisonous germ received into the body through the bite of a dog is not a case of contact with "poisonous or infectious substances" without the accident benefits of an insurance policy. Such bite is an accident and should be classed under the "accident provisions" of the policy. Farner v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 67 Atl. 927, 928, 219 Pa. 71, 123 Am. St. Rep. 621.

POISONOUS LIQUID

A liquid sold by a druggist as hand lotion was a "poisonous liquid," if it blistered and burned the plaintiff's hands and lips, and rendered her helpless through the liquid becoming scattered through her body. Kelley v. Rosa, 148 S. W. 1000, 1002, 165 Mo. App. 475.

POKER

As gambling, see Gambling—Gaming.

As gambling device, see Gambling Device.

"Poker" is defined to be a "game with cards," and evidence that defendant and others engaged in a game of poker was sufficient to support an information charging him with playing a game of cards. Inman v. State, 85 S. W. 796, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 609; Mapes v. State (Tex.) 85 S. W. 797.

"Poker" is a well-known American game, always played with cards, and generally considered as a gentleman's game, played for diversion or gain. But, even when played for diversion, chips, representative of value, are generally used. Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776.

POLARISCOPE

The "polariscope" is an instrument of science used in the laboratory, composed of many parts, apparently varying in details of structure, and requiring special knowledge and experience to operate it. It is so adjusted that, when a ray of polarized light passes through a tube filled with a certain solution of sugar, the scale indicates the percentage of pure sugar. United States v. Bartram Bros., 131 Fed. 833, 834, 835, 65 C. C. A. 557.

POLICE COURT

The terms "police court" and "recorder's court," as used in Cal. St. 1905, p. 944, c. 15, are synonymous. Ex parte Baxter, 86 Pac. 998, 999, 3 Cal. App. 716.

"The term 'police court' ordinarily refers to an inferior municipal court, with a limited jurisdiction in criminal cases only. A court with the power to try certain misdemeanors, arising from a violation of state law, or municipal ordinance, and with the power to conduct preliminary examinations in cases of felony, and certain misdemeanors, and to hold defendants to answer for trial for the same, and it does not include the justice courts established by our law. The term should probably be construed also to include such inferior courts as may properly be held to be purely municipal, though given by the state certain jurisdiction in state, as distinguished from municipal matters. Courts coming within the class specified in the Constitution as 'such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town or state and county,' such as a city recorder's court or mayor's court." The amendment to Const. art. 11, § 6, adopted November 3, 1896, inserting "except in municipal affairs," in the provisions that cities and towns and all charters thereof adopted by authority of the Constitution shall be subject to and controlled by the general laws and Constitution, and Const. art. 11, § 8½, being an amendment adopted November 3, 1896, providing that it shall be competent for all charters formed under the authority given by Const. art. 11, § 8, to provide for the Constitution, jurisdiction, etc., of police courts, the manner, time, and terms for which the judges thereof shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of the judges, etc., do not affect the power of the Legislature to provide for justices' courts in cities and towns as part of the state system of justices' courts.

Graham v. Mayor, etc., of City of Fresno, 91 Pac. 147, 148, 151 Cal. 465.

POLICE FORCE

Member of police force, see Member.

The "police force" of a city are a body of men appointed to preserve its peace and good order. State ex rel. Bailey v. Edwards, 106 Pac. 703, 704, 40 Mont. 313.

POLICE JUDGE

"A 'police judge' is an officer of a city of the first class, whose powers and duties are provided by general statute, applicable alike to all cities of that class." Ft. Scott v. Slater, 72 Pac. 550, 551, 67 Kan. 133.

POLICE OFFICER

As executive officer, see Executive Officer.

Depot police, see Depot Police.

The chief of police of a city is a "police officer," within the rule of the board of police examiners, created by the charter of the city, providing that no member of the police force should be permitted to be a delegate to any caucus or take part in any political canvass. Brownell v. Russell, 57 Atl. 103, 104, 76 Vt. 326.

A "police officer" is one of the staff employed to enforce the laws and ordinances of a city and preserve the peace of the community, and the term "policemen" includes every member of the police force, whatever his rank, so that a police captain is a "policeman" notwithstanding his superior rank, and hence is not a purely municipal officer; Sess. Laws 1907, c. 136, § 5 (Rev. Codes, § 3308), relating to the examination of applicants for positions on the police force and providing for their appointment and removal, making no distinction between the officers and members of different rank as to their duties or the manner of their appointment. State ex rel. Bailey v. Edwards, 106 Pac. 703, 704, 40 Mont. 313.

Under Rev. Codes, § 3254, clothing the chief of police of cities with powers of a peace officer and of a constable, etc., the chief of police of a city is a mere police officer, and, though he has the additional duty of supervision of the entire police force, he is an ordinary "police officer," notwithstanding sections 3216 and 3250, providing for the appointment of a chief of police by the mayor with the consent of the council, etc. The chief of police of a city is within Laws 1907, c. 136 (Rev. Codes, §§ 3304-3317), establishing a police commission for cities, providing for an examination and trial board to examine and certify to the qualifications of applicants to act as members of the police force or police department, etc., and a chief of police appointed to serve during good behavior or until he becomes incapacitated may not be removed under sections 3216 and 3250, providing for the appointment and removal of chief of police. State ex rel. Wynne v. Quinn, 107 Pac. 506, 508, 40 Mont. 472.

POLICE POWER

Exercise of as taking property, see Taking (In Eminent Domain).

The "police power" of a state is that power which is necessary for its preservation, and without which it cannot serve the purpose for which it was formed. Ex parte Rowe, 59 South. 69, 70, 4 Ala. App. 254.

The "police power" is the power to restrain common rights of liberty or property. When it is sought to exercise rights which are not common or fundamental, still more when special privileges are asked, the state may grant the required permit or license upon such conditions as it pleases, without observing the limitations which otherwise hedge about the exercise of the police power. The restrictions upon the exercise of corporate rights afford the most conspicuous illustration of this; others are found in fish and game laws, and others in cases of qualified property. State v. Hume, 95 Pac. 808, 810, 52 Or. 1 (citing Freund, Police Power, § 24).

The "police powers" inherent in the state are akin to the right of self-defense in the individual, and authorize the state to protect itself against those things which threaten its existence which can only be maintained by protecting the life, health, and happiness of its citizens, and promoting that which will upbuild its educational and industrial interests. Ex parte Flake (Tex.) 149 S. W. 146, 154.

"There is a power beneath the Constitution, but not superior to it, unwritten, not fully defined, necessary, resting on the sovereignty of the state, which exists because the state cannot exist without it, and which must be considered in connection with the Constitution. That power, known as the 'police power,' aims to promote the public welfare by compulsion and restraint, and it is under the exclusive control of the Legislature. The executive department can exert it only as authorized by the Legislature. The courts can neither exercise it nor prevent its exercise, but they can determine whether a statute is a constitutional use of the power." Wright v. Hart, 75 N. E. 404, 412, 182 N. Y. 330, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 338, 3 Ann. Cas. 263 (dissenting opinion of Judge Vann).

The term "police power" means the general power of governing its people and dominions belonging to every sovereignty. Appeal of Allyn, 71 Atl. 794, 796, 81 Conn. 534, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630, 129 Am. St. Rep. 225.

The "police power" is the power to impose those restraints upon private rights which are necessary for the general welfare. It is a power inherent in all governments, needing neither grant nor recognition by the Constitution. State of South Carolina v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 257, 285.

The "police power" of a city is the power to govern, exercised by restriction or compulsion in promoting the general good, and while a city may not surrender the portion of the police power, the exercise of which is essential to the promotion of the general welfare in protecting personal or property rights, it may make concessions by which the general welfare is promoted in securing the services of some public utility not involving the surrender of necessary governmental functions. Texarkana Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Texarkana (Tex.) 123 S. W. 213, 216.

"Police power" includes the public convenience, as well as the public safety, health, and morals. That power is to organized government what the atmosphere is to man; "its vital breath, its native air." It penetrates, permeates, pervades all, in its omnifically healing reach, "broad and general as the casing air." It is the oil in which the machinery of government efficiently moves. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Harrington, 37 So. 1016, 1018, 85 Miss. 366, 3 Ann. Cas. 181.

The "police powers" comprise that indefinite mass of powers reserved to the state, and which inhere in all civil societies for the protection of the lives, health, morals, and public interests of their members. They have their origin in the law of necessity. There is no equivalency between them and the power to regulate commerce, which does not pertain to the other granted powers. These powers reserved to the state must always remain indefinite in character and incapable of classification or definition, from the very variety and multiplicity of the matters with which they are concerned. As subjects of legislation, they are, from their very nature, of primary importance; they lie at the foundation of social existence; they are for the protection of life and liberty, and necessarily compel all laws on subjects of secondary importance, which relate only to property, convenience, or luxury, to recede, when they come in conflict or collision. United States v. Delaware & H. Co., 164 Fed. 215, 233 (citing License Cases, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 632, 12 L. Ed. 256).

Defendants were charged with the violation of Mills' Ann. St. § 1376, which makes it an offense for any person to throw or discharge into any stream of running water, or ditch or flume, any obnoxious substance or sewage. The trial court sustained their motion to dismiss on the ground that their action in emptying sewage from their hotel into a running stream was not within the spirit of the statute. Held, that as the statute was based on a legislative exercise of the "police power," which is an attribute of sovereignty and exists without any reservation in the Constitution, being founded upon the duty of the state to protect its citizens, the act of dismissal by the court was improper; the determination of what measures are appropriate for the protection of the public being within the province of the Legislature. People v. Hupp, 123 Pac. 651, 653, 53 Colo. 80, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 792; State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 97 N. E. 602, 604, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694.

Attribute of sovereignty

The "police power" is an inherent attribute of sovereignty, and may be exercised to conserve and promote the safety, health, morals, and welfare of the public. Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak, 87 N. E. 229, 234, 172 Ind. 423, 139 Am. St. Rep. 389.

The power to prescribe regulations demanded by the general welfare for the common protection of all is known as the "police power," and is inherent in every sovereignty. Cochran v. Preston, 70 Atl. 113, 114, 108 Md. 220, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163, 129 Am. St. Rep. 432, 15 Ann. Cas. 1048.

The "police power" is inherent in every government, and does not depend upon legislative grants or limitations. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 510, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

"What is called 'police power' appertains to the sovereignty of the state, but is exercised by that sovereignty through the agency of municipalities, as well as through direct statutory enactments operative throughout the commonwealth. That is to say, the power to enact regulations for the welfare, health, and good morals of a community within the limits of a city or town is largely delegated by the state to its municipal governments. But in every case of municipal legislation under the guise of the police power, express or implied authority for the ordinance must be found in the charter of the city or in some other statute." Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co., 77 S. W. 1004, 1008, 103 Mo. App. 480.

The test of the validity of a law which creates liability without fault, and under which the property of one is taken, without compensation, to pay the obligations of another, is not whether it does objectionable things, but whether there is any reasonable ground to believe that the public safety, health, or general welfare is promoted thereby; the "police power" under which such reasonable regulations may be made being a power inherent in every sovereignty, the power to govern men and things, the power to which the possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject, and under which the Legislature exercises a supervision over matters affecting the common weal and enforces the observance by each member of society of his duties to others and the community at large, and prescribes regulations promoting the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and legislates so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its welfare and prosperity. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 117 Pac. 1101, 1106, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

"Police power" is an attribute of a sovereign power to enact laws for the exercise of such restraint and control over the citizen and his occupation as may be necessary to promote the health, safety, and welfare of society. In its exercise, the Legislature may provide that any occupation, which is the proper subject of the power, may not be pursued by the citizen except when authorized by license issued by public authority, and such enactment may require the payment of a fee and the execution of a bond with security conditioned in view of the object and purpose of the act as a prerequisite to the issuance of such license. Spiegler v. City of Chicago, 74 N. E. 718, 721, 216 Ill. 114 (quoting Price v. People, 61 N. E. 844, 846, 193 Ill. 114, 117, 55 L. R. A. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 306).

"Police power" is nothing more nor less than the power of government inherent in every sovereignty. While generally speaking the police power of the state is said to extend to the protection of the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, the law does not recognize these as the extent of the power, but it embraces regulations designed to promote public convenience and general prosperity as well, and the rights of a sovereign state to regulate public service corporations rests on the police power of the state. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290, 292, 297; State v. Kofines, 80 Atl. 432, 33 R. I. 211, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1120 (citing License Cases, 5 How. 583, 12 L. Ed. 256; Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Drainage Commissioners, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 200 U. S. 561, 592, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175).

Belongs to the states

The "police power" is one which belongs to state sovereignty, reserved and protected by the Constitution of the United States. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Foth, 100 S. W. 171, 175, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 275 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 831).

"Police power," which is the power to establish the ordinary regulations of police, is reserved to the individual states, as there is in the Constitution no grant thereof to Congress. Keller v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 470, 471, 213 U. S. 138, 146, 53 L. Ed. 737, 16 Ann. Cas. 1066 (citing Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 503, 24 L. Ed. 1115, 1116; Cooley, Const. Lim. 574; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; License Cases, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 504, 12 L. Ed. 256; Gilman v.

The "police power" is, in its fullest and broadest sense, reserved to the states; that the mode of exercising the power is left to their discretion, and is not subject to national supervision. South Carolina v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 113, 199 U. S. 437, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

"Police power" is another name for that portion of the sovereignty of the state not surrendered by the terms of the national compact. The police power, as that term is commonly employed, may be paraphrased as society's natural right of self-defense, and its definition and limitation vary with the circumstance calling for its exercise. To embalm it in any fixed or rigid formula would be to destroy its value, for it would then be deprived of its indispensable quality of adaptation to changing conditions, and thus defeat the ends it was intended to promote. McGuire v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 108 N. W. 902, 907, 131 Iowa, 340, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 706 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 542).

"Police power" is one of the inherent powers of all sovereign states. The states composing the United States were vested with this power when they entered into the federal compact, and, not being among the enumerated powers granted to the federal government, they were reserved by the states to be exercised and administered within their respective jurisdictions. The amendments to the federal Constitution, and especially the fourteenth amendment, do not in any way interfere with the states in the exercise of this power. The power is comprehensive and its limits are difficult to define. As stated in Cooley's Const. Lim. (8th Ed.) 704: "The police power of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its system of internal regulation, by which it is sought, not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish, for the intercourse of citizen with citizen, those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to secure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as it is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others." As stated in 8 Cyc. pp. 863, 871: "Police power is the name given to that inherent sovereignty which is the right and duty of the government or its agents to exercise, whenever public policy, in a broad sense, demands for the benefit of society at large regulations to guard its morals, safety, health, order, or to secure in every respect such economic conditions as an advancing civilization of a higher complex character requires. * * * It is the duty of the police power to adopt all measures necessary for the preservation of the rights of person and property from unlawful violence and disorder, and for the maintenance of peace and quiet." This power extends over a large range of subjects: The public health, the public morals, the public safety, the public welfare. The courts have wisely refrained from prescribing the limits to the exercise of the police power, and it has been held to embrace all legislation which prohibits things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and establishing such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons, and use and management of all property, as may be conducive to the public interest. Morrison v. State, 95 S. W. 494, 496, 116 Tenn. 534 (citing Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. [14 U. S.] 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; License Cases, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 504, 12 L. Ed. 256; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. [41 U. S.] 539, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Barbier v. Connolly, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923; Mugler v. Kansas, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205; Webster v. State, 82 S. W. 179, 110 Tenn. 504; Theilan v. Porter, 14 Lea [82 Tenn.] 626, 52 Am. Rep. 173).

Broadly speaking, the "police power" is all the power of the state which has not been delegated to the general government and which is not restricted by the Constitution. Though there are many definitions of "police power" and differentiations of the power of the state, it is immaterial what the power may be called, so long as it is known to exist. The General Assembly has all power for general legislation which is not delegated to the general government and which is not inhibited by the Constitution. Hendricks v. Block, 97 S. W. 63, 64, 80 Ark. 333.

"Police power" is a general term used to express the particular right of a government which is inherent in every sovereignty. It is nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions. And whether a state passes a quarantine law, or a law to punish offenses, or to establish courts of justice, or requiring certain instruments to be recorded, or to regulate commerce within its own limits, in every case it exercises the same power; that is to say, the power of sovereignty, the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion. This power must, however, be exercised in subordination to the provisions of the federal Constitution. If, in the assumed exercise of its police power, the Legislature of a state should directly and plainly violate a provision of the Constitution of the United States, such legislation would be void. McCully v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 110 S. W. 711, 717, 212 Mo. 1 (dissenting opinion of Woodson, J., quoting and adopting definition in License Cases, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 504, 583, 12 L. Ed. 256).

"The 'police power' is inherent in the several states and is left with them under the federal system of government, and may always be exercised by the state Legislatures." Barrett v. Rickard, 124 N. W. 153, 156, 85 Neb. 769.

Delegation of power

While the Legislature may delegate all or a part of its powers to municipalities, such as the taxing power, the "police power," and the power of eminent domain, the mere delegation of such powers does not divest the state of its sovereign right to exercise them for itself or to take them away from municipalities at its pleasure. City of Chicago v. M. & M. Hotel Co., 93 N. E. 753, 755, 248 Ill. 264.

The enactment of an ordinance directing and regulating the construction of buildings in cities, and requiring a permit from the city therefor, is an exercise of that great power called "police power." That power is vital and indispensable. Without it cities and towns could not exist. That power is vested in the state; but, it being utterly impracticable that the state Legislature and executive could regulate by their constant presence all the doings in cities and towns, it became indispensable that the state should delegate the exercise of such power to those petit states, the cities and towns. Municipal corporations have exercised the police power eo nomine for time out of mind by making regulations to preserve order, to promote freedom of communication, and to facilitate the transaction of business in crowded communities; and this power of local legislation may be conferred upon the smallest village that the Legislature sees fit to incorporate, as well as upon the largest city in the state. The extent of their police powers depends upon the limitations of their charters. The power to be exercised is frequently restricted to the one phrase "police powers," and the ordinances must then be reasonable regulations upon subjects which are recognized as falling within the scope of such powers. Fellows v. Charleston, 59 S. E. 623, 624, 62 W. Va. 665, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737, 125 Am. St. Rep. 990, 13 Ann. Cas. 1185.

"Court and law writers have found it difficult to define the extent and boundaries of the 'police power.' It certainly extends to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens and to the preservation of good order and public morals. Every citizen has the constitutional guaranty of life, liberty, and the enjoyment of his property, and they cannot be taken from him except by due process of law. Social and conventional rights, however, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as will prevent them from being dangerous and hurtful to the body politic, and the law-making department of the government, under the power vested in it by the Constitution, can enact laws providing for such reasonable restraints and regulations as may be necessary and expedient to secure social order and public morals." A city council has a large discretion in the enactment of ordinances, and an ordinance enacted under the police power will not be declared void unless it is clearly oppressive or unreasonable. Commonwealth, for Use of City of Madisonville, v. Price, 94 S. W. 32, 33, 123 Ky. 163, 13 Ann. Cas. 489 (quoting and adopting definition in Dunn v. Commonwealth, 105 Ky. 834, 49 S. W. 813, 43 L. R. A. 701, 88 Am. St. Rep. 344).

"The 'police powers' of the states may, in the absence of any constitutional restrictions upon the subject, be delegated to the various municipalities throughout the state, to be exercised by them within the corporate limits. And indeed such delegation is necessary, for it is a well-recognized principle in government that the police requirements of a city are different from those of the state at large, and that stricter regulations are essential to the good order and peace of a crowded metropolis than are required in the sparsely peopled portions of the country." "The police power of the state, being an expression of the instinct of self-preservation and protection characteristic of every living creature, is an inherent faculty and function of life, attributed to all self-governing bodies as indispensable to their healthy existence and to the public welfare. It embraces all rules and regulations for the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of persons, and the preservation and security of property. * * * After repeated challenge of municipal authority to exercise the police power, on the ground that it is a sovereign power and therefore nondelegable, the doctrine is firmly established and now well recognized that the Legislature may expressly or by implication delegate to municipal corporations the lawful exercise of police power within their boundaries. The measure of power thus conferred is subject to the legislative discretion." Barrett v. Rickard, 124 N. W. 153, 156, 85 Neb. 769 (quoting 28 Cyc. p. 692).

"The governmental power under which the care and control of prisons fall is the great one commonly called the 'police power.'" And in caring for prisons a county exercises part of this great power by virtue of its delegation by the Legislature to it. Pritchett v. Board of Commissioners of Knox County, 85 N. E. 32, 34, 42 Ind. App. 3 (quoting and adopting definitions in Board of Com'rs of Jasper County v. Allman, 42 N. E. 206, 142 Ind. 573, 39 L. R. A. 58).

The "police power," so called, rests at common law, and in this state also, by reservation in the Constitution. In the absence of constitutional restrictions, this power may be delegated by a state to municipal corporations, to be exercised within their corporate limits; but, whether the power be so delegated or otherwise, it is a governmental function, founded upon the duty of the state to protect the public safety, the public health, and the public morals. A municipality, constructing and maintaining a jail, as expressly authorized by V. S. 5302-5304, is exercising a governmental power, and is not liable at common law for negligence to one committed to the jail to await an examination, as expressly authorized by section 5305. Carty's Adm'r v. Village of Winooski, 62 Atl. 45, 46, 78 Vt. 104, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 95, 6 Ann. Cas. 436 (citing Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 19 Sup. Ct. 565, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. Ed. 858; License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. Ed. 256).

"The exercise of the 'police power' for the protection of safety, order, and morals constitutes the 'police power' in the narrower or primary sense of the term. It is a power so vital to the community that it is often conceded to local authorities of limited powers. It is the 'police power' in this narrower sense of the term which the Supreme Court of the United States concedes on principle to states even where its exercise affects interstate and foreign commerce." Peace v. McAdoo, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1039, 110 App. Div. 18 (quoting Freund, Police Powers, § 10).

"The 'police power' is included in the legislative power, but there are in the Constitution express limitations upon some of the powers comprised in the police power, and the term 'police power' is used to designate that power from others, and is helpful in ascertaining its scope and the limitations upon it." "The police power of the state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety." The state may, in the exercise of the police power, delegate authority to municipal corporations to license and regulate chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers. Sanning v. City of Cincinnati, 90 N. E. 125, 127, 81 Ohio, 142, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686 (quoting Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Drainage Com'rs, 200 U. S. 561-592, 26 Sup. Ct. 841, 349, 60 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175).

The "police power" extends to the making of laws which are necessary for the preservation of the state itself, to secure the uninterrupted discharge of its legitimate functions, for the prevention and punishment of crime, for the preservation of the public peace and order, and for the protection of all members of the state in the enjoyment of their just rights against fraud and oppression. Under the American system of government, plenary authority to make police regulations is vested in the Legislatures of the different states, restricted only by the paramount authority of positive constitutional prohibitions. It is vested in a subordinate and delegated manner in the authorities of municipal corporations. It must be observed that there is not a distinct police power inherent in municipal corporations, other than that of the state to which they owe their existence. Of course, the police power delegated to a municipal corporation is not exclusive of that retained by the state. That is, municipal police regulations must yield to the general laws of the state whenever there is a conflict between them. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 982, 980, 16 N. D. 470 (dissenting opinion of Spalding, J., citing Cooley, Const. Lim. §§ 109, 110).

Eminent domain distinguished

"The 'police power' is to be clearly distinguished from the right of 'eminent domain,' and the distinction lies in this: That, in the exercise of the latter right, private property is taken for public use, and the owner is invariably entitled to compensation therefor, while the police power is usually exerted merely to regulate the use and enjoyment of property by the owner, or, if he is deprived of his property outright, it is not taken for public use, but rather destroyed in order to promote the general welfare of the public, and in neither case is the owner entitled to any compensation for any injury which he may sustain in consequence thereof, for the law considers that either the injury is damnum absque injuria, or the owner is sufficiently compensated by sharing in the general benefits resulting from the exercise of the police power." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. People, 72 N. E. 219, 224, 212 Ill. 103 (citing Frazier v. City of Chicago, 57 N. E. 1055, 186 Ill. 480, 51 L. R. A. 306, 78 Am. St. Rep. 296).

It is a well-recognized principle in the decisions of the state and federal courts that the citizen holds his property subject, not only to the exercise of the right of "eminent domain" by the state, but also subject to the lawful exercise of the "police power" by the Legislature. In the one case, property is taken by condemnation and due compensation; in the other, the necessary and reasonable expenses and loss of property in making reasonable changes in existing structures, or in erecting additions thereto, are damnum absque injuria. Laws 1901, p. 912, c. 334, § 100, as amended by Laws 1902, p. 937, c. 352, § 47, generally known as the "Tenement House Act," requiring all school sinks in the existing tenement houses in cities of the first class to be removed and replaced by water-closets, is a proper and constitutional exercise of the police power of the state for the protection of the public health. Tenement House Dept. of City of New York v. Moesch, 72 N. E. 231, 232, 179 N. Y. 325, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439.

An ordinance requiring railroad companies at their own expense to reduce their tracks at crossings to grade is the exercise of the "police power" over crossings and not the power of "eminent domain." The limitation, in the power of eminent domain, that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without adequate compensation does not of itself impose any restrictions on the proper employment of the police power on any subject lying within its sphere in a proper and lawful manner. Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Dallas, 64 S. W. 648, 651, 98 Tex. 396, 70 L. R. A. 850.

Extent of power

The "police power" of the state is the power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. In re Boyce, 75 Pac. 1, 8, 27 Nev. 299, 65 L. R. A. 47, 1 Ann. Cas. 66 (quoting People v. Lochner, 76 N. Y. Supp. 399, 73 App. Div. 120).

The "police power" of a state is that inherent and plenary power in the state which enables it to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Oldknow v. City of Atlanta, 71 S. E. 1015, 9 Ga. App. 594.

"The 'police power' of a state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety." Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 349, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175 (citing Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 173 U. S. 285, 292, 43 L. Ed. 702, 704; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 713, 729, 18 L. Ed. 525, 527; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 470, 24 L. Ed. 529).

The subjects for the exercise of the "police power" are, first, preservation of the public health; second, preservation of the public morals; third, regulation of business enterprises; fourth, regulation of civil rights of individuals; and, fifth, the general welfare and safety of the citizens. Commonwealth v. Reinecke Coal Min. Co., 79 S. W. 287, 290, 117 Ky. 885.

The "police power" of the state is that power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth and of the subjects of the same. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290, 299 (quoting with approval from Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. [Mass.] 53, 85).

The "police powers" of a state or municipality do not extend to the passage of laws or ordinances which violate fundamental rights secured by the federal Constitution. Kansas City Gas Co. v. Kansas City, 198 Fed. 500, 511.

The exercise of the "police power" is not limited to regulations to promote the public health, morals, or safety, and it may be extended to such regulations as will promote public convenience and general prosperity. Williams v. State, 108 S. W. 838, 839, 85 Ark. 464, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 482, 122 Am. St. Rep. 47.

"The 'police power,' in its broadest acceptance, means the general power of a government to preserve the public welfare by prohibiting all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and establishing such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons and the use and management of all property as may be conducive to the public interest." Caven v. Coleman (Tex.) 96 S. W. 774, 778.

The "police power" of the state not only embraces laws intended to promote the public health, morals, or safety, or to suppress that which is disorderly or unsanitary but it also embraces laws which conduce to the general welfare of the public or state. Morris v. City of Indianapolis, 94 N. E. 705, 714, 177 Ind. 369.

The "police power" is the inherent and plenary power residing within constitutional limitations in the Legislature to pass wholesome and reasonable laws for the good and welfare of the people of the state. Carr v. State, 93 N. E. 1071, 1078, 175 Ind. 241, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190.

"Police power" is: " * * * The power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same. It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and services of this power than to mark its boundaries or prescribe limits to its exercise." State v. Robb, 60 Atl. 874, 876, 100 Me. 180, 4 Ann. Cas. 275 (quoting and adopting the definition in Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. [61 Mass.] 85).

The "police power" is the power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they may judge to be for the good and welfare of the public. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 604, 610, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

The "police power" is a term which has relation to a power to enact a system of regulations tending to the health, order, convenience, and comfort of a state's inhabitants and to the prevention and punishment of public injuries and offenses. State v. Penny, 111 Pac. 727, 730, 42 Mont. 118, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155.

The absolute freedom from restraint which an individual has as a natural right yields to the necessities of the public welfare when the public welfare demands that this right be temporarily impaired. These temporary invasions of natural right are what is known as the "exercise of police power," and the act of declaring what temporary invasion of the natural rights of liberty and personal immunity are necessary in the exercise of the police power for the common welfare is solely a legislative act, and hence, where no statutory authority is shown for photographing and measuring, under the Bertillon system, persons accused of an offense, after arraignment and admission to bail, the police department of a city has no authority to exercise such power. People ex rel. Gow v. Bingham, 107 N. Y. Supp. 1011, 1014, 57 Misc. Rep. 66.

In general "police power" extends to all the great public needs that may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and predominant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare. Cunningham v. Northwestern Improvement Co., 119 Pac. 554, 560, 44 Mont. 180.

The "police power" of a state is the right to prescribe regulations for the good order, peace, protection, comfort, convenience, and morals of the community, and its essential quality as a governmental agency is that it imposes on persons and property burdens designed to promote the health and safety of the public at large. Commonwealth v. Plymouth Coal Co., 81 Atl. 148, 150, 232 Pa. 141.

The "police power" is the general power of the state to preserve and promote the public health, peace, comfort, and morals, and statutes which but indirectly affect the common good are sustainable as an exercise of the police power, provided they are reasonable. State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Court for King County, 120 Pac. 861, 862, 67 Wash. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 78.

"Police power," in its most comprehensive sense, embraces the whole system by which the state seeks to preserve the public order, to prevent offenses against the law, to insure to citizens in their intercourse with each other the enjoyment of their own, so far as is reasonably consistent, with the like enjoyment of rights by others, but is completely subject to the Constitution, and does not exist, except with reference to matters clearly within the conservation of the public health, safety, and welfare. Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 431, 442, 201 N. Y.

The "police power" of a state is the power "to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity." Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 30, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105 (quoting and adopting the definition in Barbier v. Connelly, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923).

The "police power" is an exercise of the sovereign right of government to protect the lives, health, morals, comfort, and general welfare of the people, and is paramount to any rights under contracts between individuals. The obligations of an agreement to remove an existing dam from a navigable stream, and to allow the stream to remain open and unobstructed, are not unconstitutionally impaired by a state statute subsequently enacted in the exercise of the police power to subserve the drainage of lowlands, authorizing the construction of a dam across the stream by the very persons making such agreement. Manigault v. Springs, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 130, 199 U. S. 473, 50 L. Ed. 274.

"Although this court has refrained from any attempt to define the limits of that power, yet it has distinctly recognized the authority of a state to enact quarantine laws and 'health laws of every description'; indeed, all laws that relate to matters completely within its territory, and which do not by their necessary operation affect the people of other states. According to settled principles, the "police power" of a state must be held to embrace at least such reasonable regulations established directly by legislative enactment as will protect the public health and the public safety. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 360, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 203, 6 L. Ed. 23, 71; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 470, 24 L. Ed. 527, 530; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. Ed. 989; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co., 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 115 U. S. 650, 661, 29 L. Ed. 516, 520; Lawton v. Steele, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. Ed. 385).

The "police power" is the inherent and plenary power in the state enabling it to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and to adopt such regulations as will promote the same. People v. Steele, 83 N. E. 236, 237, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321; City of Chicago v. Powers, 83 N. E. 240, 231 Ill. 560.

The "police power" springs from the fundamental principle that every property owner must so use his own as not to endanger the safety, health, and general welfare of the community. It operates on an existing evil that injuriously affects the health, morals, safety, or general welfare of the community, and is a power to which every person and corporation must yield obedience, and from which the state itself cannot grant exemption. Cincinnati, I. & W. Ry. Co. v. City of Connersville, 88 N. E. 503, 506, 170 Ind. 316.

The "police power" is limited to the prevention and punishment of such acts as may menace the welfare, happiness, morals or peace of the state and of the people, and as these cannot be imperilled by the exercise of a right to resort to a federal court, given by the law of the land, no court can recognize the bringing of such suit as any legal cause for the forfeiture of any vested right of property. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 155 Fed. 792, 804.

Under its "police power" a state has the right to determine what is dangerous and injurious to the public health, morals, and safety. Massie v. Cessna, 88 N. E. 152, 154, 239 Ill. 352; McCord v. State, 101 Pac. 280, 282, 2 Okl. Cr. 214.

A state's "police power" involves the right to make regulations for the protection of public health, safety, morals, peace, education, good order, convenience, and general prosperity. State v. Sherman, 105 Pac. 299, 300, 18 Wyo. 169, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 819.

The "police power" embraces the whole system of internal regulation by which the state seeks to preserve public order, and to establish, for the intercourse of citizens with citizens, those rules of good manners which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others; and restraints on human action, necessary to the uniform and reasonable enjoyment of private rights, are an exercise of the police power. Nash Hardware Co. v. Morris, 146 S. W. 874, 876, 105 Tex. 217.

The "police power" of a state includes the power to prescribe such regulations in the use of inherently dangerous property as will render the consequent danger as small as possible. Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Pruitt, 110 S. W. 966, 968, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 370 (quoting and adopting 3 Elliott, R. R. [2d Ed.] § 1182).

The "police power" of the state extends to the protection of the lives, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons and the protection of all property within the state; and persons and property are subjected to such restrictions and burdens as are reasonably necessary to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity. Town of Canaan v. Enfield Village Fire Dist., 70 Atl. 260, 261, 74

N. H. 517 (concurring opinion, quoting and adopting definition in State v. White, 5 Atl. 828, 830, 64 N. H. 48, 50, and citing State v. United States & C. Express Co., 60 N. H. 219).

The "police power" of the state is the power to make laws to secure the comfort, peace, convenience, and health of the community. It derives its existence from the rule that the safety of the people is the supreme law, justifying legislation upon matters pertaining to public welfare, the public health, or the public morals. Ex parte Elam, 91 Pac. 811, 812, 6 Cal. App. 233 (citing Ex parte Whitwell, 32 Pac. 870, 98 Cal. 78, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; Ex parte Drexel, 82 Pac. 429, 147 Cal. 766, 2 L. R. A. [N. S.] 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878).

"The 'police power' of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its whole system of internal regulation, by which the state seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizens with citizens those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others. The 'police power' is the power vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same. It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power than to mark its boundaries, or prescribe limits to its exercise. 'This police power of the state' says an eminent judge, 'extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state. According to the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas," which being of universal application, it must, of course be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others.' And again: (By this) 'general police power of the state, persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraint and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state; of the perfect right in the Legislature to do which no question ever was, or, upon acknowledged general principles, ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned.' And neither the power itself, nor the discretion to exercise it as need may require, can be bargained away by the state. In the American constitutional system the power to establish the ordinary regulations of police has been left with the individual states, and it cannot be taken from them, either wholly or in part, and exercised under legislation of Congress. Neither can the national government, through any of its departments or officers, assume any supervision of the police regulations of the states. All that the federal authority can do is to see that the states do not, under cover of this power, invade the sphere of national sovereignty, obstruct or impede the exercise of any authority which the Constitution has confided to the nation, or deprive any citizen of rights guaranteed by the federal Constitution." "There is also a common assent that the Legislature has the right of control in all matters affecting public safety, health, and welfare on the ground that these are within the indefinable but unquestioned purview of what is known as the police power. It is indefinable because none can foresee the everchanging conditions which may call for its exercise; and it is unquestioned because it is a necessary function of government to provide for the safety and welfare of the people. Private rights are often involved in its exercise, but a law is not on that account rendered invalid or unconstitutional. The first inquiry is whether the subject of the law is within the power, for, if it is, the Legislature has jurisdiction to enact it, and its terms are subject to a reasonable legislative discretion." State v. Kofines, 80 Atl. 432, 436, 437, 33 R. I. 211, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1120 (quoting and adopting definitions from Cooley Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 829 et seq; Opinion to the Governor, 54 Atl. 602, 603, 24 R. I. 603, 605).

"The 'police power' extends to all regulations affecting the health, good order, morals, peace, and safety of society, and under it all sorts of restrictions and burdens are imposed; and, when they are not in conflict with any constitutional principles, they cannot be successfully assailed in a judicial tribunal." Commonwealth v. Andrews, 60 Atl. 554, 555, 211 Pa. 110 (quoting and adopting Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 85 U. S. [18 Wall.] 123, 21 L. Ed. 929).

"Police power" is that broad and comprehensive authority which resides in the lawmaking branch of the state government, and which it is permitted by the Constitution to exercise to provide for the comfort, the safety, and welfare of society by regulating and controlling the conduct of the citizen in respect to himself and his property. Wright v. Hart, 93 N. Y. Supp. 60, 62, 67, 103 App. Div. 218.

"Police powers" embrace the powers of government to preserve and promote public welfare, the safety, health, good order, and happiness of the people, and authorize the establishment of such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons and for the use and management of all property as may be conducive to the public interest and welfare. Nobel v. Bragaw, 85 Pac. 903, 12 Idaho, 285.

Same—Abatement of nuisances

The "police power" of the state extends to everything necessary to the due protection of public morals and the maintenance of the peace and quiet of the state as well as the protection of life and property, and in the exercise of that power the state may authorize its officers to summarily abate and destroy nuisances and those things specifically designed for the commission of crime. J. B. Mullen & Co. v. Mosley, 90 Pac. 986, 989, 13 Idaho, 457.

"Police power" includes everything essential to the public safety, health, and morals, and justifies the destruction or abatement, by summary proceedings, of whatever may be regarded as a public nuisance. Bland v. People, 76 Pac. 359, 362, 32 Colo. 319, 65 L. R. A. 424, 105 Am. St. Rep. 80 (citing Lawton v. Steele, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. Ed. 385); State v. Tower, 84 S. W. 10, 12, 185 Mo. 79, 68 L. R. A. 402 (citing Lawton v. Steele, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. Ed. 385).

Same—Primary elections

The "police power" is that attribute of government by which the Legislature is authorized to pass laws to constrain the conduct of citizens for the benefit of the public good. Limitations of strictly natural rights and regulation of constitutional rights are not incompatible with the valid exercise of the "police power." Primary elections are so far matters of public concern that they are, at the discretion of the Legislature, proper objects of reasonable statutory regulation under its police power. Hopper v. Stack, 56 Atl. 1, 3, 69 N. J. Law, 562.

Same—Running, registration, and license of motor vehicles

The provisions of a statute requiring every owner to file a declaration that he is competent to drive a motor vehicle and a statement of the name and address of the owner, of the maker, and number of the machine, and its rated horse power, and requiring the registration and license of the machine, are within the exercise of the police power of the state. Unwen v. State, 64 Atl. 163, 164, 73 N. J. Law, 529.

Same—Separation of races

A city ordinance for the separation of the races on the street cars is within the incidental "police powers" of the city. Patterson v. Taylor, 40 South. 493, 495, 51 Fla. 275.

No jurist has dared to attempt to state the limit in law of that quality in government which is exercised through what is termed the "police power." All agree that, very broadly and indefinitely speaking, it is the power and obligation of government to secure and promote the general welfare, comfort, and convenience of the citizens as well as the public peace, public health, public morals, and the public safety. Act March 22, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 181, c. 85), in so far as it prohibits and imposes a punishment for maintaining and operating an institution of learning in which white and colored persons may be taught at the same time and in the same place, is within the police power, and valid. Act March 22, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 181, c. 85), in so far as it prohibits maintenance by an institution of learning of separate and distinct branches for white and colored persons, less than 25 miles distant from each other, is unreasonable, and not within the police power. Berea College v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 623, 624, 123 Ky. 209, 124 Am. St. Rep. 344, 13 Ann. Cas. 337 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 704; Tied. Lim. Police Power, 212; 1 Hare, American Const. Law, 766).

The "police powers of the states" means the "power to enact laws to promote the order and to secure the comfort, happiness, and the health of the people." Though Acts 1904, p. 186, c. 109, requiring carriers to provide separate coaches for the transportation of white and colored passengers, and making it an offense for a passenger to refuse to occupy the car to which he is assigned by the conductor, is valid in so far as it affects commerce wholly within the state, it is invalid as to interstate passengers, under the commerce clause of the federal Constitution. Hart v. State, 60 Atl. 457, 459, 100 Md. 595 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hennington v. Georgia, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. Ed. 168).

Grounds of power

The "police power" extends to the enactment of all laws which, in contemplation of the Constitution, promote the public welfare. "It has been not inaptly termed 'the law of necessity.'" The doctrine that the "police power" is a law of necessity may well be said to furnish the key to what is within and what is without the boundaries of such power; not that a police regulation to be legitimate must be an absolute essential to the public welfare, but that the exigency to be met must so concern such welfare as to suggest, reasonably, necessity for a legislative remedy, the Legislature to be the primary judge and the supreme judge as well as to interferences so unreasonable as to be excessive beyond reasonable controversy. State v. Redmon, 114 N. W. 137, 140, 134 Wis. 89.

"Police power" of the state is a power resorted to only of necessity in the protection and promotion of the life, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Larabee v. Doley, 175 Fed. 365, 389.

The "police power" of the state is that inherent or plenary power which enables the state to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and may be termed the "law of overruling necessity." Anything which is hurtful to the public interest is subject to the police power and may be restrained or prohibited in the exercise of that power. All rights, whether tenable or untenable, are held subject to this power. City of Chicago v. Gunning System, 73 N. E. 1035, 1038, 214 Ill. 628, 70 L. R. A. 230, 2 Ann. Cas. 892.

Public health

Under the "police power" there is a general legislative authority to pass such laws as is believed will promote the common good, or will protect and preserve the public health. The power to determine what laws are necessary to promote or secure these objects rests primarily with the General Assembly, subject to the power of the courts to decide whether a particular enactment is to that end. Vaccination, while made compulsory in a few of the states, is countenanced and promoted by legislation in nearly all of them, and statutes authorizing boards of education, or the local school authorities, to require vaccination as a prerequisite to attendance upon the public schools have been almost uniformly upheld and sustained by the courts as a reasonable and proper exercise of the "police power." The enactment of Rev. St. § 3986, authorizing boards of education "to make and enforce such rules and regulations to secure the vaccination of, and to prevent the spread of smallpox among, the pupils attending, or likely to attend, schools of the district, as in its opinion the safety and interest of the public require," is a reasonable exercise of the "police power" of the state. State ex rel. Milhoof v. Board of Education of Village of Barberton, 81 N. E. 568, 569, 76 Ohio St. 717 (citing Abeel v. Clark, 24 Pac. 383, 84 Cal. 226; Commonwealth v. Pear, 66 N. E. 719, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L. R. A. 935; Hutchins v. School Committee of Town of Durham, 49 S. E. 46, 187 N. C. 68, 2 Ann. Cas. 340; Blue v. Beach, 56 N. E. 89, 155 Ind. 121, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195; In re August Rebenack, 62 Mo. App. 8; Duffield v. Williamsport School District, 29 Atl. 742, 162 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152; Fleld v. Robinson, 48 Atl. 873, 198 Pa. 638; Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, vol. 1, § 17; Parker & Worthington's Public Health & Safety, § 123).

The Legislature is entitled in the exercise of its "police power" to prohibit the sale of cigarettes. People ex rel. Berlitzheimer v. Busse, 83 N. E. 175, 231 Ill. 251.

"Police power" is "the general power of the government to protect and promote the public welfare, even at the expense of private rights" (citing definition in Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 57 N. E. 798, 50 L. R. A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229). "The police power was not surrendered by the states to the federal government, and is an inherent right of every sovereignty. * * * It is clearly within the 'police power' to protect the lives and health of the people by the seizure, condemnation, and destruction of impure and dangerous articles of food." North American Cold Storage Co. v. City of Chicago, 151 Fed. 120, 123.

A statute providing for the exclusion of unvaccinated children from the public schools does not involve, in its application, trespass on the reserved rights of the individual beyond the reach of the "police power" from the fact that vaccination is the infliction of a disease on the subject. Stull v. Reber, 64 Atl. 419, 421, 215 Pa. 156, 7 Ann. Cas. 415.

Every law for the restraint and punishment of a crime, for the preservation of public peace, health, and morals, comes within the "police power." That power embraces all those matters which affect the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and welfare of all in their persons and their property, and subjects both persons and property to those restraints and burdens which are necessary in order that the general comfort and welfare may be secured. A law requiring vaccination of children as a condition of their attendance on public schools is a valid exercise of the "police power." Viemeister v. White, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, 716, 88 App. Div. 44.

Public morals

It cannot be doubted that the regulation of the sale of liquor comes within the scope of the "police power." South Carolina v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 113, 199 U. S. 437, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

The right to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors by retail by the Legislature, or by municipal or other authority, under legislative power given, is within the "police power" of the state and is practically limitless. It may extend to the prohibition of the sale altogether. Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 64 Atl. 689, 690, 73 N. J. Law, 382.

Much has been said in respect to the limits of "police power," but no text-writer or court of last resort has definitely established its confines. Its boundary must therefore be coextensive with and measured only by the necessity which calls for its exercise. To this extent the state may employ such power, or it may delegate the whole or a part thereof to a municipal corporation as its subordinate agent; an ordinance interdicting sale of intoxicating liquors in any side room, back room, upper room, alcove, booth, or box connected with a saloon is a valid exercise of police power. Sandys v. Williams, 80 Pac. 642, 646, 46 Or. 327 (citing Stone v. Mississippi, 100 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079).

While a city or municipality may act under the guise of a police regulation, exact a tax, and it is true that laws enacted under the police power must have reference to the supervision, control, and regulation of some act or thing which may in some way injuriously affect the peace, good order, health, morality, or safety of society, an ordinance requiring all dealers in liquors to procure a license from the city is a valid exercise of the "police power," and is not invalid in its application to a nonresident manufacturer of liquors. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Superior, 123 Fed. 353, 359, 59 C. C. A. 481.

The "police power" embraces the whole system of internal regulation by which the state seeks, not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizens with citizens those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment by others. Blackstone says that "police power" is the due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the inhabitants of a state, like members of a well-governed family, are bound to conform their behavior to the rules of propriety, good neighborhood, and good manners, and to be decent, industrious, and inoffensive in their respective stations. The retail traffic in intoxicating liquors is a business in which a person has no inherent right to engage, and the state, in the exercise of its police power, may prohibit or regulate it by the imposition of such conditions and restrictions as it sees fit, provided the restrictions do not interfere with interstate commerce. Reed v. Collins, 90 Pac. 973, 976, 5 Cal. App. 494.

The "police powers" of a state form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a state not surrendered to the general government; all which may be most advantageously exercised by the states themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for the regulating the internal commerce of a state, and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, etc., are component parts of this mass. A license tax imposed under municipal ordinance upon those engaged in selling beer in the city by the barrel, half barrel, or quarter barrel must be regarded, even when applied to interstate transactions in the original packages, as an exercise of the police power permitted by the Wilson Act of August 8, 1890 (26 Stat. 813, c. 728), subjecting intoxicating liquors arriving in a state to the laws of such state enacted in the exercise of its police powers, although the city may derive more or less revenue from the ordinance in question. Phillips v. City of Mobile, 28 Sup. Ct. 370, 372, 208 U. S. 472, 52 L. Ed. 578.

Without attempting to define what are peculiar subjects or limits of the "police power," it may be safely affirmed that every law for the restraint or punishment of crime for the preservation of public peace, health, and morals must come within this category. The provision of Rev. St. § 2139, as amended by Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, 29 Stat. 506, which makes it a criminal offense to introduce liquor into the Indian Territory, is a police regulation and can be enforced only as to land within the exclusive territorial jurisdiction of the United States. United States v. Sutton, 165 Fed. 253, 255 (quoting and adopting definition in License Cases, 5 How. [46 U. S.] 504, 12 L. Ed. 256, and citing Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, Ex parte Dick, 141 Fed. 5, 72 C. C. A. 667, and United States v. Boss, 160 Fed. 182).

The "police power" is vested in the state government. It is exercised primarily by the Legislature, which may adopt any measure within the extent of the power, appropriate and needful, for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety. The Legislature, in the exercise of the police power, by appropriate enactments, may regulate and, if they deem it conducive to the public health, morals, peace, or safety, entirely prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and for the purpose of making effective such legislation may make it criminal for any person to have such liquors in his possession, within the territory where the sale or gift is prohibited, with intent to sell or give away, and may prescribe or change the rules of evidence by making such possession prima facie evidence of a guilty intent. State v. Williams, 61 S. E. 61, 64, 146 N. C. 618, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 14 Ann. Cas. 562.

The "police power of the United States" can only be exercised where the legislative authority of Congress excludes territorially all state legislation; and where the United States has conveyed under its land laws lands within a state ceded to it by an Indian tribe, and such lands have passed into the ownership of individuals and a municipality of the state which has been formed thereon, they are no longer subject to the provisions of Rev. St. § 2139, as amended by Act Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, 29 Stat. 506, making it an offense to introduce liquor into the Indian country; nor can that law be retained in force over such lands by agreement with the Indians in the contract or treaty of cession, the police power of the state to regulate the sale of liquor thereon being exclusive. Ex parte Dick, 141 Fed. 5, 7, 72 C. C. A. 667 (citing United States v. De Witt, 9 Wall. [76 U. S.] 41, 45, 19 L. Ed. 593; Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 36, 64, 21 L. Ed. 394).

Public welfare

An act imposing a per capita tax on dogs is valid as an exercise of the "police power" of the state. State v. Sharp, 81 N. E. 1150, 1152, 169 Ind. 128.

A statute prohibiting the having of oysters in possession containing more than 5 per cent. of shells or the taking of oysters less than $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches from hinge to mouth is a proper exercise of the state's "police power." Windsor v. State, 64 Atl. 288, 292, 108 Md. 611, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 869.

A statute making it an offense to permit a female under the age of 21 years to remain in or about a saloon is within the "police power." State v. Baker, 92 Pac. 1076, 1078, 50 Or. 381, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040.

In the exercise of its "police power," a state may prohibit the conduct of business on Sunday. State v. Dolan, 92 Pac. 995, 998, 13 Idaho, 693, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1259.

In the exercise of the "police power," the Legislature may enact laws for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and designate officers charged with the execution thereof. Jenks v. Stump, 93 Pac. 17, 18, 41 Colo. 281, 124 Am. St. Rep. 137, 14 Ann. Cas. 914.

It is competent for the Legislature, in the exercise of its "police power," to take steps for the protection of the lives and limbs of employes who may be exposed to dangerous agencies in the control of others. Laws 1906, c. 657, relating to actions for personal injury or death of railroad employes, and defining fellow servants, is not invalid. Schradin v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 73, 75 (citing Indianapolis Union R. R. v. Houlihan, 60 N. E. 943, 157 Ind. 494, 54 L. R. A. 787).

The "police power" was well known to the common law, and was defined by Blackstone prior to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States (4 Blackstone Comm. 162). Municipal corporations have exercised this power from the beginning of our government, and it is necessary to the tranquillity, safety, and protection of every well-ordered community; and Constitutions and statutes, in the absence of provisions to the contrary, are to be construed with reference to that fact. The power is very broad and comprehensive and is exercised to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. An ordinance requiring occupants of premises to keep abutting sidewalks free from ice and snow, under penalty, is a valid exercise of municipal police power. City of Helena v. Kent, 80 Pac. 258, 259, 32 Mont. 279, 4 Ann. Cas. 235 (quoting In re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 686, and citing Village of Carthage v. Frederick, 25 N. E. 480, 122 N. Y. 268, 10 L. R. A. 173, 19 Am. St. Rep. 490).

Regulation of business and occupations

The term "police power" has generally been defined to be that power which a state or municipality has to enact laws or ordinances which pertain to the public safety, the public health, or the public morals. A statute, therefore, prohibiting, regulating, or interfering with private business, can be upheld only under the police power, and that police power can be rightfully exercised only when the statute in question is for the protection of the public safety, the public health, or the public morals. Ex parte Drexel, 8 Pac. 429, 430, 147 Cal. 763, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878 (citing Young v. Commonwealth, 45 S. E. 327, 101 Va. 853).

The "police power" of a state is recognized by the courts to be one of wide sweep. It is exercised by the state in order to promote the health, safety, comfort, morals, and welfare of the public. The right to exercise this power is said to be inherent in the people in every free government. It is not a grant, derived from or under any written Constitution. It is not, however, without limitation, and it cannot be invoked so as to invade the fundamental rights of a citizen. As a general proposition, it may be asserted that it is the province of the Legislature to decide when the exigency exists for the exercise of this power, but as to what are the subjects which come within it is evidently a judicial question. Under Burns' Rev. St. § 3794 (Indianapolis City Charter, § 23), the city has no power to pass an ordinance requiring roads operating within the corporate limits to construct elevated tracks over all crossings within a prescribed district without regard to the conditions or circumstances of any particular crossing. State ex rel. City of Indianapolis v. Indianapolis Union Ry. Co., 68 N. E. 163, 167, 160 Ind. 45, 60 L. R. A. 831 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Gerhardt, 44 N. E. 469, 145 Ind. 439, 33 L. R. A. 313).

The "police power" granted by the Constitution is not restricted to the suppression of nuisances. It includes the regulation of the conduct of business, or the use of property, to the end that the public health or morals may not be impaired or endangered. Laurel Hill Cemetery v. City and County of San Francisco, 93 Pac. 70, 73, 152 Cal. 464, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 14 Ann. Cas. 1080.

"To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear: First, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The Legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its 'police power' is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts." Act Feb. 28, 1909 (Weekly Wage Law; Laws 1899, p. 193, c.

124), providing that every person, company, or corporation employing any person to labor shall make weekly payments for the full amount due for such labor, and that the chief inspector, or any person interested, may bring suit in the name of the state against any person, company, or corporation that neglects or refuses to comply within 10 days after such payment is due and left unpaid, is not sustainable as a proper exercise of the state's "police power." Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. State, 66 N. E. 1005, 1007, 160 Ind. 379, 62 L. R. A. 136 (quoting and adopting definition in Lawton v. Steele, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 152 U. S. 133, 137, 38 L. Ed. 385).

A state statute imposing an inspection fee upon beer or other malt liquors shipped from other states into that state, and held there for sale and consumption therein, must, although producing a revenue, and not providing for an adequate inspection, be deemed enacted by the state "in the exercise of its police powers," within the meaning of Wilson Act Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, 26 Stat. 313, subjecting to laws so enacted all intoxicating liquors arriving in the state, where the highest state court has upheld as a valid police regulation so much of the statute as imposes the same fee on beer of domestic manufacture over the objection that it is a revenue measure, and not an inspection law. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 25 Sup. Ct. 552-556, 198 U. S. 17, 49 L. Ed. 925.

The "police power" includes the right to regulate or prohibit occupations which endanger the health, morals, or safety of the people. Ex parte Townsend, 144 S. W. 628, 631, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 350 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5424 et seq.).

The "police power" of a state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, morals, or safety, and, in a sense, the police power is but another name for the power of government. Making invalid against the employer assignments of or orders for wages to be earned in the future, unless recorded, accepted in writing by the employer, and accompanied by the written consent of the wife of the employé, as is done by Laws Mass. 1908, c. 605, §§ 7, 8, is a valid exercise of the "police power." Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 222 U. S. 225, 56 L. Ed. 175, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 521.

Courts generally refuse to attempt a definition of "police power" leaving each case to be decided as it arises. It may be said, however, that the police power is that attribute of sovereignty in a state by which it clothes the Legislature with power to regulate persons, natural and artificial, and property in accordance with the provisions of the state Constitution in all matters relating to the public health, morals, and safety.

Whatever may be its limitation, there seems to be no doubt that it does extend to the protection of the health and property of the citizens and to the preservation of good order and public morals. In 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 938, it is said that, in order for a statute or ordinance to be sustained as an exercise of the police power, the courts must be able to see: (1) That the enactment has for its object the prevention of some offense or manifest evil, or the preservation of the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare; and (2) that there is some clear, real, and substantial connection between the assumed purpose of the enactment and the actual provisions thereof, and that the latter do in some plain, appreciable, and appropriate manner tend towards the accomplishment of the object for which the power is exercised. The police power cannot be used as a cloak for the invasion of personal rights or private property, neither can it be exercised for private purposes, or for the exclusive benefit of particular individuals or classes, but its exercise must have in view the good of the citizens of the sovereignty as a whole. An act requiring fire insurance companies to pay annually a specified sum on premiums to create a pension fund for disabled firemen cannot be sustained on the ground that it is a police regulation. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Jones, 59 S. E. 148, 150, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818.

Professions or trades operating directly on the person and thereby directly affecting the health, comfort, and safety of the public may be regulated by the Legislature under the "police power," while other professions or trades cannot be so regulated without depriving the citizen of his natural rights guaranteed by the Constitution. A statute for the licensing of barbers, which provides, as a prerequisite to obtaining a license, that the applicant has studied the trade for two years as an apprentice under or as a qualified and practicing barber, is invalid because unreasonable and arbitrary; the manner of acquiring the necessary skill or knowledge being immaterial. State v. Walker, 92 Pac. 775, 776, 48 Wash. 8, 15 Ann. Cas. 257.

An ordinance forbidding any gift enterprise, defined to include the giving of any trading stamp, or other device, which shall entitle the purchaser of property to receive from any person or corporation, other than the vendor, any property other than that actually sold, is not justifiable as an exercise of the "police power." Denver v. Frueauff, 88 Pac. 389, 393, 39 Colo. 20, 12 Ann. Cas. 521.

"The 'police power' of the state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state." The clause of the United States Constitution, which forbids the passage of laws impairing the obligation of contracts, is frequently invoked by private corporations to prevent the Legislatures of the states from regulating and controlling them, but it is uniformly held by federal and state courts that they are subject to such regulations from time to time as may be deemed necessary to guard the rights of individuals and other corporations, shield the public health, and protect the safety of life and limb. There is no limit to this police power except that it must be exercised for the comfort, safety, or welfare of society; that it must not destroy any charter privilege, nor interfere with any vested right. Gen. Laws 1906, p. 386, c. 163, provides that, in a suit against a railroad for injuries to a servant the plea of assumed risk, where the ground thereof is knowledge or a means of knowledge of the defect, shall not be available where the servant had an opportunity to inform the master and did so within a reasonable time, or where a person of ordinary care would have continued in the service with knowledge of the defect, in which case it shall not be necessary for the servant to give notice of the defect. This statute is a measure passed, undoubtedly, to better protect the lives and limbs of those who are in the employment of railroads or street railways. It is an exercise of the police power of the state over the creatures that it has by its legislative fiat brought into existence. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Foth, 100 S. W. 171, 175, 101 Tex. 133 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 831).

No exact definition of the extent of "police power" has or perhaps can be given. Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, has approved that given by Chief Justice Shaw in Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. (61 Mass.) 53, which is as follows: "All property in this commonwealth is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. Rights of property, like all other usual and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law, as the Legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient. * * * The power is vested in the Legislature by the Constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth and of the subjects of the same. It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and source of this power than to mark its boundaries and limit its exercise." Ky. St. 1899, § 1274, prohibiting the sale of milk from cows fed on "still sloop," being a regulation within the police power of the state, is not in conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, declaring that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, though there is no evidence contradictory of the claim that still sloop is a wholesome food for dairy cows. Sanders v. Commonwealth, 77 S. W. 358, 359, 117 Ky. 1, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 219.

The transportation of deer raised on a private preserve is subordinate to the "police power" of the state. Dieterich v. Fargo, 182 N. Y. Supp. 720, 721, 52 Misc. Rep. 200.

The "police power" extends to the protection of persons and of property within the state. To secure that protection, they may be subjected to restraint and burdens by legislative acts. If the act is a valid and reasonable exercise of the power of the state, then it must be submitted to, as a measure designed for the protection of the public, and to secure against such danger, real or anticipated from a state of things which modifications in our social or commercial life have brought about. Under the police power, the Legislature may prescribe how animals may be killed by their owner in order that they may be used for food. They may fix by statute the times, places, and manner of such killing. State v. Davis, 61 Atl. 2, 4, 72 N. J. Law, 345 (citing People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden, 39 N. E. 688, 144 N. Y. 535, 27 L. R. A. 718).

"Police power" is broad in its scope, but it is subject to the just limitation that it extends only to such measures as are reasonable in their application, and which tend in some appreciable degree to promote, protect, or preserve the public health, morals, or safety, or the general welfare. The prohibition of an act which the court can clearly see has no tendency to affect, injure, or endanger the public in any of these particulars, and which is entirely innocent in character, is an act beyond the pale of this limitation, and it is therefore not a legitimate exercise of police power. Act Cal. March 15, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 140, c. 140), prohibiting any person from selling tickets to theaters or other public places of amusement for a price higher than the price originally charged by the management of such amusement places is not a valid exercise of the police power of the state, as it prohibits an act which is innocent in character, and which has no tendency to affect, injure, or endanger the public health, morals, or safety. Ex parte Quarg, 84 Pac. 766, 767, 149 Cal. 79, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 9 Ann. Cas. 747.

The power to regulate and control the rates of carriers is within the "police power" of the state. State ex rel. Webster v. Superior Court for King County, 120 Pac. 861, 863, 67 Wash. 37, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 78.

Same—Licensing or taxing occupations

Courts and text-book writers have found it difficult to accurately define "police power." In the case of State v. Carey, 30 Pac. 729, 4 Wash. 424, the court quotes approvingly from the case of Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery, 70 Ill. 192, 22 Am. Rep. 71, where the court referred to this subject as "that inherent and plenary power in the state which enables it to prohibit all things heretofore to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society." Speaking of it in the Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 36, 87, 21 L. Ed. 394, Mr. Justice Field said: "That power undoubtedly extends to all regulations affecting the health, good order, morals, peace, and safety of society." From these and the many adjudicated cases touching the subject, the proposition is deducible that the police power may curtail the rights of the individual in so far as, and no farther than, the free exercise thereof is calculated to infringe upon the rights of others. Act March 18, 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 314), in so far as it requires examination by and a license from a dental board before one may "own, run, or manage" a dental office, as distinguished from the actual practice of dentistry, is not a proper exercise of the police power, but is unconstitutional. State v. Brown, 79 Pac. 635, 636, 37 Wash. 97, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798.

"The 'police power' must also be distinguished from the 'taxing power,' and the distinction is this: That the taxing power is exercised for the raising of revenue and is subject to certain limitations, while the police power is exercised only for the purpose of promoting the public welfare, and, though this end may be attained by taxing or licensing occupations, yet the object must always be regulation and not the raising of revenue, and hence the restrictions upon the taxing power do not apply." Robinson v. City of Norfolk, 60 S. E. 762, 764, 108 Va. 14, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 294, 128 Am. St. Rep. 934.

The words "police power," when used with reference to a statute prohibiting any one engaging in the temporary selling of provisions within a mile of a fair ground without consent, means the power which, among other things, in given circumstances, compels obedience to the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas." It has been said, and correctly enough, that: "The police power of a state extends beyond the protection of health, peace, morals, education, and good order. It is the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominions. It comprehends all those general laws of internal regulation necessary to secure the peace, good order, the health and comfort of society, and the regulation and protection of all property in the state." State v. Reynolds, 58 Atl. 755, 756, 77 Conn. 131.

The distinction between the "police power" and the "taxing power" is that, while the "taxing power" is exercised for the raising of revenue and is subject to certain limitations, the "police power" is exercised only for the purpose of promoting the public welfare, and, though this end may be attained by taxing or licensing occupations, the object must always be regulation and not the raising of revenue. Robinson v. City of Norfolk, 60 S. E. 762, 764, 108 Va. 14, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 294, 128 Am. St. Rep. 934.

"The 'police power' is included in the legislative power, but there are, in the Constitution, express limitations upon some of the powers comprised in the police power, and the term 'police power' is used to designate that power from others, and is helpful in ascertaining its scope and the limitations upon it." "The police power of the state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety." The state may, in the exercise of the police power, license and regulate chattel mortgage and salary loan brokers. Sanning v. City of Cincinnati, 90 N. E. 125, 127, 81 Ohio, 142, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686 (quoting Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Drainage Com'rs, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 349, 200 U. S. 561-592, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175).

Same—Limiting hours of labor

A statute imposing a penalty on any one working more than eight hours a day in any mine, smelter, or mill for the reduction of ores is sustainable as a valid health regulation, under the "police power." Ex parte Kair, 80 Pac. 463, 464, 28 Nev. 127, 113 Am. St. Rep. 817, 6 Ann. Cas. 893.

The "police power" of the state is that power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. It is very broad and far-reaching, but is not without its limitations. Act March 23, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 211), making it unlawful for persons engaged in mining or making excavations beneath the surface of the earth, while searching for minerals or other valuable substances, to work their employees at such labor more than eight hours a day, is a proper exercise of the police power of the Legislature to enact a reasonable regulation to secure the health and safety of the employees. State v. Cantwell, 78 S. W. 569, 573, 179 Mo. 245.

"The police power," * * * when broadly stated, is the power of the state which relates to the conservation of the health, morals, and general welfare of the public, and the property rights of the citizen are always held and enjoyed subject to the reasonable exercise of the police power by the state." Laws 1909, p. 212, limiting the time a woman may work in a mechanical establishment or factory or laundry to ten hours in a day, is a legitimate exercise of the police power. W. C. Ritchie & Co. v. Wayman, 91 N. E. 695, 697, 244 Ill. 509, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994.

"In the exercise of that vast and (purposely) undefined power, known as the 'police power,' a power which lies at the root of, and gives vitality and validity to, any legislative enactment self-defensive of the general welfare of the people in their moral and physical health, it is settled doctrine that, if a state law, referable to the exercise of the police power, only incidentally or indirectly affects interstate commerce, it is good under the provisions of the federal Constitution heretofore quoted, unless Congress has occupied the exact ground by a federal law, in which event state legislation must give way, at least where the two acts involve irreconcilable differences of detail of regulation or antagonistic theories. * * *

"The line of distinction between that which constitutes an interference with commerce and that which is a mere police regulation is sometimes exceedingly dim and shadowy, and it is not to be wondered that learned jurists differ when endeavoring to classify the cases which arise. * * *

Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the states, confining their operation to the subject over which it is given control by the Constitution." Laws 1907, p. 332, regulating the hours for service of telegraph operators and train dispatchers, which does not discriminate between operators employed in the operation of interstate trains and traffic and those employed in operating local traffic, cannot stand and be operative as to intrastate traffic; Congress having passed an act (Act Cong. March 4, 1907, c. 2937, 34 Stat. 1415) covering the same subject-matter, though the Missouri act took effect June 14, 1907, and the act of Congress did not take effect until March 4, 1908. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 111 S. W. 500, 505, 212 Mo. 658 (quoting and adopting Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 856, and citing and adopting Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. Ed. 819; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527; Smith v. Alabama, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. Ed. 508; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Alabama, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. Ed. 352; State v. Addington, 77 Mo. loc. cit. 116).

Same—Prevention of fraud

The "police power" of the state is not limited to regulations necessary for the preservation of good order or the public health and safety, but the prevention of fraud and deceit, cheating, and imposition are equally within the power. People v. Freeman, 90 N. E. 366, 368, 242 Ill. 373, 17 Ann. Cas. 1098.

Limitations on power

There is an exception to the commerce clause of the Constitution in favor of the "police power" of the states. That power is sufficient to enable the states to provide for the security of the lives, health, and comfort of its citizens, and as a part of that power the states may regulate or restrict the sale of articles deemed injurious to the health or morals of the community. But in exercising this power the states cannot impose taxes on persons passing through the state, nor upon property imported, so long as it is in the original package, and no regulation can be made directly affecting interstate commerce. Moog v. State, 41 South. 166, 168, 145 Ala. 75 (citing Robbins v. Taring Dist. Shelby County, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, 139 U. S. 489, 30 L. Ed. 694).

"The 'police power' is an inaccurate but convenient phrase used to designate that power inherent in every sovereignty to make laws essential to the public welfare, to promote the public health, safety, and morals and to prevent and punish the commission of public offenses. It is incapable of exact definition or precise limitation, because of the infinite variety of circumstances affecting the relations and affairs of mankind in civilized society, where, from necessity, individual persons and property are subject to burdens and restraints in order to secure, in a well-ordered government, the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state. Like every other power, the 'police power' is subject to the Constitution, and cannot be used as a cloak for legislation which impairs rights or unduly restricts liberties guaranteed by it. Vast and comprehensive as is the field for the legislative exercise of the 'police power,' it is not arbitrary or unlimited, but is fettered by the express and peremptory prohibitions of the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, and, wherever rights arising under that Constitution are claimed to be impaired, it is the duty of the courts to scrutinize such legislation and determine whether it really relates to the public welfare, whether it is enacted in the interest of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a class, and whether the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the public object, and not unduly oppressive on individuals, for a Legislature cannot, under the guise of protecting the public interest, impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon individual liberty or lawful occupations." Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986, 989.

The exercise by the state of its "police power" must have relation to the promotion of the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and, when a regulation does not fairly relate to some one of such objects, it is not within the police power, and common business, callings, and trades which are innocent in themselves, and have been followed in all communities from time immemorial, must be free, to all alike, on the same terms.

People v. Ringe, 110 N. Y. Supp. 74, 76, 125 App. Div. 592.

The "police power" is the inherent primary power of the state to prohibit all things hurtful to the comfort, welfare, and safety of society, but the power is not without restrictions, for it must not conflict with the Constitution, and must have some relation to and be adapted to the ends sought to be accomplished, and rights of property will not be permitted to be invaded under the guise of police regulation. City of Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnpike Co., 84 N. E. 1049, 1052, 234 Ill. 428, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071.

The "police power" of a municipality is confined to such reasonable restrictions as are necessary to public health, morals, and safety, and to public peace, order, and the general welfare, and ordinances under such power may be enforced, although they interfere with the use of private property. People ex rel. Wineburgh Advertising Co. v. Murphy, 88 N. E. 17, 19, 195 N. Y. 126, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735; Id., 113 N. Y. Supp. 855, 129 App. Div. 260.

The "police power" extends to and permits legislation regulating reasonably all matters appertaining to the life, limbs, health, comfort, good morals, peace, and safety of society, or, in short, to all which promotes the public welfare. The significant word "reasonable," as used in such definition, although not often found in definitions of the police power, should never be omitted in defining its constitutional scope. The police power is not a power to pass unconstitutional laws, but such power, like any other exercise of the law-making power, is subject to express and implied constitutional limitations. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 517, 127 Wis. 468.

The "police power" is somewhat shrouded in mystery as to its limits, which are not easy to prescribe with precision, the power, however broad and comprehensive, is not paramount to the Constitution, but is always bounded by its provisions. If, therefore, an act of the Legislature is repugnant to the Constitution, it cannot be held valid as a proper exercise of the police power. Likewise, if a right of property or of person be protected by the Constitution, it cannot be destroyed by any exercise of the police power, either by the Legislature or the executive power of the state. The police power may be exercised to promote the safety, health, comfort, and welfare of society, and, to sustain legislation as a proper exercise of the police power, it must have reference to some end. Block v. Schwartz, 78 Pac. 22, 27, 27 Utah, 387, 65 L. R. A. 308, 101 Am. St. Rep. 971, 1 Ann. Cas. 550.

The "police power" of a state is the power to make laws to secure the comfort, convenience, peace, and health of the community, and is an extensive one, and in its exercise a very wide discretion as to what is needful or proper for the purpose is necessarily committed to the legislative body in which the power is vested. Plumas County v. Wheeler, 87 Pac. 909, 911, 149 Cal. 758 (citing Ex parte Whitwell, 32 Pac. 870, 98 Cal. 73, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; In re Lawrence, 11 Pac. 217, 69 Cal. 608).

POLICE REGULATIONS

A "police regulation" necessarily involves selection, involves the power to permit some and refuse others, to suffer the act at one time and place, or under certain conditions, and to deny it under all others; and it presumes a condition, which unless restricted, regulated, or controlled, will operate to the public disadvantage. State Racing Commission v. Latonia Agricultural Ass'n, 123 S. W. 681, 685, 136 Ky. 173, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905.

Since Act No. 171 of 1898, the general license law, is purely a taxing law, and not a "police regulation," it is not applicable to impose a license on sales of beer which constitute interstate commerce. The Gay-Shattuck act is not a revenue act, but a police regulation, within Act Cong. Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, known as the "Wilson Law," providing that all intoxicating liquors transported into any state for sale, etc., shall be subject to the operation of laws enacted in the exercise of the police powers, though imported in the original packages, so that a license could be imposed thereunder upon the sale of malt liquor brought into the state in original packages by a brewery. State v. Pabst Brewing Co., 55 South. 349, 352, 128 La. 770.

In the absence of constitutional limitation, the Legislature may authorize cities or towns to impose a license tax upon any industry or business which falls within the scope of "police regulations," which includes the practice of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, optometry, pharmacy, the engineer's trade, and other trades and professions. Johnson v. City of Great Falls, 99 Pac. 1059, 1061, 38 Mont. 369, 16 Ann. Cas. 974.

"Police regulations" of a city are made and enforced in the public interest, and the city is not liable for the acts of its officers in attempting to enforce them. The establishment and maintenance of a city calaboose is within the proper exercise of the city's police power, and the city is not liable for the wrongful or negligent acts of its police officers or board of health in managing a calaboose or detaining therein persons inflicted with smallpox, resulting in persons residing or working nearby contracting the disease. Evans v. City of Kankakee, 83 N. E. 223, 231 Ill. 223, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190.

The term "police regulation" is used to define a power which resides in the state.

and an act to prevent the perpetration of possible frauds on the public by the unauthorized sale of railway tickets is within the scope of the term. In re O'Neill, 83 Pac. 104, 106, 41 Wash. 174, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 6 Ann. Cas. 869.

"A 'police regulation' or restraint is for the purpose of preventing damage to the public or to third persons. There are certain lines of business and certain occupations which require police regulation because of their peculiar character, in order that harm may not come to the public, or that the threatened danger may be averted. Where the profession or business is not dangerous to the public, either directly or indirectly, it cannot be subjected to any police regulation whatever which does not fall within the power of taxation for revenue. It appears, therefore, that the due exercise of the police power is limited to the preservation of the public health, safety, and morals, and that legislation which transcends these objects, whatever other justification it may claim for its existence, cannot be upheld as a legitimate police regulation." A statute limiting the compensation which an employment agent may receive to 10 per cent. of a month's wages in the employment furnished is not within the police power, but contravenes the constitutional guaranty of protection in the possession of property. Ex parte Dickey, 77 Pac. 924, 925, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 1 Ann. Cas. 428 (citing Sonora v. Curtin, 70 Pac. 674, 137 Cal. 583).

"Laws and ordinances, relating to the comfort, health, and good government of the inhabitants of a city, are ordinarily described as 'police regulations,' and, though they may disturb the full enjoyment of a personal right, are constitutional, notwithstanding they do not provide compensation therefor, for they do not appropriate private property for public use, but merely regulate its enjoyment by the owner, who is supposed to be compensated by sharing in the benefits which such regulations are intended to secure." Under a municipal charter authorizing ordinances necessary and proper for the protection of persons and property and the preservation of the public health, an ordinance directed to the suppression of the emission, from smokestacks, of dense smoke, containing soot in sufficient quantities to fall upon the surface of the city, is limited in its application to smoke of such character as invades the rights of persons and property. Atlantic City v. France, 70 Atl. 163, 164, 75 N. J. Law, 910, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156.

Enactments to prevent fraudulent transfers by retail dealers are clearly within that class of legislation generally denominated "police regulations." Young v. Lemieux, 65 Atl. 436, 439, 79 Conn. 434, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 160, 129 Am. St. Rep. 193, 8 Ann. Cas. 452.

It appears that a "policeman" occupies a sort of dual position. He is, strictly speaking, neither a state officer, as such, nor an officer acting in a purely local capacity. He may be said to be sui generis, occupying a unique place of his own. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 99 Pac. 941, 944, 946, 38 Mont. 250.

The term "policeman," with respect to the power to arrest without warrant, is the legal equivalent of the term "watchman" at common law. Porter v. State, 52 S. E. 283, 285, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730 (citing State v. Evans, 61 S. W. 590, 161 Mo. 95, 84 Am. St. Rep. 669).

Sess. Laws 1907, c. 136, providing for the organizing of the police departments of cities upon a civil service basis, refers to persons serving on the police force as "members" or "officers" of the police force or department. An ordinance enacted thereunder creating the police department of a city mentioned certain officers by a special title, and classified all other members as "policemen" or "patrolmen," and provided that the number of "policemen or patrolmen" should be reduced, etc. Held, that as a "patrolman" is defined as a member of the police force of a town or city who patrols a certain beat, and a "policeman" as one of the ordinary police force, whose duty it is to patrol a certain beat for the protection of property, lives, etc., and also, in its generic sense, was applicable to any member of the police force whatever his rank, the terms as used in the ordinance were synonymous, so that one appointed under the ordinance under the designation of "patrolman" was a policeman, and hence not a purely municipal officer. State ex rel. Quintin v. Edwards, 106 Pac. 695, 696, 40 Mont. 287, 20 Ann. Cas. 239.

The term "policemen" includes every member of the police force, whatever his rank, so that a police captain is a "policeman" notwithstanding his superior rank, and hence is not a purely municipal officer; Sess. Laws 1907, c. 136, § 5 (Rev. Codes, § 3308), relating to the examination of applicants for positions on the police force and providing for their appointment and removal, making no distinction between the officers and members of different rank as to their duties or the manner of their appointment. State ex rel. Bailey v. Edwards, 106 Pac. 703, 704, 40 Mont. 313.

"The 'policy of insurance' is the final contract between the parties, and the effect of its acceptance is to supersede all preliminary agreements in respect to insurance." So that the final consummation of the contract of insurance includes both the delivery of the policy and its acceptance by the insured. The applicant has a right to reject the policy if it does not conform to the agreement of the parties for its execution, and until delivery and acceptance, either expressly or by inference or implication, the contract is not finally executed, although it may be so far assented to as to give a right of action thereon. Stringham v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 75 Pac. 822, 824, 44 Or. 447.

The essentials of a "policy of insurance" are the payment of the premium by the insured and the agreement by the insurer to indemnify the insured against loss on a certain subject against certain perils. German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley, 71 N. E. 897, 899, 163 Ind. 651, 2 Ann. Cas. 275.

POLICY PLAYING

As lottery, see Lottery.

"Policy," which is forbidden by Rev. St. 1899, § 2219, is understood to be "a form of gambling in which bets are made on numbers to be drawn by lottery." State v. Cronin, 88 S. W. 604, 605, 189 Mo. 663 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

A scheme, whereby an association sells for five cents, or any other specific sum of money, certificates or tickets which entitle the purchaser to a lead pencil of trifling value, and also permits such purchaser to select certain numbers, say 3—9—13, which, if all drawn by a blindfolded boy from a revolving wheel in which several numbers are placed, entitle the person purchasing the certificate or ticket to a prize of money much larger in amount than he has paid for his certificate or ticket, is generally known as "playing policy." State ex rel. Kellogg v. Kansas Mercantile Ass'n, 25 Pac. 984, 985, 45 Kan. 351, 11 L. R. A. 430, 23 Am. St. Rep. 727.

POLING

The "poling" of a car is done by adjusting a heavy piece of timber, called a "pole," with one end on and against the front of the engine and the other against the car to be moved, then starting the engine forward, thereby pushing the car by the pole to a point that will allow it to be passed by the engine. Poling is resorted to for moving a car that is on a different track from that occupied by the engine, but is so in the way of the movements of the engine as to prevent its passing such car. Howard v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. (Ky.) 90 S. W. 950, 951.

POLISHING

In relation to the manufacture of steel strips, "polishing" is a process of improving the surface by the use of emery and buffing wheels, and planishing or glancing is apparently the same process carried out a little more elaborately. United States v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 137 Fed. 384, 386, 69 C. C. A. 576.

POLITIC

See Body Politic or Corporate.

POLITICALPOLITICAL COMMITTEE

As public agency, see Public Agency.

POLITICAL CONVENTION

See Assemblage.

The words "political convention," as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 1633, relating to designation of political party, and the words "adopt or use" designating device for election purposes, refers solely to the political management used in originating and furnishing ballots, and not those persons whose sole connection therewith is voting the same. Esquivel v. Chaves, 78 Pac. 505, 511, 12 N. M. 482.

POLITICAL CORPORATION

As municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporation.

When applied to corporations, the words "political," "municipal," and "public" are used interchangeably. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 527, 141 N. C. 149, 150, 8 Ann. Cas. 529 (quoting and adopting Curry v. District Tp., of Sioux City, 17 N. W. 191, 62 Iowa, 102).

A state bar association is a mere voluntary association of lawyers, and is not a "political corporation," as defined by Rev. Civ. Code, art. 429, declaring that political corporations are those which have principally for their object the administration of a portion of the state, and to whom a part of the powers of government is delegated to that effect. State ex rel. Cotonio v. Louisiana Bar Ass'n (La.) 36 South. 241.

Public corporations are synonymous with "political corporations." Phillips v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 902, 905, 110 Md. 431, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5781).

POLITICAL PARTY

Section of political party, see Section.
See, also, Minority Party.

"Political parties" result from the voluntary association of electors, and do not exist by operation of law, and they possess plenary powers as to their own affairs in the absence of legislative regulation. Morrow v. Wipf, 115 N. W. 1121, 1127, 22 S. D. 146.

Any combination or aggregation of electors with sufficient coherence and organization to have acted together for a common purpose, and sufficient strength and certainty to have polled 2 per cent. of the highest vote at the next preceding election, is a "political party," within Act June 10, 1893, § 2 (P. L. 419), relating to the putting of nominations on the ballot by certificate by any political party which at the election next preceding polled at least 2 per cent. of the largest entire vote for any office cast in the state or in the electoral district or division. Independence Party Nomination, 57 Atl. 344, 346, 208 Pa. 108.

Code 1906, c. 3, § 7, as modified by section 85, requires the city council to appoint three qualified voters as commissioners of election for each precinct, of good standing and character, to be selected from the two political parties casting the highest number of votes at the last preceding election, not more than two to belong to the same political party, and that, if the executive committee of either such party shall request in writing the appointment of a qualified voter of their political party, council shall appoint such person, impliedly gives the right of representation to the two leading political parties in every election, and prescribes a mode of determining a right of preference by giving it to those whose candidates received the highest number of votes at the last preceding election, when there are such parties, but the two leading parties, though not participating as an organization in the last preceding election, are entitled to representation by persons designated by them. A political party for national, state, county, and magisterial district elections is not one for the purpose of a municipal election, unless the members thereof participate as such an organization in the municipal election by nominating and supporting candidates under the party named. Hasson v. City of Chester, 67 S. E. 731, 732, 67 W. Va. 278.

"Political parties" are organizations of electors entertaining the same political opinions, attempting through an organization to elect officers of their own party faith and make their political doctrines the policy of the government. The rights of political parties can be no greater than the rights of electors under the Constitution. Riter v. Douglass, 109 Pac. 444, 450, 32 Nev. 400.

"A 'political party' is an organization of electors believing in certain principles concerning governmental affairs, and urging the adoption and execution of those principles through the election of their respective candidates at the polls." In Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, which provides that the Legislature may enact laws as to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties, and shall enact laws, providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors without conventions at elections to be known as "primary elections," and also to determine the tests and conditions upon which electors, political parties, or organizations of electors may participate in any such primary election, the term "political parties" is intended to embrace those which had participated in a struggle at the polls for political ascendancy, and political "organizations of electors" is intended to include new parties which had not participated in prior elections, organized to advance some principle or measure of public policy. This constitutional provision was sufficiently compled with, in so far as nomination by electors and organizations of electors was concerned, by the enactment of Act March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), providing, in addition to direct primaries, for political parties for nominations by electors or bodies of electors by petition, as authorized by Pol. Code, § 1188. This constitutional provision does not require the Legislature to adopt a universal mode whereby all the classes of electors mentioned therein may participate in primary elections, but authorizes the Legislature to provide reasonable and different tests and conditions for participation by the different classes. Neither the whole of Primary Election Law March 12, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), nor the part thereof requiring the payment of certain fees by candidates on the filing of nomination papers and affidavits of candidacy, was invalid as a violation of Const. art. 1, § 24, declaring that no property qualification to vote or hold office shall ever be required of any person. The Legislature could also provide, by Primary Election Law March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), that, when nomination papers of a candidate were filed, they should be accompanied by an affidavit of affiliation, such provision not being in violation of Const. art. 22, § 3, prescribing the form of oath to be taken by one before entering on the duties of an office, and which declares that no other authority, declaration, or test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust; such provision being applicable only to persons appointed or elected to office, and not to candidates for election. Socialist Party v. Uhl, 103 Pac. 181, 182, 183, 185, 188, 155 Cal. 776.

The term "political parties," as used in Gen. St. Kan. 1901, §§ 2696, 2697, providing for nominations by such parties, includes local and city parties. Where a certificate of nomination, regular in form, is filed with the city clerk purporting to show the nomination of a full set of city officers by a mass convention of a party designated as the "City Party," and no objection thereto is filed within three days, and the names so certified appear on the official ballot under the title "City Ticket," over which a circle is printed, with directions to place a cross mark therein to vote a straight ticket, ballots cast at the ensuing election, which are marked only in such circle, cannot be rejected upon the grounds that the ticket was not nominated by a political party, and that there was in fact no political party in the city known as the "City Party." Ogg v. Glover, 83 Pac. 1039, 1040, 72 Kan. 247 (citing and adopting Independence Party Nomination, 57 Atl. 344, 208 Pa. 108; Davidson v. Hanson, 92 N. W. 93, 87 Minn. 211; Baker v. Scott, 43 Pac. 76, 4 Idaho, 596; Roller v. Truesdale, 26 Ohio St. 586; citing and disapproving McKinley-Citizens Party, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 109; Nomination of Jeffries, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 663).

New York Primary Election Law (Laws 1899, p. 993, c. 473) provides that the term "party" shall apply to any political organization which, at the last preceding election of the Governor, polled at least 10,000 votes for Governor. People ex rel. McCarren v. Dooling, 112 N. Y. Supp. 67, 70, 60 Misc. Rep. 132.

Primary Election Law (Act No. 49, p. 67, of 1906) § 2, defining a "political party" to be one that shall cast at least 10 per cent. of the votes cast for Governor at the last preceding election, does not violate Const. 1898, art. 48, forbidding the passage of local or special laws granting special privileges. State ex rel. Labauve v. Michel, 46 South. 430, 435, 121 La. 374.

Pub. Laws 1902, c. 1078, p. 35, § 1, defines a "political party" to be one which, at the next preceding annual election of state officers, cast for its candidate for Governor at least 2 per cent. of all the votes cast for that officer. Ney v. Whiteley, 59 Atl. 400, 401, 26 R. I. 464.

"Where the word 'party' occurs in the statute relating to nominations (for public office), it should be construed to mean a number of persons united in the manner usual to the then existing political parties." A party—that is, an organized political party—cannot have at the same time more than one candidate for the same county office. State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf, 100 N. W. 923, 924, 18 S. D. 393, 67 L. R. A. 331.

Under the provisions of section 1 of the direct primary election law of this state (Sess. Laws 1909, p. 196), a "political party" is an affiliation of electors representing a political organization under a given name, which at the last preceding general election cast for any candidate on their ticket for office within the state at least 10 per cent. of the total vote cast for all candidates for the same office within the state, and all political parties coming within this definition are required to make nominations at the direct primary election held on the last Tuesday in July of election years. State ex rel. Spofford v. Gifford, 126 Pac. 1060, 1063, 22 Idaho, 613; Ex parte Wilson, 125 Pac. 739, 744, 7 Okl. Cr. 610.

While election Act 1910 (Laws Ex. Sess. p. 16) § 2, defines a "political party" as any political organization which was represented by candidates at the last regular election, and whose candidate for Governor received 10 per cent. of the total vote cast, and section 26, providing for nomination by a petition, declares that any set of petitioners may adopt any name they desire, not heretofore used by any political party as defined in the act, the name adopted by a new political party, which placed its candidates on the ballot by petition, is not subject to appropriation by other petitioners. McBroom v. Brown, 127 Pac. 957, 958, 53 Colo. 412.

POLITICAL POWER

See, also, Public Power.

POLITICAL QUESTION

Whether a Constitution shall be amended is a "political question," but whether it has been legally amended is a judicial question. McConaughy v. Secretary of State, 119 N. W. 408, 413, 106 Minn. 392.

Whether a statute redistricting the state into representative districts makes a division so unequal as to be a violation of Const. § 33, requiring such division to be in proportion to population, is not so purely a "political question" as to be beyond the jurisdiction of the courts. Ragland v. Anderson, 100 S. W. 865, 866, 125 Ky. 141, 128 Am. St. Rep. 242.

POLITICAL RIGHT

"A 'political right' is a right exercisable in the administration of government." State ex rel. Attorney General v. Huston, 113 Pac. 190, 198, 27 Okl. 606, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380; People ex rel. Attorney General v. Tool, 86 Pac. 224, 228, 35 Colo. 225, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 822, 117 Am. St. Rep. 198 (quoting And. Law Dict. 905).

"Political rights" consist in the power to participate directly or indirectly in the establishment or administration of government such as the right of citizenship, suffrage, etc. Friendly v. Olcott, 128 Pac. 53, 56, 61 Or. 580.

"'Political rights' consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of the government. These political rights are fixed by the Constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers and of being elected. These are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses." Winnett v. Adams, 99 N. W. 681, 684, 71 Neb. 817 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict.).

The right to become the nominee of a political party for public office, whether national or state, and as such nominee to receive the votes of the qualified electors voting to fill such office, is a purely "political right," as contradistinguished from a civil or property right. "'Political rights' consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of the government. These political rights are fixed by the Constitution. Every citizen has the right to vote for public officers, and of being elected. These are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses." A court of equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin officers of a state, acting under a state statute, from issuing a certificate of nomination to a candidate for representative in Congress; the right involved being purely political, as distinguished from a civil or property right, to which alone the jurisdiction of equity extends. Anthony v. Burrow, 129 Fed. 783, 784, 789 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Sawyer, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. Ed. 402).

Under Const. art. 6, § 3, which provides that persons convicted of infamous crime, unless restored to their civil rights, shall be excluded from the elective franchise, an information charging that accused, in registering to vote, falsely swore that he had not lost his civil rights by being convicted of an infamous crime, whereas he had been convicted in another state of the infamous crime of breaking jail before conviction, does not state an offense; the right to vote being "political" and not "civil." State v. Collins, 124 Pac. 903, 904, 69 Wash. 268.

POLITICAL SUBDIVISION

As county in general, see County.

As municipal corporation in general, see Municipal Corporation.

As town in general, see Town.

As township in general, see Township.

A school district is not a "political subdivision of the state," within the meaning of that term as used in a constitutional provision giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction of appeals in cases where a county or other political subdivision of the state is a party. School Dist. No. 1, Tp. 24, Range 4, v. Boyle, 81 S. W. 409, 410, 182 Mo. 347.

A school district is not a "political subdivision" of the state within Const. art. 6, § 12, authorizing appeals to the Supreme Court where a political subdivision of the state is a party, and an appeal from a judgment in quo warranto by a school district against another district, to determine the legality of proceedings to attach territory to the latter district, lies to the Court of Appeals, and not to the Supreme Court. State ex rel. School Dist. No. 4 v. School Dist. No. 3, 141 S. W. 1111, 238 Mo. 407.

A drainage district is not a "political subdivision," within Const. art. 6, § 12, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction in cases where a county or "other political subdivision" is a party; the quoted words meaning subdivisions created with powers similar to those of a county, and not referring to townships, school districts, levee districts, drainage districts, and like minor political subdivisions. Wilson v. King's Lake Drainage & Levee Dist., 139 S. W. 136, 140, 237 Mo. 39.

School districts are "political subdivisions" of the state, and can be sued only by permission of the state. Goldtree v. City of San Diego, 97 Pac. 216, 218, 8 Cal. App. 305 (quoting and adopting Skelly v. Westminster School Dist., of Orange County, 37 Pac. 643, 103 Cal. 652).

Under Const. art. 6, § 12, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction "in cases where a county or other political subdivision of the state is a party," the court has jurisdiction in a case in which the city of St. Louis is a party, that city being, by virtue of Const. art. 9, §§ 20, 22, 23, providing for its charter, a political subdivision of the state, and not merely a city within a county. Gracey v. City of St. Louis, 111 S. W. 1159, 1160, 213 Mo. 384.

A city not being a "political subdivision of the state," within the meaning of Const. art. 6, § 12, and the amendment thereof adopted in November, 1884 (page 243), extending the jurisdiction of the St. Louis Court of Appeals and establishing the Kansas City Court of Appeals, that the city is a party to a suit for an injunction does not give the Supreme Court jurisdiction on appeal from the judgment in such suit. Smith v. City of Sedalia, 128 S. W. 735, 228 Mo. 505.

Const. art. 5, § 18, provides for the dividing of each county into four commissioners' precincts, and the election of one commissioner from each precinct, and Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1532, 1533, makes similar provisions. Const. art. 16, § 20, as amended in 1891, directs the Legislature to enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, justice's precinct, town, etc., or such subdivision of a county as may be designated by the commissioners' court, may by a majority vote determine from time to time whether the sale of intoxicants shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 3384, provides that the commissioners' court of each county may order an election by the voters of the county, or of any commissioners' or justice's precinct in such district, or two or more of such political subdivisions of a county, as may be designated by the commissioners. Held, that a commissioners' precinct was a "political subdivision of the county" within the Constitution, so as to authorize the commissioners' court to order an election therein. Coffield v. Britton, 109 S. W. 493, 496, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 208.

POLL

See Closing of Polls.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3390, requiring the commissioners' court to hold a special session after a local option election, "for the purpose of opening the polls and counting the votes," the commissioners' court must open the ballot boxes and count the votes, instead of merely canvassing the returns made by the officers of the election; the word "polls" referring to the ballot boxes. Clarey v. Hurst (Tex.) 136 S. W. 840, 843.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3389, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 29, providing that officers holding a local option election shall conform to the general election laws in force, except as otherwise specified, and that after the polls are closed they shall proceed to count the votes and make a report of the election to the commissioners' court, and article 3390, requiring the commissioners' court to hold a special session "for the purpose of opening the polls and counting the votes," the commissioners' court has authority to canvass the returns made by the officers of the election, and they may not open the ballot boxes and count the votes; the word "polls" in article 3390 meaning the returns of the election officers, though the word "poll" means the number or aggregate of heads; a list or register of heads or individuals voting at an election. Clary v. Hurst, 138 S. W. 566, 569, 104 Tex. 423 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5446).

POLL TAX

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 6090, requiring all male persons between 21 and 50 years of age to perform 4 days' work on the public roads or furnish a substitute or pay $1 a day, does not impose a "poll tax" so as to be repugnant to Const. Bunn's Ed. § 284, authorizing the collection of a poll tax on all electors under 60 not exceeding $2 a year. State v. Rayburn, 101 Pac. 1029, 1031, 2 Okl. Cr. 413, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 733.

The underlying nature and purpose of a "poll tax" are disassociated from any consideration of property. The state accords to every inhabitant, regardless of his property, the protection and advantages of its laws and public institutions, and, by reason of these guaranties and benefits, it asks a tribute toward the support of the government from those beneficiaries who are physically qualified to contribute. In the absence of constitutional inhibition, the Legislature may provide for the levy and enforcement of a poll tax on any or all of the citizens of the state, regardless of the question of uniformity. Acts 1903, c. 119, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 156, imposing a poll tax on every male inhabitant between the ages of 21 and 50 years outside the limits of an incorporated city or town, is not violative of Const. art. 1, §§ 3, 12, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law, and that no law shall be passed granting to any city privilege or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not legally belong to all citizens. Thurston County v. Tenino Stone Quarries, 87 Pac. 635, 636, 44 Wash. 351, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 306, 12 Ann. Cas. 314.

POLLING JURY

To "poll a jury" is to call the names of the persons who compose a jury and require each juror to declare what his verdict is, before it is recorded. State Life Ins. Co. v. Postal, 84 N. E. 156, 1093, 43 Ind. App. 144.

"Polling the jury" consists of asking the jurors individually whether they assented and still assent to the verdict. The clerk or the judge may propound the questions, and it is not erroneous for another to do so, but it must be done under the direction of the court. It was proper for the court to refuse to permit accused or his counsel to poll the jury and to require such duty to be performed by the clerk. Jackson v. State, 41 South. 178, 179, 147 Ala. 699.

POLLING PLACE

Under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 7239, 7240, relating to local option elections and to the order and notice of election and providing that, on proper petition, an election shall be ordered held and a notice thereof given by publication in a newspaper, etc., without expressly requiring the designation of polling places, the jurisdictional notice of an election is a notice giving the date and place on which it is to be held, and the naming of the place is satisfied by naming the city or territory in which it is to be held, as the term "place" has many meanings and is synonymous with "town" or "city" or a "certain territory," the term "polling places" not being synonymous with "place of election." State ex rel. Fahrman v. Ross, 143 S. W. 502, 506, 160 Mo. App. 682.

POLLUTE

A harmful pollution of a water course is quite a different thing from "pollution" which consists merely in the presence even in considerable quantities of minerals held in suspension, or of minerals produced by chemical reactions, whose specific gravity causes them to sink quickly to the bottom. Doremus v. City of Paterson, 69 Atl. 225, 232, 73 N. J. Eq. 474.

In an action for the pollution of a stream, an instruction that the word "pollute" was not used by counsel to mean the mere rolling up of the water, if no sediment were deposited, and that any discoloration of the water, where it is used solely for motive power, would be of no importance to the case, is correct. Neely v. Detroit Sugar Co., 101 N. W. 664, 667, 138 Mich. 469.

Plaintiff, the proprietor of a gristmill and owner of water rights including a millpond, contracted, with a sugar company located on the stream above, which had turned refuse into the stream, polluting the water and filling the millpond, which plaintiff utilized for ice and power. The contract provided that the sugar company should pay plaintiff $1,250 in full for all losses sustained by plaintiff in the past due to the pollution of the water in the pond from the refuse discharged, and for rental of a certain icehouse belonging to plaintiff, and provided that the company might continue the agreement on payment of $400 annually, and that the agreement should not abrogate any water rights which plaintiff then possessed. Held, that the term "pollution" was used in a restricted sense, and was understood by the parties to refer only to such damage as resulted directly from contamination by impurities, and that water power rights and all rights flowing therefrom were excluded, so that plaintiff was not precluded thereby from recovering for past and future damage caused by the sugar company in filling up the millpond by turning refuse into the stream so as to cause it expense in buying fuel to replace power lost by filling up the pond. Lepper v. Wisconsin Sugar Co., 128 N. W. 54, 57, 146 Wis. 494.

POLYGAMOUS MARRIAGE

Under the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, marriages celebrated and solemnized by mere civil authority and with only the sanction of the law are regarded as marriages for time only, while a marriage solemnized by a duly constituted person, authority, or "by the holy and eternal priesthood of the Saints" is designated a "celestial or patriarchal marriage," binding not only during this life but throughout the life to come. As used in Const. art. 6, § 3, disqualifying as voters, jurors, or officers, among others, one who is a bigamist, polygamist, or living in what is known as patriarchal or celestial marriage, the words "bigamous," "polygamous," "plural," "celestial," and "patriarchal" marriages were meant and intended to prohibit and forbid any man having more than one wife at one time, under whatever name or designation he might choose to style his marriage, and the use of each of these words was directed against bigamous and polygamous marriages. The "celestial" or "patriarchal" marriage, in order to come within the prohibition of the Constitution, must be "bigamous" or "polygamous." One who teaches or practices having more than one wife at any one time or belonging to an organization teaching such doctrine is disqualified for the duties of an elector, and consequently for holding any civil office, within the laws of the state, but it is not intended by the Constitution to interfere with the religious beliefs and opinions of any one. Toncray v. Budge, 95 Pac. 28, 38, 14 Idaho, 621.

POND

See Great Ponds; Private Pond.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff was the owner of land upon which was a "pond" which had flowed through a culvert erected by defendant railroad company, but that such culvert had been taken out by the company and replaced by a pipe too small to carry off the water, thereby overflowing plaintiff's land, is not demurrable because not alleging that the waters obstructed are the waters of a natural water course, and that the cutting off of the flow of surface water is not actionable, for a pond may be created not only by the accumulation of surface water, but by springs or streams emptying into it which have a continuous flow, but the proper remedy is a motion to make the complaint more definite and certain as to the nature of the pond and the character of the water accustomed to flow therefrom. Rentz v. Southern Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 743, 744, 82 S. C. 170.

PONTOON

"A 'pontoon' is nautically described by the Century Dictionary as 'a lighter,' a 'low flat vessel resembling a barge,'" etc. A pontoon floating upon the water of a navigable stream, between high and low water mark, rising and falling with the tide, and used as a landing in connection with a ferry, although fastened to the shore by a cable, is not land, and an action for an injury to a person thereon by a moving vessel is for a maritime tort and within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Mackinaw, 165 Fed. 351, 352 (citing and adopting The Blackheath, 25 Sup. Ct. 46, 195 U. S. 361, 49 L. Ed. 236, and citing and distinguishing The Plymouth, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 20, 18 L. Ed. 125).

PONTOON BRIDGE

As bridge, see Bridge.

PONY

PONY HOMESTEAD

The Georgia exemption act of 1822, including in its protected articles a trooper's horse, has been popularly termed a "pony homestead." In re Hargraves, 160 Fed. 758, 759.

POOL

The term "pool" means a surrender of certain individual rights and powers to the common holder for the benefit of all, on the theory that the accruing benefits gained by the joint venture outweigh the individual rights surrendered. Burley Tobacco Soc. v. Monroe, 146 S. W. 725, 730, 148 Ky. 289.

Under the Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887, § 5, making it unlawful for common carriers to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads or any portion thereof, railroads may "pool" their freights either by distributing commodities between themselves for carriage or by dividing among themselves their aggregate earnings on the commodities carried. A "pool" is a combination of the interests of several otherwise competing parties, such as rival transportation lines, in which all take common ground as regards the public and distribute the profits of the business among themselves equally or according to special agreement. Within this definition, an agreement between competing railroads and their connecting lines, by which a through rate on a certain class of traffic is conditioned on a reservation to the initial carrier of the absolute and unqualified power to route the shipments beyond its own line for the declared purpose of enabling such initial carriers to control and maintain the rates so fixed by preventing competition either direct or indirect between their connecting carriers, created a traffic pool. A joint tariff of through rates between noncompeting railroads forming a continuous line, although constituting an earnings pool under the general definition of the word "pool" as a combination intended by concert of action to make or control market rates, is not within the prohibition of that section. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Fed. 829, 839 (quoting and adopting definition given in Cent. Dict.).

As a body of water

"Where a collection of water has acquired a specific name, he (Lord Coke) says that the land may be included under that name, as: 'Stagnum, a poole, doth consist of water and land, and therefore by the name of stagnum, or poole, the water and land shall pass also.' So of a gorse or gulf, for which a præcipe will lie with the espees in taking of fish therefrom." Co. Litt. 5b. This shows that still water, as well as rivers and streams, was the subject of private ownership by the old English law. Hardin v. Jordan, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 140 U. S. 371, 389, 35 L. Ed. 428.

As a game played on a billiard table

"Pool" is a game played by two or more persons on a billiard table containing six pockets. In the United States the game is played with 15 numbered balls, counting from 1 to 15; the object of the game being to pocket the balls, the number of each ball being placed to the credit of the player pocketing it. An indictment charging in the alternative that defendant bet at a certain "gaming table or bank" is bad, though the words, "to wit, a pool table," follow. Taylor v. State, 95 S. W. 119, 120, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 183 (citing Cent. Dict.).

"Pool" is defined by Century Dictionary as a "game played on a billiard table with six pockets by two or more persons." The table upon which the game is played is one included within the term "billiard table," as used in a statute empowering cities to suppress "billiard tables" enacted while that term was applied to tables substantially the same as pool tables of the present time, so that such statute was a sufficient authority for an ordinance forbidding the use of pool tables. City of Clearwater v. Bowman, 82 Pac. 526, 527, 72 Kan. 92.

POOLROOM

As gambling house, see Gambling House.

As useful enterprise, see Useful Enterprise.

Running poolroom as labor, see Labor.

A "poolroom" is a place maintained for carrying on or facilitating betting on horse races, or any other sport or game or contest or other event upon which wagers are laid, and the maintenance of a poolroom is a crime. State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 685, 690, 81 Ark. 117, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 899, 118 Am. St. Rep. 29, 11 Ann. Cas. 277.

"Conceding that the term 'pool' or 'poolroom' has, according to lexicographers, several meanings, we are of opinion that the legislation on the subject, the direct result of the decisions of this court, show that the term 'poolroom' was used to designate a room in which betting on races is carried on." State v. Maloney, 39 South. 539, 544, 115 La. 498.

POOL SELLING

As gambling, see Gambling—Gaming.

As game, see Game.

As lottery, see Lottery.

"Pool selling" is a term used by writers of authority to describe a form of gambling. In re Opinion of the Justices, 63 Atl. 505, 507, 73 N. H. 625, 6 Ann. Cas. 689 (citing N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 9; People ex rel. Sturgis v. Fallon, 46 N. E. 302, 152 N. Y. 1, 5, 87 L. R. A. 419; and 9 Messages of the President, 94).

"Pool selling," as used with "bookmaking" in Act March 21, 1905, prohibiting bookmaking and poolselling, is germane to bookmaking; both terms having been always understood to refer to horse racing of some character. State ex inf. Hadley v. Delmar Jockey Club, 92 S. W. 185, 190, 200 Mo. 34.

The words "pool selling" includes bets or wagers on the result of any trial of skill, speed, or endurance. One furnishing, for use in and to maintain a poolroom, an apparatus known as a "ticker," together with telegraph service, automatically printing on a tape connected therewith, giving the names of horses and the results of trials and contests, which telegraph service is convenient for and is used in the place for the purpose of maintaining the same, with knowledge of the purposes for which the ticker and the telegraph service is used, violates Gen. St. 1902, § 1359, prohibiting "pool selling," whether he furnished the ticker and telegraph service gratuitously or for a compensation measured by daily rental, or a percentage of profits, or whether he furnished the device and services for this poolroom alone, or furnished similar devices and services to others for legitimate purposes. State v. Scott, 68 Atl. 258, 259, 80 Conn. 317.

POOL TABLE

As gambling device, see Gambling Device.

POOR

Code, § 2252, provides that the word "poor," as used in the chapter relating to the relief of such persons by the township, shall be construed to mean those who have no property, exempt or otherwise, and are unable, because of physical or mental disabilities, to earn a living by labor; but this section shall not be construed to forbid aid to needy persons who have some means, when the board shall be of opinion that the same will be conducive to their welfare and the best interests of the public. Brock v. Jones County, 124 N. W. 209, 210, 145 Iowa, 397.

"It must be borne in mind, however, that the term 'poor' is used in two senses. We use it in one sense simply as opposed to the term 'rich.' Thus we speak of the ordinary laborers, mechanics, and artisans as poor people, without a thought of describing persons who are other than self-supporting. Indeed, the large majority of our people are poor people, and yet they would feel insulted to be told that they were objects of public charity. We use the term also to describe that class who are entirely destitute and helpless, and therefore dependent upon public charity. The dictionaries recognize this twofold sense. Thus Webster gives these definitions: '1. Destitute of property; wanting in material, riches, or goods; needy; indigent. It is often synonymous with indigent, and with necessitous, denoting extreme want. It is also applied to persons who are not entirely destitute of property, but who are not rich; as a poor man or woman; poor people. 2. (Law.) So completely destitute of property as to be entitled to maintenance from the public.' Now, when we speak of the relief of the poor as a public duty, and one which may justify taxation, we use the term only in the latter sense. * * * Something more than poverty, in that sense of the term, is essential to charge the state with the duty of support. It is, strictly speaking, the pauper, and not the poor man, who has claims on public charity. It is not one who is in want merely, but one who, being in want, is unable to prevent or remove such want. There is the idea of helplessness as well as of destitution." Code 1875, c. 42 authorizing townships to issue bonds for relief purposes, and by section 5 authorizing the furnishing of the destitute with provisions and with grain for feed and seed, is unconstitutional as not being a public purpose. State ex rel. Griffith v. Osawkee Tp., 14 Kan. 418, 421, 19 Am. Rep. 99 (citing Leavenworth County v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479, 12 Am. Rep. 425; Citizen's Savings & Loan Ass'n v. City of Topeka, 20 Wall. [87 U. S.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 455; Allen v. Inhabitants of Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Lowell v. City of Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39).

V. S. 3171 (P. S. 3667), provides that, if a person is "poor and in need of assistance," the overseer of the poor of any town shall on application relieve the person, and if he has not resided in the town for three years, supporting himself and family, and is not of sufficient ability to provide such assistance, the town furnishing the same may recover the expense from the town where he last resided for three years and supported himself and family. Section 3174 (3670) declares that if a transient person is suddenly taken sick or lame, or is otherwise disabled and confined at any house, or is in need of relief, or is committed to jail, the person at whose house he is, or the jailer, shall be at the expense of relieving and supporting the person until he reports his situation to the overseer of the poor of the town, after which the officer shall provide for his support. Held, that whether a person is "poor and in need of assistance" does not depend alone on the amount and value of his property, but on the exigencies of his present situation. Town of Ripton v. Town of Brandon, 67 Atl. 541, 544, 80 Vt. 234.

POOR CHILDREN

The words "poor children," as used in a will making a bequest of a certain sum in trust "to pay the tuition or education of orphan or poor children under the age of sixteen years at or within two miles of the county seat of Clay county," embrace all those whom the testator included in the beneficiaries of his charity. Crow ex rel. Jones v. Clay County, 95 S. W. 369, 379, 196 Mo. 234.

POOR HOUSE

The words "poor house or other asylum," as used in Const. art. 8, § 8, providing that "no person while kept at any 'poor house or other asylum' at public expense, nor while confined in any public prison, shall be entitled to vote at an election under the laws of this state," will not be held to include soldiers' homes, and therefore Rev. St. 1899, § 6994, providing that no person, while kept in any "poor house or other asylum" at public expense, "except at soldiers' homes," shall be entitled to vote, will not be held unconstitutional as excepting soldiers' homes from its operation. Hale v. Stimson, 95 S. W. 885, 890, 198 Mo. 134.

POOR PERSON

Code, § 2252, provides that the words "poor person," as used in the chapter relating to the relief of such persons by the township, shall be construed to mean those who have no property, exempt or otherwise, and are unable, because of physical or mental disabilities, to earn a living by labor; but this section shall not be construed to forbid aid to needy persons who have some means, when the board shall be of opinion that the same will be conducive to their welfare and the best interests of the public. Brock v. Jones County, 124 N. W. 209, 210, 145 Iowa, 897.

The statute relative to the relief of poor persons, fairly construed, means that a person must be without property which can aid in his support or out of which funds may be realized for his maintenance, to be a "poor person." A husband and wife unable to care for themselves, who are without property, except the right to the use of a small house and two lots in a town, are poor persons. Hamilton County v. Hollis, 119 N. W. 978, 980, 141 Iowa, 477.

The term "poor person," as used in Comp. St. Neb. 1903, c. 67, is the equivalent of "pauper," and includes all persons, without means, who are unable, on account of some bodily or mental infirmity or other unavoidable cause, to provide for themselves, and who either have no kindred in the state liable under the statute for their support, or, if they have such kindred, they are of insufficient ability, or fail or refuse to maintain such paupers. Oteo County v. Lancaster County, 111 N. W. 132, 133, 78 Neb. 517 (quoting and adopting the definition in Comp. St. 1903, c. 67, § 3 [Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, c. 43]).

The poor law (Laws 1896, p. 136, c. 225) defines a "poor person" as one unable to maintain himself. Section 40 provides that every person of full age, who is a resident of a town for one year, and the members of his family, who have not gained a separate settlement, are deemed settled in such town, and shall so remain until he shall have gained a like settlement in some other town, or shall remove from the state and remain therefrom a year. A wife, with her children, went to S., February 13, 1907, from A., where she had resided for more than five years. Her husband, also a resident of A. for five years preceding September 11, 1906, left his family there on that date and went to another state. February 5, 1907, he met his wife at S., and she returned to A., and got her children and belongings, and went to S. as stated, where she resided with her husband until May 23d, when he left her without support and she applied to S., two days later, for assistance, which was given her. When her husband left her at A., she was unable to maintain herself and children, and applied for public assistance, which she received on November 3 and December 5, 1906, and January 4, 1907; the orders received by her being for necessities and paid by A. Held, that the wife had a "settlement" in A., and was a "poor person" there when she went to S., and that the city of A. remained and was liable for the support furnished by the city of S. Onondaga County v. City of Amsterdam, 117 N. Y. Supp. 1121, 1122, 64 Misc. Rep. 181.

Code, § 2216, provides that the father of any "poor person" who is unable to maintain himself or herself by labor shall relieve such person in such manner as, on application to the township trustees where such person has a residence or may be, they may direct; and section 2252 defines a poor person as one who has no property, and is unable, because of physical or mental disabilities, to earn a living by labor, etc. Held, that evidence of a divorced wife that she worked around for neighbors at washing, sewing, and cleaning house, but that she had not been able to make a living for herself and the children, and that she had been receiving assistance from the county, was insufficient to establish either mental or physical disability to earn support for herself and the children, so as to render her father liable therefor. Monroe County v. Abegglen, 105 N. W. 350, 351, 129 Iowa, 53.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 33, § 5, providing that, if the court, before or after the commencement of a suit, be satisfied that the plaintiff is a "poor person" and unable to prosecute his suit and pay the costs and expenses thereof, the court may, in its discretion, permit him to commence to prosecute his action as a "poor person," and thereupon such person shall have all the necessary writs, process, and proceedings without fees or charge, it is not necessary that either the applicant's attorney or the court should be satisfied that the applicant is a pauper. People v. Chytraus, 81 N. E. 844, 846, 228 Ill. 194.

Laws 1896, p. 137, c. 225, § 2, defines a "poor person" as one unable to maintain himself, and provides that such person shall be maintained by the town, city, county, or state according to the provisions of the chapter. Held that, where a person becomes a "poor person" after he has left the town or county in which he had gained a settlement, he is not a "poor person" there but must be supported by the county in which he becomes a "poor person," without right on the part thereof to reimbursement from the town or county from which he came, though his settlement still remains there. Delaware County v. Delaware, 93 N. Y. Supp. 954, 956, 105 App. Div. 129.

POP HOLES

Where, in quarrying, irregular fragments of rock, which are too large to be loaded into cars and transported to the crusher, are blown to pieces by dynamite, the holes drilled for the purpose are called "pop holes." Harper v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 93 Pac. 179, 76 Kan. 612.

POP SHOTS

Where, in quarrying irregular fragments of rock, which are too large to be loaded into cars and transported to the crusher, are blown to pieces by dynamite, the explosions are called "pop shots." Harper v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 93 Pac. 179, 76 Kan. 612.

POPULAR ACTION

A "popular action" is one which can be brought by anybody who is willing to inform against the defendant and who is therefore denominated a common informer or prosecutor. Blackstone defines it as an action for a statutory penalty or forfeiture given to any such person or persons as will sue for it; an action given in England to any of the King's subjects (3 Bl. Comm. 161), and in this country to the people in general. The recovery may go to the informer, or, if the action be qui tam (that is, one in which the plaintiff sues for the state as well as for himself, it is divided as the law may direct. Turner v. McKee, 49 S. E. 330, 333, 137 N. C. 251.

POPULATION

The term "population," as used in General City Classification Act of New Jersey (1 Gen. St. p. 458), means the enumeration of the inhabitants, and refers to such enumeration as the law provides to be made. Dickinson v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 60 Atl. 220, 221, 71 N. J. Law, 589 (citing In re Sewer Assessment for City of Passaic, 23 Atl. 517, 54 N. J. Law, 156).

The meaning of the words "population of one hundred thousand inhabitants," as used in Laws 1901, p. 73, making the emission of dense smoke within the limits of cities which now have or may hereafter have a "population of one hundred thousand inhabitants," a public nuisance, means 100,000 inhabitants or more than that number, and such statute is not limited in its operations to cities having exactly 100,000 inhabitants. State v. Tower, 84 S. W. 10, 11, 185 Mo. 73, 68 L. R. A. 402.

The phrase, "population of the entire state," as used in Const. § 128, providing that in making apportionment of judicial districts the number shall not exceed one district for each 60,000 of the population of the entire state, means all of the state's inhabitants. Brown v. Moss, 105 S. W. 139, 142, 126 Ky. 833.

A provision of the state Constitution that no county judge or surrogate in a county having a "population" exceeding 120,000 shall practice as an attorney or counsel in any court of record in the state or act as referee, the term "population" must be construed as meaning citizen population. Judge Goodrich dissents from this opinion, holding that the term includes all individuals resident in a county. In re Silkman, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1025, 1038, 1042, 88 App. Div. 102.

POR CASAS CONSIISOORIALES

The early translation of the Spanish words "por casas consisooriales," used in reference to the purpose for which a portion of the sites of towns selected by colonists was to be set apart, was for "public buildings of the municipality." City of Victoria v. Victoria County (Tex.) 94 S. W. 368, 371.

PORCH

As dwelling, see Dwelling—Dwelling House.

As house, see House.

PORCION

While "porcion," as applied to land, is not a technical term (see word in Escrache, Dict.), and means no more than portion or parcel in English, the usual application of the word in the old Spanish grants along the Rio Grande was to the parcels, ordinarily set aside to the settlers of new towns. State v. Ortiz, 90 S. W. 1084, 1086, 99 Tex. 475.

PORT

See Custom of the Port; Foreign Port or Place; From Port of the United States; Home Port.

Other ports, see Other.

What constitutes a "port" for purposes of the revenue act is of necessity a matter of proof in each case. The term is broader than the word "harbor" and may mean more in one connection than in another. "Port" is often used as synonymous with "district," where the limits of the port and district are the same. The word "port" is defined in Rev. St. U. S. § 2767, as including any place from which merchandise can be shipped for importation or at which merchandise can be imported. The word as used in the revenue act rests somewhat in theory, and involves intention and perhaps certain acts to make its operation effectual. The language of the statute is that it may include places where cargoes are received and discharged, thus indicating a distinction between a commercial and a fiscal port. It cannot be the intention of the law that a vessel must report at the barge office before it can be considered in port, since there are several piers or docks between that office and the mouth of the river. The statutes of Illinois provide that the city of Chicago shall have jurisdiction over Lake Michigan for a distance of three miles beyond the city limits, and the ordinances of that city give the city harbor master control over lake water outwardly for the same distance between the north and south lines of the city. Held, as to certain barges in tow which had reached a place within these limits within the outer harbor works, where it was usual for such a tow to be broken up so that the barges might be taken to their separate docks, that they should be considered as in the port of Chicago for the purpose of fixing the time their cargoes became dutiable, though the arrival had not been reported at the barge office. Hartwell Lumber Co. v. United States, 128 Fed. 306, 307 (quoting and adopting Ayers v. Thatcher, 3 Mason 153, 2 Fed. Cas. 269).

The settled rule that the domicile of the owner or the actual situs of the vessel, and not the place of enrollment of a vessel plying between ports of different states, engaged in the coastwise trade, and the consequent marking of the stern of the vessel with the name of the place of enrollment, as provided for in Rev. St. U. S. §§ 4178, 4334, was the criterion by which to determine the situs of the vessel for taxation, was not changed by the declaration of the act of June 28, 1884, § 21, that the word "port," as used in those sections, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is enrolled, or the place where it was built, or where one of the owners resides, which simply enables the owner to select a place other than the port of enrollment to be marked upon the vessel. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 26 Sup. Ct. 679, 684, 202 U. S. 409, 50 L. Ed. 1082, 6 Ann. Cas. 205.

Act Feb. 12, 1909, is entitled "An act to provide for incorporation under general law of ports in counties bordering on bays or rivers navigable from the sea," etc. Laws 1909, p. 78. Held that, in view of legislation and decisions on the subject, the term "port" has a recognized status, and is used in its larger acceptation as comprising under one name a district of many places classed together for the purpose of revenue; and hence the title of the act is sufficient under Const. art. 4, § 20, providing that the subject of every act shall be expressed in its title. Straw v. Harria, 103 Pac. 777, 779, 54 Or. 424.

Under a policy prohibiting a vessel "from the river and gulf of St. Lawrence, ports in Newfoundland, Northumberland Strait, Cape Breton," etc., and from loading grain, except at certain "ports" named, the prohibition applied to the waters about Cape Breton, and not to the "ports" only, of that island. Lovitt v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 54 N. E. 338, 174 Mass. 108 (citing and adopting Odiorne v. New England Mut. Marine Insurance Co., 101 Mass. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 401; Whiton v. Albany City Insurance Co., 109 Mass. 24).

PORT DISTRICT

As municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporation.

PORT OF DISCHARGE

See Final Port of Discharge.

Where the "port of discharge" designated in a charter party is one at which there is a customhouse, the word "port" is to be construed in its ordinary and commercial sense, as meaning the particular place named, and not any place within the boundaries of the revenue port or the district for which such place is the port of entry. Under a charter for the carriage of a cargo of manure salt used in the manufacture of fertilizers from a German port to Wilmington, N. C., at and near which city there were large fertilizer works having landing docks, the vessel was not authorized to demand discharge at a point 30 miles below Wilmington where there were no such works, merely because the term "port of Wilmington" was used elsewhere in the charter and in the bill of lading. Manchester Liners v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 194 Fed. 463, 469.

PORT OF SHIPMENT

Where slate was quarried at one place and carried thence to another to a shop one-half mile from a railroad station, and there cut and finished for mantels and boxed and placed in a storehouse near by, the shop or the storehouse from whence the mantels were sold and delivered is the "port of shipment," within the statute giving laborers a lien for 30 days after slate has arrived at its port of shipment. Union Slate Co. v. Tilton, 73 Me. 207, 211.

Where testator directed that a remainder of his estate be equally apportioned among his children, not to be turned over to them, but to be invested for their behalf, and the annual income of each child to be subject to her sole control, etc., and, in case of any child dying without a will, then her "portion of said inheritance" should be equally divided between her children who might survive her, or, if not, to testator's surviving children, etc., the quoted phrase did not contradict the idea of a life estate in the beneficiaries; the clause being used in the popular sense as meaning, not the part of the estate to which the beneficiary took an absolute interest, but that portion from which, as the beneficiary, she received her annual income, and the part over which she was given a power of disposition by will. Robbins v. Smith, 73 N. E. 1051, 1054, 72 Ohio St. 1.

POSITION

See Confidential Position; Congressional Position; Lap Position; Present Positions.

Change of position, see Change.

A position is analogous to an office, in that the duties that pertain to it are permanent and certain, and it differs from an office in that its duties may be nongovernmental, and not assigned to it by public law. Fredricks v. Board of Health of Town of West Hoboken, 82 Atl. 528, 529, 82 N. J. Law, 200.

An exempt fireman holding the position of assistant building inspector did not hold an office, but a "position," so that certiorari and not quo warranto was the proper remedy to test the legality of his removal. McGrath v. Mayor of City of Bayonne, 83 Atl. 780, 781, 83 N. J. Law, 224.

A "public office" is a place created, or at least recognized, by the law of the state, and to which certain permanent duties are assigned either by the law itself or by regulations adopted under authority of law. A "position," within the purview of the veteran act of 1895 (3 Gen. St. 1895, p. 3702), is a place, the duties of which are continuous and permanent, analogous to those of an office, and which pertain to the position as such. Hart v. City of Newark, 77 Atl. 1088, 1087, 80 N. J. Law, 600.

A special verdict, in an action for the death of the engineer of a traveling crane, that decedent was in a better position than any one else to determine when any particular hog chain should be slackened or tightened, was not a finding that decedent had an equal opportunity with the master to know that the chains were not properly adjusted, for the word "position" merely meant that the station of the engineer was a more favorable place from that of any one else from which to determine when any particular hog chain should be slackened or tightened, and the finding did not show assumption of risk by decedent so as to defeat a general verdict. Ittenbach v. Thomas, 96 N. E. 21, 27, 48 Ind. App. 420.

Clerk

The words "regular clerk," as used in New York City Charter, Laws 1901, p. 636, c. 466, § 1543, providing that no "regular clerk" or person holding a "position" in the classified municipal civil service, subject to competitive examination, shall be removed until he has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation, etc., are used in their popular sense, and include only such positions as did not require any other qualification than the ability to perform purely clerical work. A regular clerkship is a "position in the classified municipal civil service subject to competitive examination." People ex rel. Corkill v. McAdoo, 99 N. Y. Supp. 324, 325, 113 App. Div. 770 (citing People v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 73 N. Y. 437; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs of City of New York, 86 N. Y. 149; Chittenden v. Wurster, 46 N. E. 857, 152 N. Y. 345, 37 L. R. A. 809).

Janitor of courthouse

An honorably discharged Union soldier, who has been appointed by the board of chosen freeholders janitor of the county courthouse, for a term indefinite in its extent, does not hold a public office, but holds a "position" within Veteran Act March 14, 1895 (3 Gen. St. p. 3702), from which he cannot be removed except for cause. "A 'position,' within the purview of the statute, is defined to be a place the duties of which are continuous and permanent, and which pertain to the position as such." State v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Salem County, 42 Atl. 844, 845, 63 N. J. Law, 57 (citing Stewart v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County, 38 Atl. 842, 61 N. J. Law, 118).

Under Laws 1904, p. 8, c. 9, § 1, providing that in every public department and upon all public works, etc., honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War who are citizens and residents of the state shall be entitled to preference in appointment and employment, etc., a position as janitor of a courthouse is one by appointment or employment. Kitterman v. Board of Supra. of Wapello County, 115 N. W. 13, 14, 137 Iowa, 275.

Policeman

Under a rule of the municipal civil service commission providing that, in the relative weights of subjects of rating on any promotion examination, seniority of service in the "position or grade," from which promotion is sought shall count 20, the words "position or grade," refer to a position or grade as constituted by law, and a policeman is not entitled in his rating in promotion examinations for seniority of service as roundsman while patrolmen were detailed to such service, but only from the time the Greater New York charter took effect, under which an appointment as roundsman was first recognized as a position or grade. Moran v. Baker, 99 N. Y. Supp. 197, 49 Misc. Rep. 327 (citing People ex rel. Buckley v. Roosevelt, 39 N. Y. Supp. 78, 5 App. Div. 168; People ex rel. Colbert v. Knox, 68 N. Y. Supp. 267, 57 App. Div. 155).

Tax appraiser

The provisions of the "veteran acts" relating to the employment of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors in the public service, giving them a preference in appointment and promotion to positions, and protecting them against removal from such positions or employment, applied solely to subordinate positions or offices, and under Civil Service Law, Laws 1899, pp. 808, 809, c. 370, § 2021, which are practically a re-enactment thereof, a tax appraiser who is required to file a bond in not less than $1,000, and whose powers and duties are of a quasi judicial character, and whose qualifications are different from those requisite from those in a clerical or subordinate position, does not hold a "position" in the sense in which that word is used in the Civil Service Law. People ex rel. McKnight v. Glynn, 106 N. Y. Supp. 956, 959, 56 Misc. Rep. 35.

POSITIVEPOSITIVE DUTY

In an action for injuries to a servant, a charge that "the master owes the positive duty to an employé to provide him with a reasonably safe place in which to work, so far as the nature of the work undertaken and the exigencies of the case will permit the same to be made reasonably safe," is a correct statement of the law, and is not objectionable as requiring the master to insure the safety of the place; the word "positive" being used rather as the antithesis of the word "delegable" than as a measure of the diligence required of a master. Harris v. Brown's Bay Logging Co., 106 Pac. 152, 154, 57 Wash. 8.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE

In weighing contradictory evidence, other things being equal, "positive evidence" preponderates over "negative evidence"; but the jury must take into consideration the circumstances, such as opportunity and attention of the witnesses. Anderson v. Horlick's Malted Milk Co., 119 N. W. 342, 346, 137 Wis. 569 (citing Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Transportation Co., 23 Vt. 186, 56 Am. Dec. 68).

POSITIVE FRAUD

Fraud in the procurement of a contract avoids it; and where a party intentionally or by design misrepresents a material fact or produces a false impression in order to mislead another or to entrap or cheat him or to obtain an undue advantage over him, in every such case there is positive fraud in the truest sense of the term—there is an evil act with an evil intent—and the misrepresentation may be as well by deeds and acts as by words, by artifices to mislead as by positive assertions. Tolley v. Poteet, 57 S. E. 811, 819, 62 W. Va. 231.

POSITIVE TESTIMONY

"Positive testimony" is that of witnesses who know the facts. Daniel v. State, 62 S. E. 539, 4 Ga. App. 843.

In a prosecution for homicide, the court properly defined and distinguished "positive" and "negative testimony": "The testimony of those witnesses who swore positively that they saw the pistol in the hand of the prisoner, and that he fired the fatal shot while the pistol was in his hand, is what the law terms 'positive testimony.' They swear positively that they saw the existence of a fact. The testimony of the witnesses who said that they saw the prisoner and the deceased in a struggle at the time when the last shot was fired, but they did not see the pistol, and did not know in whose hand the pistol was, is what the law terms 'negative testimony.' The reason the law gives greater weight to positive testimony than to negative testimony is because the witnesses who swore to positive testimony swore to what is a fact, an existing fact, or else they deliberately swore to a falsehood, while those who swore to negative testimony may be telling the truth, and yet the fact may exist which they did not see. If one witness swears that he saw Sheriff Markham in the courthouse in Durham on a certain date, the sheriff was there, or else the witness told a lie. Another witness might say: 'I was in the courthouse on that occasion, but I did not see Sheriff Markham in there.' That witness may be telling the truth and may be conscientious, and yet it may be a fact, notwithstanding, that Sheriff Markham was in the courthouse. And for that reason the law says you must attach greater weight to positive testimony than to negative testimony." State v. Murray, 51 S. E. 775, 139 N. C. 540.

POSSESS

See Openly Possess; Repossess; Seised and Possessed.

All I may possess, see All.

Occupy synonymous

"In the primary and most familiar sense of the word, 'occupy' is the equivalent of the word 'possess.'" Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 330.

Own synonymous

See Own.

POSSESSED

As ownership

The word "possessed," as used in an allegation in an action by an administrator for the conversion of goods claimed to have been owned by intestate that intestate, at the time of his death, was "seised and possessed" of the property, means "owned"; that is, that the intestate was the owner of the goods at the time. Grant v. Hathaway, 96 S. W. 417, 118 Mo. App. 604 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5463).

As seised

An allegation that a person was "seised and possessed" of land prima facie imports seisin in fact, not mere seisin in law. Bragg v. Wiseman, 47 S. E. 90, 91, 55 W. Va. 330.

A testator devised land to a nephew. Thereafter he made a parol gift of the land to him, and he entered into possession with the consent of testator, and remained in the undisturbed possession until the death of the testator a few months later. The testator made no change in the will. Held, that testator was not "seised" or "possessed" of the land at the time of his death, within Acts 1893, c. 174, imposing a tax on property passing by will. Bailey v. Henry (Tenn.) 143 S. W. 1124, 1128.

Right of possession, as property, see Property.

Possession is the having or holding or detention of property in one's power or command. Defendant formed a plot to obtain possession of certain indictments for the purpose of destroying them by bribing the assistant district attorney having them in charge to deliver them to him for a certain consideration. A third party, pretending to act for the district attorney, delivered them to him, and he took possession of them, and walked away, whereon he was arrested and the indictments recovered. It was held that defendant was properly convicted under Pen. Code, § 531, of an attempt to commit grand larceny in the second degree. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 790, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 121 (quoting Harrison v. People, 50 N. Y. 518, 10 Am. Rep. 517).

Evidence that a defendant was one of a party engaged in a common unlawful enterprise, that of shooting game in the closed season, is sufficient upon which to base a conviction of such defendant upon the charge of having in his "possession" game protected by the statute, although the game when taken is shown to have been in a buggy not occupied or being driven by the defendant.

McMahon v. State, 97 N. W. 1035, 1036, 70 Neb. 722.

"The character of possession for the statutory period necessary to toll the right of entry by the legal title holder must be such as amounts constantly to a trespass against the true title (that is, it must be an actual physical entry upon or control of the premises, and be continuous); it must be open (that is, it must of itself be such as to afford notice to the rightful owner of its hostile nature); it must be adverse (that is, it must be against and in defiance of the claim of the real title holder, and be such as to exclude his authority); and it must be accompanied by the claim by the occupant that it is his property." Owsley v. Owsley, 77 S. W. 397, 401, 117 Ky. 47.

"Possession, to be the foundation of a prescription, must be in the right of the possessor, and not of another; must not have originated in fraud; must be public, continuous, exclusive, uninterrupted, and peaceable, and be accompanied by a claim of right." Compton v. Newton, 59 S. E. 270, 271, 129 Ga. 619.

To constitute possession, there must be such appropriation of the land to the individual as will apprise the community in its vicinity that the land is in his exclusive use and enjoyment, and notice of possession to be sufficient must be of the open and visible character, which from its nature will apprise the world that the land is occupied, and who the occupant is. Towle v. Quante, 92 N. E. 967, 969, 246 Ill. 568.

"The term 'expectation,' as used in the statute" in relation to inheritance taxes, "has reference only to possession. The language is: 'By reason whereof any person . . . shall become beneficially entitled, in possession or expectation, to any property or income thereof.' The term 'expectation' is used, not to denote an expectation of becoming vested both with the title and the possession, where neither is now vested, but to denote a condition where the title is vested and the possession is deferred. The term 'in expectation' is used in contradistinction to 'in possession.' Both contemplate a title vested and indefeasible, but in one instance the right of enjoyment is immediate, 'in possession'; in the other, it is postponed, 'in expectation.' As used in this statute, these words last quoted refer to the future possession of an estate now vested and which is subject to the immediate enjoyment of another." In re Kingman's Estate, 77 N. E. 135, 136, 220 Ill. 563, 5 Ann. Cas. 234 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. McCormick, 70 N. E. 350, 208 Ill. 437, 64 L. R. A. 775).

"Possession" of land cannot be more than the exclusive dominion over it. Neither actual occupation, cultivation, or residence are necessary to constitute actual "possession," when the property is so situated as not to admit of any permanent useful improvement, and the continued claim of the party has been evidenced by public acts of ownership such as he would exercise over property which he claimed in his own right and would not exercise over property which he did not so claim. McCaughn v. Young, 37 South. 839, 842, 85 Miss. 277 (quoting and adopting 2 Wood, Lim. § 287; Ford v. Wilson, 35 Miss. 490, 72 Am. Dec. 137).

Where the contract of sale of a threshing machine contains a warranty that is limited and conditioned by the following provision, "Continued 'possession' or use of machinery for six days shall be conclusive evidence that the warranty is fulfilled to the full satisfaction of the undersigned, who agree thereafter to make no further claim on Russell & Co. under warranty," the "possession" therein mentioned is held to mean a possession coupled with a possibility or opportunity of using or testing the property for the uses and purposes to which it is to be applied. Harrison v. Russell & Co., 87 Pac. 784, 785, 12 Idaho, 624.

The act of the purchaser's assignee in posting "for sale" signs on vacant lots did not constitute possession so as to preclude the vendor from bringing suit to quiet title after service of notice of forfeiture of the sale contract for default in the payments. Donnelly v. Lyons, 139 N. W. 246, 248, 173 Mich. 515.

Though one gives a deed of trust on land as security, he still retains the possession within St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59, § 1, limiting the right to bring action to quiet title to one who is by himself or his tenant or other person in the actual and peaceable possession of the property. Charles A. Warren Co. v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 96 Pac. 807, 809, 153 Cal. 771.

"Possession" to vest title must be actual, continuing, visible, notorious, distinct, hostile, full, and open. Jones v. Weaver (Tex.) 122 S. W. 619, 621.

What constitutes possession of land is a mixed question of law and fact, possession consisting of the exercise of acts of dominion over it, in making the ordinary use of it, and taking the ordinary profits it is capable of yielding in its present state. New Jersey & N. C. Land & Lumber Co. v. Gardner-Lacy Lumber Co., 178 Fed. 772, 778, 102 C. C. A. 220.

There is a change of "title" as well as of "interest" and "possession" within a fire policy declaring it void in case of any change in the interest, title, or possession of the insured property, where insured, the owner in fee of the insured property, makes a contract of sale of it, declaring that deed shall pass when final payment is made, and that the purchaser shall pay all taxes and assessments levied against the property subsequent to contract, and shall have the right to occupy the property before passing of title, as tenant of the seller, without pay, and the purchaser goes into possession and is not in default. The word "interest" is broader and more comprehensive than the word "title," since it embraces both legal and equitable rights, and the words are not synonymous. The true test is whether the vendor has parted with the absolute control and dominion over the property insured. In this case, there was a change in possession within the meaning of that word as used in the policy. While the agreement designates the occupancy of the vendee, as that of a tenant of the vendor without pay or rent, the contract gives and secures to him more than the rights and interests of a tenant. He is charged with the liabilities, and entitled to enforce the rights, of a purchaser in possession and cannot be ejected as a tenant regardless of such rights. The possession of the vendee is absolute and exclusive of the vendor, as long as he performs the contract. Brighton Beach Racing Ass'n v. Home Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 219, 221, 118 App. Div. 728 (citing Lett v. Guardian Fire Ins. Co., 25 N. E. 1088, 125 N. Y. 82).

The expression "possession," under Bankr. Act, § 3, subd. 5, providing that where the act of bankruptcy consists of a transfer of property with intent to defraud or to give a preference, the time for filing the petition shall not expire until four months from the date when the beneficiary takes exclusive or continuous possession of the property, means such possession as the property is susceptible of, and it will be deemed notorious under those circumstances, though the creditors have no notice thereof. Jones v. Coates, 196 Fed. 860, 864, 116 C. C. A. 422.

As actual or constructive possession

The word "possession" means prima facie actual possession. Bragg v. Wiseman, 47 S. E. 90, 55 W. Va. 330.

"Possession," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 11, providing that any person having both the legal title and possession of land may sue in equity any person setting up claim thereto, means actual possession; otherwise the word would be virtually meaningless. Brown v. Ward, 105 S. W. 964, 965.

The "possession" required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1532, providing that when two or more persons hold and are in possession of real property as joint tenants or tenants in common, in which either of them has an estate of inheritance, or for life or years, any of them may maintain an action for the partition thereof, is not a strict pedis possessio, but merely a present right of possession. Brown v. Crossman, 100 N. E. 42, 43, 206 N. Y. 471.

"Possession" means simply the owning or having a thing in one's power; it may be actual or it may be constructive. Actual possession exists when the thing is in the immediate possession of the party; constructive possession is that which exists without actual personal occupation." Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 76, 80.

The "possession" in the 10-year statute of limitations means an actual residence on the land, or such cultivation, use, and enjoyment of the same, by such visible and notorious acts of ownership, as will give notice to the owner and others, and such possession may be by tenant and need not extend to the limits of the entire 160 acres; but possession of some definite part of the land is sufficient to confer title to 160 acres or less. Carlock v. Willard (Tex.) 149 S. W. 363, 365.

A mere constructive possession is not "seisin" or "possession," within the meaning of Kirby's Dig. § 5061, providing that no action for the recovery of lands sold for taxes shall be maintained against the purchaser unless plaintiff or his predecessor in interest was seised or possessed of the lands within two years next before the commencement of the action. Towson v. Denson, 86 S. W. 661, 665, 74 Ark. 302.

"Actual possession" or "possession in fact," as used in referring to the right to maintain an action to quiet title, exists when the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party or his agent or tenant and the terms are synonymous with "pedis possessio"; while "constructive possession" or "possession in law," as applied to the remedy for the quieting of title to land, is that possession which the law annexes to the legal title or ownership of property when there is a right to the immediate actual possession. When one has a legal estate in fee in land, he has the constructive possession, unless the actual possession is in some one else. Constructive possession is founded on the existence of title in some form, and it is a legal impossibility for a constructive possession under the statute of uses to vest in one under a deed from another having no legal estate to convey. Southern Ry. Co. v. Hall, 41 South. 135, 136, 145 Ala. 224 (citing Smith v. Gordon, 34 South. 838, 136 Ala. 498).

"Actual possession" is a term with well-understood legal meaning, and is used in opposition to the other term 'constructive possession' or 'possession in law.' * * * In a general way, it may be said that 'constructive possession' is that which exists in contemplation of law without actual personal occupancy of the property, such a possession as in contemplation of law proceeds from the vesting of the paramount title or follows in the wake of the legal title, or, as more exactly defined, 'constructive possession,' or 'possession in law,' as it is sometimes called, is that possession which the law annexes to the legal title or ownership of property when there is a right to the immediate 'actual possession' of such property, but no 'actual possession.' To constitute actual possession of land, there must be such an appropriation of the land by the claimant as will convey to the community where it is situated visible notice that the land is in his exclusive use and enjoyment, an appropriation manifested by either inclosing, cultivating, improving, or adapting it to such uses as it is capable of. Lofstad v. Murasky, 91 Pac. 1008, 1009, 152 Cal. 64.

"'Possession' of land is the holding of an exclusive exercise of dominion over it. It is evident that this is not and cannot be uniform in every case, and that there may be degrees in the exclusiveness even of the exercise of ownership. The owner cannot occupy, literally, the whole tract; he cannot have an actual pedis possessio of all, nor hold it in the grasp of his hand. His possession must be indicated by other acts. The usual one is that of inclosure. But this cannot always be done, yet he may hold possession, in fact, of uninclosed land by the exercise of such acts of ownership over it as are necessary to enjoy the ordinary use of which it is capable and acquire the profits it yields in its present condition. Such acts, being continued and uninterrupted, will amount to actual possession." Illinois Steel Co. v. Jeka, 101 N. W. 399, 402, 123 Wis. 419 (quoting and adopting definition in Booth v. Small, 25 Iowa, 177).

A mere symbolical "delivery of possession," such that the mortgagee acquires the right to control the property, and if it is destroyed the loss will fall on him, is not enough in case of a mortgage of the articles in a saloon, under St. 1898, § 2313, providing that no mortgage of chattels shall be valid against another than the mortgagor, in the absence of a filing thereof, unless possession of the property be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee; but the possession must be actual, open, unequivocal, and exclusive, and accompanied by the ordinary indicia of ownership and control, such that those familiar with the situation would naturally draw the inference of a change of ownership, and where the property remains in the saloon of the mortgagor, which is conducted by him and, on his absconding, his wife continues exactly the same relations to the property, and officers of the mortgagee merely enter the saloon, and tell the wife and bartender that they take possession, and tell the latter to look after the place and incur no obligations, and then leave the property as before, considering that the wife will continue the business as before for herself, which she does, there is no delivery of possession to the mortgagee, much less any retention thereof by it. George Walter Brew- ing Co. v. Lockery, 114 N. W. 120, 121, 134 Wis. 81.

Care synonymous

There is no distinction between the words "care" and "possession," as used in Code 1906, § 1186, making it a crime for any agent, clerk, officer, etc., to embezzle money which shall have come to his "care or possession," so that an indictment charging that defendant had the money under his "care" is sufficient, as is also one charging that he had the same in his "possession." Richberger v. State, 44 South. 772, 774, 90 Miss. 806.

As control

"Possession is the having, holding, or detention of property in one's power or command; actual seizure or occupancy." The mere fact that one who works elsewhere lodges and boards on premises the legal title to which is in him with whom he boards, and who claims and exercises full power, control, and dominion over the property by virtue of such legal title, does not constitute possession such as would be notice, in and of itself, of any equitable interest that such lodger or boarder would have in and to the premises or any part thereof. Derrett v. Britton, 80 S. W. 562, 563, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 485.

The paymaster of a railroad company, intending to pay the foreman of a gang and the members thereof, counted out the wages due the foreman and placed the money on the counter, and, while the foreman signed the pay roll, the money was stolen by accused, who a few moments later was found by the foreman and the money taken from him and returned to the paymaster, who again counted it and paid it to the foreman. Held, that an indictment for the larceny of the money properly alleged that it was the property of the foreman, since "possession" means the owning or having a thing in one's power, and may be actual or constructive. Campbell v. State, 57 South. 412, 3 Ala. App. 76.

As disseisin

See Disselsen.

As evidence of title

"Possession" is evidence of title against all persons except the owner. It is prima facie evidence of title against all persons not having a better right. It constitutes or rather answers for a right of property. Llewellyn v. Cauffiel, 64 Atl. 388, 392, 215 Pa. 23 (dissenting opinion of Elkin, J.).

As legal possession

The word "possession," unaccompanied by a qualifying word to indicate the kind of possession, does not necessarily mean a possession manifested by outward signs, but may mean mere legal or fictive possession. Succession of Zebriska, 44 South. 893, 895, 119 La. 1076.

The word "possession," as used in Const. art. 6, §§ 4, 5, conferring original jurisdiction upon the superior court in all cases at law which involve the possession of real property, in Code Civ. Proc. § 964, providing for a taking of appeal from a superior court judgment in all cases involving the possession of real property, and in Code Civ. Proc. § 838, providing that in actions in justice court no evidence should be given upon any question which involves possession of real property, means such a possession as has relation to title, or is necessary to the enforcement or defeat of the cause of action asserted. O'Meara v. Hables, 124 Pac. 1003, 163 Cal. 240.

The word "possession," as used in Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 1340, giving the remedy of partition to cotenants "who hold and are in possession of" realty, means the possession which the law imputes to the holder of the legal title. Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co., 126 Fed. 1, 3, 61 C. C. A. 63.

Where a policy of fire insurance provides that the policy shall be void if any change takes place in interest, title, or possession, except change of occupants without increase of hazard, a leasing of the insured premises by the legal owner, with the consent of the insured, the equitable owner, and placing the lessee in actual possession of the premises, without any increase of hazard, does not avoid the policy, as the word "possession" means legal possession or possessory right. McGinnis v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 890, 394.

Occupancy synonyms

As commonly used and understood, the word "occupation" is synonymous with "possession." Yost v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 594, 599.

"Possession" does not imply occupation." U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. [31 U. S.] 691, 743, 8 L. Ed. 547.

"Possession" means actual control of property by physical occupation, while "title" is the means whereby one holds possession of his land. Collar v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 56, 60, 72 Misc. Rep. 274.

The ordinary meaning of the word "possession" is the same as "occupancy." It is defined as "the act of possessing; a having and holding or retaining of property in one's power or control." Iler v. Miller, 111 N. W. 589, 590, 78 Neb. 875, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289 (citing Cent. Dict.).

The word "possession," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4787, providing that an action may be brought by any person in "possession," by himself or tenant, of real property, against any person who claims an estate or interest therein adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse estate or interest, is not equivalent to the word "occupancy," and one who temporarily vacates a homestead owned in fee simple, for the purpose of giving educational advantages to minor children, does not so abandon the possession as to forfeit his right to maintain an action to remove a cloud from the title. Womble v. Pike, 87 Pac. 427, 429, 17 Okl. 122.

The ordinary meaning of the word "possession" is the same as "occupancy." It is defined as the act of possessing; a having and holding or retaining of property in one's power or control. A question asked of a witness as to who was in possession of the property in a certain year was not objectionable as calling for the conclusion of the witness on legal possession, in the absence of anything in the form of the question or previous questions indicating that the word was used in its technical sense as synonymous with "seisin." Nathan v. Dierssen, 79 Pac. 739, 740, 146 Cal. 63.

Mere occupancy or personal presence of complainant on the ground does not constitute such possession as to sustain an action of forcible entry, and a mere trespasser cannot by the very act of trespass immediately and without excuse give himself what the law understands by possession against the person whom he ejects. Schwinn v. Perkins, 78 Atl. 19, 22, 79 N. J. Law, 515, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 51, 21 Ann. Cas. 1223.

In common usage, the word "possession" is often used as synonymous with "occupancy," and, when it is so used and understood in a question asked a witness, "Who had possession of the land?" the question is not objectionable as calling for a conclusion of the witness. Brown v. Spencer, 126 Pac. 493, 496, 163 Cal. 589.

The words "occupation" and "possession" are frequently used synonymously, especially in leases and like instruments. Where a guaranty for the payment of rent recited that the landlord had exacted from the lessees a guaranty that they would pay the rent that might become due under the lease while they were in the occupation of the premises, and stipulated that the guarantor would on default for such months as the lessees were in occupation of the premises pay the rent, the words "in occupation" will be construed to mean "in possession" to make the instrument effective. Woods v. Broder, 113 N. Y. Supp. 335, 336, 129 App. Div. 122.

Where an indictment for burglary charges the entry without consent of the occupant of a house, occupancy is equivalent to "possession," and embraced the entire premises including the chicken house in question. Moore v. State, 88 S. W. 230, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 400.

The term "possession," as used in Act June 4, 1901 (P. L. 431) § 8, providing that service of notice of intent to file a lien may be served on the party in possession of the improvement, means occupancy, as actual possession exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party. Merritt & Co. v. Poll, 84 Atl. 683, 685, 236 Pa. 170.

Possession of weapons

Penal Law, § 1897, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 195, making it a misdemeanor to have in one's possession weapons of a size that may be concealed on one's person, means a physical possession, and does not extend to a weapon of the kind described in a cabinet at home. People ex rel. Darling v. Warden of Tombs Prison, 134 N. Y. Supp. 835, 836, 74 Misc. Rep. 151.

Residence not required

"Possession" does not imply residence." U. S. v. Arredondo, 81 U. S. (6 Pet.) 691, 743, 8 L. Ed. 547.

As seisin

See Seisin.

Sole possession

In forcible entry and detainer, where the bill of exceptions, after the assertion that plaintiff was in possession of the property, admitted that the property was an alleyway and that plaintiff did not claim the exclusive ownership, the word "possession" must be construed in the light of the other statements, and is not used in its technical sense, so as to denote sole possession. Moye v. Thurber, 40 South. 822, 823, 146 Ala. 180, 9 Ann. Cas. 1175.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 862, declares that it is not necessary to constitute theft, that possession and ownership of the property be in the same person at the time of the taking. Article 863 provides that "possession" is constituted by exercise of actual control, care, and management of property. Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 445, provides that where one person owns the property, and another has possession, charge, or control of it, ownership may be alleged in either, and where property is owned in common, or jointly by two or more, ownership may be alleged to be in all or either. Held, that the article last cited applied to the special owner of property as well as the actual owner thereof, and that the state made out its case when it proved the alleged owner to be a special joint owner with two others, and that, while all three had the care and management of the property, it was unnecessary to prove want of consent of the other joint owners, though to prove it would not be reversible error, nor prejudicial to accused. Lockett v. State, 129 S. W. 627, 628, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 531.

POSSESSION, CUSTODY, OR CONTROL

2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 4, c. 1, tit. 3, § 59, punishes in the manner prescribed for felonious stealing any corporate officer, etc., who shall embezzle without his employer's consent any money, etc., which shall have come into his possession by virtue of such employment, which section was further amended and extended in 1874, as shown by 3 Rev. St. (6th Ed.) pt. 4, c. 1, tit. 3, § 73. Pen. Code, § 528, subd. 2, makes any person guilty of larceny, who, having in his possession, custody or control as officer of any corporation, etc., any money, etc., appropriates it to his own use. Defendants were president and vice president, respectively, of a bank. The president was given direct control over all employés, was required to countersign checks, which duty, with the trustees' consent, might be delegated to the vice president, who could perform the president's duties in his absence. The treasurer had custody of all moneys and a committee consisting of all three officers, together with the secretary, was given general supervision of the business between the meetings of the trustees. A company in which defendants were interested made drafts upon them which were satisfied by funds of the bank taken therefrom by the treasurer by defendants' direction, which funds were replaced by defendants' checks, which all the officers knew were worthless. Held, that physical possession was not essential to custody or control, and, in view of the history of the provision, defendants had "possession, custody, or control" of the funds misappropriated so as to make them guilty of larceny under subdivision 2. People v. Britton, 118 N. Y. Supp. 989, 992, 993, 134 App. Div. 275.

POSSESSION FOR SALE

An ordinance provides that whoever shall have in his possession for sale any adulterated milk as defined by the ordinance, which defines milk falling below a prescribed standard adulterated, or who shall refuse to furnish the sample as provided therein, shall be fined, etc., and provides for the taking of a sample of milk from the can or other vessel from which it is sold to the public. Held, that "possession for sale" within the ordinance means possession for the purpose of sale to consumers in the customary manner of the trade, and the mere receipt by a dairy company at a railroad depot of one or two cans of milk below the legal standard out of a shipment of 26 cans does not amount to such "possession for sale," especially where it appears that the dairy company does not sell to consumers milk below the legal standard, but uses it for manufacturing butter, cheese, and other by-products. City of New Orleans v. Villere, 52 South. 682, 683, 126 La. 514.

POSSESSION OF BANK

See Money in Hands or Possession of Bank.

POSSESSION OF OFFICE

The "possession of an office" as between two rival claimants does not depend on the mere physical possession of the rooms and appurtenances ordinarily used in performance of the duties thereof. Scott v. Sheehan, 79 Pac. 353, 145 Cal. 691.

POSSESSION OR CONTROL

The words "possession or control," as used in Code, § 866, providing for the punishment of any one in "possession or control" of premises who knowingly permits a gambling device to be set up thereon, mean some right or power over or in the premises for the time being, and the right to exercise some power relative thereto, and a conviction cannot be had where it appears that the premises were, at the time of the act of the accused, under the control of a representative of the owner, although the accused was present and had set up a gaming table therein. Nelson v. United States, 28 App. D. C. 32, 36.

POSSESSION PURSUANT TO CONVEYANCE

"Possession is given pursuant to the conveyance when it is given by reason of or on account of the conveyance having been made and not by reason of or on account of some other circumstance. If the possession would not have been delivered except for the making of the conveyance, and no adequate reason appears for the possession being delivered except the making of the conveyance, then the possession is to be regarded as having been given pursuant to the conveyance, no matter what length of time or circumstances intervene the execution of the deed and the change in the possession." Coon v. Wilson, 78 N. E. 900, 901, 222 Ill. 633, 113 Am. St. Rep. 441.

POSSESSIONS

That the words "property, possessions, or estates" are sufficient if not qualified to carry real estate, is well settled by many decisions, but it is otherwise if it appears from the context that personal estate only was in contemplation of the parties. Will in which apt words, distinguishing gifts, of real and personal property, were used, providing, "The balance and residue of my estate of every kind I give, bequeath, and devise to my daughter * * * during her lifetime; said estate to be placed in the hands of my trustee. * * * Said trustee is to invest and keep invested said estate, and the interest or income accruing therefrom is to be by him paid to my said daughter * * * for and during her natural life, and at her death said estate to be paid over by said trustee to her issue; provided, however, that my said trustee shall not be chargeable with interest on any money or personal estate lying idle in his hands"—included the real as well as personal property. Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 598, 138 N. C. 116, 8 Ann. Cas. 417 (quoting and adopting the definition in Clark v. Hyman, 12 N. C. 382; Harrell v. Hoskins, 19 N. C. 479; Pippin v. Ellison, 34 N. C. 61, 55 Am. Dec. 403; Page v. Foust, 89 N. C.

447; Holt v. Holt, 18 S. E. 967, 114 N. C. 241; 1 Underhill, Wills, 295; Schouler, Wills, § 510; Rich. Wills, 415).

POSSESSOR

Rev. St. § 2876, providing that if the owner or possessor of any lot or land in any city or village digs or causes to be dug any cellar, pit, vault, or excavation to a greater depth than nine feet below the curb of the street on which such lot or land abuts, or if there be no curb, below the surface of the adjoining lots, and by such excavation causes any damage to any wall, house, or other buildings on the lot adjoining thereto, such owner or possessor shall be liable in a civil action to the party injured to the full amount of the damages aforesaid, does not apply to boards of education holding titles to the lot or land being excavated for school and school purposes. Board of Education of Cincinnati v. Volk, 74 N. E. 646, 649, 72 Ohio St. 469.

POSSESSOR IN GOOD FAITH

To constitute a person a "possessor of land in good faith," he must not only believe that he is the true owner, but he must be ignorant of the fact that his title is contested by any one claiming a better title. Fellers v. McFatter, 101 S. W. 1065, 1067, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 335.

Under the betterment act (Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757), providing that any person, believing himself to be owner at law or in equity under color of title, shall be entitled to compensation for improvements placed on land, in order to recover for improvements placed on land of another, one must occupy the land in good faith under color of title, and in ignorance of his title being questioned by another claiming a better title, and though he knows the facts which prove the invalidity of his title, yet, if through mistake of law he believes his title good, he is a "possessor in good faith" within the act. McDonald v. Rankin, 122 S. W. 88, 92, 92 Ark. 173.

POSSESSORY LIEN

The lien of a factor belongs to the class known as a "possessory lien," and it is a well-settled and universal rule that the factor must have either the actual or the constructive possession of the goods in order that his lien may attach thereto. People's Bank of Pratt, Kan., v. Frick Co., 73 Pac. 949, 951, 13 Okl. 179.

Attorney's liens are divided into two classes, "possessory" and "charging." The first exists at common law, and extends to all property in the possession of the attorney with respect to which he renders services to the owner. The lien is divested, as in other cases of similar liens, upon the surrender of possession of the property to the owner. The other class, the "charging" lien, is a statutory creation, and was unknown to the common law. It extends to all money or property of the client, including judgments, with reference to which the attorney's services were rendered, and is perfected when notice thereof is given the debtor. Prior to the adoption of the Revised Laws of 1905 this lien did not extend to the cause of action, but only to judgments recovered or money paid, or agreed to be paid, as a result of the attorney's services. Northup v. Hayward, 113 N. W. 701, 702, 102 Minn. 307, 12 Ann. Cas. 341.

POSSESSORY WRIT

As writ of assistance, see Writ of Assistance.

POSSIBILITY

Possibility, see Mere Possibility.

A written contract whereby a son, in consideration of a payment to him by his father, released claim to any part of the father's estate, as against the father and any of his heirs or devisees, is void, as it is the transfer of a mere "possibility." Elliott v. Leslie, 99 S. W. 619, 621, 124 Ky. 553, 124 Am. St. Rep. 418.

POSSIBILITY OF REVERTER

A "determinable fee" is an estate limited to a person and his heirs with a qualification annexed to it by which it is provided that it must determine whenever that qualification is at an end, and so long as the estate in fee remains the proprietor has the rights and privileges of a tenant in fee simple, and no right of seisin or possession remains in the grantor, and the only practical distinction between a "right of entry for breach of condition subsequent" and a "possibility of reverter" on a determinable fee is that in the former the estate in fee does not terminate until entry by the person having the right, while in the latter the estate reverts at once on the occurrence of the event by which it is limited. Lyford v. City of Laconia, 72 Atl. 1085, 1086, 1069, 75 N. H. 220, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, 139 Am. St. Rep. 680.

Where a deed conveyed lands for church purposes subject to a condition subsequent that the title should revert to the grantor and her heirs if the seats in the church to be erected thereon should at any time be sold and not be free, the interest of the grantor and her heirs was a mere "possibility of reverter," which was only a personal right, and not an estate, in the land, so that, if the grantor or her heirs did not elect to assert the forfeiture for breach of the condition, the title remained unimpaired in the grantee. Southwick v. New York Christian Missionary Society, 135 N. Y. Supp. 392, 395, 151 App. Div. 116.

"Where one grants a base or determinable fee, since what is left in him is only a right to defeat the estate so granted upon the happening of a contingency, there is no reversion in him; that is, he has no future vested estate in fee, but only what is called a naked possibility of reverter, which is incapable of alienation or devise, although it descends to his heirs." Tiedeman, Real Prop. (3d Ed.) § 291. In Challis, Law of Real Prop. p. 63, it is stated: "Possibility of reverter denotes no estate, but, as the name implies, only the possibility to have an estate at a future time. Of such possibilities there are several kinds, of which two are usually denoted by the term now under consideration: (1) The possibility that a common-law fee may return to the grantor by breach of a condition subject to which it was granted; and (2) the possibility that a common-law fee, other than a fee simple, may revert to the grantor by the natural determination of the fee." The possibility of reversion to the grantor, under a conveyance providing that the land shall revert whenever it ceases to be used or occupied for a meeting house or church, is left in the person who limits it, but "in the meantime the whole estate is in the grantee or owner, subject only to a possibility of reverter in the grantor." North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 268, 269, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189.

A "possibility of reverter" denotes no estate but, as the name implies, only the possibility to have the estate at a future time. Of such possibilities there are several kinds, of which two are usually denominated. One kind of such possibilities is that a common-law fee other than a fee simple may revert to the grantor by the natural termination of the fee. Another kind is that a common-law fee may return to the grantor by a breach of a condition subject to which it was granted. A naked possibility of reverter of title to land does not denote an estate or any present legal interest in it and gives no right of entry into it. Rev. St. c. 75, § 1, providing that a person owning real estate and having a right of entry into it, whether seised of it or not, may convey it or all his interest in it by deed, does not include a mere possibility of reverter. Pond v. Douglass, 75 Atl. 320, 322, 106 Me. 85 (quoting and adopting definition in Challis, Law of Real Property, p. 63).

POSSIBLE

See As Soon as Possible; Earliest Possible; If Possible.

All possible care, see All.

Results which are only possible cannot be spoken of as either probable or natural. For the latter are those things or events which are likely to happen, and which for that reason should be foreseen. Things which are possible may never happen, but those which are natural or probable are those which do happen, and happen with such frequency or regularity as to become a matter of definite inference. Douglass v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 58 Atl. 160, 161, 209 Pa. 128 (citing South Side Passenger Ry. Co. v. Trich, 11 Atl. 627, 117 Pa. 390, 2 Am. St. Rep. 672).

A contract for the sale of standing timber provided that the timber should be cut during the current winter "if possible," and that which remained should be cut the following winter. Held, that the word "possible" means capable of being done, not contrary to the nature of things; and, as used in such contract, should be construed with reference to the thing to be done, namely, the cutting and removing the trees as timber, and hence did not require further removal after the weather conditions rendered the work impossible as a business proposition. Brown v. Bishop, 74 Atl. 724, 729, 105 Me. 272.

POST

POST OFFICE

See General Post Office.

Establish post office, see Establish.

As contemplated in the statutes of the United States, and in the sense in which the word is ordinarily used, "post office" is the room or building where the local business of the postal department is conducted. A policy insuring articles sent by mail provided that no article should be considered as insured until a letter of advice, with a description of the property, be deposited in the post office at the place of mailing, and that the article should be deposited and registered at the post office. The word "post office" as used in the policy was used in this sense, and a mail box was not included. Banco De Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co., 100 N. W. 532, 534, 124 Iowa, 576, 104 Am. St. Rep. 367.

A post office is a public agency, charged with the duty of transmitting letters that are properly addressed, stamped, and deposited in some regular receptacle for outgoing mail; but in the absence of anything tending to show that a letter in question was addressed to a specified person and properly deposited, postage prepaid, there is no presumption that he received it. Fountain City Drill Co. v. Lindquist, 114 N. W. 1098, 1100, 22 S. D. 7.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS

There is a distinction between residence address as used in the local option law (Rev. St. 1908, § 4096), providing that the petition for a local option election shall contain the residence address of each signer and post office address, a post office address being the place one receives his mail, while a residence address is where one resides, and hence a petition cannot be held defective for lack of post office addresses. People v. Newell, 113 Pac. 643, 645, 49 Colo. 349.

POST ROADS AND ROUTES

"Post routes" are "post roads" within the meaning of Rev. St. U. S. § 5263, granting authority to construct telegraph lines on "post roads." Cosgriff v. Tri-State Telephone & Telegraph Co., 107 N. W. 525, 528, 15 N. D. 210, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142.

Act July 24, 1866, now embodied in Rev. St. §§ 5263-5269, authorizing any telegraph company which accepts its provisions to construct and maintain its lines along any military or post roads of the United States "which have been or may hereafter be declared such by law," supplemented by Act March 1, 1884, c. 9, 23 Stat. 3, which declares that all public roads and highways while kept up and maintained as such are post routes, gives such a telegraph company the right to use any public highway, street, or alley for its lines independent of any action or consent of the state or municipal authorities; but it holds such right subject to the police power of the state and municipality to make and enforce any appropriate and reasonable regulations governing such use. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. City of Richmond, 178 Fed. 310, 312.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 3964, declaring that all letter carrier routes established in any city for the collection and delivery of mail shall be post roads, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, subd. 3, requiring the courts to take judicial notice of acts of the executive departments of the United States, the streets of a city kept up and maintained as such are letter carrier routes established in the city for the collection and delivery of mail, and are post roads; and a telegraph company maintaining telegraph lines on the terms imposed by Act Cong. July 24, 1866, c. 230, empowering any telegraph company accepting the obligations of the act to construct, maintain, and operate telegraph lines over any military or post roads of the United States, has such right to the streets of a city, constituting post roads, as are granted by the act, and such rights constitute a federal franchise. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hopkins, 116 Pac. 557, 559, 160 Cal. 106.

POSTMASTER'S RECEIPT

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2286, providing that, when depositions are returned to the court by mail, the postmaster or his deputy mailing the same shall indorse thereon that he received them from the hands of the officer before whom they were taken, a receipt reading: "Received this package * * * from the hands of E. T. McD., the officer before whom they were taken. * * * R. H. J., P. M., per S., Postmaster at," etc.—purported on its face to be the "postmaster's receipt" within the meaning of the statute, and sufficiently complied therewith. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Felker, 90 S. W. 530, 531, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD

A "posthumous child" is in esse from the time of its conception. State v. Atwood, 102 Pac. 295, 297, 54 Or. 526, 21 Ann. Cas. 516.

POSTPONE

Where a clerk's record of a meeting of school trustees recited that, as there was quorum present, the meeting was "postponed" to meet at a specified later date, the word "postponed" was used in the sense of adjourned, and showed a regular adjournment of the meeting for lack of a quorum. People v. Nelson, 96 N. E. 1071, 1072, 252 Ill. 14.

POSTPONEMENT

See Indefinite Postponement.

POT

A "pot" is a bell-shaped rock in the roof of a mine more or less disconnected from it. Alteirac v. West Pratt Coal Co., 49 South. 67, 868, 161 Ala. 435.

POTATO PLANTER

As tool, see Tools—Tools of Trade.

POTENTIAL

See Constant Potential.

"Potential" means existing in possibility; anything that may be possible. Campbell v. J. E. Grant Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 794, 96.

POTENTIAL EXISTENCE

"Potential existence" means that the thing may be at some time. Webster. Where building contract provided for the payment of the stipulated price in installments as he work progressed, the debt accruing thereunder from the owner to the contractor has sufficient potential existence, after the contract was made, to sustain a parol equitable assignment of a portion thereof. Campbell v. J. E. Grant Co., 82 S. W. 794, 796, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 641.

By the doctrine of "potential existence," which means a present interest in property of which the thing mortgaged is the natural product or growth, as wool to be upon sheep, or crops upon land owned by the mortgagor when the mortgage is made, a mortgage of property not in existence, or which the mortgagor does not then own, may be upheld at common law. Barron v. San Angelo Nat. Bank (Tex.) 138 S. W. 142, 144.

POTENTIAL MODE

The "potential mode" denotes possibility, contingency. Orman v. Van Arsdell, 12 N. M. 344, 78 Pac. 48, 49, 67 L. R. A. 438.

POTION

See Noxious Potion or Substance.

POTTERY PLANT

Buildings supplied with tools, machinery, and appliances for the manufacture of stoneware, brick, and tile constitute what is called a "pottery plant." Indiana Clay Co. v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 67 N. E. 704, 705, 81 Ind. App. 258.

POTT'S FRACTURE

A "Pott's fracture," as usually defined, is the breaking of one bone between the knee and ankle joints, and the dislocation of the other, or, as described in this particular case, as the breaking of the fibula $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 inches above the joint, and of what is known as the malleolus process. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 101 N. W. 289, 125 Iowa, 562, 67 L. R. A. 631.

POULTRY

As valuable things, see Valuable Thing.

"Poultry," defined as domestic fowls reared for the table, or for their eggs or feathers, includes pigeons, if reared for the table. Bartels v. State, 136 N. W. 717, 718, 91 Neb. 575.

A complaint, alleging that accused stole chickens of a specified value, charges the larceny of "poultry," punishable by Gen. St. 1902, § 1211; the word "chickens" meaning poultry, and the word "poultry" including domestic fowls, generally or collectively, reared for the table or for their eggs or feathers. Town of Wolcott v. Stickles, 82 Atl. 572, 573, 85 Conn. 322.

Guinea fowl and turkeys, that are not shown to be in fact wild birds, are more appropriately classified as "poultry," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172, rather than as "birds and land * * * fowls" under section 2, Free List, par. 494, 30 Stat. 196. Silz v. United States, 167 Fed. 686; Id., 178 Fed. 273, 101 C. C. A. 537.

POULTRY DRESSED

Duck meat in tins, some salted and dried, and some packed in oil, is not "poultry * * * dressed," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172, but is rather classifiable as "meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved," under par. 275, 30 Stat. 172. Kwong Yuen Shing v. United States, 177 Fed. 605, 606.

The cooked meat of poultry and game, in tins, and goose livers prepared as pate de foie gras, are not dutiable, either directly or by similitude, as "poultry * * * dressed," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172. James P. Smith & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 462, 463.

As a place for impounding animals

A "pound" is a place where beasts, subject to be impounded, are to be confined, kept, and fed. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341, 345; Farrar v. Bell, 50 Atl. 1107, 73 Vt. 342.

POUNDS PRESSURE

The terms "horse power" and "pounds pressure," as applied to steam, are entirely different in meaning and application; "horse power" expressing quantity of steam, and "pounds pressure" the quality of pressure at which the steam is delivered. Fox v. Coggeshall, 88 N. Y. Supp. 676, 679, 95 App. Div. 410.

POUNDAGE

"Poundage," as used in Rev. St. 1906, § 1230, giving the sheriff "poundage" on all moneys actually made and paid to him on execution, decree, or sale of real estate (except on writs for the sale of real estate in partition), is payment made to the sheriff as a compensation for the risk incurred in handling and disbursing money actually received by him in his official capacity. Major v. International Coal Co., 81 N. E. 240, 242, 76 Ohio St. 200.

POWDER

See Giant Powder; Gunpowder.

POWDER PUFFS

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 410, 30 Stat. 190, the provision for "brushes" does not include so-called powder puffs, which are composed of flat circular pieces of woolen cloth with a fuzzy surface and are useful in applying toilet powder, and which, though resembling brushes in use, do not resemble them in construction. United States v. George Borgfeldt & Co., 153 Fed. 480, 481.

POWER

See Appointing Power; Beneficial Power; Business Powers; Chancery Power; Collateral Power; Commercial Power; Corporate Powers and Privileges; Do All in His Power; Exclusive Power; Executive Power; Exercising Any Power; Full Power; Governmental Power; Horse Power; Implied Powers; Incidental Power; Inherent Power; Judicial Power; Legislative Power; Necessary Powers; Police Power; Private Power; Taxing Power; Unit of Power.

"A 'power' exists in law only for some purpose, and, when fully executed by the accomplishment of its purpose, it is exhausted." City of Philadelphia v. Johnson, 57 Atl. 1114, 208 Pa. 645.

"Construction," as used in the title of an act; "An act to incorporate the Economic Power & Construction Company," suggests building, erecting, and manufacturing, and "power" is used in connection with it, and the words together do not give any clear indication of a business necessarily requiring a special franchise. Economic Power & Construction Co. v. City of Buffalo, 88 N. E. 389, 394, 195 N. Y. 286.

As authority

Real Property Law, § 111, defines a "power" as "an authority to do an act in relation to real property * * * which the owner, granting * * * the power, might himself lawfully perform." Murray v. Miller, 70 N. E. 870, 872, 178 N. Y. 316.

Acts 1894-95, p. 498, is entitled "An act to limit the criminal jurisdiction of justices of the peace and notaries public within certain precincts in J. county and in the wards of a certain city," and provides that justices and notaries in such territory shall not have jurisdiction over any criminal case, except to take affidavits and to issue warrants thereon returnable to the police court of B. in all cases in which that court has jurisdiction, and to take affidavits and issue warrants and examine persons charged with offenses of which such court has not jurisdiction. Held, that the word "jurisdiction," as used in the title, was synonymous with "power" or "authority," as distinguished from "power to hear and determine," and that the act was therefore not objectionable as containing matter not expressed in the title of the act. Lee v. State, 39 South. 366, 367, 143 Ala. 93.

A "power" is not property, but a mere authority, and an absolute "power" of disposal is not inconsistent with an estate for life only and does not enlarge such estate, but merely confers an authority in addition thereto. Melton v. Camp, 49 S. E. 690, 121 Ga. 693 (citing Stuart v. Walker, 72 Me. 146, 39 Am. Rep. 311).

Under Const. U. S. § 8, conferring on Congress the power of enacting uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States, Congress has supreme power, untrammelled by state laws, to pass such laws for the division of a bankrupt's property between the bankrupt, his family, and his creditors, as it deems proper. Hurley v. Devlin, 151 Fed. 919, 921.

Act May 3, 1909 (P. L. 417), requires exits, fire escapes, fire extinguishers, and fire preventives for buildings of a certain character such as theaters, public halls, and other places where persons assemble or the public resort, "other than buildings situated in the cities of the first and second classes." The provisions of the act are enforceable by state officers, no duty to be performed, nor responsibility to be incurred, being imposed upon any city, county, borough, or school district officer, and the fees of any such officer are not regulated thereby, and it has nothing to do with the revenues of counties, cities, or townships. Held, that the act grants no "powers" or "privileges" within Const. art. 3, § 7, providing that no law shall be passed granting powers or privileges in any case, where the granting of such powers or privileges shall have been provided by general law. A. L. Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 79 Atl. 653, 655, 230 Pa. 374.

As duty

Under the law of Maryland, as settled by decision, a legislative delegation of "power and authority" to a municipal corporation, to be exercised for the public benefit or protection, is not permissive merely, but imperative, and imposes a duty and obligation on the municipality for the nonexercise or negligent exercise of which, resulting in private injury, it is liable in damages. State of Maryland v. Miller, 194 Fed. 775, 781, 114 C. C. A. 495.

Under the rule that when a statute confers power on a corporation to be exercised for the public good, the exercise of such power is not merely discretionary, but imperative, and the words "power and authority" may be construed "duty and obligation," a complaint in an action against a city for injuries through a defective street alleging that defendant was charged by law with the duty of keeping its streets in a safe condition for travel, and reciting, in averring such duty, the exact language of the charter conferring power on defendant, was sufficient. City of Havre De Grace v. Fletcher, 77 Atl. 114, 116, 112 Md. 562.

As right

The distinction between "power" and "right," whatever may be its value in ethics, in law is very shadowy and unsubstantial. He who has legal power to do anything has the legal right. State v. Koch, 85 Pac. 272, 274, 83 Mont. 490, 8 Ann. Cas. 804 (citing Kane v. Commonwealth, 89 Pa. 522, 33 Am. Rep. 787).

A "power," which is defined by Real Property Law (Consol. Laws, c. 50) § 131, as "an authority to do an act in relation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, which the owner granting or reserving the power might himself lawfully perform," is a right to dispose of the legal estate by virtue of the statute; but it does not confer on the grantee, as such, any estate. Stanley v. Payne, 119 N. Y. Supp. 570, 574, 65 Misc. Rep. 77.

The distinction between the powers and the rights of a corporation should not be lost sight of, for corporations, like natural persons, have the power to overleap the legal and moral restraints imposed upon them and do acts which they cannot rightfully do. But one who has executed to a corporation an oil and gas lease, granting the right to explore a tract of land for oil and gas and appropriate either if found, cannot secure a cancellation of that portion relating to oil, because the company's charter gives it the right only to dig or mine for natural gas, and sell the same for heating purposes; the lessor being estopped to deny the power which he impliedly recognized the corporation rightfully possessed. Harris v. Independence Gas Co., 92 Pac. 1122, 1125, 76 Kan. 750, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171 (citing Bissell v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 22 N. Y. 258).

POWER APPENDANT

"A power is appendant when the estate created by its exercise affects the estate and interest of the donee of the power." Appendant or appurtenant powers are annexed to the estate of the donee, and must be executed wholly or partly out of the estate, so that a lease by a life tenant who has power to lease must commence during his life. McFall v. Kirkpatrick, 86 N. E. 139, 143, 140, 236 Ill. 281 (quoting Powell, Powers, 8; and citing 2 Hilliard, Real Prop., 828, 843; Williams, Real Prop. [17th Ed.] 130, 446; Washburn, Real Prop., § 1668; 1 Sugden, Powers [8th Ed.] 74, 75; and 2 Chance, Powers, 31-49).

A power relating to an estate or interest given donee may be either appendant or in gross, being a "power appendant" when its exercise overreaches, affects, or destroys donee's interest, and being a "power in gross" when the estate created thereby is beyond and does not affect the estate of donee. Columbia Trust Co. v. Christopher, 117 S. W. 943, 946, 133 Ky. 335.

POWER COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST

A "power coupled with an interest" is a power which accompanies or is connected with an interest; the power and the interest being united in the same person. Cooley v. Kelley (Ind.) 96 N. E. 638, 642.

A power coupled with an interest is an interest in the subject upon which the power is to be exercised, or an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power. Boyer v. Nesbitt, 78 Atl. 103, 104, 227 Pa. 398, 136 Am. St. Rep. 890.

"A power coupled with an interest is when the power or authority is coupled with an interest in the thing itself actually vested in the agent. It must not be merely an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power. The former is irrevocable, while the latter is revocable, though expressed to be irrevocable." Angle v. Marshall, 47 S. E. 882, 886, 55 W. Va. 671 (quoting Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142).

When a power of attorney is coupled with an interest, by such interest is not meant an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of power, but it must be an interest in the property in which the power is to operate. The authority to sell on commission is not an authority coupled with an interest. Taylor v. Burns, 76 Pac. 623, 625, 8 Ariz. 463 (citing Trickey v. Crowe, 71 Pac. 968, 8 Ariz. 176); Id., 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40, 42, 203 U. S. 120, 51 L. Ed. 116 (citing Hunt v. Rousmanler, 8 Wheat. [21 U. S.] 174, 5 L. Ed. 589).

Where one H. made written application for a loan from M., and in such application appointed M.'s agent his attorney in fact to execute a note and mortgage in case H. failed to do so, and thereafter H. died before the loan was advanced or the application accepted by M., such power of attorney was not a "power coupled with an interest," and was terminated by the death of H. Brown v. Skotland, 97 N. W. 543, 545, 12 N. D. 445.

A "power coupled with an interest" must be an interest in the thing itself. The power must be ingrafted on an estate in the thing. The power and interest are united in the same person. The interest or title in the thing, being vested in the person who gives the power, remains in him unless it be conveyed with the power and can pass out of him only by regular act in his own name. A power of attorney authorizing another, to assign future earnings from an existing employment which declared that the power was coupled with an interest and was irrevocable could not be revoked while the employment continued until the debt was discharged, but could be revoked as to earnings from a future employment, since the assignor himself then had no interest therein. Cox v. Hughes, 102 Pac. 956, 959, 10 Cal. App. 553 (quoting and adopting definition in Hunt v. Rousmanler's Adm'rs, 21 U. S. [8 Wheat.] 174, 5 L. Ed. 589, and citing and adopting Norton v. Whitehead, 24 Pac. 156, 84 Cal. 270, 18 Am. St. Rep. 172).

A power of attorney given by joint owners of land to another joint owner of the same land to sell and convey it, which conveys to the attorney no interest in the land to be sold, is not a "power coupled with an interest." Gilmer's Heirs v. Veatch, 121 S. W. 545, 546, 58 Tex. Civ. App. 511 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5478-5480; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7758).

A power appointing an attorney to sell all the property of the estate of a deceased person belonging to the signers of the power, and to receive and distribute the proceeds, containing an express provision that it should be irrevocable and survive them if any of the parties should die, did not constitute a "power coupled with an interest," and was therefore revoked by the death of certain of the grantors prior to the exercise of the power. Weaver v. Richards, 106 N. W. 382, 389, 144 Mich. 395, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855.

POWER DAM

A "power dam" is one in the immediate connection with which water wheels are operated. Penobscot Log Driving Co. v. West Branch Driving & Reservoir Dam Co., 66 Atl. 542, 545, 102 Me. 263.

POWER IN GROSS

A power relating to an estate or interest given donee may be either appendant or in gross, being a "power appendant" when its exercise overreaches, affects, or destroys donee's interest, and being a "power in gross" when the estate created thereby is beyond and does not affect the estate of donee. Columbia Trust Co. v. Christopher, 117 S. W. 943, 946, 133 Ky. 335.

POWER IN TRUST

See General Power in Trust.

A "general beneficial power" granted, which is one in which no person other than the grantee has by the terms of its creation any interest in its execution, may be released by such grantee, but a "power in trust" may not be so released. Newton v. Hunt, 112 N. Y. Supp. 573, 576, 59 Misc. Rep. 633 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pt. 2, art. 3, c. 1, tit. 2, § 79; citing Chapl. Express Trusts & Powers, §§ 545, 685).

POWER OF ALIENATION

See Suspension of Power of Alienation.

The power or right of alienation within the rule relating to restraint of such power or right, repugnant to a grant of an estate in fee simple, includes the power or right to dispose of property in such manner as the owners see fit, whether by direct gift, by settlement in trust or by will, or by sale at a price to be fixed by owner at private sale, or by sale at public auction, or by lien, mortgage, or other means of conveyance or by subjection to the owner's debts and liabilities, and it is not given where the owner is forbidden to alienate or devise to any one except descendants of the testatrix without the consent of all the descendants of full age and competent to convey and devise real property. Manierre v. Welling, 78 Atl. 507, 522, 32 R. I. 104, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1311.

POWER OF CHARTER AMENDMENT

The limitation on the "power of amendment of charters of corporations" may be exercised to make any alteration or amendment in a charter granted that will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or any rights which are vested under it, which the Legislature may deem necessary to secure either the object of the grant or any other public right, not expressly granted away by the charter (citing Holyoke Water-Power Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. [82 U. S.] 522, 21 L. Ed. 140). "The alterations must be reasonable; they must be made in good faith, and be consistent with the scope and object of the act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong cannot be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration." Fair Haven & W. R. Co. v. New Haven, 27 Sup. Ct. 74, 77, 203 U. S. 379, 388, 11 L. Ed. 237 (quoting Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 359).

POWER TO AUDIT, ADJUST, AND SETTLE

"Power to audit, adjust, and settle" a claim is power to hear and examine it, and after such hearing and examination to allow or reject it as a whole, or to allow it in part and reject it in part. State ex rel. Gillette v. Clausen, 87 Pac. 496, 501, 44 Wash. 37.

POWER TO DEFINE VAGRANCY

The "power to define vagrancy" granted by a city charter is simply the power to declare what shall constitute a vagrant. When therefore a city by ordinance declared that any person living idly, or without any settled home, or without any visible means of living or lawful occupation and employment, or found begging or living or frequenting disreputable houses, should be deemed a vagrant, it in effect defined vagrancy and provided for its punishment. Nichols v. Salem, 89 Pac. 804, 805, 49 Or. 298.

POWER TO PARDON

Under Const. p. 2, c. 2, § 1, art. 8, vesting the power to pardon offenses, except after conviction by impeachment, in the Governor, by and with the advice of Council, conditional pardons or commutations or respite of sentence can be granted only in conformity to the advice of Council; the words "power of pardoning offenses" including not only absolute pardons, but also lesser exercises of clemency. PRACTICABLE

See As Soon as Practicable; Reasonably Practicable; So Far as Practicable. See, also, Practical.

A direction to executors to convert the residue of testator's estate into money for distribution, as soon as practicable, is imperative, though it gives some discretion as to the time of sale, as to which the executors' judgment, exercised in good faith, is conclusive. An imperative power in executors to sell the residue of the estate "as soon as practicable * * * having in mind the interest of all concerned," does not warrant its compulsory exercise though three years have elapsed, though the land could be sold "without difficulty," and though the executors have refused to sell to beneficiaries at the "fair and reasonable value" of the property; the will permitting purchase at the market value at testator's death as valued by the executors. Walbridge v. Brooklyn Trust Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 686, 687, 143 App. Div. 502.

As possible

"Practicable" means capable of being performed or effected (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 529). Walbridge v. Brooklyn Trust Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 686, 690, 143 App. Div. 502.

"Practicable" and "practical" are defined as that that may be practiced or performed; capable of being put into practice; done or accomplished; feasible. Joynes v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 83 Atl. 318, 320, 234 Pa. 321.

The word "practicable" does not necessarily mean "possible of execution." An act is practicable if conditions or circumstances permit its performance. It is practicable, if, under all the circumstances, it is feasible; if it can be done lawfully with reasonable convenience. Wilcox v. Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum, 123 N. Y. Supp. 83, 86, 66 Misc. Rep. 253.

The word "practicable" and the word "possible" may and sometimes do have the same meaning. If here regarded as synonymous, neither could be construed to require more than the exercise of reasonable diligence in view of all the circumstances which might attend upon the execution of the work. It may be, and often is, possible to do that which is impracticable. Where a written contract for the sale of an engine called for delivery "as soon as possible," parol evidence that the seller's agent was advised by the buyer of the importance to the buyer of the greatest expedition in shipping the engine by reason of the harvesting season designated date was admissible to enable the court to construe the quoted clause, and to enable the jury to determine whether the undertaking was performed within the meaning of the contract. Berry Bros. v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 112 S. W. 427, 428, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 558 (quoting Williams v. Rittenhouse & Embree Co., 64 N. E. 995, 198 Ill. 602).

The word "practicable," as used in Acts 1903, p. 125, c. 59, § 5, providing that, if any street railroad company and a railroad company shall fail to agree to a change of any existing grade crossing to a crossing above or below grade, either company may carry the subject to a circuit or superior court, and, if the court shall find it is "practicable" to change the grade crossing to one above or below grade, it shall order that the change shall be made, is not synonymous with "possible." A thing practicable must necessarily be possible, but a thing may be possible that is not practicable. It implies a legal discretion, and the exercise of judgment based upon the whole evidence of all the facts that affect the question of practicability within the usual and ordinary sense of the word. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Indianapolis, C. & S. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 487, 488, 169 Ind. 634.

"Practicable" is defined as "that which can be put into practice; possible of execution or performance"; and as "that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished; that which is performable, feasible, possible." Chicago Civil Service Act (Laws 1895, p. 87) § 9, requires the commission to provide for promotions on the basis of ascertained merit and seniority in service and examination, and to provide, "in all cases where it is 'practicable,' that vacancies shall be filled by promotion. Held, that the quoted phrase added little to the meaning of the section, and took little or nothing from it; that if this phrase was eliminated entirely from the statute, it would mean substantially the same; that in both cases the vacancies were to be filled by promotion if possible; and that, where there were at least 15 persons ready and willing to take a promotional examination for a higher position to which they were eligible, the commissioners may not determine before such examination that it is impracticable to fill the vacancy by promotion. People v. Errant, 82 N. E. 271, 274, 229 Ill. 56.

An instruction in an action against a street railroad for personal injuries that, if defendant exercised all the care and prudence that were reasonably practicable, it was not negligent, was erroneous, in that the word "practicable" means "capable of being done or accomplished with available means or resources," and includes the element of reasonableness, what is unreasonable not being practicable, and the qualifying word "reasonably" renders the construction confusing and liable to misconstruction. Benjamin v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 151 S. W. 91, 96, 245 Mo. 598.

PRACTICAL

See, also, Practicable.

"Practicable" and "practical" are defined as that that may be practiced or performed; capable of being put into practice; done or accomplished; feasible. Joynes v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 83 Atl. 318, 320, 234 Pa. 321.

PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION

A canal forming a deep water connection between a navigable stream and the sea was a "practical improvement of the navigation" of the stream, to which a riparian owner's right of the use of the water for irrigation was subservient. Bigham Bros. v. Port Arthur Canal & Dock Co. (Tex.) 91 S. W. 848, 858.

PRACTICAL RAILROAD OPERATIVES

An instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger imposing on the carrier the very high degree of care and foresight of skillful, careful, and "practical railroad operatives" under the same or similar circumstances, is not different in meaning from one imposing on the carrier the obligation to use the highest degree of care practicable among prudent and skillful and experienced men in the same kind of business; there being no difference between "practical railroad operatives" and skillful and experienced men. A practical railroad operative must be one of experience in that line. Loftus v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 119 S. W. 942, 944, 220 Mo. 470.

PRACTICALLY

The word "essentially," as used in the description in letters patent, wherein a patented vessel is described as "essentially a bowl with a flange, etc., is used as synonymous with "practically" or substantially," and not in the sense that this precise bowl shape is indispensable. Electric Candy Machine Co. v. Morris, 156 Fed. 972, 974.

PRACTICALLY IMPOSSIBLE

The word "impossible" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as "impracticable in the nature of the case." The phrase "practically impossible" expresses only that meaning which would be ascribed to the word "impossible" standing alone, and does it with exactness and aptitude. Clevenger v. Matthews (Ind.) 75 N. E. 836, 837.

PRACTICALLY SETTLES

The phrase "practically settles," as used in the statute providing that, when the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals reversing a judgment "practically settles the case," the Supreme Court may review the same, etc., is broad enough to embrace all cases in which the practical effect of the reversal is to finally determine the rights of the parties. Thus, where the judgment plaintiff died pending the appeal and before the decision of Court of Civil Appeals, and, because of his death, the reversal of the judgment abated the action, the decision settled the case so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction on a writ of error under the statute. Ellis v. Brooks, 102 S. W. 94, 95, 101 Tex. 591.

Habit

A question asked an applicant for fraternal insurance, "What is your daily practice in regard to the use of * * * liquors?" calls for information as to whether the applicant has a liquor habit to the extent of being a daily habit, and where he has no such habit, an answer to that effect is truthful, though at times he drank to excess; the word "practice," when used in connection with the word "daily," suggesting the idea of doing a thing regularly, and signifying a habit or regular conduct. Keatley v. Grand Fraternity, 78 Atl. 874, 875, 2 Boyce (Del.) 267.

PRACTICE (In Law)

See, also, Procedure.

All that relates to the manner and time in which a case shall be conducted and tried from its inception to final judgment and execution is generally embraced under the title of "practice." Loeb v. Loeb, 103 Pac. 570, 172, 24 Okl. 384. (Quoting Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5486.)

In a statute entitled, "An act in regard to practice in courts of record," the word "practice" is used as a general term, covering modes of trial and review of judgments and transfers from one court to another. People v. Cosmopolitan Fire Ins. Co., 92 N. J. 922, 924, 246 Ill. 442.

In an act regulating the ascertainment of compensation for property condemned for public use, providing that the practice prescribed by the act shall supersede existing practice in condemnation cases except in cases of the taking of land for public improvement where a payment of award and damages is authorized to be set off against benefits, the word "practice" was used as synonymous with "procedure," and hence includes the tribunal as well as the conduct of matters before it. Morris v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Newark, 62 Atl. 1005, 1006, 73 N. J. Law, 268.

A statute providing that no act of the General Assembly shall affect pending suits, but excepting from its provisions acts relating to "practice in courts," is broad enough to include within the exception all matters of judicial procedure. Where a statute provided that in case of the decease of a judge of the Supreme Court any judge could allow or amend exceptions in a case tried by such deceased judge, a party's right to a new trial under the law as it stood at the time of the trial, because of the death of the judge without settling or signing the bill of exceptions, was not a vested right, and the statute applied to causes pending when it took effect. Johnson v. Smith, 62 Atl. 9, 10, 78 Vt. 145, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000.

Costs

Rev. St. 1908, § 3226, provides that every person desiring to change the point of diversion of water from any of the streams of the state shall present a petition to the district court from which the original decree issued, and that the "practice and procedure" on all petitions shall be the same as if the petition were for an original statutory decree, etc. Section 3300 provides for the payment by counties of the costs of reference, in a general adjudication of the priorities of rights to the use of water for irrigation, out of the treasury of the county in which the water district lies. Held, that the terms "practice" and "procedure," as used in section 3226, related to the legal rules directing the manner of bringing parties into court, and the method of the court after they are brought in, in hearing, dealing with, and disposing of, matters in dispute between them, and had no reference to costs, so that such sections did not authorize imposition of costs on a county of proceedings by petitioner to change the point of his diversion, which involved a mere private dispute, in which the county was not interested. Board of Com'rs of Jefferson County v. Reno, 124 Pac. 582, 583, 53 Colo. 217 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5486).

Change of venue

Proceedings to secure a change of venue are within the words "practice and procedure" in a statute providing that civil actions and proceedings in municipal courts shall be commenced and conducted as prescribed by the statute regulating the practice and procedure in district courts. Clark v. Baxter, 108 N. W. 888, 839, 98 Minn. 256.

Evidence

The word "practice," as applied to procedure, including pleading, evidence, and practice, means those legal rules which direct the course of proceeding to bring parties into the court, and the course of the court after they are brought in. A law which alters the legal rules of evidence or receives less or different testimony than the law requires at the time of the commission of the offense, or applies different rules for the conduct of the trial of the case, is an ex post facto law because changing the procedure. State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 478, 1 Okl. Cr. 428.

PRACTICE A CALLING

To practice a calling does not mean the exercise of a calling on the isolated occasion, but its frequent or habitual exercise. State v. Cotner, 127 Pac. 1, 87 Kan. 864, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY

"Practice of dentistry," as used in Act Wash. March 18, 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 314, c. 152), providing that any person or persons seeking to practice dentistry in the state or to own, operate, or cause to be operated or to run or manage a dental office or place for the practice of dentistry in the state, etc., is clearly distinguished from the expression to "own, operate, or cause to be operated," or to "run or manage a dental office or place for the practice of dentistry," as used in such act. Such act, in so far as it requires examination by and a license from a dental board before one may own, run, or manage a dental office as distinguished from the actual practice of dentistry, is not a proper exercise of the police power. State v. Brown, 79 Pac. 635, 636, 37 Wash. 97, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798.

Where it was shown that defendant, while maintaining a dental office, agreed to make a new mouth plate for a certain price, and that, in order to fit the plate, he extracted a tooth and took an impression for the plate, and collected a sum on account, this constituted the practice of dentistry within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3032 (Pierce's Code, § 4475), prohibiting such practice without a license, and it was immaterial that defendant stated that he made no independent charge for extracting the tooth. State v. Thompson, 94 Pac. 667, 668, 48 Wash. 683.

Evidence that one who had no license to practice dentistry cleaned teeth, examined them to give an estimate of the cost of repairs, and sounded and picked them, was sufficient to justify a conviction for "practicing dentistry" without a license. State v. Sexton, 79 Pac. 634, 635, 37 Wash. 110.

Pub. Acts 1907, c. 249, provides that no person shall engage in the practice of dentistry unless such person shall have first obtained a license from the dental commissioners, and that the unlawful practice of dentistry for each week shall be a separate offense. Held, that performing a dental operation did not constitute engaging in the practice of dentistry within such act, and hence the fact that an employé in the office of a licensed dentist, who was not himself a licensed dentist filled a tooth for a patron and thereafter collected a fee which he paid over to his employer, did not constitute practicing dentistry without a license. State v. Faatz, 76 Atl. 295, 296, 83 Conn. 300.

Sess. Laws Wash. 1893, c. 55, p. 90, § 4, provides that any person who desires to practice dentistry shall file his application and take an examination before the board of dental examiners, provided that persons might be admitted to examination who were not graduates of dental colleges, on satisfactory evidence of having been engaged in the practice of dentistry for 10 years prior to the application for examination. By Laws 1901, p. 314, c. 152, § 1, section 4 of the act of 1893 was amended by omitting the proviso therein, and inserting, "provided this section shall not apply to persons engaged in the practice of dentistry at the time of the passage of this act who are bona fide citizens of the state." Held that where relator, who was not a graduate of a dental college, and who had never attended lectures therein, and did not hold a diploma, had been engaged for five years prior to the amendment of 1901 in the practice of dentistry, without legal authority, he was not entitled to registration as a bona fide citizen engaged in the practice of dentistry under the section as amended. State ex rel. Smith v. Board of Dental Examiners, 72 Pac. 110, 111, 31 Wash. 492.

PRACTICE OF LAW

As business, see Business.

As lawful business, see Lawful Business.

The "practice of law" is not limited to conduct of cases in court, but includes persons acting professionally in legal formalities, negotiations, or proceedings by authority of their client, and one prohibited from acting as attorney by a judgment of disbarment practiced in violation thereof by contracting for a fee, to obtain release of one sentenced to the workhouse and serving sentence, and endeavoring to induce the magistrate to discharge the prisoner on payment of a fine, though the same services might have been rendered by one not a lawyer. In re Duncan, 65 S. E. 210, 211, 83 S. C. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, 18 Ann. Cas. 657.

A justice of the peace who practices law in any of the courts of the county wherein he holds his office is guilty of a misdemeanor under Code, § 27. To constitute a "practicing of law," within the prohibition of the statute, it is necessary that the person charged with its violation shall have customarily or habitually held himself out to the public as a lawyer, or that he demanded compensation for his services as such; and the fact that on one occasion he acted as an attorney may be considered in determining whether he practiced, but it is not conclusive. State v. Bryan, 4 S. E. 522, 98 N. C. 644, 647.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE

As business, see Business.

Code Iowa, § 2579, provides that any person shall be held as "practicing medicine" or to be a "physician," who shall publicly profess to be a physician and assume the duties of that profession, or who shall make a practice of prescribing or of prescribing and furnishing medicine for the sick, or who shall publicly profess to cure or heal. Section 2580 provides that any person who shall practice medicine in the state without having first obtained and filed for record the required certificate shall be punished, etc. An indictment was in two counts, in the first of which defendant was charged with publicly professing to cure and heal persons without having filed for record a certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners conferring on him the right to practice medicine, and as a physician, publicly professing to cure or heal, and in the second count was charged with publicly professing to be a physician and unlawfully assuming the duties of the profession, without having filed for record such certificate. Held, that the indictment was not subject to the objection of duplicity; the acts charged not being stated as separate offenses, but as contemporaneous acts, which, when construed together, constituted the practice of medicine. State v. Yates, 124 N. W. 174, 175, 145 Iowa, 332.

One may "practice medicine" without prescribing drugs or other substances to be used as medicines, and one may do it in other ways than those practiced as a part of their respective systems, by either osteopaths, pharmacists, clairvoyants, or persons practicing hypnotism, magnetic healing, mind cure, etc.; and on a trial for violating Rev. Laws, c. 76, § 8, by practicing medicine without being lawfully authorized to do so, the court properly refused to charge the jury to find that one may practice medicine without necessarily prescribing a substance to be used as a medicine. Commonwealth v. Jewelle, 85 N. E. 858, 859, 199 Mass. 558.

The use of the expression "practicing medicine" to mean the art of healing is by no means new, but is rather a return to the original meaning of the word "medical." The phrase may be properly used by the Legislature as one under which to group healing methods of all kinds, and is broad enough to include a person who claims to be a practitioner of a system of drugless healing. Territory v. Newman, 79 Pac. 706, 707, 13 N. M. 98, 68 L. R. A. 783.

A person publicly professes to heal, in announcing to the public generally his skill in the art of healing, and is guilty, under Code, § 2580, if without a certificate and not within the statutory exceptions, and this is done for the purpose of treating those who may engage his attention, without proof that he has actually undertaken to do so. State v. Heath, 101 N. W. 429, 430, 125 Iowa, 585.

The prescribing of a remedy, in a single instance, for another, is not "practicing medicine" within a statute providing that any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine who shall repeatedly prescribe for the use of any person or persons any medicine for the cure or relief of any bodily disease. Foo Lun v. State, 106 S. W. 946, 84 Ark. 475.

Under Laws 1903, p. 61, c. 40, regulating the practice of medicine, such practice consists either in opening an office for practice, or announcing a general willingness to treat the sick or suggesting, prescribing, or directing for the use of any specified person drugs, medicines, or other agencies for the cure of mind or body, having received, or with intent to receive compensation therefor. Territory v. Lotspeich, 94 Pac. 1025, 1026, 14 N. M. 412.

"The 'practice of medicine' as ordinarily and popularly understood has relation to the art of preventing, curing, or alleviating disease or pain. It rests largely on a knowledge of anatomy, physiology, and hygiene. It requires a knowledge of disease, its anatomical and physiological features, and its causative relations. Popularly, it consists in the discovery of the cause and nature of disease, and the administration, or the prescribing of treatment therefor." One who diagnosed his patient's diseases by a microscopic examination of a drop of blood, and treated them by placing them under the rays of electric arc lights, and also incidentally prescribed certain medicines for which prescriptions he made no charge "practiced medicine," within Acts 1901, p. 115, c. 78, prohibiting the practice of medicine without a license, and providing that any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine who shall treat, or profess to treat, operate on, or prescribe for, any physical ailment of another. O'Neil v. State, 90 S. W. 627, 631, 115 Tenn. 427, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

The words "practice of medicine," as used in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 165, requiring authority to practice medicine, must be construed to relate to the practice of medicine as ordinarily and popularly understood. In a prosecution for practicing medicine without authority, it appeared that defendant had advertised that "Dr. H. (defendant) has opened offices at 86 W. street, for the practice of dermatology and physical education, in the cure of every and all manner of disease on the inside or outside of the human body"; that he was also authorized by law to teach this science of healing; that he had cured certain diseases; "consultation and advice free; the only charge is for Electro-Magnetic Nerve Food and work done." Witnesses testified that they or their friends had consulted said H., been examined by him, had been given treatments by being rubbed with the nerve food, and had purchased quantities of it and had paid him for the treatments and medicine. Defendant admitted that he had no certificate or medical education, but showed a certificate of incorporation to himself and certain persons for the purpose of promoting and teaching dermatology and physical education, aiding and caring for sick, etc., and admitted that he had sold a so-called nerve food, and had applied it to patients. Held, that the evidence showed that defendant had "practiced medicine" in violation of Gen. Laws 1896, c. 165, as amended by Pub. Laws 1901, p. 336, c. 926. State v. Heffernan, 65 Atl. 284, 287, 28 R. I. 20.

Any person who shall prescribe or recommend for a fee, for like use, any drug or medicine or perform any surgical operation for the cure of any bodily infirmity, shall be regarded as "practicing medicine." State v. Cotner, 127 Pac. 1, 87 Kan. 864, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768 (citing Laws 1908, c. 63, § 1).

An agreement "to nurse" an adult implies that the object of the care is sick, and means much more than mere watchfulness, and contemplates such care and attention of the person as will conduce to the comfort and hasten the recovery of the patient; but the practice of medicine, within the statute regulating its practice, implies not only the knowledge of the professional nurse, but implies much more, and includes the application of medical knowledge of disease, and the loss of health, and hence an agreement to nurse a person during his lifetime in consideration of the devise of the patient's property is not an agreement to practice medicine without a license prohibited by the statute, so as to prevent specific performance of the contract. Oswald v. Nehls, 84 N. E. 619, 622, 233 Ill. 438.

The act regulating the practice of medicine (Sess. Laws 1889-90, p. 119, § 8, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 50, c. 42) forbids the practice of medicine or surgery within the state without the license required by the act, and provides that any person shall be deemed as practicing within the act who shall have and maintain an office or place of business with his or her name and the words "Physician" or "Surgeon," "Dr.," "M. D.," or "M. B." in public view, or shall assume or advertise the title of "Dr." or any title which shall tend to show that the person assuming or advertising the same is a lawful practitioner of any of the branches of medicine or surgery under the laws of this state. Defendant maintained an office in front of and on the doors of which he caused his name to be lettered with the words "Physician" and "Dr.," and published an advertisement in a daily newspaper in which he used the title "Dr." before his name. Held, that defendant had violated the act relating to the practice of medicine, although in his use of the word "physician" he prefixed the words "osteopathic and magnetic," or the word "drugless." State v. Pollman, 98 Pac. 88, 91, 51 Wash. 110.

Medical Law, Laws 1907, p. 636, c. 344, § 1, subd. 7, provides that a person practices medicine within the meaning of that act who holds himself out as being able to diagnose, treat, operate, or prescribe for any human disease, pain, injury, deformity, or physical condition, and section 2 (page 637) provides that no person shall practice medicine unless registered or licensed, as therein provided. Section 15 (page 646) makes any person, not a registered physician, who shall advertise to practice medicine, guilty of a misdemeanor. Statutory Construction Law, Laws 1892, p. 1486, c. 877, § 1, provides that that chapter is applicable to every statute, unless its general object or the context or other provision at law indicates that a different meaning or application is intended than that required to be given by that chapter, and section 5 (page 1487) provides that the word "person" includes a corporation. Held, that the medical law applies to all persons, natural or artificial, and, since under it a corporation never could become legally authorized to practice medicine, having advertised to practice the corporation is guilty of a violation of section 15. People v. John H. Woodbury Dermatological Institute, 109 N. Y. Supp. 578, 853, 124 App. Div. 877.

The term "practicing," as applied to medicine, indicates the pursuit of such business, and the fact that one is pursuing such business may be proven by a single act, or by a series of acts. An indictment for unlawfully practicing medicine without a license covers all special instances occurring prior to the indictment in the particular venue, going to sustain the main charge; and hence the state cannot be compelled to elect to stand on any special instance testified to by witnesses for the prosecution. Payne v. State, 79 S. W. 1025, 1027, 112 Tenn. 587.

One who claimed the power to discover and remove the cause of disease so as to give nature a chance, to do which he professed to stop the leaks in the nervous system, and repair the damages done, by rest and dietetics, announcing himself as a graduate of a unique medical school and as master mechanic of the human body who would remove the organ if not working well or if there was pressure on a nerve causing pain, claiming his system gave a permanent cure in difficult diseases, and that he proved his system by getting good results among those who had tried other systems, was "practicing medicine" within Code, § 2579, prohibiting any person to practice medicine without a certificate. State v.

Under the provision of Code, § 2579, that one shall be held as "practicing medicine" who shall make a practice of prescribing or prescribing and furnishing medicine for the sick, where it appeared, in a prosecution under Code, § 2580, prohibiting practicing medicine without a certificate of the board of medical examiners, that accused was catering to the patronage of the sick who were asking relief from their ills, and assured them of her ability to help them, and supplied them with her alleged appropriate remedies, giving instructions for their application or use, though she was careful to call the article she supplied "tissue food," instead of medicine, a charge that if accused, after diagnosing a case, undertook to determine for a sick person applying to her the character of the medicine best suited for the ailment, such act would be prescribing medicine within the meaning of the statute, was correct so far as it went, and was not prejudicial to accused. State v. Breese, 114 N. W. 45, 47, 137 Iowa, 673, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

In a prosecution for practicing as a physician without a license, an instruction defining "practicing medicine" as "Any person shall be regarded as 'practicing' within the meaning of the act who shall append the letters 'M. D.' or 'M. B.' to his or her name, or for a fee prescribe, direct or recommend for the use of any person any drug or medicine or other agency for the treatment, cure or relief of any wound, fracture or bodily injury, infirmity or disease," was approved on review. State v. Oredson, 105 N. W. 188, 189, 96 Minn. 509.

Where licensed physicians form a corporation, the making of contracts and furnishing services of licensed physicians thereunder is not a violation of Comp. St. 1901, c. 55, § 7, forbidding the practice of medicine without a license. State Electro-Medical Institute v. State, 103 N. W. 1078, 1079, 74 Neb. 40, 12 Ann. Cas. 673.

In a prosecution for "practicing medicine" without a license, it was held that one who visited the sick, diagnosed their ailments, furnished medicine for their cure, filed claims against the estates of some of his patients for medical services rendered, and asked the county to recompense him for treating a "county charge," was a "practitioner" within the definition of Code, § 2579, declaring that "any person shall be held as practicing medicine, * * * or be held a physician within the meaning of this chapter, who shall publicly profess to be a physician * * * and assume the duties or shall make a practice of prescribing and furnishing medicine for the sick, or who shall publicly profess to cure or heal," etc. State v. Kendig, 110 N. W. 463, 464, 465, 133 Iowa, 164.

In a prosecution for practicing medicine without a license, evidence that accused had a sign on his door, "Dr. H. M. Blumenthal," was admissible. State v. Blumenthal, 125 S. W. 1188, 141 Mo. App. 502.

One practicing medicine in violation of Pub. Acts 1899, p. 370, No. 237, providing that all persons practicing medicine and all who shall wish to begin the same shall make application for a certificate, is required to apply for a certificate under the amendatory act (Pub. Acts 1903, p. 270, No. 191), providing that all persons "who wish to begin the practice of medicine" shall apply to the board of registration for a certificate of registration. Hooper v. Batdorff, 104 N. W. 667, 141 Mich. 353.

The phrase "physicians practicing," in a requested instruction in a malpractice case that, if defendants possessed such skill as is ordinarily possessed by "physicians practicing" in the same line in similar localities, and that in treating plaintiff's case they used ordinary care in exercising such skill, the verdict must be for them, means only such physicians as are ordinarily recognized as reputable physicians, and the refusal to give it cannot be justified on the ground that the phrase is too indefinite, and may include quacks. McBride v. Huckins, 81 Atl. 528, 531, 76 N. H. 206.

Chiropractic

One advertising himself as a chiropractic and undertaking to heal persons according to that system by manipulating the spine of the patient practices as a physician within Code, § 2579, defining who shall be deemed practicing as a physician. State v. Corwin, 131 N. W. 659, 660, 151 Iowa, 420.

One who practices as a chiropractic and who requires a patient to remove her street clothing for the treatment and to put on a kimono, and who diagnosed the patient's ailments with aid of a vibrator, and who manipulates the supposedly diseased parts, and who prescribes a diet for the patient, and who collects a fee, and who advises the patient to return for further manipulation, "practices a system of treatment of the sick," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8400, prohibiting the practicing of medicine without a license. State v. Greiner, 114 Pac. 897, 899, 63 Wash. 46.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 5241, which provides that the practice of medicine without a license shall be a misdemeanor, and section 5243, defining the practice of medicine as prescribing or directing the use of any "drug or medicine or other agency" for the treatment of injury or disease, the general term "agency" must be construed with reference to the terms of the statute which precede it, under the doctrine of statutory construction of ejusdem generis, and will be limited to agency of like nature and quality, to drugs or medicine, as designated by particular words, so that an indictment for prescribing and directing an agency, commonly known as "chiropractics," being a system of hand manipulation, and not a drug or medicine, or similar agency, does not charge an offense within the definition of the "practice of medicine," and hence is insufficient as not charging a public offense. State v. Gallagher, 143 S. W. 98-100, 101 Ark. 593, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328.

Christian Science

The act regulating the practice of medicine in the state of Ohio provides that any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine or surgery within the meaning of this act who shall append the letters "M. D." or "M. B." to his name, or, for a fee prescribed, direct or recommend for the use of any person, any drug or medicine or other agency for the treatment, cure, or relief of any wound, fracture, or bodily injury, infirmity, or disease, or who shall use the words or letters "Dr.," "Doctor," "Professor," "M. D.," "M. B.," or any other title in connection with his name, which in any way represents him as engaged in the practice of medicine, or surgery, or midwifery in any of its branches, or who shall prescribe, or who shall recommend for a fee for like use any drug or medicine, appliance, application, operation or treatment, of whatever nature, for the cure or relief of any wound, fracture, or bodily injury, infirmity, or disease, and that the use of any of the above-mentioned words or letters, or titles in such connection, and under such circumstances as to induce the belief that the person who uses them is engaged in the practice of medicine or surgery or midwifery in any of its branches, shall be deemed and accepted as a prima facie proof of an intent on the part of such person to represent himself as engaged in the practice of medicine or surgery or midwifery. Held, that the giving of Christian Science treatment for a fee, for the cure of disease, was "practicing medicine" within the meaning of the statutes regulating such practice. State v. Marble, 73 N. E. 1063, 1064, 72 Ohio St. 21, 70 L. R. A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 2 Ann. Cas. 898.

Divine healing

In a prosecution for practicing medicine without a license in which accused claimed to practice as a divine healer, evidence of the tenets of his church was not admissible; the nature of the business done by him only being relevant. Rev. St. 1908, § 6069, defines the "practice of medicine" to be the holding of one's self out to the public as engaged in the diagnosis and treatment of human diseases, or the prescription of any treatment for the relief or cure of any physical or mental ailment with intent to receive any compensation, or the maintenance of any office for the reception, examination, or treatment of any one suffering from any disease, or attaching any word or abbreviation to one's name indicating that he is engaged in the treatment or diagnosis of diseases, and further makes it an offense to practice medicine in violation of the act, but provides that nothing therein shall prohibit the practice of religious tenets or the general belief of any church, not prescribing medicine. Accused kept a furnished office for healing the sick; his sign on the window reading, "Prof. S. Healer." Accused claimed that his treatment was a gift from God, enabling him to cure any disease a physician could and many others, including spinal and nervous diseases, and testified that he was a preacher in a church called "The Divine Scientific Healing Mission," and treated the sick in his living rooms without drugs or surgery, charging some and treating others gratuitously, but that he had no knowledge of the nature of diseases. Held, that accused was "practicing medicine" within the statute. Smith v. People, 117 Pac. 612, 614, 51 Colo. 270, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158.

In St. 1907, c. 212, Gen. Laws 1910, p. 609, Act 2103, "for the regulation of the practice of medicine," etc., the proviso "that nothing herein shall be held to apply or to regulate any kind of treatment by prayer," even if prayer can be regarded as practicing medicine and as a privilege or immunity, extends such privilege to all, and is not an exemption from the general law, which would make the whole act unconstitutional. Ex parte Bannan, 111 Pac. 1039, 14 Cal. App. 321.

One who professes to "heal the sick without the use of medicine" and "by placing his hands upon that portion of the body that is affected by the pain," the healing resulting from "magic power given direct from the Lord," is not a medical practitioner, and such treatment is not the "practice of medicine," as defined and regulated by the statutes of the state. Pol. Code, 1895, §§ 1477-1491. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 548, 4 Ga. App. 283.

Massage

While Acts 30th Leg. c. 123, which makes it an offense to "practice medicine" without a license, and declares in section 13 that any person shall be regarded as "practicing medicine" who shall publicly profess to be a physician or surgeon, treat, or offer to treat, any disease or disorder by any system or method, or to effect cures thereof, and charge therefor, directly or indirectly, money or other compensation, does not apply to masseurs in their particular sphere of labor who publicly represent themselves as such, yet a masseur who treats, or offers to treat, diseases or disorders, mental or physical, and attempts to effect a cure thereof, and charges compensation therefor, without having registered and filed a certificate authorizing him to practice medicine, is guilty of a violation of the act. Dankworth v. State, 136 S. W. 788, 789, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 157.

A masseur who publicly represents himself as a masseur, and who limits his practice to that of a masseur, is exempt from the law requiring a certificate for the practice of medicine; but where he represents himself as a masseur, but undertakes to cure diseases for pay and represents himself as able to cure diseases, he must obtain the proper certificate. Milling v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 434, 435.

Acts 30th Leg. c. 123, providing that it shall be unlawful for any one to practice medicine without a certificate from the state medical board, and that to obtain a certificate one must be examined as to his knowledge of various medical subjects, and section 18, providing that a person who shall publicly profess to be a physician or surgeon, and offer to treat any disease by any system, or who shall offer to treat any disease by any method for compensation, shall be regarded as practicing medicine is not unconstitutional in discriminating against the practice of the masseur treatment, in failing to provide any board or authority to whom one can apply for license to practice such treatment, for a license to practice that treatment can be obtained from the state medical board, and the condition that an applicant have certain medical knowledge is not a discrimination against the practice of the masseur treatment, but a valid exercise of police power. Germany v. State, 137 S. W. 130-132, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 276, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 477.

A party who advertised in a local newspaper that he was a masseur doctor located at a certain place, and that he could heal all diseases, and who treated many persons who came to him afflicted with various ailments, for which he received compensation, was "practicing medicine," within the meaning of Acts 30th Leg. 1907, pp. 224-228, c. 123, forbidding the practicing of medicine without a license, and declaring, by section 13, that any person shall be regarded as "practicing medicine" who shall publicly profess to be a physician or surgeon, and treat or offers to treat any disease or disorder, mental, or physical, or any physical deformity or injury, by any system or method, or to effect cures thereof, and receive compensation therefor, and hence was required to have a license, although he prescribed and used no drugs, but only massage treatment. Newman v. State, 124 S. W. 956, 957, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 223.

Laws 1893, p. 1547, c. 661, § 153, provides that any person who, not being then lawfully authorized to practice medicine within the state, and so registered according to law, shall practice medicine within the state without lawful registration, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Defendant, who was not registered, held himself out by a sign and card as a doctor, with office hours. He prescribed no drugs, but consulted with his patients, diagnosed their ailments, prescribed diet, conduct, and remedies, and gave treatment by manipulation with the fingers, professing to cure without drugs all diseases that physicians could cure with drugs and others that they could not cure, taking payment for his services. Held, that defendant was practicing medicine in violation of the statute. People v. Allcutt, 102 N. Y. Supp. 678, 680, 117 App. Div. 546.

Mechano-Neural Therapy

The science of "mechano-neural therapy" means mechanical nerve treatment, a gentle pressure on all parts of the body. The theory of this science is that the disease comes from the lack of blood circulation, and the treatment proceeds upon the theory of assisting the circulation back into the normal condition. A practitioner of this science, who holds himself out by sign and card as a doctor with office hours, who consults with his patients and gives treatments, who makes a diagnosis and prescribes diet and conduct and remedies, and who asserts the power to cure all diseases that any physician can cure without drugs and also diseases that they cannot cure with drugs, and who takes payment for consultation and diagnosis as well as payment for subsequent treatment, is within the statute prohibiting the "practice of medicine" without being lawfully authorized and registered. People v. Allcutt, 102 N. Y. Supp. 678, 680, 681, 117 App. Div. 546.

Obstetrics

When, in addition to ordinary assistance in the normal cases of childbirth, there is the occasional use of obstetrical instruments, and a habit of prescribing for conditions described in printed formulas which the defendant carried, such a course of conduct constitutes a "practice of medicine" in one of its branches. Although childbirth is not a disease, but a normal function of women, yet the "practice of medicine" does not appertain exclusively to disease, and obstetrics as matter of common knowledge has long been treated as a highly important branch of the science. Commonwealth v. Porn, 82 N. E. 81, 196 Mass. 326, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 13 Ann. Cas. 569.

Ophthalmology

An ophthalmologist is a "medical practitioner" within Laws 1907, p. 358, § 5, prohibiting any person from practicing medicine or treating the bodily infirmities of the sick without a license. Defendant maintained an office in a hotel with a sign "Dr. H. M. Blumenthal" on the door. Prosecutrix went to his office and engaged him to treat her eyes. He diagnosed her trouble, prescribed certain ointments and eye-washes, for which he charged her $10, and fitted her with glasses, for which he charged $15. Held sufficient to show that defendant was "practicing medicine" within Laws 1907, p. 358, § 5, prohibiing any person from practicing medicine without a license. State v. Blumenthal, 125 S. W. 1188, 1189, 141 Mo. App. 502.

A person engaged in fitting glasses to the eye prefixed to his name the title "Dr." on his sign, and on a notice explaining the science of ophthalmology, stating that by its assistance certain ailments would be cured without drugs or operations. The evidence tended to prove that ophthalmology is the science treating of diseases of the eye, and that the fitting of glasses for the relief of defective eyesight is a branch of the practice of medicine. Held, that he practiced medicine within Laws 1903, p. 202, c. 176, regulating the practice of medicine, and declaring every person prefixing the title "Dr." to his name, or professing to be a physician, or prescribing any drug, "medicine, apparatus, or other agency" for the cure of any ailment, shall be regarded as practicing within the meaning of the act. State v. Yegge, 103 N. W. 17, 18, 19 S. D. 234, 69 L. R. A. 504, 9 Ann. Cas. 202.

Osteopathy

The ruling of the state court that osteopaths are persons "practicing medicine," within the meaning of Laws Tex. 1907, c. 123, providing for licensing and registering medical practitioners, will be followed by the federal Supreme Court in determining the constitutionality of such statute on writ of error to the state court. Collins v. State of Texas, 32 Sup. Ct. 286, 288, 223 U. S. 288, 56 L. Ed. 439.

The word "medicine," as used in Const. art. 16, § 31, providing that the Legislature may pass laws prescribing the qualifications of practitioners of medicine and punish persons for malpractice, but that no preference shall ever be given by law to any school of medicine, embraces the art of healing, by whatever scientific or supposedly scientific method; the art of preventing, curing, or alleviating diseases, and remedying as far as possible results of violence and accident, something or method supposed to possess curative power. Hence the Constitution authorized the passage of Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 224, c. 123, requiring physicians and surgeons, including osteopaths, to obtain a license before engaging in the public practice of their profession. Ex parte Collins, 121 S. W. 501, 508, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 2.

Laws 1907, p. 636, c. 344, regulating the practice of medicine, provides for licenses to practice medicine after an examination by the State Board of Medical Examiners, and states the educational requirements of the examination, and prohibits the practice of medicine without a registered license. Section 7, subd. 6, provides that an applicant for license to practice osteopathy shall show that he has studied not less than three years, and subdivision 4 requires all other applicants to have studied not less than four years. Section 14 after stating certain exemptions from the statute, provides that any person engaged in the practice of osteopathy at the passage of the act who presents to the board evidence of graduation from a college of osteopathy with a two years' course, including certain subjects, may be licensed without examination, but such license shall not permit the holder to administer drugs or perform surgery. Section 1, subd. 7, provides that a person practices medicine within the act who holds himself out as able to diagnose any human disease, etc., and who prescribes for any disease, injury, etc.; and, by subdivision 8, "physician" means a practitioner of medicine. The Sanitary Code, § 5, provides that the word "physician" includes every person "practicing about the cure of the sick or injured," or who prescribes for such person. Section 160 requires every physician to be registered with the department of health, and requires physicians who have attended deceased persons to preserve a registry of their death, stating the cause, with other details, and to state the same in their report. Section 167 prohibits any interment of a dead body without a permit from the board of health, and a regulation of the board of health prohibits such permits except on the certificate and record of death of the physician pursuant to the Sanitary Code. Held, that a duly licensed osteopath was a physician within the Sanitary Code as well as the statute, and was entitled to registration as a physician. Bandel v. Department of Health of City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 431, 432, 127 App. Div. 382; Id., 85 N. E. 1067-1069, 193 N. Y. 133, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY

Where it was shown that an applicant for a license to practice medicine and surgery was a resident of the state, engaged in the practice of his profession under the provisions of the law of 1887, and had complied with all the provisions of Sess. Laws 1899, p. 345, relating to the practice of medicine, if the board of medical examiners refuse to issue him a license, it was not criminal in him to pursue his profession. State v. Cooper, 81 Pac. 374, 376, 11 Idaho, 219.

Acts 1901, p. 207, making it a misdemeanor for any person to practice medicine or surgery or to attempt to treat the sick without first obtaining a license from the State Board of Health, is not limited to attempts to treat by medicine or surgery, but includes those who practice neither medicine nor surgery in any of its departments, but who profess to cure, and who treat or attempt to treat the sick by means other than medicine or surgery. State v. Smith, 135 S. W. 465, 468, 233 Mo. 242, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179.

"The term 'practice of medicine and surgery' embraces probably the larger, and certainly by far the most profitable, part of the treatment of diseases, but is not coextensive with the latter term, and cannot be made so, unless surgery and medicine are adopted as the state system of treatment, and all other methods are made indictable." A statute designating who are eligible to practice medicine and surgery, and defining the expression "practice of medicine and surgery" as meaning "the management for fee or reward of any case of disease, physical or mental, real or imaginary, with or without drugs, surgical operations, surgical or mechanical appliances, or by any other method whatsoever," attempts to create a monopoly, and is void. State v. Biggs, 46 S. E. 401, 405, 133 N. C. 729, 64 L. R. A. 139, 98 Am. St. Rep. 731.

Chiropractic

In a prosecution for violation of Act March 14, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 252, c. 212), providing that any person who shall practice * * * medicine or surgery, etc., or any other system of treating the sick, without having a certificate, etc., shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, it must appear that defendant practiced, or attempted to practice, medicine, etc., as a business or calling, or advertised or held himself out as so doing, the term "practicing medicine or surgery," etc., meaning that one is engaged in that line of work as a business; and a complaint, charging that defendant did unlawfully "treat the sick" by practicing the system or mode known as "chiropractic," without having a certificate, etc., was insufficient, the words "by practicing the system or mode," etc., being simply descriptive of the method by which defendant treated the sick. Ex parte Greenall, 96 Pac. 804, 805, 153 Cal. 767.

Right to practice dentistry

A person licensed to practice medicine and surgery under the statute cannot by virtue thereof practice dentistry without securing a license as a dentist, as required by Gen. Laws 1907, p. 127, c. 117. State v. Taylor, 118 N. W. 1012, 1013, 106 Minn. 218, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, 16 Ann. Cas. 487.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE, SURGERY, AND OSTEOPATHY

Laws 1901, c. 254, as amended by Sp. Sess. Laws 1908, c. 63, creating a state board of medical registration and examination and regulating the practice of medicine, surgery, and osteopathy, embraces within its terms one who without registration, examination, or license from such board, and for pay, practices or attempts to practice chiropractic by pretending to adjust the spine of one afflicted with bodily infirmities, or who advertises to treat, for pay, by chiropractic spinal adjustment, persons thus afflicted. State v. Johnson, 114 Pac. 390, 392, 84 Kan. 411, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY

The sale at retail of drugs, medicines, and poisons is included in the "practice of pharmacy" within V. S. 4662, making it unlawful for an unlicensed person to practice pharmacy. State v. Abraham, 61 Atl. 766, 78 Vt. 53.

PRAIRIE

A "prairie" is a level or rolling tract of treeless land, covered with coarse grass and generally of rich soil. Gardner v. Mann, 78 N. E. 417, 418, 36 Ind. App. 694 (citing Standard Dict.; Cent. Dict.; Webster's Dict.).

"Praise" is defined as "especially the joyful tribute of gratitude or homage rendered to the Divine Being; the act of glorifying or extolling the Creator; worship, often in song, in distinction from petition or confession." People v. Board of Education of Dist. 24, 92 N. E. 251, 252, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442, 19 Ann. Cas. 220.

PREAMBLE

A "preamble" is a history or recitation of the necessity for the legislation in question. Bouvier defines it as follows: It is no more than a recital of some inconvenience, which does not exclude any others for which a remedy is given by the enacting part of the statute. A provision of an ordinance which is nothing more or less than a second or more extended title containing the purposes of the proposed ordinance cannot be considered a "preamble." Silva v. City of Newport, 84 S. W. 741, 742, 119 Ky. 587.

The "preamble" in a statute is a prefatory statement or explanation or a finding of facts by the Legislature leading up to the passage of the act, purporting to state the purpose, reason, or occasion for making the law to which it is prefixed. Hanly v. Sims, 94 N. E. 401, 403, 175 Ind. 345.

PRECATORY TRUST

The rule concerning "precatory trusts" requires: "(1) That the words used must be such that it shall appear from them that they were intended in an imperative sense. (2) The subject of the recommendation or wish must be certain. (3) The object thereof must be certain." A will giving testator's residuary estate to his wife "absolutely" with the request that, at her death, or before, if she should think best, to give to his son a certain sum, or any sum she might think best, providing, "and further request that she, my said wife, shall assist any of my brothers and sisters, if they should be in need, and at her decease, she shall divide her property among them as she may think best," gave the wife an absolute estate and did not create a precatory trust in favor of the testator's brothers and sisters. McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105, 108, 109 (citing Warner v. Bates, 98 Mass. 274; Mills v. Newberry, 112 Ill. 123, 1 N. E. 156, 54 Am. Rep. 213).

The doctrine of implied or "precatory trusts" was carried to great length by early English and American cases, and thus where a testator made an absolute gift to one person in his will and accompanied the gift with words expressing a desire, will, request, wish, hope, or recommendation, they have been held sufficient to raise a trust where the subject and object are sufficiently certain; but the later cases have departed from the doctrine of the early cases and have inclined toward the doctrine of giving precatory words and expressions only their natural force. Where testator devised certain land to his son, absolutely, a subsequent provision by which testator requested all of his children, if any should die without issue, at their death to will the property received from his estate to testator's surviving children, or the issue of those dead, the devise was insufficient to raise a "precatory trust" and limit the fee previously devised. Igo v. Irvine (Ky.) 70 S. W. 836, 837.

Where a will stated that after the death of testator's wife one-half of the principal of the trust fund should be paid to the wife's appointee, but that it was testator's wish and desire that she should appoint the share to testator's daughter and her children, the words "wish and desire" did not create what is commonly called a "precatory trust," but was merely an expression of the hope and belief of the testator. Holmes v. Dalley, 78 N. E. 513, 514, 192 Mass. 451.

A will recited the affection and watchfulness of testator's wife; devised certain land to a son; recited that since a prior will certain real estate had been deeded to the daughters as their share of the real estate, "leaving them to inherit such shares of my personal estate * * * which in the judgment of my executors they may be entitled to"; bequeathed "all the balance of my estate * * * to my beloved wife, * * * to be hers and to be disposed of as she may think best. I have full confidence in my said wife, and have abiding faith that she will deal justly with our children"—and appointed the wife and son executors. Held, that the will made independent provision for the wife, without the creation of a "precatory trust." Rector v. Alcorn, 41 South. 370, 372, 88 Miss. 788.

Where a husband conveyed his land to his attorney under an agreement whereby the attorney conveyed to the husband and wife, so as to create an estate by entirety, and subsequently the husband made a will in which he gave all his property to his wife in case she survived him, otherwise to certain legatees, the will providing that in case the wife should survive it was testator's request that, either before her death by gift, or after her death by will, she should provide for testator's legatees as indicated in the will, and where at the time such will was made the wife had made a will in which no provision was made for some of the legatees in the husband's will, and the wife survived the husband, the husband's will did not create a "precatory trust." Hillsdale College v. Wood, 108 N. W. 675, 677, 145 Mich. 257.

PRECEDENT

See Condition Precedent; Unprecedented. See, also, Stare Decisis.

"More is needful to constitute a 'precedent' than merely that a principle or doctrine is announced within the appropriate limits of a cause. It is a fundamental law that a precedent must be a conclusion, a decision in a cause; and not a process of reasoning, an illustration, or analogy." Rodwell v. Rowland, 50 S. E. 319, 327, 187 N. C. 617.

The doctrine of "stare decisis," commonly called the "doctrine of precedents," means that we should adhere to decided cases and settled principles and not disturb matters which have been established by judicial determination. Johnson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 S. E. 122, 124, 144 N. C. 410, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 119 Am. St. Rep. 961 (citing Hill v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 55 S. E. 854, 148 N. C. 539, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 606).

The doctrine of stare decisis, commonly called the "doctrine of precedents," means that we should adhere to decided cases and settled principles, and not disturb matters which have been established by judicial determination. The precedent should serve as a rule for future guidance in deciding analogous cases, especially where persons in their business relations and in making contracts have acted on the faith of its correctness and in reliance on its continuance as a rule of law, so that rights have become vested which will be seriously impaired if the precedent is reversed. Hill v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 55 S. E. 854, 866, 143 N. C. 539, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

PRECEDING

See Last Preceding; Next Preceding.

Revenue Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 120) § 276, declares that, if any property shall have been omitted in the assessment of any year or number of years, the same, when discovered, shall be listed and assessed by the assessors. Section 277 provides that, if the tax on property liable to taxation has been prevented from being collected for any year, it shall be added to the tax for any subsequent year. Section 278 declares that no such charge for tax and interest for previous years as provided for in the "preceding" section shall be made against any property prior to the date of ownership of the person owning such property at the time the liability for such omitted tax was first ascertained, provided that the owner of the property, if known, assessed under "this" and the "preceding" section shall be notified by the assessor or clerk as the case may require. Held, that the word "this" in section 278 did not refer to an assessment under that section, which contained no provision for assessment, but referred to section 277, and the word "preceding" to section 276, and, since the assessment which before the revenue act would have been made under section 276 by the assessor is now made by the board of review, the notice required by the proviso of section 278 must be given prior to the assessment of omitted property by the board of review, so that the statute is not unconstitutional as failing to provide for due process of law in the assessment of such omitted property. People v. National Box Co., 93 N. E. 778, 779, 248 Ill. 141.

Rev. Laws, c. 81, § 11, authorizes the superior court to assess a pauper's kinsman for his support. Section 38 requires overseers of the poor to prosecute or defend actions founded on the "preceding sections," etc. Under St. 1793, p. 479, c. 59, § 14, under Rev. St. 1836, c. 46, § 28, and under Gen. St. 1860, c. 70, § 22, successively, overseers of the poor were authorized to prosecute actions under the preceding provisions of the respective chapters, including actions to compel one to contribute to a pauper kinsman's support. The language of the provision now constituting such section 38 was changed by Pub. St. 1882, c. 84, § 33, by omitting the words "of this chapter" after "preceding section." Held, that the Legislature did not, by changing the phraseology of the statute, intend to restrict the overseers' authority to actions brought under Rev. Laws, c. 81, §§ 35-37, and that such overseers can sue in the name of their town under section 11 to compel one to contribute to his pauper kinsman's support. Inhabitants of Great Barrington v. Gibbons, 85 N. E. 787, 190 Mass. 527.

PRECEPT

A "precept" is a command or mandate in writing of equal importance with a writ or process. Ackermann v. Berriman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 937, 939, 61 Misc. Rep. 165.

PRECINCT

See Proper Precinct; Road Precinct; Within Any County or Precinct.

Parish precinct as municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporation.

Parish precinct as parish, see Parish.

A "precinct" is a certain, definite, particular subdivision of a county. Caudle v. Court of Com'rs of Talladega County, 39 South. 307, 308, 144 Ala. 502.

"A 'precinct' is a mere territorial division created for certain political and administrative purposes. It can neither plead nor be impleaded, nor is it capable of imposing upon itself any obligation or liability, except in pursuance of express legislative authority." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Howard County, 97 N. W. 280, 281, 66 Neb. 663. For administrative purposes counties are divided into precincts, and the precinct is the political unit of such county, as a township is the political unit of counties under township organization. A "precinct" lacks the corporate character of a township, but elects certain officers, and has the power to issue bonds for certain purposes, and in other ways bears a relation to the county not under township organization analogous to that which the township bears to its county. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Howard County, 92 N. W. 579, 580, 66 Neb. 663.

As district

The words "precinct" and "district" in the election law are frequently used interchangeably, and the meaning must be gathered very largely from the connection in which they are used. Welch v. Shumway, 83 N. E. 549, 555, 232 Ill. 54.

The words "district" and "precinct," as used in the election law since the present Constitution was adopted, have not always been used with the same meaning. Sometimes they have been so used that the word "precinct" meant a larger territory than the word "district"; a district being a subdivision of a precinct. This is usually, but not always, the case in the general election law. Sometimes they have been used so that the word "precinct" covered a smaller territory than the word "district." This is the case with reference to the election act passed in 1885, now in force in the city of Chicago, when taken in connection with certain primary laws, although generally in primary laws the term "primary district" is used. Sometimes "district" and "precinct" are used interchangeably, as will be shown from a careful reading of the present general election law. They will be found to be so used in paragraph 30 of chapter 46 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 800). Hence the meaning of these words must be gathered very largely from the connection in which they are used in each instance. For the purpose of town elections only, polling places and election districts in a town having been established by the county board, under the law, solely for the convenience of the voters, for that election the entire town, as to the qualifications of the electors, is considered one voting district. People ex rel. Delaney v. Markiewicz, 80 N. E. 256, 258, 225 Ill. 563.

As religious society

"The term 'religious society' had in the English ecclesiastical law and has in our law a well-defined meaning, and, as commonly used in our law, it is synonymous with 'parish,' 'precinct,' and designates an incorporated society created and maintained for the support of public worship." Riffe v. Proctor, 74 S. W. 409, 410, 99 Mo. App. 601.

As village

The word "precinct" does not include "village." Dooley v. Jackson, 78 S. W. 330, 333, 104 Mo. App. 21 (citing State v. Chester, 47 N. W. 934, 31 Neb. 325, 11 L. R. A. 104).

As voting place or territory

In a statute providing for the punishment of one who votes in more than one election precinct, the word "precinct" means no more nor less than a place of voting, and therefore the statute is aimed to punish the same offense that was punishable under a prior statute providing for the punishment of one who votes more than once at the same or different "place." State v. Anslinger, 71 S. W. 1041, 1044, 171 Mo. 600.

The word "precinct," in Const. § 61, providing that the General Assembly shall by general law provide a means whereby the sense of the people of any county, city, town, district, or precinct may be taken as to whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be sold therein, means only a voting territory as a part of a district, town, city, or county. Precincts are created in the county by the county and for the convenience of the people of the county. It has not the machinery for government. It has not a single official, or may not have, who performs any act of government whatever. Board of Trustees of Town of New Castle v. Scott, 101 S. W. 94, 947, 125 Ky. 545.

PRECINCT OFFICER

By Sess. Laws 1901, p. 109, c. 107, providing that precinct officers are one justice of the peace and one constable, and that titles of the first class shall not be divided, but shall be deemed one precinct for the purpose of electing a justice and constable, justices of the peace in cities of the first class are "precinct officers," and not merely city officers, and the fact that the territorial boundaries of their precinct are coextensive with the city does not render them city officers, and, as a class by themselves, subject to special legislation. Love v. Liddle, 72 Pac. 185, 187, 26 Utah, 62, 62 L. R. A. 482.

PRECIOUS STONES

See Imitation Precious Stones.

As set, see Set.

Articles, such as bowls, vases, trays, wine pitchers, teacups, altar sets, flower stands, and other completed articles, manufactured from jade by cutting, carving, or other means, are not "precious stones," within paragraph 435, Schedule N, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 192, but are dutiable under paragraph 97, Schedule B, 30 Stat. 156, covering "articles and wares composed wholly and in chief value of mineral substances." C. L. Tiffany & Co. v. United States, 126 Fed. 255, 256.

In construing the provisions in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, pars. 408, 435, 30 Stat. 189, 192, for "beads of all kinds," and "precious stones," respectively, held, that pierced opal balls about one-fourth of an inch in diameter and pierced rock-crystal rondelles, or small, flat, faceted disks, are dutiable under the latter provision rather than the former; these articles not being commercially known as beads. Held, also, as to the rock-crystal articles, that they are dutiable under said latter provision rather than as manufactures of rock crystal under paragraph 115, Schedule B, § 1, of said act (30 Stat. 159). United States v. American Gem & Pearl Co., 142 Fed. 283, 284.

Sapphires intended for bearings for electrical instruments are dutiable as precious stones, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, 30 Stat. 192, rather than as articles composed of mineral substances under Schedule B, par. 97, 30 Stat. 156. United States v. American Express Co., 147 Fed. 894.

In the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, for "diamonds and other precious stones advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process, and not set," the word "set" has a well-known and well-defined trade meaning in connection with "precious stones," as to frame or mount in gold, silver, or other metal, and does not include the insertion of an agate bearing in a scale. So that the paragraph was intended to cover only precious stones intended for jewelry purposes, and not such as are fitted for use as bearings. Small pieces of agate, fitted for use as scale bearings by being cut, polished, and grooved, are dutiable as manufactures of agate, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 115, and not as "precious stones," under paragraph 435, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 192. Smith v. Computing Scale Co., 147 Fed. 890, 891.

Where Congress, having provided in general terms for a group of articles, which includes many different species, as "precious stones," selects by name one of those species and prescribes that manufactures of that particular species shall be dutiable at a different rate, as "manufactures of agate, not specially provided for," it has so clearly indicated its intention to withdraw the article from the general group as soon as it becomes a completed manufacture that the absence of the limiting clause, "not specially provided for," from the group provision, is not particularly significant. United States v. Albert Lorsch & Co., 158 Fed. 398, 399, 86 C. C. A. 34.

Rock-crystal intaglios, produced in an expensive manner by engraving, and then painted, are dutiable under the Tariff Act as "precious stones advanced in condition or value . . . by . . . cutting or other process," regardless of their advancement in value by painting. Benedict & Warner v. United States, 135 Fed. 242; United States v. Benedict & Warner, 145 Fed. 914, 915, 76 C. C. A. 446.

PRECIPITATE

See Artificially Precipitated.

PRECIPITATION

That a town did nothing to prevent surface water from following the law of gravitation in crossing over a road onto adjoining land does not show a "precipitation" of water thereon. Beals v. Brookline, 54 N. E. 339, 341, 174 Mass. 1.

PRE-EMPTION

The essence of a right of "pre-emption" is the privilege of purchasing, and when settlers occupy public lands, and the government places the same in the market, the settlers have a preference right to purchase at the price stated, and the state, which has acquired the pre-emption in lands occupied by Indians, has the first right to purchase when the lands are put up for sale or to extinguish the Indian title. Seneca Nation of Indians v. Appleby, 112 N. Y. Supp. 177, 182, 127 App. Div. 770.

The word "pre-emption" has a varied meaning. At common law it expressed the king's right to buy provisions and other necessities for his household in preference to others. In international law, it expresses the right of a nation to detain goods of a stranger in transit so as to afford its subjects a preference. Webster gives, among other definitions, the right of purchase before another, but the word "pre-emption" in Act March 3, 1891, c. 561, § 7, 26 Stat. 1098, relating to homestead entries, has another well-defined technical meaning, familiar to all. United States v. Yankee Fuel Co., 195 Fed. 850, 852.

PRE-EMPTION CLAIM

"A 'pre-emption claim,' until perfected, is not a title defeasible upon the nonperformance of conditions subsequent, but is a mere inchoate right which may ripen into a perfect title upon the performance of certain conditions precedent. Neither is it an already existing and certain demand for land issued by the government upon an executed consideration, but is a mere privilege or right of possession, sufficient under the statute, as against all but those holding under a superior right, or title, to maintain trespass to try title, but not sufficient to defeat this superior right or title by limitation. Creamer v. Briscoe (Tex.) 107 S. W. 635, 637.

A "homestead filing" is a "homestead claim," and a "pre-emption filing" is a "pre-emption claim" within the meaning of acts granting rights in public lands. Hence, a grant of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad, which excepts therefrom such lands within the place limits as shall be found to have been "granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted or otherwise disposed of," did not attach to lands which were within the primary limits of the grant as fixed by the definite location of the line of road, but upon which, at the time the map of definite location became effective, there were homestead and pre-emption claims filed in the proper land office, and remaining of record and unanceled. Oregon & C. R. Co. v. United States, 148 Fed. 603, 605, 606, 78 C. C. A. 375 (citing Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. DeLacey, 19 Sup. Ct. 791, 174 U. S. 634, 43 L. PRE-EMPTION ENTRY

The proviso to section 7 of the Act of March 3, 1891, c. 561, 26 Stat. 1098, giving the right to patent where no contest or protest has been filed within two years after receiver's receipt "upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead, timber culture, desert land, or pre-emption laws," does not include coal land entries. *United States v. A carrier which transports large quantities of coal is entitled to make regulations with respect to the manner of receiving and transporting it so that it may be handled expeditiously, safely, and economically, without unnecessary interference with the carrier's other business; and regulations which are well designed to promote such object cannot be complained of on the ground that they operate to give a preference to one who complies with them, or as a discrimination against one who does not. Where defendant railroad company, which had previously permitted the loading of cars with coal on its side track at a station, made a regulation by which it withdrew such permission, and it thereafter refused to furnish cars to be so loaded to plaintiff or to any other shipper;

but during such time, however, certain mine-owners, who through agreements with the company had constructed private spur tracks to their mines, were furnished cars, some of which they loaded from wagons while standing on such spur tracks before the development of the mines and the construction of tipples for loading, it was held that the furnishing of cars for such purpose, while refusing to furnish cars for loading on the station track to plaintiff, who had constructed no spur track, did not constitute the giving of an undue "preference," either under the common law or the statute of Arkansas, prohibiting the giving of any preference in the furnishing of cars. The idea conveyed by the "preference" is that, as between two persons occupying the same situation or relation to the carrier, one has been preferred over the other or granted certain privileges or facilities that were not extended to the other. Harp v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 125 Fed. 445, 446, 452, 61 C. C. A. 405.

Under Rev. Corp. Act 1896 (P. L. 1896 pp. 290, 283, 304, c. 185) §§ 8, 18, 86, requiring the certificate of incorporation to describe the different classes of stock, authorizing corporations to create different kinds of stock with preferences, and declaring that in the distribution of the assets of a corporation the surplus funds after payment of the creditors and the preferred stockholders may be divided among the general stockholders, when considered in connection with the history of legislation on the subject as embodied in Rev. Corp. Act 1875 (Revision 1877, pp. 181, 191) §§ 25, 80, and the judicial interpretation of such act, a certificate of incorporation which gives to the holders of preferred stock a yearly dividend before any dividend shall be set apart on common stock, creates a "preference" in favor of the preferred stock in the assets on a dissolution of the corporation. Hellman v. Pennsylvania Elec. Vehicle Co. 67 Atl. 834, 836, 73 N. J. Eq. 269.

The idea conveyed by the word "preference" as used to indicate a discrimination by a carrier is that, as between two persons occupying the same situation or relation to the carrier, one has been preferred over the other, or granted certain privileges or facilities that were not extended to the other. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. State, 84 S. W. 502, 503; 73 Ark. 373.

The right given by Laws 1905, c. 103, § 8, to cause unsurveyed land to be surveyed and to purchase the same within 60 days after approval of survey, is not abrogated by Laws 1907, c. 20, § 6e, declaring that no person shall have any preference to purchase unsurveyed land, except as provided in that act; the right conferred by the former act not being a "preference," but a right to purchase initiated by application for survey. Pence v. Robison, 119 S. W. 1145, 102 Tex. 489.

a bankruptcy and insolvency laws

In order to constitute a "preference," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, debtor must do some act to facilitate the proceedings. Submissive inactivity is not enough. Johnson v. Anderson, 97 N. W. 342, 70 Neb. 233.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, provides that a person shall be deemed to have given a "preference" if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against him in favor of any person made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. *West v. Act, § 60a, as amended by section 13, 32 Stat. 562, c. 487); In re White, 177 Fed. 194, 196, 11 C. C. A. 364 (quoting and applying Bankr. Act, § 60a); Galveston Dry Goods Co. v. Frenkel, 86 S. W. 949, 950, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 19.

A suit by the trustee of a bankrupt corporation to compel a stockholder to pay corporate debts because of her alleged participation in a fraudulent overvaluation of the corporation's assets in payment for stock was not a case of a preferential or fraudulent transfer within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, as amended by Act Cong. Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 797, giving courts of bankruptcy jurisdiction in suits for the recovery of property under sections 60b, 67e, and 70e (30 Stat. 562, 564, 565, 32 Stat. 799, 800), relating to fraudulent and preferential transfers but was a suit of a plenary nature, of which the bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction except by defendant's consent. In re Haley, 158 Fed. 74, 78, 85 C. C. A. 404.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, a bankrupt is deemed to have given a preference if within four months before the filing of the petition he procures or suffers a judgment against him or makes a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of which will be to give a creditor a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class. Section 60b provides that, if a person receiving a preference has reasonable cause to believe a preference was intended, it shall be voidable by the trustee. An insolvent made an assignment for the benefit of creditors with a preference in favor of defendant and after paying the preferred debts the residue was not sufficient to pay other creditors. The assignment was made and registered within four months before the filing of the petition. Defendant knew that she was protected in the assignment, and asked that the money be paid to her, which was done. Held, that there was a preference entitling the trustee in bankruptcy to recover the amount paid defendant, although there was no fraudulent intent, and the payment was made by the assignee, and not directly by the bankrupt. Wilson v. Taylor, 70 S. E. 286, 288, 154 N. C. 211.

A guarantor is a "creditor" within the meaning of section 60b of the bankruptcy act (30 Stat. 562), relating to the giving of "preferences" to creditors. Stern v. Paper, 183 Fed. 228, 231.

Under Bankr. Act 1898, § 60, as amended by 32 Stat. c. 487, § 13, providing that a person shall be deemed to have given a "preference" who has within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, or after the filing of the petition and before adjudication, procured a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property which will enable one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class, a "preference" is not necessarily a fraudulent conveyance; a bankrupt having the right to prefer one creditor if giving the preference more than four months before filing of the petition. Coder v. Arts, 29 Sup. Ct. 436, 443, 213 U. S. 223, 53 L. Ed. 772, 16 Ann. Cas. 1008.

One who had a contract with a railroad to furnish board to a track gang entered into an arrangement with a supply firm whereby it was to extend him credit, and he in turn gave it an order on the railroad, directing it to pay to the firm any sums due from the railroad to him. It was agreed between the contractor and the firm that the latter was not to present the order unless the former did not keep up his payments. In pursuance of this agreement, the order was not presented for over a year, and then just one day before the contractor, being insolvent, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Held, that the order did not operate as an equitable assignment as of the date when it was given, but was effective as a transfer only when presented to the railroad, and therefore constituted a "preference," within section 60, Bankr. Act. Johnston v. Huff, Andrews & Moyler Co., 133 Fed. 704, 707, 66 C. C. A. 534.

A "preference" is defined in section 60, Bankr. Act (Act July 21, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 562), as follows: "(a) A person shall be deemed to have given a 'preference' if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition, and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. (Where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required.) (b) If a bankrupt shall have given a preference and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person." Held, that the words which were inclosed in parentheses, and which were not in the original act, but added by the amendment of February 5, 1903 (Act Feb. 3, 1905, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799), did not change the meaning of a voidable "preference" as defined by the original act, the essential elements of which are that the debtor at the time of the transaction must have been insolvent; that there must have been a pre-existing debt paid or secured by the transaction within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and the creditor must have had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was thereby intended. Seager v. Lamm, 104 N. W. 1, 95 Minn. 825.

The return of excessive margins by an insolvent stockbroker to a customer does not constitute a preference, forbidden by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799, where the customer had demanded settlement, and, on the following day, the sum paid over was taken into account in the settlement before turning over to the customer stock belonging to him, according to the understanding of the parties. Richardson v. Shaw, 147 Fed. 659, 77 C. C. A. 643; Id., 28 Sup. Ct. 512, 517, 209 U. S. 365, 52 L. Ed. 835, 14 Ann. Cas. 981.

That a bankrupt who was insolvent paid $2,600 of his money to creditors of his wife did not constitute a "preference" under Bankruptcy Act, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, though the effect of such payment was to reduce the percentage which would otherwise be paid to the petitioning creditor. In re Kayser, 177 Fed. 383, 385, 100 C. C. A. 615.

A "preference" within the bankruptcy act is not the same as a "fraudulent transfer" of a bankrupt's assets. In a preferential transfer, the fraud is technical and infringes the rule of equal distribution among all creditors which it is the policy of the court to enforce when all cannot be fully paid; while in a "fraudulent transfer" the fraud is actual, in that the bankrupt has secured an advantage for himself out of what should belong to his creditors. Where a bankrupt with knowledge of insolvency assigns certain accounts to secure advances from a banker and at once uses the money so obtained to pay favored creditors, the transaction, while constituting a "preference," shows no intent to defraud except inferentially by a preferential payment, and therefore is not a "fraudulent transfer" prohibited by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67e, 30 Stat. 564. Van Iderstine v. National Discount Co., 174 Fed. 518, 519, 521, 98 C. C. A. 300 (syllabus pars. 4, 5).

"A 'preference,' in its legal as well as in its ordinary sense, implies a party who prefers; but a bankrupt, after the appointment of a receiver, cannot, by doing or omitting anything, prefer anybody. He has no longer any title to any property with which he can prefer any creditor." Rytenberg v. Schefer, 131 Fed. 813, 817.

Same—Conditional sale to bankrupt

Where stoves sold to a bankrupt for installation in his buildings under a conditional contract of sale were actually delivered, accepted, and used therein, such conditional sale contract, if otherwise valid, was not objectionable as a "preference," though made within four months prior to the bankruptcy. In re Cohen, 163 Fed. 444, 445.

Same—Conveyance to bankrupt's wife

A bankrupt within four months of adjudication of bankruptcy conveyed his interest in mill property to his wife, who paid full value. He owned no other property at the time, and the wife knew his financial condition, and that the conveyance was made to enable him to pay a creditor, and thereby relieve an indorser from liability. She had no use for the property conveyed. Held, that the conveyance was a "preference" within the bankruptcy act, and must be set aside at the suit of the trustee in bankruptcy. McKay v. Weager, 134 N. Y. S. 66, 67.

Same—Deposit in bank

Transfers of property amounting to preferences, within the bankruptcy act of 1893, contemplate the parting with the bankrupt's property for the benefit of the creditors and the consequent diminution of the bankrupt's estate. It is such transactions operating, to defeat the purposes of the act, which under its terms are preferences. Insolvents, by depositing money in a bank on an open account, subject to checks, do not thereby make a transfer of property amounting to a preference. New York County Nat. Bank v. Massey, 24 Sup. Ct. 199, 201, 192 U. S. 138, 48 L. Ed. 380.

Money deposited in a bank in the ordinary course of business by an insolvent within four months of the time he is adjudged a bankrupt is not a transfer of property amounting to a preference within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and the bank may apply such deposit on a debt due from the bankrupt. Habegger v. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul, 103 N. W. 216, 217, 94 Minn. 445, 110 Am. St. Rep. 379.

Same—Exchange of property

A transfer which does not diminish the estate of a bankrupt, but which constitutes only a fair exchange of property, is not a "preference." McDonald v. Clearwater Short-line Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 1007, 1011 (citing Cook v. Tullis, 85 U. S. [18 Wall.] 332, 21 L. Ed. 933).

Same—Intent of debtor and knowledge or belief of creditor

A "preference," such as offends the bankruptcy act, must be one likely in its results to defeat the collection by other creditors of their claims. Essential to such a preference, therefore, is insolvency. Knowledge or a reasonable cause to believe that a preference is intended involves knowledge of a reasonable cause to believe that insolvency exists as a matter of fact. Des Moines Sav. Bank v. Morgan Jewelry Co., 99 N. W. 121, 123, 123 Iowa, 432.

Bankr. Act, § 60b, which makes a preference voidable if the creditor "or his agent acting therein shall have had reasonable cause to believe" that a preference was intended, states the whole law on that subject, and it is immaterial how or when the agent obtained his knowledge, or that he had confidential relations with the bankrupt, or personal interests which prevented him from disclosing his knowledge to his principal. Campbell v. Balcomb, 183 Fed. 766, 767, 106 C. C. A. 474.

To constitute a "preference" within Bankr. Act, § 60a, a mere intent to prefer is not sufficient, but the test is whether it was given when the debtor was insolvent and within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and whether the enforcement thereof gives any creditor a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class. Blyth & Fargo Co. v. Kastor, 97 Pac. 921, 924, 17 Wyo. 180.

The test of a "preference" within section 60a is whether the person while insolvent performed the act therein described within the prescribed time, and with the effect stated; the intention of the debtor being material only in ascertaining whether the preference is voidable. Lynch v. Bronson, 69 Atl. 538, 540, 80 Conn. 566.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, declares a recoverable "preference" to consist of a transfer of property within four months of the filing of the petition by a person who is insolvent, when the person to whom the transfer is made shall then have reasonable cause to believe that the enforcement of the transfer will effect a preference. Held, that where, at the time the bankrupts transferred certain choses in action to the receiver of a bank to secure an overdraft, the receiver did not have reasonable cause to believe that the bankrupts were insolvent, as distinguished from mere ground for suspicion that they might be, and their financial condition was such at the time of the transfer that the bankrupts themselves might reasonably have thought that they were not insolvent, the transfer was not voidable. In re F. M. & S. Q. Carllile, 199 Fed. 612, 617.

The bankrupts being largely interested in a stock pool, in accordance with the custom of brokers dealing on the New York Stock Exchange, obtained a clearance loan of $400,000 from defendant bank on January 19, 1910. The pool having collapsed, and the bank ascertaining that the brokers were in difficulties, the cashier demanded additional securities, which were thereupon deposited, which, with a deposit of $54,048.08, was received just prior to the brokers' suspension. The clearance loan was charged to the brokers' deposit account, which was credited with the amount of the deposit received, whereupon the account was closed, and a loan put through for the debit balance. Held that, though the deposit might have reached the bank before the brokers were absolutely insolvent, yet the bank knew of the firm's possible insolvency, and that not only the deposit, but the transfer of the securities, constituted a "preference," recoverable by the bankrupt's trustee. Ernst v. Mechanics' & Metals Nat. Bank of New York, 200 Fed. 295, 298.

Same—Judgment

In order to allege a voidable preference under Bankr. Act, §§ 60a, 60b, and amendment thereto, approved February 5, 1903, where the act complained of is the procuring of or suffering a judgment to be entered against the bankrupt in favor of any person, it is necessary, among other averments, to allege that at the time of the rendition of the judgment the judgment debtor was insolvent, and that by suffering said judgment to be entered against him he intended thereby to give a preference, and that the judgment creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the judgment debtor so intended, and that the judgment creditors benefiting thereby would receive a greater percentage of their debt than other creditors of the same class. Rodolf v. First Nat. Bank of Tulsa, 121 Pac. 629, 630, 30 Okl. 631, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562, defining a "preference," and section 1, subd. 25 (30 Stat. 545), defining a "transfer," and section 3, subd. 3 (30 Stat. 5406), declaring what shall constitute an act of bankruptcy, the act of a debtor, while insolvent, in permitting certain creditors to recover and docket a judgment against her so as to acquire a lien on real estate, and in permitting such judgment to remain a lien until one day before the expiration of four months from the date it was so docketed, constituted a "preference" and an available act of bankruptcy. In re Tupper, 163 Fed. 768, 772.

Where an insolvent debtor within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy voluntarily confessed judgment in favor of a creditor holding past-due notes and knowing of the insolvency, and the creditor purchased the debtor's property at execution sale, subject to prior judgments which he paid, and the debtor had reasonable cause to believe that the transaction would effect a preference, there was a "preference" within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, §§ 60a, 60b, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act June 25, 1910, c. 412, § 11, 36 Stat. 842, defining a preference and authorizing the trustee in bankruptcy to avoid preferences. Grant v. National Bank of Auburn, 197 Fed. 581, 588.

Same—Mortgage

Under the law of Texas, by which the failure to record a chattel mortgage as provided by Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3328, does not affect its validity as between the parties, or as against general creditors of the mortgagor, having no lien, such a mortgage is not one which is required to be recorded, within the meaning of Bankr. Act, § 60a, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799; and, a chattel mortgage given in good faith more than four months before the bankruptcy of the mortgagor does not constitute a preferential transfer, under said section, although it was not recorded until within such time. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Pipkin Drug Co., 136 Fed. 396, 397, 398, 69 C. C. A. 240.

A Missouri state bank lent to a corporation, the president of which was also president and a director of the bank, sums in excess of the limit allowed by the law of the state, and held the corporation's notes therefor. The bank examiner required the indebtedness to be reduced, whereupon it was divided and notes of other parties connected with the officers, some of whom were irresponsible, were substituted for a portion of it; all being secured by a mortgage on the corporation's property which was not recorded. Later, on the insistence of the bank examiner, others, including the cashier of the bank, indorsed such notes. The cashier, who made the examinations, afterward assumed all of the notes, taking a note and mortgage from the corporation to himself therefor, and surrendering the bank's mortgage. The corporation was insolvent when both mortgages were given, as all parties had reasonable cause to believe, and became a bankrupt within four months after making the mortgage to the cashier. Held that, notwithstanding the substitution of the individual notes for those of the corporation, it remained the real debtor, and that by indorsing such notes the cashier became its creditor; that the mortgage to him was void as a preference under Bankr. Act, § 60b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799.

McAtee v. Shade, 185 Fed. 442, 450, 107 C. C. A. 512.

Bankr. Act, § 60 (b), making void preferences given within four months before filing of a petition in bankruptcy, refers to existing debts, and not to a mortgage given bona fide for a present consideration, not in contemplation of bankruptcy, and duly recorded. Neill v. Barbaree, 70 S. E. 638, 135 Ga. 771.

A mercantile dealer had sold a bankrupt goods for only a few months prior to his bankruptcy. He was slow in making payments, and, learning that he had placed a mortgage on his stock, the creditor sent an attorney to look after the claim. The bankrupt stated to him that he did not have sufficient capital to meet his bills promptly, but was doing a profitable business and was entirely solvent; that he had an offer for his stock in cash and land amounting in value to a sum largely in excess of his indebtedness, which he could accept at once. The attorney advised its acceptance and meantime took a chattel mortgage on the stock for the amount of his claim. The debtor was, in fact, insolvent, and became within four months thereafter bankrupt. Held, that such facts supported a finding of the District Court that the creditor did not have a reasonable cause to believe, when the mortgage was taken, that a "preference" was intended, and that it was not "voidable" under Bankr. Act, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562. Hussey v. Richardson-Roberts Dry Goods Co., 148 Fed. 598, 599, 78 C. C. A. 370.

Where a mortgage given by a corporation includes after-acquired property, and is valid between the parties, and the mortgagor makes default, and under the terms of the mortgage the property is turned over to the transferee of the mortgage, the delivery of the property gives effect to the mortgage as to after-acquired property, and no "preference" is obtained under the mortgage within the meaning of a statute forbidding preferences by insolvent corporations. Little v. National Bank of Mena, 133 S. W. 166, 167, 97 Ark. 57.

In order to make a "preference" by mortgage unlawful, it is necessary that the preference shall have been made with the intention on the part of the bankrupt to prefer the person to whom the mortgage is given, and that the mortgagee at the time he receives the mortgage shall have reasonable cause to believe that a preference to him was intended, and that the debtor is insolvent. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 76 Pac. 243, 244, 248, 142 Cal. 529.

A bank, which took a chattel mortgage from a debtor to secure a past indebtedness and withheld the same from record for nearly a year, and until a few days prior to the bankruptcy of the mortgagor, held to have had reasonable cause to believe that he was in failing circumstances when it was taken, and insolvent when it was recorded, which rendered it a voidable "preference," under Bankr. Act, § 60, cls. "a," "b," 30 Stat. 562, as amended in 1903 (32 Stat. 799). In re Hickerson, 162 Fed. 345, 347.

In the absence of proof or findings of insolvency of bankrupt when he gave a mortgage, or when it was recorded, or of the mortgagee having reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, which facts are by Bankr. Act §§ 60a, 60b, 30 Stat. 562, made conditions of a transfer being a voidable preference, the mortgage cannot be held to be a preference. In re Clifford, 136 Fed. 475-477.

Same—Payment of indebtedness in general

Where a creditor of a bankrupt during the period of insolvency held one or more claims against the bankrupt and received payment of one or more in whole or in part, such payment constitutes a "preference," and such preference must be returned, or the particular claim upon which the payment was made cannot be allowed, nor can other independent or distinct claims be allowed upon which no payment whatever was made. In re Dellling, 124 Fed. 852, 854.

Where the jury found that a partial payment made by the debtor to a creditor within four months preceding the time the debtor was adjudged a bankrupt did not enable that creditor to obtain any greater percentage of its debt than the bankrupt was able to pay to his other creditors, there was no illegal "preference" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act. John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co., v. Bertenshaw, 75 Pac. 1027, 68 Kan. 734.

A partnership did not commit an act of bankruptcy by giving a "preference," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a(2), 30 Stat. 546, by paying certain creditors in full, although at the time its liabilities exceeded its assets, where its members, who all resided within the jurisdiction, were amply solvent and worth many times the amount of the partnership debts. Washington Cotton Co. v. Morgan & Williams, 192 Fed. 310, 311, 112 C. C. A. 568.

A payment of a debt by an insolvent New York corporation on the day before a petition in bankruptcy was filed against it with intent to prefer the creditor is a "preference," voidable by its trustee under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67e, 30 Stat. 565, and the stock corporation law of New York (Laws 1892, p. 1838, c. 688, § 48), which makes void any payment made by a corporation when insolvent, or when its insolvency is imminent, with intent to prefer a creditor. Wright v. William Skinner Mfg. Co., 162 Fed. 315, 317, 89 C. C. A. 23.

Payment by an insolvent debtor of a percentage on claims of a part of his creditors, which does not lessen the percentage which the other creditors will receive, is not a "preference," for under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60b, providing that if a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it or to be benefited thereby, or his agent, shall have reasonable cause to believe that it was intended to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, the party receiving the payment must have had reasonable ground to believe that he was being given a preference before he can be compelled to refund. Wilson v. Weigle, 62 Atl. 458, 461, 69 N. J. Eq. 561 (citing Hackney v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co., 94 N. W. 822, 99 N. W. 675, 68 Neb. 624, 10 Am. Bankr. Rep. 213).

A payment by a debtor, subsequently adjudged a bankrupt, is not a preferential payment within the bankruptcy act, unless the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent. Stuart v. Farmers' Bank of Cuba City, 117 N. W. 820, 822, 137 Wis. 66, 16 Ann. Cas. 821.

Payments of money by a bankrupt to creditors, enabling them to obtain a greater percentage of their debts than other creditors of the same class, made within four months prior to the filing of the bankruptcy petition, constitute illegal and voidable preferences under the federal bankruptcy act, if the creditors receiving the payments have reasonable cause to believe that preferences are thereby intended. Maxwell v. Davis Trust Co., 71 S. E. 270, 271, 69 W. Va. 276.

If a creditor accepts only that part of his debt to which he would be entitled if all the property liable to the debtor's debts should be apportioned among the creditors, there is no preference in violation of Bankr. Act, § 60 (a, b), though the debtor be hopelessly insolvent. Herzberg v. Riddle, 54 South. 635, 637, 171 Ala. 368.

Section 60a, Bankr. Act, 30 Stat. 562, as amended, provides as follows: "A person shall be deemed to have given a 'preference' if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property; and the effect of the enforcement of such a judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt, than any other of such creditors of the same class." The payment by an insolvent saloonkeeper, at various times within four months prior to the filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against him, of considerable sums of money to two creditors, in part on account of current expenses of his business and in part on account of antecedent debts, while another large creditor was paid nothing during such time, held to constitute a transfer of property with intent to prefer the creditors paid, and to be an act of bankruptcy, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 3a(2), 30 Stat. 546. In re Foley, 140 Fed. 300, 301.

A payment to a creditor having an inchoate lien is not a "preference." In re Lynn Camp Coal Co., 168 Fed. 998, 1000.

Where a loan was procured long before a bank's insolvency, it could not be regarded as having been obtained by the depositor in contemplation of the insolvency, and, where the amount due from the bank on the deposit of the borrower was greater than the amount due on the note at the time of the receiver's appointment, the depositor is entitled to the difference, and such allowance is not a "preference" within the meaning of the insolvency act. Steelman v. Atchley, 135 S. W. 902, 904, 98 Ark. 294, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060 (citing Kirby's Dig. § 951).

It is only where new sales succeed payments, and the net result is to increase the value of the estate, that payments made by an insolvent debtor on a running account are not to be considered as preferential transfers, under Bankr. Act, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, which must be surrendered, under section 57g, before the creditor can prove the remainder of his claim. Joseph Wild & Co. v. Provident Life & Trust Co., 153 Fed. 562, 564, 82 C. C. A. 516.

Same—Payment of note or mortgage

The payment of a bank by an insolvent, within four months prior to bankruptcy, of notes given to third persons, but which have been indorsed to and are owned by the bank, constitutes a preferential payment, within Bankr. Act, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562. In re George M. Hill Co., 130 Fed. 315, 318, 64 C. C. A. 561, 66 L. R. A. 68.

Where a bankrupt corporation made a note to another corporation which indorsed and discounted the same with defendant bank, and within four months prior to the bankruptcy, and when both corporations were insolvent and known to be so by defendant, the indorser paid the note which was not then due and charged the amount to the bankrupt which had goods or a credit for goods with the indorser of greater value than the amount of the note, and the bankrupt was a party to the arrangement, and the officers of the two corporations were practically the same, the transaction was in effect a "preference" by the bankrupt to defendant which was recoverable in equity by the trustee. Mason v. National Herkimer County Bank of Little Falls, 163 Fed. 920, 922.

A preferential payment of notes by bankrupts cannot be recovered from an accommodation indorser of such notes under the Bankruptcy Act, where there is no evidence to show that such indorser advised, or procured the payment, or even that he had knowledge of it until after it had been made. Reber v. Shulman, 188 Fed. 564, 565, 106 C. C. A. 110.

Where a mortgagee purchased a restaurant from the mortgagor, the consideration being the satisfaction of the mortgage and the payment of another debt, and the restaurant was of greater value than the consideration, and the transaction occurred within four months of the mortgagor's voluntary petition in bankruptcy, it was a "preference" under the national Bankruptcy Act, § 60, providing that, if an insolvent within four months of bankruptcy transfers his property so as to enable one creditor to obtain greater percentage of the debt than the others, it is a preference, and section 70 having reference to the title of the trustee in bankruptcy. Where the only mortgagee of an insolvent's property receives property in excess of the value of the mortgage, the transaction to the extent of the excess is a preference, for, while the mortgagee as the only one of his class has a right under the mortgage to payment prior to unsecured creditors, that right does not entitle him to receive property in excess of the mortgage, to the exclusion of unsecured creditors; and hence the excess may be recovered from him for the benefit of the others. Kerr v. Melum, 130 N. W. 83, 85, 27 S. D. 208.

The payment to a bank by an insolvent corporation within four months prior to its bankruptcy, and at a time when the bank had reasonable cause to believe it to be insolvent, of notes in favor of the corporation which it had discounted at the bank and indorsed, or of notes given by it to third parties and discounted by the bank constituted voidable preferences given to the bank which it was required to return under Bankr. Act, § 57g, 30 Stat. 560, as amended in 1903, by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 12, 32 Stat. 799, before it could prove a claim against the bankrupt estate. In re W. W. Mills Co., 162 Fed. 42.

Where a bank on the maturity of a bankrupt's note in good faith, and not merely for the purpose of appropriating the bankrupt's deposit to the benefit of another, set off such deposit against a note due the bank from the bankrupt, such set-off was not a "preference," within Bankr. Act, § 60a. Booth v. Prete, 71 Atl. 938, 939, 81 Conn. 636, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863, 15 Ann. Cas. 306.

Setting off a deposit against an insolvent depositor's note to a bank secured by a mortgage is not a preferential transfer under the bankruptcy act. Hooks v. Gila Valley Bank & Trust Co., 100 Pac. 806, 807, 12 Ariz. 315.

A "preference," within Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1901, p. 970, c. 354, § 48), providing that no payment by a corporation, when insolvent, with intent to give a "preference," shall be valid, is dependent, not on the position of the favored creditor alone, but upon his position as compared with that of other creditors. The test is, not whether the favored creditor has received any advantage, but whether the general creditors have been put at a disadvantage by a payment which reduces or exhausts a fund to which they must look for their payment. The assets of a corporation are a trust fund for the payment of its debts and obligations, upon which its creditors have an equitable lien, both as against the stockholders and all transferees, except those purchasing in good faith and for value. When funds of an insolvent corporation are so distributed as to violate this principle, a "preference" is effected. The demand notes of a corporation held by a bank were fully protected by collateral of the president of the corporation and his wife. On the day before a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the corporation, and while it was insolvent, the notes were paid. Such payment amounted to a "preference" within the statute. Wright v. Gansevoort Bank, 103 N. Y. Supp. 47, 48, 52 Misc. Rep. 214.

Under Stock Corporation Law, Laws 1892, c. 688, § 48, providing that no conveyance, assignment of any property of such corporation, nor any payment made when the corporation is insolvent or its insolvency is imminent, with intent of giving a "preference" to any particular creditor over other creditors, shall be valid, a payment by an insolvent corporation representing the value of mortgages then held by the creditor as security is not preferential, but the payment by an insolvent corporation of notes secured by indorsement is preferential where the effect of such payment is to exhaust practically all the assets of the corporation, leaving nothing for other creditors. The statute applies whenever a corporation is insolvent or its insolvency is imminent if the payment therefor is made with intent on the part of the debtor to give a "preference" without regard to the creditor's intent or even his knowledge as to actual or imminent insolvency of the debtor. Wright v. Gansevoort Bank, 103 N. Y. Supp. 548, 550, 118 App. Div. 281.

Same—Payment to attorney

Payment by a bankrupt to his attorney immediately prior to the bankruptcy for services rendered, so far as the payment is beyond the amount of a reasonable allowance, is a "preference." In re Shiebler, 163 Fed. 545, 546.

To undertake to bring within the definition of a "preference," contained in Bankr. Act, § 60a, requiring a plenary action for its recovery, the protection given a bankrupt's estate because of a transfer of property or money to an attorney or counselor for services to be rendered in contemplation of filing a petition in bankruptcy, is to add to the clearly defined preferences contemplated by the act, and is to include entirely different transactions, not embraced in the statutory definition of a "preference" as Congress has defined that term. Re Wood, 28 Sup. Ct. 621, 624, 210 U. S. 246, 52 L. Ed. 1046.

Same—Pledge

A pledge to secure an old obligation, enabling the creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other, when made less than four months before the bankruptcy, constitutes a "preference" within Bankr. Act 1898, § 60, providing that a person shall be deemed to have given a "preference" if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Stewart v. Hoffman, 77 Pac. 689, 691, 31 Mont. 184.

Same—Transfer of property

In order to constitute a "preference," the transfer must be made by the debtor while insolvent. In re Sayed, 185 Fed. 962, 964.

A "preference," within Bankr. Act, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, providing that if a bankrupt shall have given a preference, etc., it shall be avoidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person, is a transfer by an insolvent person made within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, which enables any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Manning v. Evans, 156 Fed. 106, 109.

A "preference" in bankruptcy is a transfer which will enable one of the insolvent's creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class. It contemplates a class of existing creditors, one of whom is singled out for a preference. It does not include security given for a debt created at the time; the word "preference" in its ordinary significance meaning that one person is favored above others who before stood on an equal footing. Claridge v. Evans, 118 N. W. 198, 200, 137 Wis. 218, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 144.

To constitute a "preference," it must appear that the bankrupts have made a transfer of their property, the effect of which was to enable one of their creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than others of such creditors of the same class. Engel v. Union Square Bank, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1070, 1074, 94 App. Div. 244.

Where an insolvent transfers any of his property, thereby enabling the creditor to whom the same is transferred to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class, such transfer is a "preference" within the Bankruptcy Act. Kahn & Bro. v. Bledsoe, 98 Pac. 921, 922, 22

Okl. 666, 182 Am. St. Rep. 635 (citing Gans v. Ellison, 114 Fed. 737, 52 O. C. A. 366; Wilson Bros. v. Nelson, 22 Sup. Ct. 74, 183 U. S. 191, 46 L. Ed. 147; Pirie v. Chicago, Title & Trust Co., 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. Ed. 1171).

Though the fact that an alleged bankrupt parted with the possession of property levied on under an attachment to the attaching officer conditionally and as security be held to constitute a "transfer" of the property attached, as defined by Bankr. Act, § 1a (25), 30 Stat. 545, it was essential, in order that such transfer should constitute an act of bankruptcy, that it so operate as to constitute a "preference," as defined by section 60a, to wit, that the enforcement of the transfer will enable one of the bankrupt's creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class. In re Crafts-Riordon Shoe Co., 185 Fed. 931, 933.

It is a necessary condition precedent to a preference that there shall have been a transfer of property by the bankrupt whereby a creditor is enabled to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class, as provided by Bankr. Act, § 60a, so that, if a conveyance attacked as a preference was originally and remained a nullity as against creditors and the bankrupt's trustee, there was no "transfer" within such definition. Rosenbluth v. De Forest & Hotchkiss Co., 81 Atl. 955, 957, 85 Conn. 40.

Where a debtor, at the time it delivered a part of its stock in trade to a creditor, within four months of the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against it, had left stock in trade worth about $2,500, and owned notes and open accounts worth about $1,300, and owed about $40,000, it was insolvent, and the transfer operated to give the creditor a voidable "preference," within Bankr. Act, § 60, cls. "a," "b," 30 Stat. 562. Coleman v. Decatur Egg Case Co., 186 Fed. 136, 137, 108 C. C. A. 248.

A bankrupt was testamentary trustee of a number of estates from all of which he had embezzled funds. While insolvent, at the instance of the surety on one of his bonds, he deposited the remaining securities in his hands belonging to the estate with others to make up his shortage, and the same passed into the hands of his successor in the trust after his bankruptcy. Held, that in equity the trustee occupies always a double capacity, so that as an individual he might theoretically be a debtor to himself as a trustee, and prefer himself as such; that, while there is no contract liability so long as there is no default, a contract liability arises on the default; and that consequently the transfer of such substituted securities constituted a preference, and they were recoverable by his trustee under Bankr. Act, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562. Clarke v. Rogers, 183 Fed. 518, 525, 106 C. C. A. 64.

A bankrupt borrowed money prior to the filing of his petition in bankruptcy, to secure which he executed a deed of trust to certain personal property, which he claimed belonged to his wife. Thereafter he executed a bill of sale to the lender for a stock of goods and appurtenances, the purchase price being credited on the debt secured by the deed of trust, and omitted to list the property conveyed by the deed in his schedules in bankruptcy. He also claimed that the goods were sold for cash in good faith, while he believed himself perfectly solvent, and that the sale was not made to secure a pre-existing debt. Held, that such transfer did not constitute a "preference" which would bar his application for discharge. In re Battle, 154 Fed. 741, 742.

Where a bank executed its notes to a clearing house association in return for clearing house certificates and deposited collateral to secure payment, no such preference was created as is inhibited by Civ. Code 1895, § 1979, making any transfer in contemplation of insolvency, except for benefit of creditors, fraudulent and void, unless made to an innocent purchaser for value without notice of the condition of the bank. Booth v. Atlanta Clearing House Ass'n, 63 S. E. 907, 908, 132 Ga. 100.

In order to constitute a preference, the transfer must be made by the debtor with the intent on his part to give a preference, to wit, to pay one creditor, leaving others in danger of not being paid to the same extent, and a receiver must also believe that the debtor has such intent. Under the rule that one who receives security in exchange for a present loan is not of the same class as an existing creditor of the borrower, security given for a present loan is not a preference, though the borrower is insolvent. Where a bankrupt while solvent transferred a land contract to a bank to secure a present loan and future advances to a specified amount, each advancement, in effect, constituted a loan in exchange for a present security, and was not therefore a preference. In re Sayed, 185 Fed. 962, 964.

A transfer of property by a corporation as security for a past indebtedness, within four months prior to its bankruptcy when it was insolvent and the creditor had reason to believe it to be insolvent, is voidable as a preference under Bankr. Act, § 60b, 30 Stat. 562, even though such transfer was made in ratification of an unauthorized transfer made by an officer of the corporation before the four months period. In re W. W. Mills Co., 162 Fed. 42, 47.

To constitute a voidable preference by transfer under Bankr. Act, § 60b, the transfer must have been such as to create a "preference," as defined in section 60a, and have been made with an actual, and not an attributed, intent on the part of the debtor to give a preference, and the creditor must have had reasonable cause to believe such preference was intended. It is not sufficient to establish such actual intent on the part of the debtor that he was insolvent when the transfer was made or that a preference in fact resulted. Debus v. Yates, 193 Fed. 427, 430.

The amendment of Bankr. Act, §§ 60a, 60b, by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, by adding the provision that, "where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required," has the effect of making recordable transfers, which were in fact preferential and so intended by both parties, voidable under subdivision "b," although they were made more than four months before the bankruptcy, where they were not recorded until within that time; but the transfer is still to be judged, in determining the question whether or not it constituted a voidable preference, as of the time when it was made, and not as though it first came into being at the time it was recorded, and unless when it was made the debtor was insolvent and actually intended a preference, and the creditor then had reasonable cause to believe it was so intended, it is not voidable. Debus v. Yates, 193 Fed. 427, 440.

Bankrupt was a man of large business affairs, both on his own account and through three corporations, of which he was principal stockholder and an officer; their aggregate business in one of the years just prior to the bankruptcy amounting to $300,000. At about that time he contracted to sell a lot for $1,500, accepting as part payment a note given to the purchaser by one of his corporations and indorsed by him. For legitimate reasons the deed was not made until more than a year after the contract, and within four months prior to the bankruptcy. The sale was made at the instance of the purchaser who desired the lot and expected to pay cash for it; the application of the note toward the purchase price being at the suggestion of the bankrupt. At the time of the transfer the bankrupt and the corporations were all in fact insolvent; but such condition had existed for some years, and during that time the bankrupt had kept the business of all going and had substantially reduced their indebtedness. He testified that until 10 days before he filed his petition, when certain creditors began to crowd him, he expected to pay out in full, and circumstantial evidence tended to support the statement. No claim was made of any other transfer which was either fraudulent or preferential, and no reason existed why he should prefer the purchaser of the lot, who was not pressing for payment. Held that, conceding that the bankrupt knew of the insolvency, the evidence was not sufficient to show that he intended a preference, or that the purchaser had reasonable cause to believe such preference was intended, so as to render the transfer voidable. Debus v. Yates, 193 Fed. 427, 453-463.

A railroad contractor for the purpose of securing money to perform his contracts assigned to a bank all moneys which would become due from a railroad under a railroad construction contract, which money was to be paid directly to the bank to secure money then due the bank, and money thereafter to be advanced by the bank in reference to the contract until the indebtedness to the bank was satisfied. The assignment was made eight months before bankruptcy of the contractor and at the time of the assignment $6,000 was owing the bank, and thereafter over $15,000 was paid the bank by the railroad; the last payment of $4,747.36 being made four days before bankruptcy. Held that, so far as the consideration was advances to be thereafter made, it was in the nature of a conditional sale, conditional because the bank was not compelled to advance the money if the credit failed, and the transfer became operative as soon as the advances were made, and hence such payments, including the payment of $4,747.36, were not "preferential" within Bankr. Act, § 60a, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, though made within four months, since the transfer was a sale of credit in due course of business and not a preferential payment of a debt. Held, also, that since the transfer or sale of the credit was not to cover all advances which might be made by the bank to the debtor, but only those in reference to the particular railroad construction contract so far as the entire amount paid over by the railroad company to the bank exceeded the $6,000 originally due and advances made by the bank for the particular railroad contract, the payment of $4,747.36 was a preference, under Bankr. Act, § 60a. Cox v. First Nat. Bank, 52 South. 227, 231, 126 La. 88.

To constitute a preferential transfer, it is immaterial, under the bankruptcy act, to whom the transfer is made, if it be made for the purpose of paying the claims of one creditor in preference to those of others. A creditor of a bankrupt cannot escape the consequences of the bankrupt act regarding unlawful preferences by assigning his account to a purchaser of the property of the bankrupt, under an arrangement whereby such purchaser offers to assume the liability and satisfy such account, contingent upon the purchase of the bankrupt's property, and where, in the sale of such bankrupt's property, as a part of the consideration, such purchaser agrees to and assumes such liability, and reserves from the purchase price an amount sufficient to satisfy the same. Hackney v. Hargreaves Bros., 99 N. W. 875, 877, 68 Neb. 624 (citing 5 Cyc. p. 294; Goldman v. Smith, 93 Fed. 182).

To constitute a "preference" voidable under Bankr. Act, § 60, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, it is not necessary that the transfer of the insolvent's property be made directly to the creditor. It may be made to another, for his benefit. National Bank of Newport v. National Herkimer County Bank of Little Falls, 32 Sup. Ct. 633, 635, 225 U. S. 178, 56 L. Ed. 1042.

In view of Bankr. Act, § 60a, defining a "preference" within contemplation of the bankrupt law as being a transfer the effect of which will be to enable any creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class, and section 3, providing that a transfer, while insolvent, of any portion of his property with intent to prefer a creditor over other creditors, shall be an act of bankruptcy, it was held that a mere preference does not amount to an act of bankruptcy, but that there must be also an intent to prefer. Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 36 South. 65, 67, 84 Miss. 54.

Where an insolvent transferred property, and within four months thereafter was adjudicated a bankrupt, such transfer was not voidable, as a "preference" under the bankrupt act, unless at the time of the transfer the transferee had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give him a preference over other creditors. Cummings v. Kansas City Wholesale Grocery Co., 99 S. W. 470, 471, 123 Mo. App. 9.

Under Bankr. Act, § 60, para. "a" and "b," defining a preference as a transfer of property by an insolvent, the effect of which is to enable one creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class, and declaring preferences made within four months of bankruptcy proceedings voidable by the trustee if the person receiving the same shall have had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, it is not enough, to constitute a voidable preference, that the creditor suspected, or had cause to suspect, that a preference was intended; but he must have had reasonable cause to so believe. Johnston v. George D. Witt Shoe Co., 50 S. E. 153, 156, 103 Va. 611.

Under Bankr. Act, § 60, defining a "preference" (a) to consist in the payment by a debtor to one creditor of a greater percentage of his debt than he is able to pay to all other creditors of the same class; and (b) denouncing the penalty imposed on the giving of a preference to be that if such preference has been made and the person receiving it or his agent, acting in the matter for him, had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, then the same is voidable and made recoverable by the trustee, the penalty is wholly independent of any idea of fraud. To make a transfer voidable within the provisions of the act, it is necessary to establish four acts: (1) The insolvency of the transferor; (2) the obtaining by the creditor of a larger percentage of his debt than any other creditor of the same class; (3) the giving of a preference within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy; (4) reasonable cause upon the part of the creditor to believe that a preference was intended. The creditor must have reasonable cause to believe the debtor insolvent in fact as a foundation for reasonable cause to believe that an unlawful preference was intended. Wright v. Cotten, 52 S. E. 141, 142, 140 N. C. 1 (citing Pirle v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. Ed. 1171; In re Fixen, 102 Fed. 295, 42 C. C. A. 354, 50 L. R. A. 605; Sherman v. Luckhart, 70 S. W. 388, 96 Mo. App. 320; Sebring v. Wellington, 71 N. Y. Supp. 788, 63 App. Div. 498; In re Eggert, 98 Fed. 843, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 541; Grant v. First Nat. Bank, 97 U. S. 80, 24 L. Ed. 971).

Under Bankr. Act, § 60, 30 Stat. 562, providing that a transfer by an insolvent within four months preceding bankruptcy shall be a preference if it enables a creditor to obtain a greater percentage than others of his class, intent of insolvent to give a preference is immaterial; it being sufficient that the transferee have reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended. Alexander v. Redmond, 180 Fed. 92, 95, 103 C. C. A. 446.

Where a corporation, to secure past indebtedness and a present loan, assigned notes and security held by it, and later, with the consent of the assignee, took the same back and gave in their place its own notes and trade-marks as security, the fact that the corporation was insolvent at the time of the assignments does not show that they were for the purpose of giving the "preference" prohibited by section 48, Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1892, p. 1838, c. 688), where there was no evidence that the assignee knew of the insolvency at the time. Van Slyck v. Warner, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1, 4, 118 App. Div. 40.

A "preference" and a "fraudulent transfer" of a bankrupt's assets, within the bankruptcy act, are not the same; the fraud in a preferential transfer being technical and consisting in the infraction of the rule of equal distribution among all creditors, while, in a fraudulent transfer, the fraud is actual, in that the bankrupt has secured an advantage for himself out of what in law should belong to his creditors. Where a creditor attempted to take possession of the property of his debtor, over which he had previously attempted to obtain a lien by a bill of sale and a conditional sale, and must, from the circumstances, have known that such debtor was insolvent, it was a "preference" within the meaning of the bankrupt act and is not permissible. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Elsey-Hemphill Carriage Co., 133 S. W. 412, 415, 152 Mo. App. 401.

A transfer of assets by a bankrupt to a creditor within four months prior to bankruptcy, though with intent on the bankrupt's part to prefer the creditor, is not a voidable preference, unless the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, or unless the proof shows that the creditor knew or ought to have known the substantial truth concerning the bankrupt's financial condition. In re Houghton Web Co., 185 Fed. 213, 214.

While a bankrupt's trustee, in order to set aside a transfer as a "preference," is not required to show that the transferee had actual knowledge that a preference was intended by the transfer, or that the transferor was insolvent, it must be shown that the transferee was in possession of some fact or facts which would have led a reasonably prudent man to inquire, and that the result of such inquiry would have disclosed the transferor's insolvency. Andrews v. Kellogg, 92 Pac. 222, 223, 41 Colo. 35.

PREFERENCE IN DESIGNATION

The words "preference in designation," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 35, providing that, when two or more conventions or caucuses shall be held and the nominees thereof certified, each claiming to be the regular convention or caucus of the same political party, "preference in designation" shall be given to the nominations of the ones certified by the committee which has been officially certified to be authorized to represent the party, suggests at once and unmistakably two or more designations, one for the party ticket which is regular, and one for each of those which are irregular. State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 100 N. W. 964, 974, 122 Wis. 534.

PREFERENCE SHAREHOLDER

As shareholder, see Shareholder.

"The expression 'preference shareholder' is equivocal. It by no means clearly indicates what are the rights of those to whom it applies. * * * All which the language fairly imports is that some preference is given to the person to whom the language applies. How far the preference is to extend must be ascertained by other media than the mere expression itself." Hackett v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 140 Fed. 717.

PREFERENTIAL ASSIGNMENT

A testamentary trustee who is also a beneficiary executed a conveyance of his interest in the trust estate to a third person, and the grantee reconveyed the same interest to the trustee, with power to manage and sell the same for the benefit of the legatees; any balance to be for the benefit of the trustee. Held, that the transaction was not a "preferential assignment," within Act April 17, 1843 (P. L. 273), providing that assignments in trust by debtors on account of their inability to pay their debts, with intent to prefer one or more creditors, shall be construed to inure to the benefit of the creditors. In re Hart's Estate, 60 Atl. 728, 729, 211 Pa. 219.

PREFERENTIAL RIGHT

In an action against a street railroad for personal injuries, error in instructing that the street railroad had no prior right to that part of the street occupied by its track, as against pedestrians and vehicles, is not cured by an instruction that it had a superior and preferential right, since there is no distinction between a "prior" right and a "superior" or "preferential" right, and hence the two instructions were clearly inconsistent and left the jury to accept either and disregard the other. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Gustafson, 121 Pac. 1015, 1019, 21 Colo. App. 478.

While street cars and drivers of vehicles, equestrians, and pedestrians, as a general rule, have concurrent rights to occupy the public street crossings in a city, the right of the railroad at such point is superior, in the sense that it is preferential, as to the right of way. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Norton, 141 Fed. 599, 604, 73 C. C. A. 1.

PREFERRED CLAIMS

Laws 1887, p. 308, as amended by Act June 21, 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 242; Starr & C. Ann. St. p. 2586, c. 82, par. 56), provides that when the business of any person is suspended by the action of creditors, or is put in the hands of a receiver or trustee, the debts owing to laborers or servants shall be "preferred claims," and the laborers or employes shall be preferred creditors, and shall be first paid in full. Held, that such act merely gave a preference to claims for labor or services over claims of other simple contract creditors, and did not create a preferred "lien" in favor of labor claims so as to give them priority over a claim secured by a valid chattel mortgage on the insolvent's property. Seymour v. Berg, 81 N. E. 339, 342, 227 Ill. 411, 10 Ann. Cas. 340.

To establish a preference under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 7051, 7058, making debts of insolvents, owing to laborers or employes, "preferred debts" against the insolvent estate, it is essential that it be alleged and proved that the labor was performed in connection with the business in which the insolvent debtor was engaged. McDaniel v. Osborn (Ind.) 72 N. E. 601, 608.

PREFERRED CREDITORS

A creditor is not a "preferred creditor" disqualified from filing a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor because of the receipt of the payment more than four months previously, which, if made within that time, would have been preferential, but is not so under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. In re Girard Glazed Kid Co., 129 Fed. 841, 842.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, defines "preferred creditors" as follows: A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Coder v. Arts, 152 Fed. 943, 948, 82 C. C. A. 91, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372.

PREFERRED DIVIDEND

Preferred stock in a corporation is that entitling the holder to dividends from earnings before the common stock can receive a dividend therefrom. The relation of debtor and creditor, however, does not exist between the preferred stockholders and the corporation, as to any right to a preferred or guaranteed dividend until the dividend is declared; the preferred dividend being nothing more than money paid out of profits by a corporation to one class of shareholders in priority to that to be paid to another class. Kain v. Angle, 69 S. E. 355, 357, 111 Va. 415.

PREFERRED LIEN

The provision in a certificate of preferred stock that it "shall be a preferred lien on the assets of the company," where the entire language of the certificate shows no intention to place the stockholder in a position of a creditor, only gives a preferred lien on the assets of the corporation, when in liquidation, over the common stockholders. Weaver Power Co. v. Elk Mountain Mill Co., 69 S. E. 747, 748, 154 N. C. 76.

PREFERRED STOCK

Merely denominating shares as "preferred stock" in a legislative act does not per se define the rights and character of the holder of such shares, which depend on the essential qualities of the transaction authorized by the statute. As a general rule holders of "preferred stock" are not entitled to dividends unless the earnings justify paying them, and the principal privileges such stockholders enjoy is priority of claim to dividend over the holders of common shares, and the holder of "preferred stock" was not entitled to recover semiannual dividends on a stock not declared by the corporation. Kidd v. Puritana Cereal Food Co., 122 S. W. 784, 788, 145 Mo. App. 502.

A loose expression is used when it is said that "preferred stock" is only a form of a mortgage. Whatever the extent of the preference may be, speaking generally, stock, whether it be common or preferred, does not represent indebtedness. Its possession means ownership of the company. Sternbergh v. Brock, 74 Atl. 166, 168, 225 Pa. 279, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877.

A "preferred stockholder" of a corporation is not a creditor of the corporation and must be confined to his rights as a stockholder. The provision in a certificate of preferred stock that it "shall be a preferred lien on the assets of the company," where the entire language of the certificate shows no intention to place the stockholder in a position of a creditor, only gives a preferred lien on the assets of the corporation, when in liquidation over the common stockholders. Weaver Power Co. v. Elk Mountain Mill Co., 69 S. E. 747, 748, 154 N. C. 76.

Securities issued by a corporation, which were denominated "bonds," contained a promise to pay a certain sum at a fixed time with a stated interest, and further provided that, after the payment of specified dividends on the stock, the holders of the bonds were entitled to a proportionate share in the surplus income, if any. Held, that the securities were in effect a species of preferred stock, as "stock" confers upon the holder a part ownership of the assets with the right to share in the profits of the corporation, and on dissolution in the assets after payment of debts, but without a lien on the property, while a "bond" is an obligation to pay a fixed debt with interest, which debt, if secured, is not wiped out if the security proves insufficient. Cass v. Realty Securities Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 1074, 1077, 148 App. Div. 96.

Where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff for services a portion of the preferred stock of a corporation to be organized, the use of the term "preferred stock" in such contract, in connection with defendant's guaranty of interest, may fairly be taken to indicate stock whose par value is to be based upon the actual value of the property it represents, and not upon any fictitious or speculative value. Critchfield v. Julia, 147 Fed. 65, 71, 77 C. C. A. 297.

"Preferred stock" in a corporation is that entitling the holder to dividends from earnings before the common stock can receive a dividend therefrom. The relation of debtor and creditor, however, does not exist between the preferred stockholders and the corporation, as to any right to a preferred or guaranteed dividend until the dividend is declared; the preferred dividend being nothing more than money paid out of profits by a corporation to one class of shareholders in priority to that to be paid to another class. Kain v. Angle, 69 S. E. 355, 357, 111 Va. 415.

Stock Corporation Law (Laws 1890, p. 1066, c. 564) § 47, provides that "every domestic stock corporation may issue 'preferred stock' and 'common stock' and different classes of preferred stock, if the certificate of incorporation so provides, or by the consent of the holders of record of two-thirds of the capital stock, given at a meeting called for that purpose, upon notice such as is required for the annual meeting of the corporation. * * * And the corporation may, upon the written request of the holders of any 'preferred stock,' by a two-thirds vote of its directors, exchange the same for 'common stock,' and issue certificates for common stock therefor, upon such valuation as may have been agreed upon in the certificate of organization of such corporation, or the issue of such 'preferred stock,' or share for share, but the total amount of such capital stock shall not be increased thereby." Held, that the "preferred stock" represented a contribution of capital precisely the same as "common stock," differing only as to the preferred right of the holders to share in dividends or interest. People ex rel. S. Cohn & Co. v. Miller, 72 N. E. 525, 526, 180 N. Y. 16.

"'Preferred stock' entitles the holder to a priority in the dividends or earnings over common stock. * * * In the absence of anything to the contrary, preferred stock shares equally with common stock upon a dissolution of the corporation; otherwise, if provided by the charter, a statute, or by the contract." People v. New York Building-Loan Banking Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 459, 462, 50 Misc. Rep. 23 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict. [2 Rawle's Revision], pp. 1041, 1042).

"Shares conferring on their holders preferential or additional rights not enjoyed by the holders of other shares are called 'preference shares' or 'preferred shares.' They can only be created when the authority to create them is given by statute or charter, or by agreement between all parties interested. Unless there be some law authorizing it, the power to issue preferred stock rests upon universal consent on the part of all stockholders; but this universal consent may be contained in the articles of association providing for the issuance of such shares adopted when the association was formed." Where preferential stock is issued in a building and loan association organized under the General Statutes of 1889, authorized by the agreement of the members expressed in the by-laws, and recited in the certificates issued therefor, the preference so agreed upon will be observed in the distribution of funds among the different classes of stockholders when not immoral or contrary to public policy. Hogsett v. Aetna Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 96 Pac. 52, 53, 56, 78 Kan. 71 (quoting and adopting definition in Thornt. & Bl., Bldg. & Loan Ass'ns, § 149).

PREJUDGMENT

"Every court is bound to follow its own decisions, if it deems them sound, until overruled by higher authority. Otherwise, there would be no certainty in the law. If a subsequent case arises involving the principle applied in the prior case, the judgment in the prior case must necessarily control the subsequent case. This, as every one knows, is not 'prejudgment' in any sense, either moral or legal, but merely the application to the case of the law as pronounced in the prior case. When a court has solemnly adjudged a principle of law, especially, as here, in other stages of the very case, it is not required by the subtlest obligation of even the most delicate rule of ethics to refrain from expressing adherence to its former decisions, in discussing further interlocutory orders it is called to make, because a party insists that the principle of the former decision was wrong, and insists on silence on the part of the court, when the question is again brought forward by way of rehearing, until reargument can be had." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 157 Fed. 944, 950, 951.

PREJUDICE

See Passion and Prejudice; Undue Prejudice; Without Prejudice.

Prejudice is a leaning toward one side of a question from other considerations than those belonging to it; in law, a bias on the part of judge, jury, or witness which interferes with fairness of judgment. It applies as well to prejudice in favor of the adverse party as to prejudice against a party making an application for transfer of a cause on the ground of prejudice of the judge. Keen v. Brown, 35 South. 401, 402, 46 Fla. 487.

The "prejudice" within the rule that prejudice by a judgment to one not a party to the record, shown by the record, will authorize him to prosecute error therefrom, must be such that he takes or loses something directly by the judgment. On a judgment against a corporation, a stockholder does not fall within the rule because the value of his shares may be affected by the judgment. White Brass Castings Co. v. Union Metal Mfg. Co., 83 N. E. 540, 541, 232 Ill. 165, 122 Am. St. Rep. 63.

Of judge

The "prejudice" of the judge, contemplated by Const. art. 1, § 18, is a prejudice directed against the party litigant and of such a character as would render it improbable that he would give the litigant an impartial trial. Bell v. Bell, 111 Pac. 1074, 1075, 1076, 18 Idaho, 636.

"Prejudice" of the judge as a statutory ground for change of venue in a criminal case refers to his prejudice against a party and not to an opinion that he has formed, or is believed to entertain, upon a legal question arising in the case. State v. Parmenter, 79 Pac. 123, 124, 70 Kan. 513.

The prejudice of a judge against a case, as distinguished from prejudice against a litigant, is not a basis for a change of venue or a motion of the judge. In re Dolbeer's Estate, 96 Pac. 266, 268, 158 Cal. 652, 15 Ann. Cas. 207.

The "prejudice" of a judge, within Laws 1911, c. 121, authorizing any party or attorney in the action to establish the prejudice of the judge by motion supported by affidavit, is a personal prejudice against the litigant or his attorney; and where the litigant or his attorney believes that the prejudice exists the cause must be transferred, on motion supported by affidavit, which must be deemed to be true, and cannot be disputed. State ex rel. Lefebvre v. Clifford, 118 Pac. 40, 41, 65 Wash. 813.

The constitutional provision guaranteeing to every person charged with crime a trial without prejudice, so far as it relates to the judge, does not include the opinion of the judge as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but it must be shown, to disqualify him, that he is biased. State ex rel. Nowakowski v. Lockridge, 118 Pac. 152, 154, 6 Okl. Cr. 216, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 251.

The mere fact that a judge may be witness in case, or that he has conducted a preliminary examination resulting in a prosecution of defendant, in the absence of any showing of bias or prejudice on his part, does not disqualify him. State ex rel. Nowakowski v. Lockridge, 118 Pac. 152, 155, 6 Okl. Cr. 216, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 251.

Of juror

A juror who, on his voir dire, stated that he had a feeling or "prejudice" against one charged with a crime, but that it would not hinder him from rendering a verdict according to the law and the evidence, and that he could go into the case unbiased, though his prejudice against one charged with the offense was, to a certain extent, a fixed one, was not disqualified to act as a juror. A "prejudice" being something that is not founded on information or reason, the juror evidently meant to say that he had a feeling against crime, and, when he said that he would try the case upon the evidence wholly, and under the instructions of the court, if he is to be believed, he would be a fair juror. State v. Crony, 71 Pac. 783, 785, 31 Wash. 122.

The word "prejudice," as applied to a jury's action, means anger, resentment, heat, absence of reflection, disregard of the rights of others, and kindred motives. Murphy v. Southern Pac. Co., 101 Pac. 322, 327, 31 Nev. 120, 21 Ann. Cas. 502.

PREJUDICIAL

The word "adverse" is defined as "opposite," "hurtful," "unfavorable"; and as synonyms of "prejudicial" are given "hurtful," "injurious," "disadvantageous." Prumty v. Consolidated Fuel & Light Co., 108 Pac. 802, 803, 82 Kan. 541.

"Prejudicial error" is such error as in all probability must have produced some effect upon the final result. State v. Pirkey, 124 N. W. 713, 715, 24 S. D. 533.

In mining parlance an interference exists where within the boundaries of the lands sold, or partially within those boundaries, there are other lands owned by other parties; and it is a prejudicial interference when the intervening lands are so situated as to interfere with the operation and use of the lands sold, and thereby affect their value. Hotchkiss v. Bon Air Coal & Iron Co., 78 Atl. 1108, 1110, 108 Me. 34.

PRELIMINARY

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

A "preliminary examination" is not a trial but the commencement of criminal prosecution. The object of the examination is to secure the appearance of defendant before the district court for further investigation. State v. Wisniewski, 102 N. W. 883, 13 N. D. 649, 3 Ann. Cas. 907.

Laws 1905, p. 133, § 2476a, provides that no prosecuting attorney shall file any information charging any person with any capital offense until such person shall have first been accorded the right to a preliminary examination before some justice of the peace in the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2457, 2460, 2461, provide that if a justice shall be satisfied that a felony has been committed, and that there is probable cause to believe the prisoner guilty, he shall commit the prisoner to jail, or admit him to bail for trial upon the charge. Held, that the law of 1905, in using the term "preliminary examination," has reference to the examination referred to in Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2457, 2460, 2461, which neither charged nor empowered the justice with the determination of accused's guilt, and was but an expedient to prevent a suspected person from escaping, and to preserve the evidence and keep the witnesses within the control of the state, and hence a preliminary examination of an accused was not defective under the law of 1905, because all the witnesses the state intended to produce at the trial did not testify at the examination, where the justice took some evidence upon which he found the commission of a murder and probable cause to believe that accused was guilty of the offense. State v. Jeffries, 109 S. W. 614, 619, 210 Mo. 802, 14 Ann. Cas. 524.

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Restraining order distinguished, see Restraining Order.

A preliminary injunction is a mere process of the court, issued to hold in statu quo the subject-matter on which the decree is to operate until the court can adjudicate the rights of the parties. Tebo v. Hazel (Del.) 74 Atl. 841, 846.

The function of a "preliminary injunction," whether prohibitory or mandatory, is to preserve the status quo until the court can grant full relief on final hearing. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. v. Ritz, 56 S. E. 257, 260, 60 W. Va. 395, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1225.

A preliminary injunction runs until the defendant "shall have duly answered the bill of complaint and our said court shall make other order to the contrary," but an ad interim restraining order always commands the defendant to show cause why an injunction should not issue, and he is thereby brought in court for the purpose of that motion only. Allman v. United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America, 81 Atl. 116, 118, 79 N. J. Eq. 150.

"A 'preliminary injunction' is granted before a hearing on the merits has been had, and its purpose and sole object is to preserve the subject in controversy in its then existing condition, and, without determining any question of right, merely to prevent a further perpetration of wrong or the doing of any act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured or endangered until a full and deliberate investigation of the case is afforded to the party." Knight v. Cohen, 90 Pac. 145, 146, 5 Cal. App. 296.

"'Preliminary' or interlocutory injunctions are those granted prior to the final hearing and determination of the trial, and continue until answer, or until the final hearing, or until the further order of the court. * * * Their object is to maintain the status quo, to maintain property in its existing condition, to prevent further or impending injury—not to determine the right itself." Ex parte Sharp, 124 Pac. 532, 534, 87 Kan. 504, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 460 (quoting definition in 22 Cyc. p. 740).

"The office of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo until, upon final hearing, the court may grant full relief. Generally this can be accomplished by an injunction prohibitory in form, but it sometimes happens that the status quo is a condition not of rest, but of action, and the condition of rest is exactly what will inflict the irreparable injury upon complainant, which he appeals to a court of equity to protect him from. In such a case courts of equity issue mandatory writs before the case is heard on its merits." Bachman v. Harrington, 77 N. E. 657, 659, 184 N. Y. 458 (quoting and adopting definition in Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. 730, 19 L. R. A. 387).

"A 'preliminary injunction,' or, as it is sometimes called, 'injunction pendente lite,' is a provisional remedy granted before the hearing on the merits for the purpose of preventing the perpetration of wrong, or the doing of any act whereby the rights in controversy may be materially injured or endangered before final decree, and its purpose is to preserve the subject of the controversy until an opportunity is afforded for a full and deliberate investigation." Hence a preliminary injunction is properly granted in a suit for a perpetual injunction to restrain defendant from refusing plaintiff the use of track scales; it appearing that a temporary refusal will ruin plaintiff's business. Darlington Oil Co. v. Pee Dee Oil & Ice Co., 40 S. E. 169, 177, 62 S. C. 196.

"The whole theory of a 'preliminary injunction' is that it is to preserve the rights of the party until the truth of the charges can be regularly investigated" (quoting and approving Lambert v. Haskell, 22 Pac. 327, 80 Cal. 621), and a temporary injunction cannot be dissolved until after the trial of the cause upon its merits. Humphry v. Buena Vista Water Co., 84 Pac. 296, 297, 2 Cal. App. 540.

PRELIMINARY SURVEY

"The 'plans and specifications' is in no sense to be confused with a 'preliminary survey and estimate of cost.' They are entirely distinct and dissimilar things. The one is only a measurement and survey of the territory to be covered by the contemplated plant and an approximate estimate of cost. The other is an accurate, detailed working plan, showing materials to be used and manner of construction." Hence an engineer who prepared plans and specifications for the erection of a waterworks system under an agreement to be paid a percentage of the cost of the plant may, when the project is abandoned, recover for the services actually performed in preparing such plans and specifications. Jenks v. Town of Terry, 40 South. 641, 88 Miss. 364.

PREMEDITATE—PREMEDITATION

"Premeditation," as an element of murder, means entertainment by the mind of a design to kill. State v. Mangano, 72 Atl. 366, 367, 77 N. J. Law, 544.

Deliberation

The words "deliberate" and "premeditate" may be used interchangeably, in an instruction defining heat of passion. Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 356, 137 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 913.

"The two terms 'deliberate' and 'premeditate,' while frequently used in this connection (with homicide) as interchangeable, because, perhaps, the facts do not always require that they should be spoken of separately, have not exactly the same meaning. 'Premeditate' involves the idea of prior consideration, while 'deliberation' rather indicates reflection, a weighing of the consequences of the act in more or less calmness." State v. Exum, 50 S. E. 283, 289, 138 N. C. 599.

The word "premeditate" would seem to imply something more than deliberate, and may mean that the party not only deliberated, but had formed in his mind the plan of destruction. State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289.

Time as element of

"Premeditate," used with reference to the elements of murder in the first degree, involves the idea of prior consideration. State v. Exum, 50 S. E. 283, 289, 138 N. C. 599.

"To 'premeditate' is simply to meditate beforehand. It need not be for a long time. It merely requires time to form a clear intent. For example, a robber with a dirk or pistol turns a corner and meets a bank messenger with a roll of bills. In a moment he determines to get it. The next moment, he shoots or stabs the messenger dead, takes the package, and flees. His malice was deliberately 'premeditated,' though it occupied only a few seconds; for it was a cool act of the will, and is unlike the intent stimulated by a sudden act of quarrel, where one kills another suddenly, not having intended violence beforehand." Commonwealth v. Tucker, 76 N. E. 127, 138, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056.

"Premeditation," in the statute declaring it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, is the mental operation of thinking over an act or line of action already decided in the mind before carrying the act or line of action into execution. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

"Premeditation" as an element of murder in the first degree involves a previously formed design or actual intention to kill, which design or intention may be conceived and deliberately formed in an instant. But the design must be formed to kill before the act by which the death is produced is performed. Turner v. State, 108 S. W. 1139, 1142, 119 Tenn. 663, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988, 123 Am. St. Rep. 758, 14 Ann. Cas. 990 (citing Dale v. State, 10 Yerg. [18 Tenn.] 551; Lewis v. State, 3 Head [40 Tenn.] 148).

"Premeditation" in murder in the first degree means "thought over beforehand," for any length of time, however short, and when one after deliberation once forms a design to kill, after ample time for deliberate thought, he is guilty of murder in the first degree, no matter how soon the felonious killing follows the formation of the settled purpose. State v. Blane, 116 Pac. 660, 662, 64 Wash. 122.
